In Argenti v. San Francisco, 16 Cal., 255, referred to in Dillon on Municipal Corporations, section 384, Chief Justice Field states the rule by which this legal obligation may arise in this language: "The doctrine of implied municipal liability applies in cases where money or other property of a party is received under such circumstances that the general law, independent of express contract, imposes the obligation upon the city to do justice with respect to the same. If the city obtain money of another by mistake, or without authority of law, it is her duty to refund it, not from any contract entered into by her on the subject, but from the general obligation to do justice, which binds all persons, whether natural or artificial. If the city obtain other property which does not belong to her it is her duty to restore it; or, if used by her, to render an equivalent to the true owner from the like general obligation. The law, which always intends justice, implies a promise."

To the same effect see Dillon on Municipal Corporations, section 383; Frankfort Bridge Co. v. City of Frankfort, 18 B. M., 41; Lee v. Trustees of Flemingsburg, 8 Dana, 28.

As aptly said by counsel for appellant, "the fact that the contract which was made in 1892 in connection with the franchise was unauthorized, could not make it unlawful for the town by a subsequent act, wholly distinct from the unauthorized one, to place itself in a contractual status towards the water company."

Petition for rehearing and modification are overruled.

MENNINGER v. RAMPE'S ADM'X.

(Filed October 29, 1896—Not to be reported.)

1. Funeral expenses—Judgment supported by evidence—In this suit by an undertaker to recover of defendant the amount of an account for the funeral expenses of her husband, in which the principal defense was that the services were performed and the goods furnished at the instance of a railroad company, in whose service the deceased was at the time he was killed, the finding of the court for defendant is supported by the evidence.

2. Practice in civil cases—Reversible errors—As this was an ordinary action in which the law and facts were submitted to the court without intervention of a jury, the judgment of the court must be treated as the verdict of a properly-instructed jury, and can not be disturbed unless flagrantly against the evidence.

8. Same—In the absence of a motion for a new trial the only question that can be considered here is whether the pleadings and evidence support the judgment.

O'Hara & Rouse for appellant.

R. B. Brown for appellee.

Appeal from Gallatin Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Guffy.

This action was instituted in the Gallatin Circuit Court by the appellant against the appellee to recover judgment for $165 for casket and box and other funeral expenses of Charles Rampe, the husband of appellee.

It seems that the husband was an employe of the L. & N. R. R. Co., and was injured while in the service by the negligence of said company.

The claim of appellant is that the goods were furnished at the instance of appellee. The chief defense is that the services and goods were furnished at the instance of the said company, as was its custom in such cases. It also appears that appellee sued the company, and compromised her claim for the sum of $1.500.

The law and facts were submitted to the court, and the court dismissed the petition, and from that judgment appellant prosecutes this appeal. No motion for a new trial was made, hence the only question that can be considered here is whether the pleadings and evidence support the judgment.

A separate finding of law and facts was rendered by the court from which it appears that the court was of the opinion that a preponderance of the evidence showed that appellant's superintendent came to appellee and informed her that he was the undertaker of said company, and sent there to take charge of the husband and bury him; that the body was shipped over the L. & N. railroad from Ludlow to Louisville, and taken from the depot to the cemetery, at an expense of from $50 to $60, and the same was paid by the L. & N. railroad; that appellant sent the claims sued on to the L. & N. R. R. Co. for payment, and never demanded payment of appellee until the 12th of April, 1893; that the proof tended to show that the articles were not sold to appellee, but to the L. & N. R. R. Co., or rather furnished at the request of the company, and that appellee never contracted with appellant to furnish the articles.

The bill of exceptions shows that Scott, on the behalf of plaintiff, was the only witness who professed to know the facts. Without repeating his testimony, suffice it to say that he sustains plaintiff's claim, but the defendant testified on her behalf to the effect that she did not buy the goods, nor authorized the services to be rendered, and that Scott told her that he was the company's undertaker and had come to attend to the burial.

The judgment of the court below must be treated as the verdict of a properly instructed jury, and can not be disturbed unless flagrantly against the evidence, and we are not prepared to say that the judgment is not sustained by sufficient evidence, or flagrantly against the evidence, and it must, therefore, be, and is, affirmed.

HUGHES v. RODES, TRUSTEE, &c.

(Filed October 29, 1896—Not to be reported.)

1. Construction of devise—Where a testator, after devising certain real estate to his daughters, added a clause directing that the portions of his estate given to his daughters should be placed in the hands of his executors as trustees, with the provision that "the trustees shall hold and manage their shares as long as they remain under age and unmarried, but when each comes of age or marries she shall be entitled to the use, possession, control and enjoyment of her share and its proceeds, to her sole and separate use, free from the debts or engagements of her husband," and further providing that "the trustees are authorized to sell any portion of the share of either of my daughters and re-invest in other property or funds, to be held for the same uses and subject to the same limitations," and "this they may do at their discretion during the minority of my daughters and while they are single, but after each marries or comes of age said sale or reinvestment of her share shall be made by her direction," the trusteeship was to continue only so long as the daughters remained under age and unmarried.

2. Same—A clause directing that if either of the daughters "shall die without issue the trustees shall deliver her estate to my other two children and their issue" has reference to a dying before majority or marriage. But even if this be not true, the trust imposed is a mere naked one, and when one of the real beneficiaries made a conveyance with her husband the title passed and no duty was imposed upon the purchaser to see to the reinvestment of the purchase money.

3. Continuance of trusteeship—Application of purchase money—Where a deed of trust gave to the trustee power to sell and reinvest, further providing that if the trustee named should die before fully executing the trust his successor should be appointed by the grantor in the deed, if living, and if he should die, then by his executor, both the trustee named and the grantor having died and a successor to the trustee having been appointed by the executor of the grantor and afterward resigned, in an action which he had brought in the circuit court for a settlement of his accounts as trustee, a trustee appointed by the chancellor had the right to sell the land under the express power given in the original deed of trust, and will hold the proceeds for reinvestment in accordance with that deed.

George S. Shanklin for appellant.

Morton & Darnall and J. D. Hunt for appellees.

Appeal from Fayette Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hazelrigg.

By his written contract of April, 1896, the appellee, as trustee of Anna D. George, widow of John W. George, sold and agreed to convey to the appellant, by good and sufficient title, some 276 acres of land in Fayette county, and for which the latter was to pay the sum of $27,500 in cash.

To the suit of appellee asking a specific performance of this contract the appellant contends that the title tendered in the petition is not sufficient for two reasons: First, because the land is a part of the lands given by Thomas Hughes, deceased, to his daughters, and whose title was limited under the will of their father.

The clause of the will supposed to affect the title is as follows: "The portions of my estate herein given to my daughters I direct shall be placed in the hands of my executors, as trustees, for their use respectively. The trustees shall hold and manage their shares as long as they remain under age and unmarried; but when each comes of age or marries she shall be entitled to the use, possession, control and enjoyment of her share and its proceeds, to her sole and separate use, free from the debts and engagements of her husband. The trustees are authorized to sell any portion of the share of either of my daughters and reinvest in other property or funds, to be held for the same uses and subject to the same limitations. This they may do at their discretion during the minority of my daughters and while they are single, but after each marries or comes of age said sale or reinvestment of her share shall be made by her direction. If either of my daughters shall die without issue the trustees shall deliver her estate to my other two children and their issue; if both should die, the whole shall pass to my son or his issue." The testator left two daughters and a son. One of the daughters died without issue, and the land then passed to the surviving daughter and son.

After the marriage of the daughter her husband, James B. McCreary, qualified as her trustee, and, together with his wife, conveyed the land to Hughes, who conveyed it to George.

The latter then conveyed it to a trustee for his wife Anna, with power to sell and reinvest the proceeds.

The will sought to be construed is not made a part of the record, but the ninth clause is copied in the petition and the answer. We are to suppose that in some preceding clause the testator had given to his daughters, in appropriate and unrestricted language, certain lands, and only added the ninth clause to create the limitation imposed therein; and, so assuming, we think it clear that the trustees might hold and manage the estate only so long as the daughters remained under age and unmarried.

The sale and reinvestment, therefore, contemplated by the will could occur only while the trustees were so holding and managing. There is no provision for any trusteeship after marriage or after reaching maturity Sale and reinvestment are provided for during minority and before marriage. After that a sale of the land may be made at the direction of the daughter, or a reinvestment may be made at her direction.

During their minority and while single the language is "sell and reinvest," after that the daughters for themselves may "sell or reinvest." And this power, especially that to sell at pleasure, is altogether in accord with the unrestricted devise which we have supposed is made in other portions of the will.

The clause wherein the trustee is directed to turn over the estate to the other daughter, if either should die without issue, refers to dying before majority or marriage, as it was then only that the estate was under the management or control of the trustee; and it is otherwise reasonably clear that the limitation over upon failure of issue is not of indefinite duration, but has reference to the death of the daughter before reaching full age or marriage.

If, however, we are mistaken in this, yet it follows that the trust imposed is a mere naked one, and, when the real beneficiary made the conveyance, as she did with her husband, the title passed, and no duty was imposed on the purchaser to see to the reinvestment. (Section 4848, Kentucky Statutes.)

There does not appear to have been any irregularity, as suggested as the second objection to the title, in the appointment of the appellee, Rodes, as trustee of Anna D. George, or in the execution of his powers as such trustee.

As we have seen, W. T. Hughes was invested with perfect title by the deed of McCreary and wife. Hughes sold to John W.

George, and George conveyed to Morgan, to hold for the benefit of his wife, Anna D. George, and others, with power to sell and reinvest.

The deed of trust further provided that if Morgan should die before fully executing the trust his successor should be appointed by said John W. George, if living; and if he should die, then his executor should appoint. Morgan died before George, and the latter did not appoint a trustee. His executor, however, appointed one Scott, who filed a suit in equity in the Fayette Circuit Court to settle his account as trustee, and therein resigned his office as trustee. The chancellor thereupon appointed appellee Rodes, who made the sale of the land under the express power given in the original deed of trust, and is to hold the proceeds for reinvestment in accordance with that deed.

The judgment below decreeing specific performance is affirmed.

GRANT, ASS'EE v. ROSS, &c.

(Filed October 14, 1896.)

1. Corporations—Dividend declared by mistake—Right of assignee to make reclamation—Dividends declared by the directors of a corporation and received by the stockholders may be reclaimed by the directors if illegally declared under a misapprehension of the right to declare them, or under the belief that there were profits when there were none. And if there be an assignment by the corporation for the benefit of creditors, such right to reclaim dividends improperly declared and paid passes to the assignee if the terms of the assignment are sufficiently comprehensive to embrace them, as they are in this case, the right of reclamation against any and all stockholders being expressly given to the assignee.

2. Same—The fact that the stockholders authorized and directed the board to make the payment does not alter the rule. The stockholder can not do a wrong even by mistake and take advantage of it. Moreover, it is the business of the board of directors alone and not of the stockholders to declare dividends, and, therefore, the resolution of the stockholders was to no purpose.

Thomas W. Bullitt and St. John Boyle for appellant.

Swager Sherley for appellees.

Stone & Sudduth for Mason, Gooch & Hoge Co.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hazelrigg.

By reason of its insolvency the Southern Central Co. in 1893 executed a deed of assignment for the benefit of its creditors, by which it conveyed to the appellant its entire property, including all claims, demands, choses in action, and right of reclamation against any and all of its stockholders and debtors.

Thereupon this suit was brought by the assignee against the stockholders of the company to recover assets of the corporation, which had been distributed among the defendants when it was insolvent and largely indebted.

This distribution was not alleged to have been fraudulently made, but, on the contrary, the dividend was declared and distribution made, it is averred, under a mistaken belief on all sides that sufficient assets would remain to discharge all corporate debts.

While other issues are tendered in the answer of the stockholders, it seems conceded that if the defense set up in the third paragraph be held good the plaintiff can not recover.

This is substantially to the effect that the distribution complained of was not the act alone of the board of directors of the company, but was also the act of the company itself; that the stockholders immediately before the distribution made a thorough examination of the financial condition of the company, and found thereby and declared it to be solvent, with a large surplus of capital stock and assets over all liabilities, and for that reason the stockholders, at a meeting held for that purpose, authorized and directed the board of directors to distribute the funds in dispute. A demurrer to this defense was overruled, and the plaintiff declining to plead further the petition was dismissed.

The first question presented is whether or not plaintiff can maintain this suit.

We have seen that express authority is given the plaintiff by the deed to sue for demands, reclamations, etc., against the stockholders, and the question, therefore, is, could the company have brought such a suit?

In Lexington L., F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Page, &c., 17 B. M., 412, it was held that dividends declared by the directors and received by the stockholders may be reclaimed by the directors, if illegally declared under a misapprehension of the right to declare them; and if there be an assignment by the corporation to a trustee, such right to reclaim dividends improperly declared and paid passes to the assignee if the terms of the assignment are sufficiently comprehensive to embrace them. It was there said to be well settled that "if dividends were made under a misconception on the part of the directors of what constituted profits, and under a belief that there were profits to divide, when in fact there were none, they might be reclaimed, because the stockholders who received them were not entitled to them, and they had been paid over and received under the operation of a mutual mistake." (Gratz v. Redd, 4 B. M., 191; 3 Thompson's Law of Corp., section 3555; Cook on Stock and Stockholders, volume 1, sections 548-9.)

The petition, therefore, presents a good cause of action.

It is said in the answer, however, and this presents the only remaining question, that because the stockholders authorized and directed the board to make the payment the company itself acted, and the rule announced by the authorities cited does not apply. We do not appreciate this reasoning. It is impossible to give a different effect to the mistake of the stockholder when the facts in his individual capacity in receiving the dividend, and to the mistake of all the stockholders when they act in their official capacity in giving the direction to the board.

It is the mutual mistake which the law seeks to rectify, and the form or manner of its commission is immaterial. The stockholder neither in his individual nor corporate capacity can do a wrong even by mistake and take advantage of it. Moreover, the resolution of the stockholders was to no purpose, as it is alone the buisness of the board of directors to declare dividends and control the distribution of profits. (1 Waterman on Cor., section 124; Hoyt v. Thomson's Ex'ors, 19 N. Y., 216.)

Judgment reversed for proceedings consistent herewith.

SOUTHALL v. GRIFFITH.

(Filed October 29, 1896.)

1. Elections—Nominee by petition—Right to have name placed on ballot under party device—Where a candidate for office seeks to have his name placed upon the official ballot by petition he must, in order to entitle himself to have his name placed under the device of a particular party, make two things to appear: First, that the party in question has failed to nominate by convention a candidate for that office; and, second, that he is in fact a nominee by petition of that party. And as the plaintiff in this case, who seeks by mandamus to compel the clerk to place his name on the ballot under the device of the People's Party as a nominee by petition, has failed to make either of those facts appear, he is not entitled to the relief sought. As it is nowhere stated that any one of those who signed the petition, or even the plaintiff himself, is a member of the People's Party, it can not be said that plaintiff is a nominee by petition of that party.

2. Same—As neither the plaintiff in his pleading nor the electors in their petition ask that his name should be placed elsewhere on the ballots than under the device of the People's Party, and the plaintiff was not entitled to that relief, the court erred in requiring the clerk to place his name at all on the ballots as a candidate for congress.

3. Same—An answer alleging that electors who signed the petition in question had also signed a petition for the name of John W. Lockett to be placed on the ballots as a candidate for the same office, and that they were numerous enough to reduce the whole number below 400, constituted a complete defense to the action.

Little & Little for appellant.

C. S. Walker for appellee.

Appeal from Daviess Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Lewis.

G. W. Southall brought this action for a writ of mandamus, requiring J. T. Griffith, clerk of the Daviess County Court, to cause printed on the ballots his name as a candidate for congress in the Second district of this State, at the November election, 1896, under the device of the People's Party, being "a plow and hammer," and under the name or title of that party ticket.

It is stated in his petition that he is a candidate, and has all the requisite qualifications for that office; and that more than 400 electors of said district, qualified to vote for such candidate, did in writing petition the county court clerk of each county to so have printed his name on the ballots, which he, October 19, 1896, presented to defendant Griffith as such clerk; but that defendant refused to receive or to comply with it by causing plaintiff's name placed, in the manner mentioned, on the ballots.

The lower court adjudged plaintiff was not entitled to the specific relief asked, but was entitled to have his name placed on the ballots as a candidate for congress under a suitable device to be selected by defendant as clerk. From that judgment plaintiff has appealed, while defendant moves for cross appeal; and, as public interest demands and parties have agreed to submission of the case out of due order, we will now pass on the questions involved.

The manner of conducting elections is provided by article 3, chapter 48, Kentucky Statutes, but the conditions in which the name of a person offering as a candidate for an office may be placed on ballots are in detail prescribed in section 1458, which we will consider in connection with section 1460, that relates particularly to the form and requisites of ballots.

It is the purpose of those two sections to accomplish the two principal objects of enabling each elector to vote intelligently, and have a reasonable opportunity to vote during the single day allowed by the Constitution to hold an election; and in providing the plan by which both those objects can be accomplished the legislature recognizes at the outset the existence of two well-known facts: First, that there are distinct political parties, each of which is regularly organized; second, that electors in selecting candidates for offices for whom they will vote are generally controlled rather by party fealty than personal preference.

Upon that idea the legislature has in detail provided in section 1453 the manner by which the names of candidates nominated by a convention or primary election of a particular party may procure their names printed on the ballots, though, assuming that persons may occasionally become candidates independent of a mere party nomination, or in cases of failure of a particular party to make a nomination or selection by primary election, the legislature has made provision for the names of such persons to be placed on ballots as candidates for the respective offices to which they may aspire. And the mode prescribed in such exceptional cases is by petition of qualified electors residing within the State, county or district where such independent candidate may be voted for and elected; and in furtherance of those two objects the actual form of ballot to be used in all elections is prescribed by section 1460, which must contain at the top a device regularly adopted by each party. Under that must be printed the party ticket, such as Democratic ticket, Republican ticket or Populist ticket, as the case may be, and under that are placed names of all candidates who are entitled, according to provision of the statutes, to be classified as candidates of the respective parties for the various offices to be filled at a particular election.

By section 1453 it is provided: "The county clerk of each county shall cause to be printed on the respective ballots the names of the candidates nominated by the convention or primary election of any party that can cast two per cent. of the total vote of the State at the preceding general election, as certified to said clerk by the presiding officer and secretary of such convention; or, in case of primary election, by the chairman and secretary of any county or district committee; and also the names of any candidate for any office when petitioned to do so by electors qualified to vote for such candidate;" the number of petitioners required in such case as this being 400.

It is further provided "that, if two or more conventions be called by authorities claimed to be the rightful authorities of any party, said clerk shall select some suitable devices to distinguish one faction from the other, and print the ballots accordingly: Provided, however, That if any political party entitled to nominate by convention shall in any case fail to do so the names of all nominees by petition for any office, who shall be designated in their petition as members of and candidates of such party, shall be printed under the device and title of such party on the ballots as if nominated by convention."

It is plain that under the first portion of that section quoted and italicised the county clerk is not required to place the name of a candidate, in whose behalf a mere petition is presented, under the device or on the ticket of either particular party; and to entitle the name of any candidate for office to be placed, in virtue of the second portion quoted and italicized, under a particular party device or ticket, it is equally plain that the facts should exist and be made to appear, first, that the party in question had failed to nominate by convention a candidate for that office; second, that the person who seeks to have his name so placed on the ballots is in fact, and shown to be in meaning of the statute, a nominee by petition of that pary.

It is not stated nor shown the People's Party had failed to nominate by convention a candidate for congress in the Second district, to be voted for at the November election. It does not appear, nor is any statement of facts made from which it can be reasonably inferred, that appellant is, in any sense, the nominee by petition of that party, for it is nowhere stated that any one of those who signed the petition, or for that matter even appellant himself, is a member of the People's Party. In fact, for any thing to the contrary appearing, the petitioners as well as appellant may be members of another or other parties.

It is stated the petitioners desire his election, but that does not alone entitle him to have his name, as a candidate for congress, placed under the device or on the ticket of that party.

There should, in such case as this, be a substantial compliance with the requirements of the statute, otherwise electors, who are not both intelligent and circumspect, would be deceived and defrauded of their right to vote for candidates of their choice.

In our opinion the court properly denied the specific relief asked by appellant, but erred in requiring appellee to place his name at all on the ballots as a candidate for congress, because neither he in his pleading nor the electors in their petition ask that his name should be placed elsewhere on the ballots than under the device, and on the ticket of the People's Party.

It seems to us the lower court also erred in sustaining a general demurrer to the answer, for section 1454 provides that if any person shall join in nominating by petition more than one nominee for an office to be filled, such person shall not be counted as a petitioner for either nomination; and, therefore, the statement in the answer that the electors, who signed the petition in question had also signed a petition for the name of John W. Lockett to be placed on the ballots as a candidate for the same office, and they were numerous enough to reduce the whole number below 400, constituted a complete defense to the action.

For the reasons indicated the judgment is affirmed on the original and reversed on cross appeal, and cause remanded for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

McCLURE v. BIGSTAFF.

(Filed October 17, 1896—Not to be reported.)

1. Contract in writing—Vendor and vendee—The acceptance of a deed by the grantee and the possession of the land under it operate as an agreement on his part to part to pay the purchase price recited in the deed, and an action therefor is founded upon a contract in writing within the meaning of the statute of limitation.

2. Vendor's lien upon land of married woman—Limitation—The land of a married woman can be subjected to the payment of a note for the purchase money, a lien being retained in the deed, although no personal judgment can be rendered. And a lien follows the notes into the hands of an assignee, however remote. And to an action to enforce the lien the fifteen years' statute applies, the contract being in writing within the meaning of the statute.

3. Same—Although the notes are not described in the deed, yet as they recite, and the proof shows, that they were executed for the deferred payments, and it appears that the notes and deed were but one transaction, the contention that the action to enforce the lien is based upon the provisions of the deed alone and not upon the notes, and that the five years' statute for that reason applies, is not well founded.

4. Same—Parties to action—The notes being made payable to a part of the grantors for the benefit of all and assigned by the payees to plaintiff, the other grantors were not necessary parties to the action, although by the terms of the deed the deferred payments were to be made to the grantors and the lien was retained for the benefit of all, the payees being persons "with whom, or in whose name, a contract is made for the benefit of another." (Civil Code, section 21.)

5. Validity of assignment—The fact that the assignments of the notes were signed by the payees, with the addition of the words "administrators of J. F. Triplett, deceased," does not operate to nullify the assignment, as the title will be treated as words of description.

6. Amendment to pleading—Infants—As an amended answer of infant defendants was practically an amendment to conform to proof, the court did not err to the prejudice of the infants in imposing as a condition to the filing of the pleading that it should be traversed of record.

7. Same—The court had discretion to impose reasonable terms in permitting one of the defendants to file his answer out of time.

8. Pleading—A denial that plaintiff is the owner of the notes "as the assignee of the vendors in the deed" is not only objectionable as argumentative, but falls within the rule that facts must be pleaded affirmatively, showing how or why the plaintiff is not the owner.

9. Same—A denial that by the terms of the deed a lien was retained to secure the payment of the notes is a mere conclusion of law.

10. Same—A mere denial of information and belief as to whether the payees assigned the notes sued on is not good, the notes being a part of the record, with all the assignments endorsed upon them at the time of the preparation of the answer.

11. Description of lands—As the judgment describes the land to be sold by naming the abutting owners, the quantity of land to be sold, and the grantors from whom it was obtained, it affords complete and sure means of identification.

12. Purchase price—Interest payable after the maturity of the purchase-money notes can not constitute a part of the price of the land, but is necessarily for forbearance.

13. Interest and usury—While by the conventional interest law in force at the time of the execution of the notes sued on it was legal to contract for eight per cent. interest, yet as it was provided by the act that after the death of the obligor such contract, after maturity, and any judgment thereon, should bear six per centum, it was error in this case to hold the estate of the deceased obligor bound after her death and after the maturity of the notes to pay eight per cent., the conventional rate.

Reuben Gudgell & Son and Wm. H. Holt for appellant.

O'Rear & Bigstaff for appellee.

Appeal from Bath Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge DuRelle.

The appellee, Bigstaff, brought suit in the court below against William McClure, individually and as administrator of Martha L. McClure, and against Samuel, Fannie W., Mattie R., and Mollie McClure, alleging in the petition that on January 22, 1877, "J. C. O'Rear and S. T. Howard sold and conveyed for the heirs of J. F. Triplett a tract of land hereinafter described to one Martha L. McClure, and in consideration therefor the said Martha L. McClure and the said William McClure, her husband, executed and delivered to the said J. C. O'Rear and S. T. Howard" two notes, which were filed with the petition, the first dated January 22, 1877, for $2,000, with eight per cent. interest after maturity, payable on or before March 1, 1879; the second, bearing the same date, for $1,293.75, with eight per cent. interest after March 1, 1879, and payable on or before March 1, 1880.

It was further averred that the note for $1,293.75 was assigned directly to the plaintiff by the payees, and that the $2,000 note was assigned to Nesbitt, by him to Colliver, and by Colliver's executor to plaintiff; that Martha McClure was dead, and William was her administrator; that she left two living children, the defendant, Samuel, and Andrew, who is alleged to have conveyed his interest in the land to Samuel; that she had one child, who died before her, leaving two infant children, Fannie and Mattie, and a widow, the defendant, Mollie McClure. The petition further avers that the notes are the unpaid purchase money on a lot of land in Bath county, described in the petition, and prays personal judgment against William McClure, and for a sale of the land to pay the notes.

The notes are alike in form, and as follows: "On or before the 1st day of March, 1879, I promise to pay to J. C. O'Rear and S. T. Howard (for the use and benefit of the heirs of the estate of John F. Triplett, deceased) the sum of two thousand dollars, same being amount of third payment on land bought of the heirs of said J. F. Triplett, deceased, this day, and a lien being retained on the said land to secure the purchase money, and said payment to bear eight per cent. interest per annum after maturity till paid.

"Witness my hand this January 22, 1877.

"Attest:
"J. M. BIGSTAFF.

her
MARTHA L. x McCLURE,
mark.
"W. M. McCLURE."

The execution or delivery of the deed is not otherwise set up in the petition.

By an amended petition, filed at the February term, 1892, it was alleged that on the execution of the note sued on "the vendors and the assignors of plaintiff made, acknowledged and delivered to the female grantee a deed conveying the land described in the petition, which deed was accepted by her and duly recorded in the clerk's office of the Bath County Court, and a lien is retained thereon for the payment of the two notes sued on in this action. A certified copy of said deed is filed as a part hereof, etc."

The deed, a copy of which was filed with the amendment, was by and between Sarah F. Triplett and thirteen other-named persons," being the widow and children of John F. Triplett, deceased, except the wives of the grantors named Triplett, and except the said T. D. Moss, J. C. O'Rear and S. T. Howard," parties of the first part, and "Martha L. McClure, wife of W. M. McClure, party of the second part," and recites that "the parties of the first part, in consideration of the sum of $7,293.75, paid and to be paid to them by the party of the second part in four payments" (the third and fourth of which payments, as stated in the deed, corresponded with the dates, amounts, and time of payment of the notes filed with the original petition), convey the land in question to the parties of the second part.

By an amended petition J. C. O'Rear and S. T. Howard, administrators of J. F. Triplett, were joined as co-plaintiffs, and it was alleged that it was necessary to the settlement of the estate to sell part of the realty, and that the heirs, being all of full age, sold and conveyed the land at private sale, and the notes were taken, payable to O'Rear and Bigstaff, and accounted for by them in their settlement of the estate as administrators, including the two notes for the third and fourth payments, which were sold, one to appellee Bigstaff and the other to Nesbitt, by whom it was assigned as before alleged.

The infant defendants, by their guardian, after filing and withdrawing one answer, filed a second answer, in which they pleaded the coverture of Martha L. McClure, their mother, at the time of the execution of the notes; denied that the notes sued on were given for the remaining unpaid purchase money, and pleaded payment of all the purchase price as stipulated in the deed. There were other paragraphs in the answer, but the lower court correctly, as we think, decided them to be insufficient.

At the May term, 1894, Samuel McClure tendered an answer, and the infant defendants tendered an amended answer. The answer of Samuel McClure was not in time, as the appearance term for him had passed, and the court, in its discretion, permitted it to be filed upon the condition that the affirmative matters therein should be traversed of record, and that the filing should not delay the trial of the case. The amended answer of the infant defendants was allowed to be filed upon the same terms.

It is earnestly contended on behalf of appellant that there was a defect of parties plaintiff, in that all the grantors in the conveyance should have been made parties to the suit; that the suit is based upon the lien reserved in the deed which was for the benefit of all the grantors, and in consequence, that the plaintiffs, O'Rear and Howard, could not sue to enforce that lien without joining all the other grantors, as the stipulation of the deed was that the deferred payments of purchase money should be made "to the parties of the first part."

It is further contended that the right of action for a sale of the property was based solely upon the provisions of the deed in which no mention is made of the notes), and, therefore, was barred by limitation in five years after it accrued.

Upon the authority of Robinson v. Robinson, 11 Bush, 178, it is insisted that as Mrs. McClure was a feme covert at the time of the execution of the notes, they were absolutely void as to her and those claiming under her; and that, as no action can be maintained on the notes, the lien, which was only a security, can not be enforced (Vandiver v. Hodge, 4 Bush, 540; Bates v. Weeden, 6 Bush, 438); and further, that the notes being void as to her, the demand secured by the lien of the deed was not evidenced by a covenant, and was barred in five years under the rule laid down in Prewitt v. Wortham, 79 Ky., 287.

This court has held, however, in Elliott v. Saufley, 89 Ky., 52, that the acceptance of a deed by the grantee and the possession of the land under it operate as an agreement on his part to pay the purchase price recited in the deed, and an action therefor is founded upon a contract in writing, within the meaning of the statute of limitation.

And it seems to be well settled in this State that after a married woman has received a deed for land it may be subjected to the payment of the unpaid purchase money, for the reason that, as the contract has been executed whereby she has received the vendor's title to the land, she is estopped to deny his right to subject the same to the payment of the purchase money. (Bybee

v. Smith, 88 Ky., 650.) And while the note of a married woman is void so far as obtaining a personal judgment against her is concerned, it is nevertheless evidence of an indebtedness, to secure the payment of which a lien may be retained or a mortgage executed, and is a contract in writing within the meaning of the statute of limitations.

"The land of a married woman can be subjected to the payment of a note for the purchase money, a lien being retained in the deed, although no personal judgment can be rendered, and the lien follows the notes into the hands of an assignee, however remote." (Hite v. Hewitt, 7 Ky. Law Rep., 454; Frank v. Lacey, 8 Ky. Law Rep., 335.)

So it was held in Perry v. Roberts, 30 Ind., 244 (95 Am. Dec., 689), "that the assignment of a note given to secure the purchase money for real estate carries with it the vendor's lien on the property. * * * It can make no difference in principle that the payor is under disability of coverture."

It does not seem to be disputed by the appellant that if the deed described the purchase-money notes, and provided that a lien was retained to secure their payment, it would make no difference whether they were signed by her alone or with her husband, or by him alone; but it is insisted that as they are not referred to in the deed the lien therein retained does not secure their payment.

After examining the evidence in this case there can be little doubt that these notes were given for the third and fourth of the deferred payments of the purchase money, to secure which the lien was retained in the deed. That they were made payable to O'Rear and Howard, for the use of the grantors, can make no difference, provided it be established that the notes and the deed were one transaction. Of this there can be no reasonable doubt. The notes on their face recite that this is the case, and the evidence supports them.

"The notes for the purchase money having been executed by the husband and wife, and the conveyance made to the wife, we perceive no reason why the house and lot may not be sold to pay the purchase money." (Faught v. Henry, 13 Bush, 472.)

Nor do we think that the other grantors were necessary parties to the action, as O'Rear and Howard were persons "with whom or in whose name a contract is made for the benefit of another, etc." (Civil Code, section 21.)

The assignments of the notes by O'Rear and Howard were signed by them, with the addition of the words "administrators of J. F. Triplett, deceased," but this does not, in our opinion, operate to nullify the assignment. The title will be treated as words of description. (Hampton v. Moffett, 17 Ky. Law Rep., 584.)

Appellant complained that it was error to require the answer of Samuel McClure and the amended answer of the infant defendants to be filed upon the terms which the court imposed. The amended answer of the infant defendants was practically an amendment to conform to proof. The pleading itself states that the facts came to the knowledge of the pleader from the plaintiff's testimony and exhibits. There was, therefore, no error to the prejudice of the infants' rights in requiring the amendment to be traversed of record. Samuel McClure did not tender his answer at the appearance term, and, while no default had been taken against him, he was not in time and the court had discretion to impose reasonable terms when it permitted him to file his answer out of time.

We do not think the conditions imposed were an abuse of discretion, as it is not shown that McClure desired to take any proof or asked for time for that purpose. Indeed his answer is almost identical with the answer theretofore filed by the infants. His plea of payments made on the notes by his father (being the payments of interest at eight per cent.) is fully proven by William McClure's deposition.

In this answer it is alleged that "O'Rear and Howard collected all the purchase money for the said land and distributed the same to the vendors named in said deed, and that they were charged with the same and accounted for it in a settlement made by them as administrators, etc.," and are estopped to deny said collection by the record of said settlement. If this were a good plea of payment the evidence relied on to support it is shown by the pleading to be in the record as an exhibit filed with the amended petition. We conclude, therefore, that in imposing terms the court did not prejudice the substantial rights of either Samuel McClure or the infant defendants.

The action of the court upon the demurrers to the various paragraphs of the answer was, in our judgment, correct. The third paragraph denying plaintiff's ownership of the notes is not only objectionable as argumentative, being a denial that he is the owner "as the assignee of the vendors in the deed of Sarah F. Triplett and others," etc., but seems also to fall within the rule laid down in VanBuskirk v. Levy, 3 Met., 134, that facts must be pleaded affirmatively, showing how or why the plaintiff is not the owner. (Newman's Pleadings and Practice, 525.)

The fourth paragraph of the answer, denying that by the terms of the deed a lien was retained to secure the payment of the notes, is a mere conclusion of law.

Paragraph sixth is a mere denial of information and belief as to whether the plaintiffs, O'Rear and Howard, assigned the notes sued on and filed with the petition as therein alleged. It has been held that a defendant may "rely upon a want of belief where he has not sufficient knowledge or information upon the subject of the controversy to enable a person of ordinary intelligence to form a belief. But when the record, as made up at the time of the preparation, furnishes the necessary information, or when the fact is necessarily within his personal knowledge," this plea has been treated as a sham, and judgment rendered as if no answer had been filed. In this case the notes were a part of the record, with all the assignments endorsed upon them at the time of the preparation of the answer, and we are, therefore, of opinion that this paragraph presented no defense to the action. (Civil Code, sections 113-17; Huffaker v. National Bank, 12 Bush, 287; Grider, &c. v. Farmers and Drovers Bank, 12 Bush, 336.)

Objection is made to the judgment that the land to be sold is not sufficiently described. There were 121 acres conveyed by the deed to Mrs. McClure, described by metes and bounds. It appears from the answer of Samuel McClure that Mrs. McClure sold and conveyed 21 acres of the tract to the plaintiff, Bigstaff. This, however, is controverted of record. The judgment describes the land to be sold as 100 acres, more or less; not by metes and bounds, but as bounded on the north, east, south and west by the lands of various-named persons. The lands of the plaintiff are given as bounding the property on two sides, and appellees claim that by naming the abutting owners, the quantity of land to be sold, and the grantors from whom it was obtained, it affords complete and sure means of identification, and excludes from the boundary the twenty-one acres previously sold to Bigstaff. In this we are disposed to concur, Appellants complain that the judgment was for eight per cent. interest, and that the excess of interest over six per cent. paid by William McClure was usurious.

On the other hand it is claimed by appellees that the eight per cent. interest was alleged in the petition, and not denied, to be a part of the consideration for the sale of the land. Interest payable after the maturity of the purchase-money notes can not constitute a part of the price of the land, but is necessarily for forbearance. (McCann v. Bell, 79 Ky., 112.)

By the conventional interest law, in force at the time of the execution of the deed and notes, it was legal to contract for eight per cent. interest. It was, however, provided by the act that after the death of the payor or obligor, such contract, after maturity, and any judgment thereon, shall bear six per centum. But if there are two or more payors or obligors, the provisions of this section shall not affect the liability of the survivor or survivors to pay the agreed interest. (General Statutes, page 564.)

Mrs. McClure died September 2, 1885, but all the payments of interest were made by her co-obligor, Wm. McClure, who was bound for the payment of both principal and interest at the agreed rate, as well after as before her death. But the judgment subjecting her land to the payment of eight per cent. interest after the date of the last payment by Wm. McClure was erroneous. It was in effect holding her estate bound after her death and after the maturity of the notes to pay the conventional rate.

For the reason stated the judgment is reversed, with directions to set aside the judgment and enter a judgment in accordance with this opinion.

Judge DuRelle delivered the following modification of opinion on petition for rehearing December 17, 1896:

The case of Sulling's Adm'r v. Atchison, 7 Ky. Law Rep., 752, which is for the first time brought to the attention of the court by the petition for rehearing, sustains the contention of appellants that the payments of interest, made after the death of Mrs. McClure by her co-obligor, Wm. McClure, should be applied to the extent they are in excess of six per cent. to extinguish the principal of the debt sought to be enforced against her property. This court in this case said, referring to General Statutes, chapter 60, article 1, section 5, and article 2, section 3: "If the three obligors had been bound for $100, one of the obligors died at maturity of the note, and at the end of twelve months a payment had been made by the living obligor of ten dollars, the living obligor would still have owed the $100, and the estate of the dead obligor ninety-six dollars, the payment by the living obligor of ten dollars reducing it as to the dead obligor or his estate to ninety-six dollars. Any other rule would make the estate pay more than six per cent. interest."

To the extent indicated the opinion is modified. Petition for modification overruled.

MONTGOMERY v. GARR, SCOTT & CO., &c.

(Filed November 10, 1896—Not to be reported.)

1. Appeals—As the judgment appealed from has been affirmed upon appeal by appellees, and appellant, being a party to that appeal, failed to prosecute a cross appeal, he can not reopen the question by this appeal.

2. Appellate jurisdiction—Priority of liens—The judgment appealed from was not erroneous in allowing priority to appellees under their mortgage, for while appellant was entitled to a lien as attorney upon the judgment, yet his lien could not be permitted to supplant the prior lien of appellees upon the property in controversy and its proceeds; and, therefore, the judgment would have to be affirmed if the court had jurisdiction of the appeal.

L. A. Faurest and Jas. Montgomery for appellant.

S. H. Bush for appellees.

Appeal from Hardin Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Landes.

This appeal is prosecuted upon the record of the case of Garr, Scott & Co. v. W. N. Lyon, &c., which was decided at the present term of this court. (Ante, 500.)

In that case the present appellant, James Montgomery, was made a party appellee. The complaint now made is that the court below erred in adjudging that the appellees were entitled to a lien or claim under their mortgage prior to that of the appellant under his contract of employment as attorney for Lyons upon the oxen and separator, and in ordering that the judgment of Garr, Scott & Co. against Lyons should be credited with the sum of $325, the value of said property as found by the jury. But that judgment has been affirmed in the case of Garr, Scott & Co. v. Lyons, &c., supra, and the appellant, having been a party to the appeal in that case, is concluded thereby; and, having failed to prosecute a cross appeal, can not reopen the question by this appeal.

But, aside from this, the judgment appealed from was not erroneous in allowing priority to Garr, Scott & Co. under their mortgage, for although, as we held in the case referred to, the present appellant was entitled to a lien as attorney under his contract by virtue of the statute upon the judgment of Lyons v. Garr, Scott & Co., yet his lien could not be permitted to supplant the prior lien of Garr, Scott & Co. upon the property in controversy and its proceeds, and, therefore, could not affect the right of set-off claimed by Garr, Scott & Co., to the extent of the judgment subjecting the property to their claim secured by the said mortgage.

The judgment appealed from having been once affirmed, this appeal is dismissed.

HAWTHORN v. MYERS & WOLKING, &c.

(Filed November 10, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Dedication of street—When lots have been sold according to a map on which squares, lots and streets are laid out, and such lots are conveyed by deeds describing them as binding on or bounded by designated streets, a dedication is implied for the benefit of purchasers of adjacent lots, whose rights are thus affected; and this is the case even if the city has not formally accepted the dedication. But where the conveyance does not call to bind on a street, but for the "center" of a street "extended," a dedication can not be implied.

Simmons & Simmons for appellant.

D. A. Glenn for appellees.

Appeal from Kenton Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

This action is to enforce an alleged lien for street improvements against the property of R. H. Hawthorn.

The improvements were made on what appellees claims to be Holman street extended, between Sixteenth and Seventeenth streets, in the city of Covington. The only question is as to whether the strip of ground on which the improvements were made had been dedicated as a street.

Richard Southgate owned certain lands which are now known as Southgate's Addition to the city of Covington. He died testate, leaving this land to his children, among whom was Mary L. Hawthorn, and by appropriate proceedings she had assigned to her a certain part of it. By the terms of her father's will she could only dispose of her share by will or deed to her children or testator's lineal descendants.

The partition of the land appears to have been made in 1860. Mary L. Hawthorn was assigned block 15 in the subdivision. She seems to have made no disposition of that part of block 15 against which the lien is asserted, until 1885, when she conveyed it to her son, the appellant, Richard H. Hawthorn.

It is contended that the strip of ground on which the improvement was made was dedicated, first, by Mary L. Hawthorn platting the land as and for a street, and having it duly recorded in the office of the Kenton county clerk; second, that by the terms of the deed to the appellant it was dedicated as a street.

The plat relied upon to sustain the first contention was not made and recorded until May 22, 1886, seven months after the ground had been conveyed to the son. At that time she had no title to the ground, and of course could not dedicate it to the city for a street. Besides, the record shows that her son was then of unsound mind, and seems to have continued so, as he is now confined in an asylum for the insane.

In the deed of Mary L. Hawthorn to her son lot 5 is described as beginning at a point in Banklick street, southwardly from the intersection of the centers of Sixteenth and Banklick streets; thence southwardly with Banklick street 38 feet 7½ inches; thence westwardly at right angles to the center of Banklick street 220 feet 4 inches, to the center of Holman street extended; thence northwardly with the center of Holman street, etc."

It is manifest that by the terms of this deed Richard H. Hawthorn was vested with the title to the center of Holman street extended. There is nothing in the language showing a purpose to dedicate the ground to public use, nor can it be said the grantor reserved any right to so dedicate it.

This court has held that where lots have been sold according to a map, on which squares, lots and streets are laid out, and such lots are conveyed by deeds, describing them as binding on or bounded by designated streets, a dedication is implied for the benefit of the purchasers of adjacent lots, whose rights are thus affected. This is the case even if the city had not formally accepted the dedication. (Roman v. Town of Portland, 8 B. M., 237; Wickliffe v. City of Lexington, 11 B. M., 155.)

The conveyance in question did not call to bind on a street, but for the center of one which does not appear to have been previously dedicated. The record does not show a dedication. (Gedge v. Commonwealth, 9 Bush, 61; Wilkins v. Barnes, 79 Ky., 823.)

In the case of Sanford, &c. v. City of Covington, 12 Ky. Law

Rep., 452, a deed similar to the one under which the ground is claimed in this case was construed. The court held that it did not have the effect of dedicating the ground to the public.

The judgment is reversed, with directions that further proceedings conform to this opinion.

COMMONWEALTH v. LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE R. R. CO.

(Filed November 12, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Construction of statute—Remedy prescribed exclusive—Right to recover fine by penal action—Where a statute which creates an offense prescribes a remedy for the enforcement of its penalties, that remedy must be pursued; therefore, as section 786, Kentucky Statutes, provides that the fine which it prescribes for the offense there created is "to be recovered by indictment," the fine can not be recovered by penal action, although section 11 of the Criminal Code and section 1189, Kentucky Statutes, provides for the recovery of fines by civil procedure.

Chelf & Vanmeter and W. S. Taylor for appellant.

W. H. Marriott and H. W. Bruce for appellee.

Appeal from Hardin Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

Section 786, Kentucky Statutes, is as follows, to wit: "Every company shall provide each locomotive engine passing upon its road with a bell of ordinary size, and steam whistle, and such bell shall be rung or whistle sounded outside of incorporated cities and towns at a distance of at least fifty rods from the place where the road crosses, upon the same level, any highway or crossing, at which a sign board is required to be maintained, and such bell shall be rung or whistle sounded continuously or alternately until the engine has reached such highway crossing, and shall give such signals in cities and towns as the legislative authorities thereof may require."

Section 793 provides that in case of violation of the provisions of the section quoted, in addition to subjecting itself to any damages that may be caused by such failure or violation, the company is guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be fined not less than $100 nor more than $500, "to be recovered by indictment."

The plaintiff is proceeding not by an indictment, but by an action brought to recover the penalty fixed by section 793.

Section 11, Criminal Code, provides that a public offense, of which the only punishment is a fine, may be prosecuted by penal action in the name of the Commonwealth of Kentucky.

Section 1189, Kentucky Statutes, provides that all fines and forfeitures which may be imposed by law may be recovered by civil procedure, or upon indictment of a grand jury.

It is contended that the provisions of the Criminal Code and the statutes are applicable to this case, and that the remedy is either by civil procedure or by indictment.

Of course if the remedy was not prescribed by the statute under consideration, there could be no doubt that the position would be correct. At the time the statute was enacted to recover fines or forfeitures either of the two remedies could be pursued. We must presume that the legislature was acquainted with the existing law upon the subject. It, therefore, did know that if no remedy was prescribed in the act that the existing law furnished either of two remedies.

If the legislature had no purpose to prescribe the remedy for the violation of the statute, it would have said the fine was recoverable by civil procedure or by indictment, or would have been silent upon the question of remedy.

Were we without rules for the interpretation of statutes the foregoing view would be a satisfactory answer to the contention.

It is said by Lawson on Rights, Remedies and Practice, volume 7, section 3777, that "when a statute has created a new right, and has also prescribed a remedy for the enjoyment of the right, he who claims the right must pursue the statute remedy; so when a summary remedy is given by statute, those who wish to avail themselves of it must be confined strictly to its provisions, and can take nothing by intendment. When a statute, to attain a particular object, prescribes the mode of proceeding to enforce it, that mode must be pursued."

In Russell, &c. v. Muldraugh's Hill, Campbellsville & Columbia Turnpike Co., 13 Bush, 310, it is decided that when a statute has created a new right, and also prescribed a remedy for the enjoyment of the right, he who claims the right must pursue the remedy.

The same rule is enunciated in Commonwealth v. Jellico Coal Mining Co., 17 Ky. Law Rep., 109.

The statute gave a new right, prescribed an indictment as the remedy for enforcing it, therefore, this action can not be maintained.

The judgment is affirmed.

HOWARD, &c. v. FULLER, &c.

(Filed November 14, 1896.)

Provisions of Civil Code applicable to criminal cases—Return of "no property" on judgment in justice's court—Where a judgment for a fine rendered in a justice's court has been replevied and execution issued upon the replevin bond and returned "no property found," the attorney or other representatives of the Commonwealth may file in the office of the clerk of the circuit court a certified copy of the judgment, execution and return, and thereupon the plaintiff shall be entitled, as provided in section 722 of the Civil Code, to the same remedies for the collection of the judgment as if it had been rendered in the circuit court. While the section authorizing such a procedure is found in the Civil Code, the law is a general one, and embraces executions in favor of the Commonwealth as well as individuals.

W. J. Hendrick and G. W. Howard for appellants.

Appeal from Knott Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hazelrigg.

Where a fine is imposed in behalf of the Commonwealth on a justice's court and judgment for money is rendered, the defendant may execute bond with surety in satisfaction thereof "for the same time and substantially of the same form and (which) shall have the same force and effect as a replevin bond." (Section 305, Criminal Code.)

If an execution upon the bond be issued, and in due course be returned in substance "no property found, etc.," the attorney or other representatives of the Commonwealth may file in the office of the clerk of the circuit court a certified copy of the judgment, execution and return, and thereupon the plaintiff shall be entitled to the same remedies for the collection of the judgment as if it had been rendered in the circuit court. While the section authorizing such a procedure is found in the Civil Code (section 723) the law is a general one and embraces executions in favor of the Commonwealth as well as of individuals.

In this case judgment in favor of the Commonwealth was rendered in a magistrate's court in Knott county against L. D. Fuller for $100 and costs in a prosecution against him for violating the "local option" law. The defendant replevied the judgment, with Archibald Fuller as his surety, and thereafter prosecuted an appeal from the judgment to the Knott Circuit Court, where the appeal appears to have been dismissed. The execution which issued upon the bond having been returned "no property found to satisfy it," the county attorney procured the copies of the record required by section 723 supra, and caused an execution to issue from the circuit court clerk's office as that section authorizes.

When the sheriff was about to sell the land of the defendants in the suit they instituted this action to stop the sale, alleging that the prosecution of the case against Fuller was dismissed in the circuit court and the defendant discharged. A demurrer to the petition was, therefore, overruled, but the answer disclosed that not the prosecution of the case but the defendant's appeal was dismissed.

A demurrer to the answer was sustained and the sale perpetually enjoined. This, we are told, was upon the theory that section 723 of the Civil Code does not authorize the steps taken by the county attorney looking to the collection of the judgment. This, as we have seen, was error, and the demurrer to the answer should have been overruled. Whether the case was dismissed in the circuit court or only the defendant's appeal we are not able to say, as the order of that court is not in the record before us. This issue may be tried out on the return of the case.

The judgment is reversed for proceedings consistent herewith.

LEBANON & PERRYVILLE T. P. R. CO. v. PURDY, &c.

(Filed November 14, 1896—Not to be reported.)

1. Turnpikes—Failure to keep in safe condition—Contributory negligence—In this action against a turnpike road company to recover damages for injuries received by plaintiff while driving on defendant's road, plaintiff's horse becoming frightened by a passing train and throwing his buggy over an embankment, the plaintiff was not guilty of such contributory negligence in continuing to drive his horse along the pike after discovering the train as will exonerate the defendant from liability for its negligence, the crossing which the train was passing being 200 yards distant from where the accident occurred, therefore, the court did not err in refusing an instruction as to contributory negligence.

2. Same—The fact that the railroad crossed the pike so near the fill was one the jury could properly consider in connection with the character of the fill in determining whether the pike at the point where the accident occurred was in a reasonably safe condition.

John McChord for appellant.

Wm. E. & S. A. Russell for appellees.

Appeal from Marion Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

In constructing the pike a fill was made about forty yards long, fourteen feet wide at the top, with a steep slope of about three feet high on either side.

Purdy and wife were driving in a buggy over the pike to Lebanon and while passing over the fill, as testified by Mr. Purdy, a train on the Louisville & Nashville Railorad passed over its crossing on the pike at a point distant two hundred yards from where the accident occurred. The horse became frightened at the train, whirled suddenly around and the buggy turned over the bank on the side of the pike and badly injured the wife. Her collar-bone was broken and shoulder dislocated, and in consequence of which, at the time of the trial of this case, could not raise her left hand except with her right one.

The verdict of the jury was for $200 damages. The court properly instructed the jury as to the duty of the defendant to keep its road in a reasonably safe condition, and as to its liability for damages to one injured by such failure.

It is urged that the court should have given an instruction on contributory negligence.

The evidence is that the owner regarded the horse as a gentle one. There is an entire absence of evidence conducing to show he was not regarded as or that he was not a gentle horse.

It could not be said that it was negligence on the part of plaintiffs to continue to approach the crossing after the train was discovered. The fact that the railroad crossed the pike so near the fill was one the jury could properly consider in connection with the character of the fill in determining whether the pike at the point where the accident occurred was in a reasonably safe condition.

It is known to every one that a trustworthy horse may, in charge of a careful driver, become frightened, wheel or back or run. It results from the nature of the animal. The defendants are conclusively presumed to know such fact. Although the accident would not have happened except for the horse becoming frightened, and probably would not have become frightened except for the passing of the train over the pike, it can not be said that he was guilty of such contributory negligence in continuing to drive his horse along the pike after discovering the train as will exonerate the defendant from liability for its negligence.

Judgment affirmed.

COMMONWEALTH v. STURGEON.

(Filed November 18, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Carrying concealed deadly weapon—Upon the trial of appellee under an indictment for carrying concealed a deadly weapon, evidence showing that appellee opened a satchel lying in a wagon in which he was driving and took a pistol from it did not tend to show his guilt, there being two other persons in the wagon with him and no proof as to who owned the satchel or the wagon. Whether, if the evidence had shown that the satchel belonged to defendant, it would have been sufficient to authorize the submission of the case to the jury is not determined.

W. S. Taylor for appellant.

Blanton & Berry for appellee.

Appeal from Harrison Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

The indictment charges that the defendant carried concealed upon or about his person a deadly weapon, to wit, a pistol.

It appears from the evidence that the defendant was riding on a wagon, a difficulty arose between him and one King, when he "went down under the seat of the wagon on which he was riding and got a small brown grip satchel and opened it and took out a pistol." There were two others in the wagon with defendant. There was no evidence as to whom the grip belonged, nor as to who placed it in the wagon, nor as to whom the wagon belonged.

The facts as proved do not raise the question for determination as to whether one can be said to carry a pistol concealed "upon or about his person" who places it in a hand satchel, and the satchel in a wagon, and thus carries it, or as to whether one can be said to carry it so concealed by placing it in his hand satchel, and then carry with him the satchel, therefore, we do not decide such question.

The judgment is affirmed.

COMMONWEALTH v. BUTLER.

(Filed November 18, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Indictment for forgery—An indictment for forgery, which alleges that the defendant altered an express receipt which was issued to him for a package which he had shipped for another, it being charged that the alteration was made by erasing the figures "60" and inserting in place thereof the figures "90," and that this was done with intent to defraud the person for whom the shipment was made of thirty cents, does not state facts sufficient to constitute the offense charged, as the receipt imports no kind of obligation upon the part of any person to pay the amount named therein. Besides, the indictment contains no allegation that the freight charge on the package was no more than sixty cents, or that defendant had paid only that sum thereon, and, therefore, the facts stated do not constitute a foundation for the allegation of an intent to defraud. If the defendant, by using the altered receipt, induced the person for whom he made the shipment to pay him more money than he had paid out for him, the offense was entirely different from that of forgery.

W. S. Taylor for appellant.

James & James and C. S. Nunn for appellee.

Appeal from Crittenden Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Landes.

The appellee was charged with the crime of forgery, and a demurrer to the indictment was sustained and the indictment dismissed, and the Commonwealth appeals.

The facts alleged as constituting the crime are that the appellee altered an express receipt which was issued to him by the Southern Express Co., at Marion, Ky., for a package received by the company from him for one J. P. Stephens for shipment to Mary Thompson, at Dawson, Ky., by erasing the figures "60," which were written in the receipt, and writing in place thereof the figures "90," with "the intent to defraud."

The figures "60," written in the receipt by the company, represented the charge in cents paid by the appellee to the company for conveying the package to the consignee, and the alteration of the receipt, made as alleged, was charged to have been done by the defendant "to defraud said Stephens of 30 cents."

The facts alleged in the indictment are not sufficient to constitute the crime of forgery, either under section 1185 or section 1189 of the Kentucky Statutes.

Upon the face of the receipt it was shown to belong to the appellee, and the alteration of it, if made as charged in the indictment, imported no kind of obligation or liability upon either the company or Stephens, and it afforded on the face of the receipt as altered no ground or cause of action against either in favor of the appellee. If, as we may assume, the object was to prosecute and punish the appellee for obtaining thirty cents from Stephens more than the freight charges that were paid by him for Stephens on the package, by using the altered receipt as evidence of the payment, by which false pretense Stephens was induced to pay him the money, the offense would be one entirely different from that of forgery. Besides, the indictment contains no allegation that the freight charge on the package was no more than sixty cents, or that the appellee had paid only that sum thereon, and the facts as alleged do not constitute a sufficient foundation for the alleged intent to defraud.

No offense under the statute having been charged in the indictment, the demurrer was properly sustained and the judgment is affirmed.

ABERT v. TAYLOR, &c.

(Filed November 25, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Attorneys fees—Contribution—Where one is resisting the relief sought in an action, and employs his own counsel, although the judgment granting the relief may directly or incidentally benefit him, he ought not to be compelled to contribute to the payment of the counsel fees of his adversary.

L. J. Crawford and Follett & Kelley for appellant.

George Washington for appellees.

Appeal from Campbell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Pryor.

This is a contest between the heirs and devisees of James Taylor, Sr., deceased, as to the payment of attorneys' fees, the appellants claiming that the attorneys employed by them rendered such services as enured to the benefit of all the parties in interest, and for that reason the fees should be paid out of the general fund, or, in other words, that all should contribute to their payment. Col. Taylor was the owner of a large estate, and by writings executed prior to his death, and recognized in his last will, he placed his estate in the hands of a trustee to hold and dispose of for the beneficiaries mentioned in the deed.

The purpose of the action brought by the appellants was to have the deed of trust construed and the powers of the trustee defined, and finally to declare the trust ended and the partition of the landed estate between the devisees.

The trustee, as well as some of the beneficiaries, claimed the right on the part of the trustee to hold the property mentioned in the deed of trust until the land could be sold and converted into money.

That the proper construction of the deed was involved in doubt is manifest from the provisions, so much so that the court below decided adversely to the appellant, who is also the appellant in the present case. Many of the beneficiaries resisted a partition of the estate by filing an answer and employing counsel.

The judgment was reversed by this court, and for the services rendered by the appellant's attorneys a fee of $80,000 is demanded, and the estate required to pay it.

There was no evidence on either side as to the payment of fees, except such as might be implied from the record. The presumption is that counsel on both sides were working for compensation, and the question is, can the appellees in the original action be made to pay for services rendered in obtaining a judgment they sought to defeat? We think not.

This court, in Thirlwell's Adm'r v. Campbell, 1 Bush, 168, held that the statute enforcing or allowing contribution did not apply to cases where the litigation was against the wishes of the party in interest, but only in cases where the services of counsel were rendered at the instance of one joint owner for the benefit of all, and where no objection was interposed by any one of the joint owners to the proceeding.

This, it seems to us, is a reasonable and just rule, as well as a fair interpretation of the statute, but where one is resisting the relief sought and employs his own counsel, although the judgment may directly or indirectly benefit him, he ought not to be compelled to pay the counsel fees of his adversary. (Kilgore v. Crawford, 51 Ill., 249.)

On the subject of the testimony on either side the record seems to be silent, and no case has been made out by the appellants if the defense had not been interposed. The records before us, however, show a character of litigation that was contested by able counsel on each side, and those employing them should pay their fees.

Judgment affirmed.

The Kentucky Law Reporter.

EDITOR:
WALTER G. CHAPMAN, ... Frankfort, Ky.

VOL. 18. FEBRUARY 15, 1897. No. 16

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

PHŒNIX INSURANCE CO. OF HARTFORD V. MCKERNAN, &C.

(Filed October 29, 1896.)

1. Alteration of insurance policy without consent of company—Any material alteration of a written contract made by the obligee without the consent of the obligor invalidates the contract. And an alteration may be a material one, although it does not make the contract more disadvantageous or burdensome to the obligor than the true contract made and signed by the parties. Nor is an intention to defraud necessary to make the change work a forfeiture of the contract.

Where a policy of fire insurance upon a building was by the procurement of the insured and without the consent of the insurance company so altered after its delivery as to include the "shelving, counters and drawers" in the building, the policy is thereby rendered void. And in an action on the policy the court erred in submitting to the jury the question as to whether the alteration was made with fraudulent intent, as that was immaterial.

2. Same—Courts may reform written contracts so as to make them conform to the real agreement, but an obligee in a contract can not do so. And if it be a fact that the alteration in this case was made for the purpose of conforming the policy to the verbal agreement between the parties, that does not prevent it from rendering the contract void.

3. Same—The withdrawal of any claim on account of the loss of the additional property included by the alteration does not have the effect to restore or revive the contract really executed and delivered.

Craddock & Sandidge for appellant.

Wilbur F. Browder for appellees.

Appeal from Logan Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Guffy.

The appellees, McKernan and Conn, instituted this action in the Logan Circuit Court against the appellant, Phœnix Insurance Co. of Hartford, Conn.

It is substantially alleged in the petition that the appellant undertook to insure appellee McKernan against loss or damage by fire which he might sustain, not exceeding $1,800, on account of the destruction or damage to one two-story brick, metal roof building owned by appellee, in Adairville, Ky.; also by the terms of the said policy the appellee was insured against loss or damage by the destruction of the shelving, counters and drawers in said building, the total amount agreed on at the time being $1,800—that is to say that appellant undertook to pay appellee the sum of $1,800 in the event of the destruction of the brick building and shelving, counters and drawers.

It is further alleged that the property was mortgaged to appellee, J. H. Conn, which was known to appellant, and that by the terms of the policy appellant was to pay Conn the sum which might be due him. The policy is filed with the petition. The total destruction by fire of the building, counters, shelving and drawers, etc., occurred, as is alleged, September 17, 1893, by which appellee sustained, as is alleged, $2,600 loss, and more.

The petition also alleges that the appellee made all the proofs required by the said policy, and made due demand upon appellant for payment of the $1,800, for settlement of the loss sustained by reason of the destruction of said house, shelving counters and drawers, and that, by reason of the said contract and by reason of the destruction of the house, shelving, drawers and counters, appellant was indebted in the sum of $1,800, for which sum, with interest, plaintiff asked judgment.

The answer of appellant, among other defenses, pleaded that the policy provided that if any other insurance was taken on the property without the consent of appellant endorsed thereon, that the policy should become null and void; and alleged that appellee had taken out a policy in the Ætna Insurance Co. on the shelving, counters and drawers.

The appellee in his reply denied that the policy sued on covered any of the counters, shelves or drawers. It is also alleged in the reply that the following provision in the policy, "this policy includes shelving, counters and drawers," is not a part of the contract of insurance; that after the fire appellant, through its agent, inserted that provision in the face of the policy, and he makes no claim for damages to same. The defendant moved to strike out that part of the reply.

Appellee then tendered and filed an amended petition, in which it is substantially alleged that appellee's attorney by mistake inserted in the petition a claim for the loss of the shelving, etc., and the claim in reference thereto was inserted by appellant's agent after the fire, and appellee disclaims any claim for the destruction of said shelving, etc.

The appellant, in answer to the amended petition of the appellee, admitted that the said words as to shelving, counters and drawers was inserted in the policy after the fire, but denied that it was done by appellant through its authorized agent or at all, and that it never knew until the filing of plaintiff's amended petition, June 9, 1894, that said clause had been inserted after the fire, and pleads said alterations and fraudulent attempts to collect the same in bar of plaintiff's right to recover.

A trial resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of appellees for the sum of $1,800, with interest from the 1st of June, 1894. Appellant's motion for new trial was overruled, and it has appealed.

Several grounds for new trial were relied on and various errors of court alleged, but we deem it unnecessary to notice or discuss them in detail. The most serious question in the case is as to the insertion in the policy after the fire of the words "this policy includes shelving, counters and drawers."

It is very manifest that this addition was made at the instance of plaintiffs, or by their consent and procurement, and without the consent or authority of appellant. It will be readily conceded that any material alteration of a written contract made by the obligee, without the consent of the obligor, invalidates the contract, but the appellee insists that the addition to the policy in question was not a material change or alteration, for the reason that appellant was only bound for $1,800, and that the house alone was shown to be worth more than $2,600, therefore, appellant was bound to pay the $1,800, independent of the loss to shelving, etc.

It seems to us that appellee's contention is not tenable, and not sustained by the authorities. An alteration or change in a written contract may be a material change, and yet not be more disadvantageous or burdensome to the obligor than the true contract made and signed by the parties, nor is an intention to defraud necessary to make the change work a forfeiture of the contract. It has been often held that a change by which a note was made to fall due at a later date than that named or changed, so as to call for a smaller sum than the true sum named, invalidates the note. Likewise the addition of another name to a note vitiates the note as to the obligor unless he consented. It has also been held that the obligee can not erase the material interpolation and thereby restore the validity of the instrument.

The contract of insurance in this case, as sued on in the suit that was dismissed by plaintiff as well as this one, contained the interpolation, and plaintiff set it up and relied on it as fully as any other part of the policy. It is true that he afterwards withdrew any claim for the loss sustained by the destruction of the shelving, etc.

It is not in proof that the shelving, etc., was by the verbal contract to have been included in the policy, but, if such had been the contract, yet plaintiff could not legally change the written contract to make it correspond with the oral contract. Courts may correct and reform written contracts so as to conform to the real agreement, but an individual obligee can not do so.

It appears in this case that at one time the house and lot, and presumably the shelving, etc., were all valued and appraised at $2,000, and it might have been that appellant was willing to insure the house alone to the extent of three-fourths of its value, not exceeding $1,800, but not willing to include the shelving, etc.; but, be that as it may, the addition of the shelving, etc., necessarily increased the burden of appellant at least to the extent of diminishing his chance to show that $1,800 was more than three-fourths of the value of the insured property, and the withdrawal of any claim on account of the shelving, etc., could not have the effect to restore or revive the contract really executed and delivered. The alteration prima facie increased the risk, and was a meterial alteration, for the further reason that it added a number of articles to the policy not theretofore embraced.

The following authorities and cases referred to therein sustain the foregoing views, viz: 2 Bibb, 167; 18 B. M., 536; 7 Bush, 275; 10 Bush, 517 and 510; 11 Bush, 69; Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, volume 1, page 511; 10 Am. Decisions, volume 10, page 267; Angle v. N. W. Mut. Life Ins. Co., 92 U. S., 330; Brown v. Straw, 6 Neb., 537; Bowers v. Briggs, 20 Ind., 139.

It seems clear to us that the court erred in submitting to the jury the question of fraudulent intent on the part of appellee in regard to the aforesaid addition to or change in the contract. The court below also erred in refusing to give instruction No. 2, asked by the appellant.

The addition of the words "this policy includes shelving, counters and drawers" was a material change or alteration, and, unless done by the authority or consent of appellant, invalidated the policy, and the court below should have so instructed the jury.

For the reasons given the judgment of the court below is reversed and cause remanded, with directions to set aside the verdict and judgment and award appellant a new trial and for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

COMMONWEALTH V. LOUISVILLE WATER CO.

(Filed November 7, 1896—Not to be reported.)

1. Tax upon franchise of corporation—Assessment of the value of the franchise of the Louisville Water Company could not legally be made by the assessor of Jefferson county, but only by the board of valuation and assessment provided for in section 4077, Kentucky Statutes.

2. The franchise tax was not in the first instance collectible by or payable to the sheriff, but directly to the auditor.

3. The tax upon value of the franchise is in addition to and independent of amount due on tangible property of the corporation.

4. Res judicata—In an action by the Louisville Water Company against the sheriff of Jefferson county to enjoin the collection of taxes a judgment requiring the corporation to pay into court a certain sum in full of all taxes, both ad valorem and franchise, was erroneous in fixing too small an amount as due, but as there was no appeal therefrom that judgment is a bar to this action by the Commonwealth to recover an additional amount, alleged to be due as a franchise tax for the same year. If that judgment was procured by fraud, an action to vacate it should first have been brought in the court which had acquired jurisdiction.

Wm. J. Hendrick for appellant.

T. L. Burnett and Lane & Burnett for appellee.

Appeal from Franklin Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Lewis.

December 19, 1893, the Louisville Water Co., a corporation, instituted in the Louisville Chancery Court against H. A. Bell, sheriff of Jefferson county, an action to enjoin him from levying on and selling the property of plaintiff to satisfy a claim and demand alleged to be illegal. The nature of said claim was not explicitly stated in the petition, though it subsequently appeared to be for State taxes due by plaintiff.

April 11, 1894, in pursuance of previous notice, a petition of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, signed by R. L. Suter, special counsel, and F. Parsons, Commonwealth's attorney, was filed, asking for an order making the Commonwealth a party defendant, which was done.

In the answer thereupon filed it was stated plaintiff was indebted to the Commonwealth for taxes amounting, according to an assessment duly made by the assessor of Jefferson county, to the sum of $12,336.84; also to a penalty prescribed by statute for a failure to pay.

June 29, 1894, judgment was rendered in the action that the sum of all taxes, both ad valorem and franchise taxes, due from plaintiff to the Commonwealth upon the assessment made in 1892 is $8,000, which, as recited, was thereupon paid into court in full satisfaction of the judgment; but upon leave of court the Commonwealth of Kentucky, by R. Lee Suter, its attorney, withdrew it.

The present action of the Commonwealth of Kentucky against the Louisville Water Co. was, November 13, 1894, brought in the Franklin Circuit Court to recover $927.60, the amount alleged due for taxes on the franchise of defendant.

In defense of this, judgment rendered in the previous action by the Louisville Chancery Court is pleaded.

We are satisfied the assessment of the value of the franchise of the Louisville Water Co. was not nor could have been legally made by the assessor of Jefferson county, but only by the board of valuation and assessment provided for in section 4077, Kentucky Statutes.

We are satisfied the franchise tax was not, in the first instance, collectible by or payable to the sheriff, but directly to the auditor; and there is enough of the record of the action of the Louisville Water Co. against H. A. Bell, sheriff, before us to make it plain that the Louisville Chancery Court erred in adjudging $8,000 to be the entire sum of taxes due to the Commonwealth, for that portion assessed upon the value of the franchise was an addition to and independent of the amount due on the tangible property of the corporation; but the judgment rendered in that action, not having been appealed from or vacated in a direct action instituted for that purpose, can not be now set aside or disregarded in this action; for, if reversible, as we are satisfied was the case, an appeal therefrom ought to have been taken, or if procured by fraud, as is here suggested though not sufficiently alleged, an action ought to have been first brought in that court, which had acquired jurisdiction, to vacate it.

We are, therefore, of opinion this action can not be maintained, and the judgment is affirmed.

COMMONWEALTH V. BELL, SHERIFF, &C.

(Filed November 7, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Sheriff—Failure to collect taxes—Res judicata—The sheriff having collected of a corporation the full amount of takes fixed by a judgment which is still in force, he can not be held liable for his failure to collect a greater amount. Besides, he can not in any event be held liable for his failure to collect the tax on the franchise of the corporation, as that tax was not in the first instance collectible by him.

W. J. Hendrick for appellant.

T. L. Burnett and Lane & Burnett for appellees.

Appeal from Franklin Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Lewis.

The facts upon which the controversy in this case arises, as well as the issue involved, are stated in the opinion this day delivered, in the case of the Commonwealth v. Louisville Water Co., ante, 7; and if the judgment rendered by the Louisville Chancery Court, and now appearing to be in full force, is a bar to the present action of the Commonwealth against the corporation, it is equally an obstacle to a recovery against the sheriff, who can not be made accountable for a greater amount of taxes than was thereby determined and fixed. Moreover, we agree with counsel that the tax on the franchise of the water company was not, in the first instance, collectible by the sheriff, and, if not, no action can be maintained against him for failure to collect.

Judgment affirmed.

HANCOCK V. PARKER.

(Filed November 14, 1896.)

Witnesses—Right to compulsory process for prisoner in penitentiary—The defendant in a criminal prosecution is entitled to compulsory process for a material witness confined in the State penitentiary, and, therefore, the warden of the penitentiary is not entitled to a writ of prohibition restraining a circuit judge from proceeding against him for contempt on account of his refusal to obey an order of the court requiring him to produce a prisoner to testify for a defendant in a criminal prosecution. And this would be true even though no provisson were made by law for paying the expenses incident to the production of the witness. But provision is made therefor, it being the duty of the court to ascertain and make allowance for such expenses to be paid out of the State treasury under section 361 of the Kentucky Statutes.

W. S. Taylor for petitioner.

Samuel M. Wilson for respondent.

Opinion of the court by Judge Landes.

This is an application to this court by petition of R. A. Hancock, the warden of the penitentiary at Frankfort, as plaintiff, against Watts Parker, the judge of the Fayette Circuit Court, as defendant, praying that the defendant may be prohibited, by the proper writ, from proceeding by rule against the plaintiff for contempt, in refusing to comply with an order made by defendant as judge, requiring the plaintiff to produce in said court a prisoner, who is confined in the said penitentiary for felony, to testify as a witness in behalf of one Ed. Warfield, who has been indicted for the crime of rape.

The material question, upon which authority to issue the writ applied for depends, is whether the defendant, as judge of the Fayette Circuit Court, had the jurisdiction or power to require the plaintiff, as warden of the penitentiary, to produce the prisoner in his court to testify, and that question we will proceed to consider.

It appears that the prisoner who is wanted as a witness, John Gatlin, was tried and convicted in the Fayette Circuit Court, at the April term, 1896, upon an indictment charging him with the crime of obtaining money under false pretenses, and that he was sentenced to solitary confinement and hard labor in the said penitentiary for a period of two years, and that he was received there on the 16th day of May, 1896.

It further appears that on the 16th day of September, 1896, the order referred to was made in the Fayette Circuit Court, directing the plaintiff to produce said Gatlin in court on the 16th day of September, 1896, to testify in behalf of said Warfield in the prosecution against him, and that said order was issued because it was made to appear, to the satisfaction of the court, that the said Gatlin was a material witness for the defense. The plaintiff refused to obey the order because he believed in good faith that the court had no jurisdiction in the premises, and because the commissioners of the sinking fund refused to permit the prisoner to be taken out of the penitentiary for that purpose.

Gatlin was not disqualified from testifying by reason of his having been convicted of the crime of obtaining money under false pretenses, or by reason of his being confined in the penitentiary under sentence for said crime. (Commonwealth v. McGuire, 84 Ky., 57; Commonwealth v. Minor, 89 Ky., 555.)

Under section 11 of the Bill of Rights Warfield, who is the subject of a criminal prosecution, has the right not only "to meet the witness face to face," but also "to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor." This right, guaranteed to him by the Bill of Rights, can not be denied to him. (Chief Justice Marshall in 1 Burr Trial, 158–9; Commonwealth v. Jones, 10 Bush, 746.)

He is entitled to have his own witnesses in court, if they can be reached by the compulsory process of the law, and to coerce their attendance whenever they may reside in the State, and, in order to do this, it is not required that he shall tender to his witnesses any compensation for expenses before resorting to process to compel them to attend. (Criminal Code, section 151.)

He is not bound to waive this right by taking the depositions of his witness, and the condition and circumstances of this witness are not such as to allow him to take his deposition, if he wished so to do. (Criminal Code, section 153; Kaelin v. Commonwealth, 84 Ky., 355.)

In addition to this ample authority for requiring the production of this witness, confined in execution of his sentence in the penitentiary, is provided by section 425 of the Criminal Code, which provides, in any proper state of case, for the removal from prison of persons convicted for any criminal offense "by writ of habeas corpus or some other legal writ."

It is contended, however, by counsel for the plaintiff that the order in this case ought not to have been made because there is no provision in law for paying the expenses incident to the production of this witness in the Fayette Circuit Court. If this were true, it would not affect the rights of the accused to have compulsory process to secure the attendance of the witness.

The Commonwealth has the custody and control of this witness, and the accused can not reach him except by compulsory process, to which he is entitled under the Bill of Rights. If there is no provision in the law for paying the expenses in such emergency, it should be made by the legislature, and the want of it is by reason of no fault of the accused; but we hold that it is the duty of the court to ascertain and make allowance for the expenses of such removal and conveyance of this witness, such as are embraced by section 361 of the Kentucky Statutes, and that the same are payable out of the State treasury under the said section.

For the reasons given it is the opinion of the court that the plaintiff should comply with the order and produce the witness in court to testify, and compliance with the order will be in discharge of the rule of contempt. The application for the writ of prohibition is, therefore, denied, and the petition dismissed.

COMMONWEALTH v. BOSSIE, &C.

(Filed November 19, 1896.)

Gaming—Accomplice—As each person engaged in a game of chance is guilty of an individual offense under the statute, the one is not the accomplice of the other within the legal meaning of that term, and, therefore, one may be convicted upon the testimony of the other alone.

W. S. Taylor for appellant.

Appeal from Laurel Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Guffy.

The grand jury of Laurel county returned an indictment charging Jack Bossie, William Doan and Stephen Curtis with the offense of gaming, committed as follows, viz: "The said Jack Bossie, William Doan and Stephen Curtis did, on the 22d day of May, 1895, * * * unlawfully engage in a game of hazard and chance by engaging in and playing a game of cards with William Curtis, in which game money and other property was bet, won and lost by each of them."

Upon the calling of the cause for trial as to Bossie it was agreed that the same be submitted to the court for trial, and it was further agreed that the witness would prove the charge to be true, but that the witness was also engaged in the same game of chance.

The contention of the defendant was that the witness was an accomplice of the defendant, hence no conviction could be had upon his testimony alone, and the court below so adjudged, and from that judgment this appeal is taken.

The judgment of the court below is clearly erroneous. The witness was not an accomplice in the legal meaning of the term. Each one engaged in the game was guilty of an individual offense.

In the case of Whitaker v. Commonwealth, 95 Ky., 632, it was held by this court that in an indictment for incest the jury were authorized to convict upon the testimony alone of the female, the crimes of each being seperable under the statute.

To the same effect is the decision of the Superior Court in Green v. Commonwealth, 6 KY. LAW REP., 217.

For the reasons indicated the judgment appealed from is reversed and cause remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE R. R. CO. v. JOHNSON.

(Filed November 19, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Railroads—Right to have decaying trees near track removed—Where dead or decaying trees stand so near a railroad track as to endanger the lives of passengers on the company's trains, by reason of the probability of the trees being blown across the track by high winds, the company offering to pay the expenses of removal as well as the value of the timber, may maintain an action in equity against the owner to compel him to remove the trees. And in this action brought for that purpose the court erred in sustaining a demurrer to the petition.

John S. Kelley and H. W. Bruce for appellant.

Ben Johnson for appellee.

Appeal from Nelson Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Pryor.

This action was instituted by the railroad company for the purpose of having certain trees removed, standing on the lands of the appellee, and near appellant's right of way. A demurrer was sustained to the petition.

If, as the appellant alleges, the trees are so near appellant's roadbed as to endanger the lives of those who are passengers on its trains from the falling timber during high winds the trees ought to be removed.

The record presents a question of fact, and if the danger is such, from the proximity of the trees to the road, that one might reasonably say the safety of passengers and those on the train required their removal, the trees ought to be felled. The averments of the petition are direct and positive that the timber is dead, and so near the road as those on the train would be in imminent peril from the falling timber carried by high winds or the decay of the trees, and, the statements being admitted to be true by the demurrer, it should have been overruled and the case heard on its merits.

In the case of Filbin's adm'r v. Chesapeake & Ohio Ry. Co., 91 Ky., 444, this same question was disposed of, the court saying that if the danger was probable, and the company aware of that fact, the timber should be removed whether on the land of the railway company or on the land of another; and if the company is liable in such a state of case a remedy should be afforded for abating the danger, and a court of equity should give the relief, if upon the proof the averments of the petition are sustained.

The appellants are offering to pay the expenses of removal as well as the value of the timber, and, while the owner should not be deprived of the use of his property, unless its condition renders it dangerous to travel, this case should be heard by the chancellor in order to ascertain whether the complaint of the appellant is sustained by the facts.

Reversed and remanded for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

MECHANICS TRUST CO., &C. V. DANDRIDGE, &C.

(Filed October 24, 1896—Not to be reported.)

1. Warehouse receipts—Lien—The statutory definition of a warehouseman embraces only such persons as in fact keep a warehouse to store goods in and are engaged in that business. A person does not become a legal warehouseman by simply receiving one particular piece of property in store and issuing a receipt therefor, and the endorsement of a receipt issued by one who is not a legal warehouseman passes no interest in the property.

A receipt for certain railroad rolling stock, which recited that it was given under the statute commonly known as the warehouse law, was not valid as a warehouse receipt, the person who issued it not being a warehouseman. And, although the receipt was followed by a statement that "the above property is pledged as security" to a certain creditor of the corporation which owned the property, the note intended to be secured being described, and there was endorsed upon the receipt a statement signed by the corporation which owned the property that it was turned over to the person who executed the receipt as warehouseman, to be held by him as therein specified, no lien was created thereby, and, therefore, it is immaterial whether a creditor who had his execution levied upon the property had any notice of the receipt. And as the person who executed the receipt was the secretary of the construction company which owned the rolling stock and the manager of the railroad upon which the rolling stock was in use, there was in fact no change of possession, and there was, therefore, no valid pledge of the property.

2. Same--It is, as a general rule, indispensable that possession should accompany the pledge of property in order to vest the pledgee with title or interest therein.

J. W. Bryan and O'Hara & Rouse for appellants.

T. N. Lindsey for appellees.

Appeal from Franklin Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Guffy.

The appellant, Mechanics Trust Co., obtained a judgment against the appellee, Home Construction Co., for $———, upon which judgment an execution issued, which was levied upon certain railroad rolling stock, consisting of cars, engines, etc., as the property of the Home Construction Co. Thereupon the appellee, W. F. Dandridge, Mason, Gooch & Hoge Co., and the German National Bank of Covington, brought suit to enjoin the sheriff of Franklin county from seizing and selling said property.

It is alleged in the petition that in December, 1889, the Home Construction Co., the owner and in possession of certain personal property, consisting of two locomotive engines, Nos. 1 and 2, five stock cars, Nos. 1,000 to 1,004, nine box cars, Nos. from 500 to 502, and from 504 to 509, and twelve flat cars, Nos. from 1,500 to 1,511, one passenger coach, No. 1, and one consolidated coach, No. 50, all lettered Kentucky Midland Railway, and that on the 28th day of December, 1889, the Home Construction Co. became indebted to Mason, Gooch & Hoge Co. in the sum of $15,000, and for which it executed its note, and to secure the payment of the note it delivered the possession of all the aforesaid articles to W. F. Dandridge, to be held by him in pledge for the benefit of Mason, Gooch & Hoge Co., with authority to issue to it a paper in the nature of a warehouse receipt, and said Dandridge did make a paper in the nature of such receipt, by which he agreed to hold and deliver said property as the construction company might order, but only upon the production and delivering to him of the said receipt. Dandridge endorsed upon the receipt that the property was pledged to Mason, Gooch & Hoge Co. to secure said note of $15,000, and the Home Construction Co. endorsed the receipt as follows: "The within described property was this day turned over and delivered to W. F. Dandridge as warehouseman, to be by him held as therein specified this December 28, 1889.

"Signed: THE HOME CONSTRUCTION CO.,
"By JAMES E. CANTRILL, President.
"W. F. DANDRIDGE, Secretary."

Afterwards another endorsement was made on the receipt, pledging or attempting to pledge the property to secure the payment of another note to said Mason, Gooch & Hoge Co. for $383.57. Finally the indebtedness of the Home Construction Co. due the aforesaid company was consolidated, and a new note for $16,047.54 executed December 5, 1890, at which time the construction company made another extended endorsement on the said receipt, pledging the said property for the payment of said debt; that the note has not been paid, and that the same and the Dandridge receipt are in pledge to the German National Bank of Covington to secure the payment of two notes, of $7,500 each, due it from the Mason, Gooch & Hoge Co.; that the whole of the property is in lien to said Mason, Gooch & Hoge Co., and will not sell for enough to pay their debt, and it prays for its enforcement. The receipt and endorsements referred to read as follows:

"FRANKFORT, Ky., December, 1889.

"Received of the Home Construction Co. the following articles of rolling stock, purchased and owned by said construction company, and designed for the Kentucky Midland Railway, which I am to keep and hold and re-deliver to said company, or on its order, but only upon the production and delivery of this warehouse receipt properly endorsed, to wit: One locomotive engine, designated and numbered one (1); one locomotive engine, designated and numbered two (2); five stock cars, numbered from 1,000 to 1,004 inclusive; nine box cars, numbered from 500 to 502 inclusive, and from 504 to 509 inclusive; tweve flat cars, numbered from 1,500 to 1,511 inclusive; one coach, numbered (1) one, and one combination car, numbered (50) fifty, all lettered Kentucky Midland Railway, and constructively in the possession and control of the undersigned. It is agreed, however, that the undersigned, retaining the custody and control, and being responsible for the production of said rolling stock, unavoidable accident excepted, may allow said rolling stock to be used on connecting lines of railway in accordance with the rules regulating the interchanges of cars between the Kentucky Midland Railway and said connecting lines. This receipt is given and received under the statute of the State of Kentucky, commonly known as the Warehouse law, and under the provisions and penalties therein prescribed. W. F. DANDRIDGE."

"The above property is pledged as security to Mason, Gooch & Hoge Co. for a note, numbered A10, to Home Construction Co., dated December 2, 1889, payable at State National Bank, on which note the Home Construction Co. has borrowed $15,000.

"Signed: W. F. DANDRIDGE.

"This note was renewed August 2, 1890, for $15,274.16.

"(W. F. D.)"

"The within described property was this day turned over and delivered to W. F. Dandridge as warehouseman, to be by him held as therein specified, this December 28, 1889.

"Attest: (Signed) THE HOME CONSTRUCTION CO.,
"By JAMES E. CANTRILL,
"President.

"(Signed) W. F. DANDRIDGE, Secretary."

"The within described property in the hands of W. F. Dandridge (warehouseman) is also pledged to pay Mason, Gooch & Hoge Co. a note of $383.57, which sum they have paid as interest or discount in the renewal of the note mentioned within, this August 13, 1890.

"Attest: (Signed) THE HOME CONSTRUCTION CO.,
"By JAMES E. CANTRILL,
"President.

"(Signed) W. F. DANDRIDGE, Secretary."

"FRANKFORT, KY., December 12, 1890.

"We hereby transfer and assign to the Augusta National Bank of Staunton, Va., the benefit of the within collateral to secure payment of a note of ($10,000) ten thousand dollars drawn by this company, dated December 5, 1890, and one drawn by C. E. Hoge for ($5,000) five thousand dollars, dated December 5, 1890, both payable sixty days after date.

"Attest: (Signed) MASON, GOOCH & HOGE CO.,
"By H. P. MASON, President.
"(Signed) W F. DANDRIDGE, Secretary and Treasurer."

"The within-described property in the hands of W. F. Dandridge (warehouseman) is pledged to pay Mason, Gooch & Hoge Co. a note of $16,047.54, dated December 5, 1890, at four months, drawn by the Home Construction Co., to the order of Mason, Gooch & Hoge Co., payable at the State National Bank of Frankfort, Ky., which note was given to take up the two notes specified in the former endorsement made on this warehouse receipt, viz:

One note, due December 5, 1890	$15,274 16
One note, due December 5, 1890	383 57
Add discount on new note, four months, 7 per cent	389 81
Face of note, dated December 5, 1890	$16,047 54

"For which this property is pledged as collateral.
"Attest: (Signed) THE HOME CONSTRUCTION CO.,
"By JAMES E. CANTRILL,
"President.
"W. F. DANDRIDGE, Secretary Home Construction Co."

"We hereby transfer and assign to the German National Bank of Covington, Ky., the benefit of the within collateral to secure payment of two notes of ($7,500) seven thousand five hundred dollars each, drawn by Mason, Gooch & Hoge Co., and each endorsed by H. P. Mason and C. E. Hoge personally, dated February 4, 1891, payable four months after date.

"(Signed) MASON, GOOCH & HOGE CO.,
"By W. F. DANDRIDGE,
"Secretary and Treasurer."

The appellant denied the indebtedness alleged in the petition, and denied that the Home Construction Co. owed any part of the $16,047.54. It is also denied that the Construction Co. ever delivered the possession of the said property to W. F. Dandridge, to be held by him as a pledge to secure the debt, or that he had possession of the property at all, and denies that the said company did or could so pledge said property; denies that said company did or could authorize said Dandridge to issue any paper in the nature of a warehouse receipt for said property. In short the answer denies that the receipt filed is a warehouse receipt or of any legal effect, and denies any lien of appellee, and avers that appellant never had actual notice of said paper until the day this suit was filed, and never heard of appellee claiming any lien on said property until after judgment in appellant's favor.

It is also averred in the answer that the property was continuously used in various counties on the Kentucky Midland Railroad and upon other railroads.

The reply averred that Noel, the sheriff, had notice of appellee's claim before the levy. The reply was traversed of record. The court below adjudged that the defendants, appellants here, be perpetually enjoined from seizing or selling the said property, and to reverse that judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

The contention of appellee is that it acquired a lien by virtue of the property being delivered to Dandridge in pledge to secure the payment of the debt, and also by virtue of the so-called warehouse receipt of Dandridge and its assigment to them. Appellant insists that there was no such delivery or pledge of the property as is required by law to create any lien or claim thereon, and that Dandridge was not a warehouseman within the meaning of the law, and that his receipt was a nullity. It will be seen from the receipt, as well as from the pleadings, that the intention of the parties was to issue a warehouseman's receipt, and if Dandridge was a warehouseman within the meaning of the statute, and if the statutory requirements were complied with, then appellees acquired an interest in the property as security for the payment of their debt. It further appears that the property was to be used as railroad rolling stock on the Kentucky Midland and other connecting lines according to the railroad rules. The statute provides that "hereafter in this State all and every person or persons, firms, * * * companies, * * * who shall receive * * * in store or undartakes to receive or take care of property shall be deemed and held to be a warehouseman."

Warehousemen are also prohibited from issuing receipts for goods unless the same shall have been bona fide received into possession and store by such warehousman.

The statute supra evidently refers to only such persons as in fact keep a warehouse to store goods in and are engaged in that business. It can not be that it was the intention of the Legislature to provide that any and all persons might become legal warehousemen by simply receiving one particular piece of property in store and issuing a receipt therefor. There is no pretense that Dandridge was engaged in keeping a warehouse and storing property therein as a business. It, therefore, follows that the receipt in question was and is invalid and ineffectual, and the endorsement thereof passed no interest in the property.

It is as a general rule indispensable that possession must accompany the pledge of property in order to vest the pledgee with title or interest therein. Dandridge was the secretary of the construction company and the manager of the railroad, and so continued until the management was turned over to George Harper, into whose possession the property was then placed as the bailee of Dandridge, as the proof shows. It is, therefore, perfectly manifest that there was no change of possessession and nothing to warn the public of any change, and the property still allowed to be used as before, liable to be lost—as one car really was burned up but paid for—or worn out. If appellee desired to acquire a lien on the property it could have done so by obtaining a mortgage, and then it would have been secure and no other creditor need to have been misled. It is not necessary to discuss the question of notice, because appellees have no lien at all on the property, and it is wholly immaterial whether appellant knew of the receipt or not, but it does not appear that appellant had any notice of the receipt before the creation of the debt nor before judgment, if indeed it ever had any, until this suit was instituted.

For the reasons given the judgment of the court below is reversed and cause remanded, with directions to dismiss the petition and for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

BROWN V. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed November 7, 1896.)

Section 1130, Kentucky Statutes, which provides for an increased punishment for the second and third convictions of felony, applies only to offenses committed subsequent to the conviction or convictions relied on to increase the punishment.

R. C. Warren for appellant.

W. S. Taylor for appellee.

Appeal from Lincoln Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge DuRelle.

At the June term, 1896, of the Lincoln Circuit Court, the appellant was indicted upon two charges of breaking into a warehouse. These indictments were returned on the same day, June 8th. Appellant pleaded guilty to each, and on June 9th, after verdicts fixing his punishment at five years imprisonment in the penitentiary in each case, was sentenced. On June 10th another indictment was returned against him for feloniously breaking into and entering a dwelling house. In this indictment the two former convictions for felony at the same term were set up. He pleaded not guilty, but the jury found him guilty and fixed his punishment at confinement in the penitentiary for life, and the court sentenced him in accordance with the verdict. This was done under authority of section 1130, Kentucky Statutes, as follows: "Every person convicted a second time of felony, the punishment of which is confinement in the penitentiary, shall be confined in the penitentiary not less than double the time of the first conviction, and if convicted a third time of felony he shall be confined in the penitentiary during his life. Judgment in such cases shall not be given for the increased penalty unless the jury shall find, from record and other competent evidence, the fact of former conviction for felony committed by the prisoner in or out of this State."

The question presented for decision is whether the statute in question authorizes the imposition of the increased penalty for an offense not committed after the original convictions. We think not. The statute was manifestly intended to provide an increased penalty for a subsequent offense in order to deter the offender from its repetition. After punishment is imposed for the commission of a crime, the double penalty is held in terrorem over the criminal for the purpose of effecting his reformation and preventing further and subsequent offenses by him. So we find that for a third offense the punishment of imprisonment for life is provided by the act upon the theory doubtless that he must then be regarded as incorrigible. The reformitory object of the statute, namely, to provide a deterrent from future crime, would not be effected by a construction which gives to the offender no opportunity to reform. Moreover, "doubtful questions as to the severity of the penalty are to be resolved in favor of the accused." (Am. & Eng. Ency., 4,726.)

We are of the opinion that the words "convicted a second time of felony" and "convicted a third time of felony" must be restricted to felonies committed subsequent to the dates of the convictions relied on to effect an increase of the penalty, for otherwise no locus poenitentiæ would be offered to the accused.

For the reasons stated the judgment is reversed and cause remanded, with directions to award the appellant a new trial and for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

AUSTIN, &C. V. COLSON, &C.

(Filed November 10, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Ejectment—Adverse possession—While the rule that the plaintiff in ejectment must recover on the strength of his own title may not apply in all its aspects to a case like this, where the defense is claiming to have divested the owner of title, yet, as the defendants here have been in the adverse possession of the land for near forty years, claiming under an execution sale, such an equity is vested in them as defeats any recovery by plaintiffs.

W. J. Weller and N. B. Hays for appellants.

Warren Montfort, Thomas H. Hines and A. K. Cook for appellees.

Appeal from Bell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Pryor.

The next of kin of Thomas J. Beard instituted this action of ejectment against the heirs and devisees of John C. Colson to recover a tract of 250 acres of land lying in Bell county.

The defense claims to have derived title to the land from Thomas Beard by reason of various execution sales, made under judgments rendered in the Knox Circuit Court against Thomas Beard, that divested Beard of the equitable if not the legal title to the land. They also rely on the continued adverse possession for over thirty years under these sales.

The sales were made in the year 1853, and this action was instituted in the year 1892, near forty years from the time the appellees' ancestor and those under whom they claim acquired the title. Three executions were issed in favor of one Newlee and one Brittain, the two amounting, interest and costs, to about $200. The land was sold under the executions in May, 1853, and purchased by Newlee for $100. The equity of redemption was then sold for the balance and also purchased by Newlee.

In a few years after these sales Newlee sold the land to Brittain and Brittain took possession. Newlee then rescinded the contract with Brittain, or took the land back, and has claimed the land all the while, with tenants now and then in the actual possession. Beard, under whom these appellants claim, left the land shortly after these sales, and removed to Alabama, where he became insane in the year 1862 and died in the year 1882. No claim was ever made to the land by Beard or his kindred from the date of the execution sales to the time this suit was instituted, but on the contrary Newlee was the claimant and equitable owner; had placed Brittain in the possession, and then sold the land to the ancestor of the appellees.

The adverse possession of Parker as to a part of this land presents no grounds for a recovery on the part of the appellants. They must recover on the strength of their own title, and while this rule in all of its aspects may not apply to a case like this, where the defense is claiming to have divested the owner of title, it is plain that the purchase under the execution, the abandonment of the real owner when the sales were made, and a continued claim for more than forty years by the purchaser, and actual entry by him on the land, or those to whom he sold, vests in the appellees such an equity as defeats any recovery by the appellants.

The judgment is, therefore, affirmed.

AMERICAN INS. CO. OF N. Y. V. AUSTIN, BY, &C.

(Filed November 12, 1896—Not to be reported.)

1. Fire insurance—Reversible errors—In this action upon a policy of fire insurance, in which one of the defenses was that a part of the property insured was covered by a mortgage, the existence of which was concealed from the agent who issued the policy, the court is inclined to the opinion that the defendant was entitled to a favorable instruction relating to the part of the insured property which was mortgaged, but there can be no reversal for the refusal to give such an instruction because error in refusing instructions is not assigned as a ground for new trial.

2. Sufficiency of grounds for new trial—The assignment as a ground for new trial of "error of law occurring at the trial and excepted to at the time by the defendant" is not sufficient to authorize this court to reverse for an error either in giving or refusing instructions. While the instructions complained of need not be specifically designated, yet they must, in a general way, be called to the attention of the trial court by the grounds for a new trial.

R. H. Tomlinson for appellant.

W. O. Bradley for appellees.

Appeal from Garrard Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Landes.

This was an action to recover the value of certain property damaged and destroyed by fire, which was covered by a fire insurance policy issued by the appellant to the appellee, Leon Austin.

A demurrer was filed by the defendant company to certain parts of the petition, but was properly overruled by the court, and the parts of the petition against which the demurrer was directed were not detrimental to the defendant, and were, at most, mere allegations that were not necessary in the petition. A motion was also made by the defendant company to strike out certain parts of the petition, which was likewise properly overruled by the court because they were not prejudicial to the substantial rights of the defendant, nor did they affect any defense the defendant had to the action. At the same time it may be said that some portions of the petition might well have been stricken out without affecting the substantial rights of either party, but rather to their advantage in having the issues more succinctly presented.

These grounds of defense were relied on, viz: First, that the policy of insurance was issued by the agents subject to the approval of the company, and that the company refused to approve or ratify it; second, that the appellee, the insured, was not the sole and unconditional owner of the property insured; third, that part of the property insured was covered by a mortgage, the existence of which was not known by the agents or communicated to them by the appellee, but was concealed by him from them at the time the policy was issued and delivered; fourth, that the warehouse which was covered by the policy was on leased ground; and fifth, that the appellee failed to furnish the company proofs of loss within sixty days after the destruction of or damage to the property insured.

At the conclusion of the testimony the attorneys on each side moved for instructions to the jury, some of the instructions requested on both sides being given and others refused by the court, and proper exceptions taken, and one instruction was given by the court on its own motion. The case having been submitted to the jury a verdict for the sum of $885 was returned in favor of the appellee, on which judgment was rendered, and, the court having overruled a motion of the appellant for a new trial, this appeal from that judgment was granted and is prosecuted.

All of the grounds of defense were covered by the instructions given or refused by the court. The grounds upon which the motion for a new trial was based were: First, excessive damages, appearing to have been given under the influence of passion and prejudice; second, error in the assessment of the amount of recovery; third, the verdict was not sustained by sufficient evidence and was contrary to law; and fourth, error of law occurring at the trial and excepted to at the time by the defendant.

After a careful examination of the record we have not been able to find in it anything that sustains either of these grounds for a new trial. The verdict is fully sustained by the evidence. There is not the least indication that the jury were influenced by passion or actuated by prejudice in assessing the amount of recovery, which, as assumed in one of the grounds for a new trial, was not in the nature of damages. On the contrary, it appears that the jury followed, with marked precision, the course pointed out by the court in the instructions given.

We are inclined to the opinion that the appellant was entitled to a favorable instruction relating to that part of the property covered by the policy which was mortgaged. But we can not pass upon any of the instructions which were either given or refused, because they are not embraced or referred to in the grounds for a new trial. It is the settled rule in this State that errors of law complained of must be pointed out in the grounds for new trial, otherwise they can not be relied on in this court. It is not sufficient to state in a general way, as in this case, that "error of law" occurred at the trial, and "was excepted to at the time." (Civil Code, section 340, subsection 8; McLain v. Dibble & Co., 13 Bush, 297; O. V. Railway and Mining Co. v. Kuhn, 9 KY. LAW REP., 467.)

It must be shown that the trial court had its attention called to the alleged errors, and had the opportunity to correct them if committed before coming to this court. Here the instructions given, or requested and refused, were not mentioned at all; and while under the later decisions the instructions complained of need not be referred to by number or by any particular designation, yet they must be brought to the notice of the trial court, and evidence of that fact must be furnished in the grounds for new trial before this court can take cognizance of them. (L. & N. R. R. Co. v. McCoy, 81 Ky., 403; Meux v. Meux, &c., Ib., 475; Helfrich Saw & Planing Mill Co. v. Everly, 17 KY. LAW REP., 795.)

It follows that the judgment of the lower court must be and it is affirmed, with damages.

CRESS V. COMMONWEALTH.

WATSON V. SAME.

SHRADER V. SAME.

SAME V. SAME.

(Filed November 6, 1896—Not to be reported.)

1. Local option—Indictment—An indictment for a violation of the local option law must allege facts showing that the law was in force in the county or precinct in which the liquor is alleged to have been sold, and must therefore allege that the certificate of the canvassing board, to the effect that at an election held under the law a majority of the votes cast were against the sale of liquor, was delivered to the clerk of the county court and spread on the order book of the court as required by the statute.

2. Same—The county judge is not authorized to order an election under the local option law until the next term of the court after the petition therefor is noted of record. And as the election in question in this case was ordered at the same term at which the filing of the petition was first noted of record, although the petition had been lodged with the judge prior to the term and marked "filed," the election did not have the effect to put the act in operation.

Riddell & Riddell, White & Roberts, H. L. Wheeler, J. T. Sullon and G. W. Gourley for apppellants.

W. S. Taylor for appellee.

Appeal from Lee Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Landes.

Each of these cases is before us on appeal from a judgment of conviction, rendered by the Lee Circuit Court under an indictment charging the offense of selling spirituous, vinous and malt liquors in the Beattyville voting precinct of Lee county, in violation of the "local option" act of August 6, 1892. (Session Acts, 1891–2–3, page 214.)

The question was raised in the court below by demurrer to the indictment in each case whether the act was in force in the precinct, and, although other questions were raised in some of the cases relating to the sufficiency of the indictments and the competency of testimony, it is only necessary to pass upon the question first mentioned.

In each indictment it was alleged and the record shows that a petition of the requisite number of voters of the precinct to the county judge requesting him to submit the question of the sale of liquors to the voters of the precinct was placed in the hands of the county judge and marked "filed" by him on the 12th day of July, 1893, but this was not done in court, nor was any order made in court by him at that time with reference to the petition, but the order noting the filing of the petition and submitting the question was made on the 24th day of July, which was the first day of the term of the county court for that month, which order directed that the election should be held on the 12th day of September following, which was the date fixed by the petitioners. The election was held on that day, and a majority of the votes then cast were against the sale of liquor in the precinct. It is not alleged in either case, however, that a certificate of that fact from the canvassing board was delivered to the clerk of the county court, or spread on the order book of the court as required by section 3 of the act. In our opinion the absence of such an allegation rendered each indictment fatally defective, for without it there was nothing to show that the act was in force in the precinct, and the court could not presume that the required certificate was given by the board or recorded by the clerk. (Commonwealth v. Green, 17 KY. LAW REP., 579.)

But the main question is with reference to the order of the county judge submitting the proposition concerning the sale of liquor to the voters of the precinct.

As we have seen, the petition was placed in the hands of the judge out of court, and the order for the election was made on the first day of the term of the county court thereafter, when the petition was for the first time noted in the order-book of the court. The statute required the county judge to make the order directing the election to be held "at the next regular term" of his court "after receiving" the petition.

Following the case of Wilson, &c. v. Hines, &c., ante, 233, the petition can not be said to have been "received by" or "lodged with" the county judge before the time when it was noted as having been filed in court, and he had no authority under the statute to make the order directing the election to be held until the "next regular term" of his court thereafter. The order made on the 24th day of July, 1893, directing the election to be held on the 12th day of September following was, therefore, void, and the election held in pursuance of the said order did not have the effect to put the act in operation in the Beattyville precinct.

For the reasons given the judgment in each of the cases is reversed and each case is remanded, with directions to the lower court to sustain the demurrer and to dismiss the indictment in each case.

MADDOX V. NEWPORT NEWS & MISSISSIPPI VALLEY CO.

(Filed November 7, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Railroad—Killing of stock on track—In this action against a railroad company to recover damages for the negligent killing of live stock on the track the court erred in its instructions to the jury in assuming that the testimony of the servants of the defendant in charge of the train had overcome the presumption of negligence. The whole question of negligence should have been left to the jury.

J. A. Smith for appellant.

P. H. Darby for appellee.

Appeal from Ohio Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Guffy.

The appellant instituted this action in the Ohio Circuit Court against the appellee to recover judgment for $100 for the killing of a two-year-old mare, the property of the appellant. The appellant alleged that the mare, without the knowledge or procurement of appellant, strayed upon the track of appellee and was, by the willful negligence, carelessness and recklessness of appellee's agents and servants, struck by the engine or cars and totally destroyed.

The answer in substance admitted the killing, but alleged that it was unavoidable and without negligence, and could not, with ordinary or great prudence, have been prevented. A trial resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of appellee. Appellant's motion for a new trial was overruled, and he has appealed.

Appellant insists that the court erred in giving instruction No. 3, which is as follows: "The court instructs the jury that the defendant having admitted that the mare was killed by its train, the law presumes negligence on the part of defendant's servants or agents. But the agents and servants of defendant in charge of its train by which plaintiff's mare was killed having testified that the train was properly manned, and that they used reasonable care, skill and diligence and endeavor to avoid the killing or injury to the mare, the legal presumption is rebutted, and the jury should find for the defendant, unless they believe from all the evidence that the said agents and servants were in fact negligent and careless, and by such carelessness and negligence plaintiff's mare was killed."

It seems to us that the foregoing instruction is erroneous, for the reason that it assumed that the statements of the agents, etc., had rebutted the presumption of negligence. It was the province of the jury to determine from the facts and circumstances detailed by all the witnesses whether or not negligence was in fact the cause of the injury complained of. It might be that the jury did not believe that the statements of the servants and agents established the fact of proper care; or, in other words, the jury might not have believed from the testimony that the presumption or prima facie evidence of negligence was overcome or rebutted by the testimony of defendant's agents and servants. The whole question of negligence should have been left to the jury, there being facts from which the jury might have inferred negligence.

For the error indicated the judgment is reversed and cause remanded, with directions to award the appellant a new trial and for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

CITY OF LEBANON V. COOPER.

(Filed November 13, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Suit to recover salary as city attorney—Sufficiency of answer.—In this action against a city, by which the plaintiff sought to recover one year's salary as city attorney and also for extra services alleged to have been rendered, the court erred in sustaining a demurrer to an answer which put in issue the fact of plaintiff's election or appointment to the office of city attorney, and also put in issue the claim for extra services.

H. W. Rives for appellant.

Thomas H. Hines for appellee.

Appeal from Marion Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Guffy.

The appellee, Cooper, instituted this action against the city of Lebanon to recover judgment against the city for $300, one year's salary as city attorney, and $150 for extra services alleged to have been rendered.

It is alleged in the petition that certain persons were, in November, 1893, duly elected councilmen of said city and duly qualified as such, and that the same elected and appointed appellee city attorney and fixed the salary aforesaid.

Appellant denied that the persons named as councilmen were ever elected and qualified or acted as such, and denied that appellee was ever elected city attorney or ever acted as such or was so recognized, and also denied that he ever rendered any service for the said city, and specifically denied the extra service.

It is also alleged in the answer that a suit was instituted to determine the validity of the election of 1893, and that in said suit it was adjudged that the said election was invalid, which judgment never had been reversed.

Plaintiff's demurrer to the answer and to the answer as amended was sustained and judgment rendered in favor of appellee for the sum of $650, and to reverse that judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

It seems to us that the answer put in issue the fact of appellee's election or appointment to the office of city attorney, and it clearly put in issue the claim for the $150 extra services. It was, therefore, error to sustain the demurrer.

The judgment of the court below is, therefore, reversed and cause remanded, with directions to overrule the demurrer and award appellant a new trial, and for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

GRAHAM, &C. V. BOTNER, &C.

(Filed November 11, 1896—Not to be reported.)

1. Validity of deed—Indefinite description A conveyance by a brother to his sister of all his estate, real and personal, was not so indefinite as to render the conveyance void as against the grantor and his heirs, as it could be shown by extrinsic evidence what estate the grantor owned at the time the writing was delivered.

2. Construction of will—The brother having subsequently executed a will giving to his sister all his property, real and personal, for life, and at her death all said property not disposed of to go to her heirs, the testator adding: "But this will is not to be understood or construed in any way to prevent my sister from selling and using any part of said estate that she may desire during her life," the property owned by the testator at his death passed under the will to his sister, with the power to sell it if she saw proper and apply the proceeds for her support and maintenance, her heirs taking under the will only what might be left at her death.

3. Evidence—The statements of the brother as to the purpose of the deed executed to his sister were incompetent as evidence because not brought home to her. But, if competent, his statement in making sales of the land that it belonged to his sister, and that she would have to unite in the deeds, are sufficient to contradict the statements made by him hostile to her title.

Alexander Lackey for appellants.

R. T. Burns, Stewart & Stewart, Wm. H. Holt and M. J. Holt for appellees.

Appeal from Lawrence Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Pryor.

The construction of the will of George Nellman and the validity of a deed made by him to the appellee, Nancy Nellman (now Botner) are the questions presented by the record. The children of Mrs. Graham, who is a sister of Nancy Nellman, are claiming the property in controversy as remaindermen, and in order to a recovery they have assailed the conveyance made by George Nellman to his sister, passing to her the absolute estate in the property as fraudulent and also void for uncertainty, and also contend that his will gave to their aunt only a life estate. They allege she has disposed of most of the estate, and being still alive they seek to hold her responsible.

The facts of this case show that George Nellman and the appellee, Nancy, his sister, lived together for more than half a century, and seem to have resolved not to seek different homes as long as they both lived. They were frugal, industrious people, and saved by the joint labor an estate worth $3,000 or $4,000. Being unmarried, and seeing the necessity of providing for his sister in the event of his death, in January, 1879, George Nellman executed and delivered to his sister a deed, by the terms of which he conveyed to her (his sister) forever all of his estate, real and personal. The deed was acknowlegded but not recorded until after this suit was instituted.

This conveyance, it is argued, was in fraud of creditors, and made in anticipation of some future liabilities on the part of the grantor. We think the proof warrants no such conclusion, but on the contrary the presumed liability would not have affected his estate or placed him in any embarrassed, pecuniary condition. His purpose in making the conveyance was to protect his sister, and long after the deed was made in selling a part of the realty he stated to the purchasers that his sister would have to unite in the deeds to them, showing a delivery and a recognition by him in his lifetime of the ownership on her part.

The description of the property conveyed enables those who claim under it as against George and his heirs to identify it. It affords a means of identification, and if George Nellman was living he could neither assail the deed on the ground of fraud, nor would he be permitted to say that when he conveyed all his estate, real and personal, it was so indefinite as to render the conveyance void, for it could be shown by proof aliunde what estate he had when the writing was delivered. (Pond v. Beigh, 10 Page, 140; Wilson v. Boyd, 92 U. S., 320; 79 Ind., 235; 108 Ind., 130.)

George Nellman by his last will doubtless attempted to pass what property he had accumulated after the deed of 1879 was executed, but whether so or not he had passed to his sister what property he owned in 1879, and his statements as to the purpose of that deed are incompent, because not brought home to his sister, and if competent his action in making sales of the land after this, and statements that the land belonged to his sister, would and does contradict those made hostile to her title; but the will authorized her to dispose of the property and to use it if the deed had not vested in her the title. He recites in his will the consideration of love and affection for his "dear sister, who has lived with me all my life, helping me in all my business, and sharing with me whatever trouble has overtaken me in life, and caring for me tenderly with a sisterly love during all my illness. I do hereby will to my sister Nancy all my property, real and personal, to have and to hold as her separate property during her life, and at her death all said property, real and personal, not disposed of by my sister during her lifetime shall go and belong to the heirs of my sister, Sarah Graham, but this will is not to be understood or construed in any way to prevent my sister Nancy from selling and using any part of said estate that she may desire to during her life."

It is manifest, therefore, that the testator, under the circumstances surrounding him when the will was written, gave to his sister and intended to give to her the uncontrolled power of alienation or disposition of the estate, and what was left to go to the children of Mrs. Graham. It results, therefore, that the estate owned by the grantor in January, 1879, passed by the deed of that date to his sister, and the property owned at his death by him passed under the will to his sister, with the power to sell, if she saw proper, and apply the proceeds for her support and maintenance.

Judgment affirmed.

MORGAN V. HYMER.

(Filed November 13, 1896—Not to be reported.)

1. Vendor and vendee—Specific performance -In this action by the vendor to enforce specific performance of a contract for the sale of land, by the terms of which the vendee, in addition to the execution of notes for deferred payments, undertook to discharge a mortgage lien on the property held by a building and loan association and was to receive a transfer of the stock in the association from the vendor, who was to keep all fines and dues paid on the stock until the purchase-money notes should be paid, the defendant having taken possession of the property, the plaintiff was entitled to an enforcement of the contract, although he had not kept the dues paid up on the stock, defendant being allowed credit for the unpaid dues. But it was error not to require plaintiff and his wife, as a condition precedent to the enforcement of the contract, to make to defendant a valid assignment of the stock in the building and loan association, according to the by-laws and regulations of the association.

2. Same -If defendant had been ready, when the last of the purchase-money notes fell due, to pay the balance due plaintiff, and plaintiff had not promptly performed his part, defendant would have been authorized to consider the contract terminated.

3. The house having been damaged by fire and the damage not repaired by plaintiff, who collected the insurance due on account of the damage and kept the same, although he had agreed to transfer the insurance policy to defendant, the court should have given defendant credit for the damage to the house by fire, the amount received of the insurance company not being conclusive as to the actual damage.

J. L. Elliston and Wm. H. Julian for appellant.

James P. Tarvin and Walker C. Hall for appellee.

Appeal from Kenton Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Guffy.

It appears from this record that appellee, on the 3d day of March, 1893, sold or contracted to sell to appellant one house and lot, where appellee then lived. Appellant was to pay $2,500 (at least that is the price named in the contract signed by appellee, $1,000 to be paid in cash), for which four notes were executed, the last one being for $900, and falling due the 25th day of December, 1893. The $1,500 was to be paid in discharge of a mortgage lien on the said house and lot, held by a building and loan association, and appellant was to have the $1,500 stock in said association, which appellee was to transfer to him. Appellant was to pay $20 per month rent, and appellee was to keep all fines and dues paid on the stock until the four notes were paid.

Appellant paid the three first notes, and refused to accept a deed for the lot, and appellee brought suit to enfore specific performance of the contract, alleging his ability and willingness all the time to perform his part of the contract.

Appellant relied on several defenses, among them was the fact that appellee had not kept the fines and dues paid on the stock, and that the house had been damaged by fire and the damage not repaired by appellee, who collected the insurance due on account of the damage and kept the same. He also claimed that he was to have the profit accruing on the stock, and that appellee represented that there was a $2,000 paid-up policy of insurance on the house which he was to have transferred to him, none of which was traversed by the reply.

The court below adjudged in favor of appellee, but allowed appellant a credit of $38, the insurance collected for damage to the house, and also a credit for the unpaid dues, etc., on the stock, and adjudged a lien on the house and lot for the amount due from appellant to appellee, and from that judgment Morgan has appealed.

Many reasons for reversal are submitted and ably urged by counsel for appellant, but it seems to us that, under the written contract accepted by appellant and under the pleadings in the case, coupled with the fact that appellant entered into the possession of the house, the contract was enforcible.

If appellant had been ready the 25th of December, 1893, to have paid the balance due appellee, and appellee had not promptly performed his part, the appellant would have been authorized to have considered the contract terminated or annulled; but the court erred in not requiring the appellee and his wife to make to appellant a valid assignment of the stock in the building and loan association, according to the by-laws and regulations of the association.

The judgment of the court below is therefore reversed and cause remanded, with directions to require the assignment to be made as indicated, and, if it be not done, the petition shall be dismissed. The appellant should be allowed a credit for the damage to the house by fire. The amount received of the insurance company is not conclusive as to the actual damage, and the proof as to the damage should be considered by the court.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

LAUGHLIN V. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed November 14, 1896—Not to be reported.)

1. Continuance -While affidavits showing the defendant could not have a fair trial in the county would have been considered on a motion for change of venue, the failure to grant a continuance upon such affidavits was not an error.

2. Formation of jury -In forming a jury it was not improper, after exhausting the panel, to summon jurors from bystanders, instead of having additional names drawn from the drum or wheel.

3. Proof that the house of accused, where the killing with which he was charged occurred, was three or four miles west of Augusta was sufficient to warrant the jury in reaching the conclusion that the killing occurred in Bracken county.

4. Corpus delicti -Upon a trial for murder direct and positive evidence of the corpus delicti is not required. Presumptive evidence is sufficient.

In this case, although the body supposed to be that of the person whom defendant had killed was so burned that it could not be recognized, yet, as the circumstances under which it was found were such as to leave no reasonable doubt that it was the body of the deceased, the identification was sufficient.

5. Same -Extra-judicial confessions alone are inadequate to establish the corpus delicti, yet slight corroboration may suffice.

6. Confessions- Evidence -A confession, to be admissible as evidence, must be shown to be voluntary and not procured by the flattery of hope or the torture of fear. And in determining whether a confession was voluntary the court must be controlled by the facts of the particular case under consideration, the admission of such proof being in the discretion of the court. In this case a confession made by the accused to the county attorney, who came to him at his request, was voluntary, and was, therefore, properly allowed to be proved.

7. Same—Although an original confession may have been obtained by improper means, yet subsequent confessions of the same or of like facts may be admitted if the court believes from the length of time intervening or from proper warning of the consequences of confession or from other circumstances that the delusion, hopes or fears, under the influence of which the original confession was obtained, were entirely dispelled. But that rule has no application here as the confession, the admission of which is complained of, was not a "subsequent" one, the claim that there had been a prior confession not being sustained by the evidence.

8. Sanity of accused—Section 287 of the Criminal Code was intended to provide for an inquiry as to the sanity of the accused at the time of the investigation and not as to his sanity at the time the offense was committed. And as it is only when the judge has reasonable ground to believe the accused to be insane that he is required to order the investigation, and the matter is in his discretion, his action in overruling a motion to have a jury empaneled to try the question can not be reviewed on appeal, no evidence being heard on the motion.

George Doniphan for appellant.

W. S. Taylor and M. R. Todd for appellee.

Appeal from Bracken Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

The accused, Robert H. Laughlin, was indicted, tried, convicted and sentenced to be hanged for the murder of his wife, Emma Laughlin. Several reasons are urged as a ground for reversal.

Emma Laughlin lost her life in February, 1896. The accused was indicted March 11, 1896, and the case came on for trial at the July term of the Bracken Circuit Court. The accused filed his own, together with other affidavits, in which there were statements that, owing to charges pending against others for murder, and perverted and aggravated statements purporting to give a true account of the facts upon which this and other indictments were found against the accused, the people of Bracken and adjoining counties were so biased at the time that they could not give him a fair trial. No motion was made for a change of venue.

The facts which the affidavits purport to give would have been considered on a motion for a change of venue, but the failure to grant a continuance on such affidavits was not an error.

After the regular panel was exhausted the judge of the court ordered the sheriff to summon jurors from bystanders. It is insisted that it was an error because, after the regular panel was exhausted, the names of others to act as jurors should have been drawn from the drum or wheel.

Section 2247, Kentucky Statutes, is as follows:

* * * "And the court, after the petit juries for the term have been selected and empaneled, may, in any action, proceeding or prosecution, after said panel has been exhausted, direct the sheriff to supply from bystanders the place of one or more who may be hereafter excused by the court for good cause or removed by the challenge of either party, or the judge may supply such jurors by drawing names from the drum or wheel as herein provided." * * *

It seems to us that it is but necessary to quote the statute to answer the complaint of the accused that the jurors were not properly selected.

The record shows the killing, if at all, was at the house of the accused, which was said by the witnesses to be three or four miles west of Augusta. It is, therefore, claimed that the proof does not show the killing was in Bracken county. Before the jury could convict they were required by the instructions to believe from the evidence that the killing took place in Bracken county. The proof that the accused's house was three or four miles west of Augusta was sufficient to warrant the jury in reaching the conclusion that it occurred in Bracken county. (Combs v. Commonwealth, 15 KY. LAW REP., 659.)

The instructions which the court gave the jury on the motion of the Commonwealth's attorney fully and with more than ordinary precision stated the law of the case. Those given at the instance of accused were unnecessary.

After a careful examination of the instructions we are unable to discover any error in the instructions which the court gave the jury prejudicial to the rights of the accused. It is contended that there was a failure to prove the corpus delicti. The accused lived with his wife some three or four miles west of Augusta, Bracken county. They had no children, but were frequently visited by his wife's niece, May Jones, who was about twelve years of age. She was staying with them on the night of February 14th. The proof in this record shows that the accused had borne a good character, and he and his wife seemed to sustain the most pleasant relations to each other, and both seemed to be very fond of the niece. On February 15th, at 3 or 4 o'clock A. M., the deceased went to the house of his sister, who lived a short distance from him. As he approached the house he was hallowing to her son that some one was trying to cut his throat. He was in his night clothes, had on his drawers, his under and day shirt, and was barefooted and bareheaded. His neck was bleeding. He claimed that a rough looking man, with long whiskers, woke him up trying to cut his throat with a razor, and as he ran out another man stuck a lighted torch in his face, whom he pushed down, and then ran to the house of his sister. His face was blackened and his hair singed. Shortly after his arrival his sister looked out and discovered a light over on the hill, and informed the accused that his house or barn was on fire. It proved to be the house of the accused.

This is substantially the testimony of his sister and her son. The accused testified at the inquest and gave substantially the same account of the discovery of some one trying to cut his throat and his flight from the house as given by his sister. The house was destroyed by fire, and what is claimed to be the remains of the wife and niece were found in the cellar burned to a crisp. The heads and legs were destroyed. In fact nothing remained but badly burned bodies. As one witness said, he could only tell the one from the other by their size. No one appears to have been staying at the house of the accused on the night referred to except the accused, his wife and niece. He fled from the house but a few minutes before it was discovered on fire, leaving his wife and niece in it. Before the house was entirely consumed the bodies, which were afterwards removed from the debris, were discovered. They were removed in the condition described.

There was testimony tending to prove that the places on the neck of the accused looked more like briar scratches than that they were made by an edged instrument. The jury had before it the improbable story which the accused told about waking up with some one cutting at his throat, his conduct in running to his sister's house exclaiming that some one was cutting his throat, the strange story that he ran away from his house, leaving his wife and niece alone with two men bent on mischief, and other circumstances in the case. His was a one-story house, and it is wholly improbable that if it caught fire the wife and neice could not have escaped from it had they not been injured or killed before it occurred. There can not be a reasonable doubt that the bodies found were those of Mrs. Laughlin and May Jones. The jury was warranted in reaching the conclusion that their death was produced by a criminal agency. It is not necessary that there should be direct and positive evidence of a corpus delicti. Presumptive evidence is sufficient for that purpose.

In many cases it would be utterly impossible to bring guilty persons to justice if it required positive evidence of the corpus delicti. In many cases of homicide the murderer commits the offense when there is no one to witness it. He seeks to destroy the evidence of his guilt. To hold that the murderer could escape by simply placing the body of his victim beyond recognition, or in removing that part of it which would have afforded evidence that death had been produced by violent or criminal means, would be placing a premium upon the capacity of the criminal to destroy the remains of his victim. Circumstances may often be so clearly proved, so closely connected with it or leading to one result in conclusion, that the mind may be as well convinced as if it were proved by eye witnesses.

"It is not necessary that the remains should be identified by direct and positive evidence, when such proof is impracticable, and especially if it has been rendered so by the act of the party accused." (Wills' Circumstantial Evidence, sixth American edition, page 213.) Identity of the deceased may be proved inferentially. (Wharton on Homicide, second edition, section 640.)

Mr. Wills also says (same edition, page 214): "But in accordance with the principles which govern the proof of every other element of the corpus delicti it is not necessary that the cause of death should be verified by direct and positive evidence; it is sufficient if it be proved by circumstantial evidence which produces a moral conviction in the minds of the jury equivalent to that which is the result of positive and direct evidence."

In Johnson v. Commonwealth, 81 Ky., 325, this court decided the corpus delicti could be established by circumstantial evidence.

Bishop's New Criminal Procedure, section 1057, volume 1, says that circumstantial evidence is admissible to the corpus delicti, and the accused may be found guilty solely upon it equally in murder and other crimes.

We have been considering this phase of the case independent of a confession by the accused.

Section 1058, volume 1 of the work last cited says: "Extra judicial confessions, alone and uncorroborated, are by abundant authority, with little dissent, deemed inadequate to establish the corpus delicti, yet slight corroboration may suffice."

What follows in this opinion will make manifest the pertenance of the rule stated in section 1058, supra, to this case, and also that the corpus delicti has been abundantly proved.

It is urged that the court erred in permitting the Commonwealth to prove that the accused made a confession of his guilt upon the idea it was not voluntary. The accused was arrested on the Sunday night, February 16th, and the following morning, fearing a mob, he was taken from Bracken county to the Maysville jail. After arriving there he sent for George W. Adair, county attorney of Mason county, and informed him that he had some things to tell him privately, and that he did not want him to divulge it until after he was hanged. At accused's instance some reporters who were present were sent out. Adair did not say or do anything which would render a confession other than a free and voluntary one; neither would the facts which it was avowed Jailer Johnson would prove, to wit, that the accused was, in his belief, in terror of the mob, exclude the confession.

Adair testifies that the accused confessed that he killed his wife and raped and killed his niece. He gave the details of it as related by the accused. After the accused concluded the witness told him that it did not seem to him that he had told him the exact facts. The accused studied awhile, then told the witness to come back tomorrow, and that maybe he could tell him better. Adair returned next morning, when the accused again confessed the killing, and related the circumstances somewhat different from those given on the previous day.

After making the statements the accused asked the witness what was his idea of the case. Thereupon the witness in substance told him that he believed that he had attempted to have intercourse with his niece; that his wife waked up and caught him; that he then killed her and the child, and burned the house. The accused then said: "Well, you are about right."

On a subsequent day the accused told Adair that he wanted him to put his confession in writing.

W. H. Lynch testifies that the accused, while confined in the Maysville jail, admitted to him that he killed his wife and the niece.

A. A. Pumpelley, a turnkey at the Maysville jail, testifies that the accused confessed to him that he killed his wife and her niece, and that he made the scars on his neck.

A confession procured by the flattery of hope or the torture of fear is not admissible as evidence. Before it is admitted it must be shown to be voluntary. When so made it is the most effectual proof of guilt. It can not be supposed that one will make admissions imperiling to his safety unless urged by his conscience to do so.

It is insisted that the confessions to Adair, Lynch and Pumpelley were not voluntary because, before the arrest of the accused, on Sunday night, February 16th, William Sayres, marshal of Augusta, J. J. Martin, constable, and two newspaper reporters visited the house of the father of the accused, where he was staying, and one of the reporters told him that suspicion pointed to him as the guilty party and for him to confess and be protected from the mob. Sayers then said: "Bob, you are not telling the truth. You had better tell the truth. What means all this blood on your underclothes?"

At this point the defendant objected to the witnesses, Martin and Sayers, telling what the accused then said. It, therefore, does not appear that the accused made a confession of guilt to them.

It is argued at length that, as the confession which the accused made to Sayers and Martin was obtained by the appliance of hope or fear to the mind of the accused, therefore it is presumed that the influence which induced him to make it to them had not ceased when he made his confessions to Adair, Lynch and Pumpelley.

The rule is that, although an original confession may have been obtained by improper means, yet subsequent confessions of the same or of like facts may be admitted if the court believes, from the length of time intervening, or from proper warning of the consequences of confession, or from other circumstances, that the delusion, hopes or fears, under the influence of which the original confession was obtained, were entirely dispelled. We have stated the rule and might add that the court did not abuse its discretion in allowing Adair to prove the confession, in view of the fact that the accused sent for him and expressed a desire to make it, and again asked him to return on the following day that he might make a better statement of the occurrence.

The matter of admitting proof of confessions rests in the discretion of the court, and, as the facts and circumstances attending each confession are different, no rule can be stated as to just what will render the confession voluntary. The court must be controlled by the facts of the particular case under consideration.

In this case the record fails to show that there was a confession of the charge to Sayers and Martin, hence the confession to Adair was not a "subsequent" one. It follows this is not a case for the application of the rule stated as to the admissibility of subsequent confessions.

After the verdict and before judgment a motion was entered to have a jury empaneled to determine the question of his insanity. The court overruled the motion.

Section 287, Criminal Code, reads as follows, to wit: "He may show for cause against the judgment any sufficient ground for a new trial or for arrest of judgment; he may also show that he is insane. If the court be of opinion that there is reasonable ground for believing he is insane, the question of his sanity shall be determined by a jury of twelve qualified jurors, to be summoned and empaneled as directed by the court. If the jury do not find him insane, judgment shall be pronounced. If they find him insane, he may be kept in confinement either in the county jail or lunatic asylum until, in the opinion of the court, he become sane, when judgment shall be pronounced."

This section of the Criminal Code is to provide a means of inquiring as to the insanity of the accused at the time the question of insanity is under investigaton; not as to the time the offense was committed.

It is only when the judge has reasonable ground for believing the accused is insane that he orders the investigation. There was no evidence offered on the motion. The court had the prisoner before him during the trial, which lasted seven days. The law vested him with a discretion in the matter, and he, in our judgment, properly exercised it.

If a jury had been empaneled to try the question of insanity and had found him to be insane, that finding would not have had the effect of setting aside the verdict. It would simply have postponed the pronouncement of judgment until, in the opinion of the court, he became sane. The action of the court in overruling the motion to have a jury empaneled to try the question of insanity can not be reviewed by this court.

Upon the consideration of the whole case, the court is satisfied that the substantial rights of the defendant have not been prejudiced by reason of any error of law appearing in the record.

The judgment is affirmed.

COFFEY V. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed November 17, 1896—Not to be reported.)

1. Reward for fugitive from justice—The reward which the governor may offer for apprehension and delivery into custody of the proper officer of a fugitive from justice can be paid only upon production of the officer's receipt, approved and certified by the circuit court of the county of his residence.

2. Same—A motion for an order allowing such a reward is equivalent to a motion for an order approving and certifying the officer's receipt, and an order overruling such a motion is subject to revision by this court.

3. Same—The mere apprehension of a fugitive from justice does not entitle the person making it to any reward, but there must be delivery of the fugitive into custody of the proper officer. Therefore, although a prisoner was apprehended by appellant before a reward was offered, yet as he was not delivered to the officer until after the proclamation was published appellant is entitled to the reward.

Wilson & Towles for appellant.

W. S. Taylor for appellee.

Appeal from Hart Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Lewis.

The reward which the Governor may offer for apprehension and delivery into custody of the proper officer "of a fugitive from the justice of this Commonwealth" can, as provided by section 344, Kentucky Statutes, be paid only upon production of the officer's receipt, approved and certified by the circuit court of the county of his residence. Accordingly, J. S. Coffey, having and producing receipt showing that one Samuel Hatcher was, February 7th, delivered to and received in custody by the jailer of Hart county, moved the Hart Circuit Court for the allowance of $150 offered in the proclamation of the Governor, issued on the same day, but that motion was overruled upon the ground stated in the order that "said Coffey had said Hatcher in custody when the reward was offered."

Though the motion made was for the allowance of the sum mentioned instead of an order of court, in the language of the statute, approving and certifying the officer's receipt, it is practically the same, and if the motion had been sustained appellant would have been entitled to payment; and as the motion involved the question of his right to the money, which the circuit court had jurisdiction to determine, there can be no question of the order overruling it being subject to revision by this court.

It satisfactorily appears that though the fugitive from justice was actually apprehended by appellant November 6th, one day before, he was not delivered into the custody of the jailer of Hart county, the proper officer to receive him, until late in the evening of November 7th, and after the Governor's reward had been offered.

The mere apprehension of a fugitive from justice neither subserves the purpose of the law nor entitles the person making it to any reward, but there must be delivery of him into the custody of the proper officer. And as that was done after the proclamation was published and while it was outstanding and binding on the Commonwealth, we do not see why appellant is not entitled to the reward, for there does not appear to have been on his part any collusion or bad faith. On the contrary he states he was induced to apprehend him in another county than Hart and deliver him to the jailer upon information of the county judge that he had, as provided in such cases by section 1932, filed a petition with the Governor to issue his proclamation offering the reward.

The order overruling appellant's motion is, therefore, reversed and case remanded for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

COMMONWEALTH V. KINNAIRD, MAYOR, &C.

(Filed November 19, 1896—Not to be reported.)

An indictment against the mayor and councilmen of a city for suffering a nuisance on a public highway in the city which alleges that defendants unlawfully suffered lewd and lascivious persons to make indecent exposures of their persons on the highway, and to be drunk and disorderly, and to obstruct travel on the highway, does not state facts sufficient to constitute any offense, there being no allegation that defendants had failed to discharge any official duty with respect to such conduct. If defendants have knowingly failed to discharge any official duty they may be indicted for malfeasance in office. And the parties guilty of the acts complained of may be indicted therefor.

W. S. Taylor for appellant.

Appeal from Garrard Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Guffy.

The grand jury of Garrard county returned an indictment against Robert Kinniard, mayor of Lancaster, and others—the others being members of the council of the city of Lancaster—accusing them of suffering a nuisance on a public highway in said city. The substance of the charge is that the defendants "did suffer and permit a nuisance on a public highway in said city, known as Logantown, by unlawfully suffering and permitting lewd and lascivious people, both male and female, to congregate along said highway at said point, and to habitually, continually and frequently expose to view their privates, cursing, swearing, yelling, fighting, being drunk and disorderly, obstructing the safe and secure travel along said highway to the great annoyance, fright and danger of divers good citizens passing and repassing along said highway." The demurrer of defendants to the indictment was sustained and the prosecution dismissed, and from that judgment the Commonwealth has appealed.

It does not appear from the indictment that the defendants were by law required to prevent the acts complained of. There is no allegation in the indictment that defendants had failed to discharge any official duty in respect to such conduct as is alleged to occur or exist along said highway, hence we are unable to see how the indictment could be sustained. If the defendants have failed to discharge any official duty they might be indicted for malfeasance in office. The parties guilty of the acts complained of might be indicted therefor, but the indictment in question fails to show that the defendants have committed any offense.

Judgment affirmed.

COMMONWEALTH V. SIMONS.

(Filed November 21, 1896.)

The decision of the trial court upon a motion to set aside an indictment is not the subject of exception by either the Commonwealth or the defendant, the law placing the entire matter within the discretion of the trial judge. Therefore, an appeal does not lie in this case from an order sustaining a motion to set aside an indictment upon the ground that others than the grand jurors were present when they acted on the indictment.

O'Neal & Pryor, Stone & Sudduth and J. H. Eaton for appellant.

Zack Phelps and Kohn, Baird & Spindle for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Criminal division.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Pryor.

In this case there was motion to set aside the indictment, the main ground being that others not grand jurors were present before the grand jury when they acted upon the indictment. The motion was sustained by the court below, and the Commonwealth has appealed. The motion here is to dismiss the appeal, as this court is without jurisdiction.

There are three grounds for setting aside an indictment mentioned in section 158 of the Code, and one of them is that contained in the motion made in this case. Section 281 of the Criminal Code provides: "The decision of the court upon challenges to the panel and for cause upon motions to set aside an indictment and upon motions for a new trial shall not be subject to exception."

This provision applies as well to the Commonwealth as to the party charged with an offense. In such a state of case the sufficiency of the indictment is not involved, and the sole question is to be determined by the trial judge upon such proof as may be heard, and his disposition of the motion is not the subject of revision by this court. It is not the subject of an exception by either side, the law placing the entire matter within the discretion of the trial judge, and, therefore, this court has not looked into the merits of the motion, and no doubt the trial judge is better able, with the testimony before him, than this court would be to determine whether or not an indictment had been improperly procured. We must administer the law as we find it, and that an appeal will not lie is manifest.

Appeal dismissed.

MOSS V. CARL.

(Filed November 14, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Landlord and tenant—Waiver of exemption—The fact that a contract between landlord and tenant recites that the landlord is to have a lien on the crop raised, the lien existing by statute independent of such a recital in the contract, does not operate as a waiver of the exemption allowed by the statute in lieu of provisions not on hand.

J. J. Cornelison for appellant.

Woodford & Chenault for appellee.

Appeal from Montgomery Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Pryor.

In this case it appears the appellee rented of the appellant some ten or twelve acres of tobacco land for $360, for which he gave his note, and by the terms of the contract the lessor was to have a lien on the crop.

The tobacco was cut and housed, and finally sold by Rice & Givens for $472. There had been advanced to the appellee in money and the value of certain hogsheads seventy dollars ($70), leaving about $400 of the sales.

The appellant attached the proceeds of the tobacco in the hands of Rice & Givens to satisfy his rent, and the appellee, who was a housekeeper with a family, claimed a part of the proceeds under the exemption law of the State, and the appellant claims that because the contract recites that the landlord was to have a lien the right to the exemption was thereby waived. We do not think so. The statute gave to the appellee a superior lien to all others, and a lien as against the tenant, except to the extent the exemption for his support prevailed.

The tenant, it seems, had but little, if anything, for his support and that of his family, and under the statute was entitled to sufficient provisions, including breadstuffs and animal food, to sustain his family for one year, and if not on hand, then personal property, money or growing crop, not to exceed $40 in value for each member of the family.

So it is plain the exemption exists, and it is manifest there was no purpose to waive the exemption by the mere statement in the writing of a lien the statute gave. The contention also is that the appellee agreed, after the tobacco was ready for market, that if appellant would permit him to ship it to Rice & Givens he would let the entire proceeds go to the payment of the debt, and, not only so, would make the debt then due, as it had some time to mature. We think there is nothing in this contention, and that with five members of the family of appellee the apportionment was just and proper.

Of the money attached the appellant received about $200, and has no cause to complain. It did not extinguish the debt, and the right of exemption was not waived, either by the original contract or the one said to have been made in order to obtain the privilege of taking it to market.

Judgment affirmed.

SWOPE'S ADM'R V. FRAZER'S COMMITTEE.

(Filed November 7, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Lunatic—Jurisdiction to appoint committee—Where no committee for a lunatic was appointed at the time she was adjudged a lunatic by the county court because she then had no estate, she having subsequently inherited an estate, the county court then had jurisdiction to appoint a committee for her as the statute in force at that time provided for the appointment by either the circuit or county court, although the statute in force when the inquest was held provided that if the lunatic had any estate that fact should be certified by the county court to the circuit court, and the committee be appointed by the circuit court.

Wm. Herndon for appellant.

Chas. C. Fox for appellee.

Appeal from Boyle Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Pryor.

In the month of December of the year 1888, Sallie Frazier was adjudged a lunatic by a judgment of the Boyle County Court. The proceedings there had being in accordance with the statute then in force. She had no estate, and, therefore, no committee was appointed for her.

If a lunatic had any estate under the law, as it then existed, it was made the duty of the county court to so certify to the circuit court, and it then became the duty of the latter court to appoint a committee to take charge of the lunatic's estate. The lunatic is now confined in the asylum, and, since she was declared such, she has inherited a small estate from some of her kindred.

The party holding the money went into the county court of Boyle, and the brother of the lunatic asked that a committee be appointed to take charge of the money, which is about $500. The court appointed the appellee, J. W. Sallee, the committee, and the appellant refused to pay the money over on the ground that the county court had no jurisdiction to appoint Sallee; and, if so, the appointment was invalid without notice to the lunatic.

Under chapter 67 of the Kentucky Statutes it will be found that both the county and circuit courts are invested with the power to appoint committees for lunatics, and, although enacted since the inquest of lunacy was held, it is merely a mode of procedure adopted for the security of the estates of this unfortunate class of people, and, as the inquest was had in the Boyle County Court, it was eminently proper for this tribunal to take the bond and appoint the committee to take and hold the money for the lunatic.

The lunatic is in fact the ward of the court, and, finding this money in the hands of the appellant, it was the duty of the county court to secure it for its ward. This having been done, the appointment was proper; nor was it necessary to have the lunatic before court or served with notice.

She has been deprived of no right or her interests prejudiced in any way; but, on the contrary, is only secured in that to which she was entitled. The committee and his surety are liable to the lunatic for the money received or its proper appropriation, and the appellant released from liability when he pays it to the committee.

Judgment affirmed.

ROBERTS, &C. V. PORTER, &C.

(Filed November 10, 1896.)

1. Restrictions in deed as to buildings to be erected on lot conveyed—Where a deed to a lot on the corner of Ormsby avenue and Second street, in the city of Louisville, provided that "it is a condition of this conveyance that said lot, when improved, shall have on it a brick residence not less than two and one-half stories high, and that said residence shall front Ormsby avenue, and the front line of same shall not be nearer to Ormsby avenue than the front line of the homestead now on the same block," this condition was for the benefit not only of the grantors to the extent of their reserved homestead, but of any one to whom they might sell adjacent lots.

2. Same—One who purchased from the grantee the lot thus conveyed having erected thereon a residence of the kind described fronting on Ormsby avenue, the purchaser of an adjacent lot has no right to complain of the erection by him of additional residences of the kind described fronting on Second street, as the chief matter of interest was the protection of the frontage on Ormsby avenue.

C. B. Seymour, James Quarles, Quarles & Allen, John W. Barr, jr., and Fairleigh & Straus for appellants.

Walter Evans for appellees.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Law and Equity division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hazelrigg.

The Morats were the owners of a square of land on the north side of Ormsby avenue, between First and Second streets, in Louisville, and upon which, near the center of the square and fronting the avenue, stood their residence.

In 1890 they decided to sell off certain parts of the square, and, as a protection to their remaining property and to all the lots offered, they proposed to impose certain conditions with respect to the nature and location of the improvements to be erected on the premises by the purchasers.

Accordingly, when they sold a lot, of 40 feet by 180 feet, on the corner of Ormsby avenue and Second street, which they did in May, 1890, to J. H. Lindenberger, they inserted in their deed the following condition: "It is a condition of this conveyance that said lot, when improved, shall have on it a brick residence, not less than two and one-half stories high, and that said residence shall front Ormsby avenue, and the front line of same shall not be nearer to Ormsby avenue than the front line of the Morat homestead, now on same block."

After this sale the Morats sold to appellant Roberts a lot adjoining the Lindenberger lot, and between it and the Morat homestead, and upon it appellant erected a handsome brick residence.

Afterwards Lindenberger sold his lot to the appellee, Annie Porter, who, over the protest of Roberts, began to build a brick residence, of the kind described in the condition named, and fronting on Ormsby avenue and the required distance therefrom, and also three other like brick residences on the rear of her lot, and fronting on Second street. Thereupon Roberts brought this suit in equity, seeking to enjoin the erection of these buildings. No preliminary injunction was applied for, but notice to desist was given, in the face of which and the suit the buildings were erected. The petition was dismissed, and Roberts has appealed.

As already indicated, we think the condition alluded to was for the benefit not only of the Morats, to the extent of their reserved homestead, but of any one to whom they might sell adjacent lots, and this although such purchaser were no party to the Lindenberger deed, in which the condition first appeared.

This principle is clearly recognized in Graham v. Hite, 93 Ky., 481, and in the ordinary text-books on easements. (Washburn on Easements and Servitudes, side page 58.)

The chief question here, however, is, what is the extent and meaning of the condition? Confessedly, the lot has on it a brick residence not less than two and one-half stories high, fronting on Ormsby avenue, and the front line of which is not nearer that avenue than the front line of the Morat homestead; and it seems to us that if further prohibitive stipulations were intended they would have been inserted.

The frontage of the residences on Ormsby, their size and quality, and the distance the houses were to stand from that avenue, were the chief points of interest. We do not believe the improvement of the rear of the lots was in the mind of the grantors at all, but only the Ormsby avenue end, yet it is likely that no other than a brick residence of the kind described could be built anywhere on the lots. This might be assumed to have been the intention of the contracting parties, and, if so, the appellee still has not violated the condition, as the houses are of the kind required.

It does not follow, as suggested by counsel, that, if the appellee may thus erect houses on the Second street end of her lot, she might, after complying literally with the conditions in her deed and erecting a two-story and a half brick residence on a line with the Morat house, and fronting Ormsby avenue, also erect additional houses on the Ormsby end of the lot. As we have seen, the protection of this frontage was a special matter of interest, and any encroachment thereon is specially provided against.

The judgment must be affirmed.

SMITH V. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed November 11, 1896.)

1. Practice in criminal cases—Qualifications of jurors. The provision of subsection 7 of section 210 of the Criminal Code that a juror may be challenged for implied bias "when the offense is punishable with death, if he entertain such conscientious opinions as would preclude him from finding the defendant guilty," applies to the trial of offenses which may, in the discretion of the jury, be punishable either by death or by confinement in the penitentiary, and is not restricted to those which can be punished in no other way than with death. It is, therefore, proper upon a trial for murder to inquire of the jurors whether they have "such conscientious scruples on the subject of capital punishment as would prevent them from finding a verdict of guilty where the punishment was or might be death."

2. Same—The fact that a juror has formed an opinion based upon rumor does not render him incompetent, if he states that he can give the defendant a fair and impartial trial, according to the law and testimony, without regard to such opinion. And a juror was not incompetent in this case, although he stated in one part of his opinion that he had a "fixed" opinion and that it "would require evidence to remove or change such opinion," as the whole of his examination is to be taken together in determining his qualifications.

3. Reversible errors. There can be no reversal in a criminal case for error in refusing to grant a new trial nor on account of decisions of the court upon challenges to the panel and for cause.

4. The argument of a case may be reasonably limited, and the court in this case did not abuse its discretion in limiting the argument to four hours on a side.

J. F. Montgomery, J. Bryan Stone and J. E. Hays for appellant.

W. S. Taylor for appellee.

Appeal from Russell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge DuRelle.

The appellant was indicted for murder and convicted of voluntary manslaughter.

It is urged in his behalf that the trial court permitted each juror to be asked "if he had such conscientious scruples on the subject of capital punishment as would prevent him from finding a verdict of guilty where the punishment was or might be death," and, upon certain jurors replying in the affirmative, excused them from service.

Subsection 7 of section 210 of the Criminal Code provides that a juror may be challenged for implied bias "when the offense is punishable with death, if he entertain such conscientious opinion as would preclude him from finding the defendant guilty."

It is contended that the amendment which permits the jury to fix the penalty for murder at either death or confinement in the penitentiary for life in their discretion renders this subsection a nullity; but we can not concur in this view.

"Punishable with death" means that which may be punished with death—not that which can be punished in no other way. The question appears to be a proper inquiry touching the competency of the jurors. It is further objected that "two jurors who were presented stated that they had opinions in the case, which opinions were based upon the rumors of the country, and had heard no one undertake to relate the facts in the case, and being examined by the defendant's attorneys stated that they had fixed opinions as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant, and that it would require evidence to remove or change said opinion. They were then each asked by the court if they felt that they could give the defendant a fair and impartial trial according to the law and testimony without regard to such opinion, and they answered that they could, and the court thereupon held said jurors to be competent." * * *

This procedure seems to be in reasonably strict compliance with the act of April 10, 1888, amending section 207 of the Criminal Code, which provides "that in the trial of any criminal cause the fact that a person called as a juror has formed an opinion or impression, based upon rumor or upon newspaper statements (about the truth of which he has expressed no opinion), shall not disqualify him to serve as a juror in such case, if he shall, upon oath, state that he believes he can fairly and impartially render a verdict therein in accordance with the law and the evidence, and the court shall be satisfied of the truth of such statement."

Some stress is laid upon the fact that the jurors stated, in response to inquiry by the defendant's counsel, "that they had fixed opinions as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant, and that it would require evidence to remove or change said opinion."

The whole examination of a person called as a juror is to be taken together to determine his qualification, and this response, evidently given in answer to an inquiry which suggested the language used, is sufficiently modified and restricted by the response given to the inquiry made by the court. A further objection is the refusal of the trial court to grant a new trial upon the affidavit of Polson as to evidence which he states he had refused to disclose until after the trial. A sufficient answer to all of the objections mentioned is found in section 281 of the Criminal Code. "The decisions of the court upon challenges to the panel and for cause, upon motions to set aside an indictment and upon motions for a new trial, shall not be subject to exception." (Morgan v. Commonwealth, 14 Bush, 106; Terrell v. Commonwealth, 13 Bush, 251; Rutherford v. Commonwealth, 13 Bush, 609.)

One other objection remains to be noticed, namely, that the court limited the argument to four hours on a side, and as defendant had six counsel this arrangement gave them only forty minutes a piece in which to present their case. We can not admit that a limitation much as he was the agent of the company it is bound by his agreements and waivers. Appellant introduced no proof. His statements to Davis to the effect that he need not give notice or make proof of loss was a sufficient excuse to Davis for not doing so without regard to Rogers' refusal to pay, and Wright's assent and agreement to the sales and assignments previously mentioned are obligatory upon the company.

The judgment of the court below, being in accord with the views herein expressed, is affirmed.

SENG V. KELLER & SONS.

(Filed November 12, 1896—Not to be reported.)

1. Building contract--Damage by cyclone—Cost of repairs—In this action by contractors to recover the cost of repairing the damage done by a cyclone to a house which they had constructed for the defendant, in which the defendant contended that the loss by the cyclone was the loss of the builders, the evidence was sufficient to authorize the conclusion that the house had in fact been accepted by the owner prior to the time of the cyclone, and that the work thereafter done was with the understanding that the owner was to pay for it.

2. Same—In part payment of the original contract price the plaintiffs should be required to accept, at the price fixed in a contract, a city lot which they agreed to accept, as their claim as to fraudulent representations by defendant as to the value of the lot is not sustained by the evidence, any statement made by him as to value being merely an expression of opinion.

Geo. Weissinger Smith and O'Neal & Pryor for appellant.

Simrall, Bodley & Doolin and Benjamin F. Washer for appellees.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Law and Equity division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hazelrigg.

The appellees are contractors and builders in Louisville, and as such undertook, in the fall of 1889, to build a house for the appellant under the following writing:

"L. Keller & Son, City:

"DEAR SIRS—I agree to pay you the sum of three thousand dollars and a lot in Portland for building my house, according to plans and specifications, in a good and workmanlike manner, on Chestnut above Fifteenth. Lot fifty by one hundred and five feet, on the northwest corner of Thirty-fourth and Missouri avenue. Contractors to draw seventy-five per cent. as the work progresses.

"H. H. SENG."

On March 27, 1890, the house was substantially completed, and the contractors had drawn some $2,800. On the night of the date named the structure was materially damaged by a cyclone. Under a further employment, appellees contend, the house was rebuilt or repaired, and, at the completion of the work, they demanded of the appellant the additional cost. This was refused, the appellant contending that the loss by the cyclone was the loss of the builders, and that he had made no contract other than the writing.

This suit was then brought by the builders for some $400 alleged to be due for extra work done prior to the storm, and for some $1,200 for repairing the wreck. It was further alleged that the lot in Portland was represented by appellant to be worth $600, and was so estimated in the building contract, when it was in fact worth not exceeding $150, and that appellant did not own or have any interest in the lot, and judgment was therefore asked for this additional sum.

The appellant agreed that such extra work had been done of the value of some $350, which he offered to pay, but denied the other averments of the petition, and tendered a deed for the lot. The court rendered judgment for the plaintiffs on the entire demand.

The proof, while quite conflicting, conduces to show that the building was completed, save in some insignificant respects, at the time of the cyclone, and had in fact been accepted by the owner, and that the work thereafter done was with the understanding that the owner was to pay for it. This feature of the judgment, therefore, as well as that adjusting the account for extra work, must be approved.

We think, however, that if any statement was made by appellant as to the value of the Portland lot—which he denies—it was only an expression of opinion, and there is a total absence of fraud or suspicious circumstances connected with such representation. The proof discloses that he was in fact the owner of it, and, as the contract required the builders to take this lot, we see no reason why they should not be compelled to do so.

For the reason last indicated the judgment is reversed, with directions to enter judgment in accordance with this opinion.

SAWYERS V. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed November 12, 1896—Not to be reported.)

1. Homicide—Instructions to jury—Upon the trial of appellant under an indictment for murder, upon which he was convicted of manslaughter, the evidence was sufficient to authorize an instruction upon the subject of murder.

2. Reversible error—There can be no reversal because of demonstrations of approval by the crowd in the courtroom while the attorney for the State was addressing the jury, or because one of the jurors had expressed his conviction prior to the trial that the accused was guilty of murder and ought to be hung, as these matters were first called to the attention of the court on motion for a new trial, and an error of the court in overruling a motion for new trial in a criminal case is not the subject of exception.

J. Smith Hays and S. B. Dishman for appellant.

Tinsley & Faulkner and W. S. Taylor for appellee.

Appeal from Knox Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hazelrigg.

Appellant was convicted of the crime of manslaughter under an indictment in the Knox Circuit Court for the murder of Robert Burnside, and sentenced to confinement in the penitentiary for twenty-one years.

The parties were young men, and appear to have been entirely friendly until a few moments before the fatal affray. They, with others, were seated about a stove in the storehouse of a relative of appellant, when Burnside, after eating some crackers and a bit of cheese, called for water, with which he rinsed his mouth, and spit it toward the stove, but nearer to the feet of appellant—some of it probably striking his feet or legs. Sharp words followed, and the act of spitting the water was repeated several times by Burnside, accompanied with insulting language. The parties soon left their chairs and clinched—the appellant cutting and thrusting with a small pocket knife and Burnside striking with a beer glass, from which he had been drinking water.

After separation it was found that Burnside had been cut a number of times in the chest and abdomen, while appellant was bruised and cut about the head with the glass. The former died in a few days from his wounds.

Under the most favorable construction of the somewhat conflicting proof the accused was guilty of manslaughter, and if the testimony of one or more of the witnesses for the State be credited, to the effect that the accused rushed on the deceased and cut him while the latter was doing nothing beyond using provoking language, the crime might well have been pronounced a murder. Upon this theory of the case it was not improper to give an instruction on the subject of murder, and this disposes of the first error complained of by appellant and the only one complained of as to the instructions.

The second complaint is that the crowd was permitted by the court to make demonstrations of approval by applause and laughter while the attorney for the State was addressing the jury. No decision of the court was made touching this matter, however, and we learn it for the first time in affidavits filed on the motion for a new trial.

We will consider this alleged error in connection with the third and only remaining ground of complaint, to wit: That John Bright, one of the jurors, had expressed his conviction prior to the trial that the accused was guilty of murder, and ought to be hung. This is also shown for the first time by affidavits filed on the motion for a new trial, so that if error were committed by the court in respect to either of these complaints it was committed in overruling the motion for a new trial, and error in such respect is not the subject of exception (Criminal Code, section 281). No decision was made by the court during the trial touching either the juror's competency or the misconduct of the crowd.

It is proper to add that counter-affidavits disclosed that the trial judge was not remiss in preserving quiet and rapping for order when the confusion complained of occurred, and affidavits denying and explaining the alleged expressions of the juror were also filed and considered by the trial judge, in whose discretion this matter rests under the provisions of our law. (Kennedy v. Commonwealth, 14 Bush, 343, and cases cited.)

Judgment affirmed.

LANE, &C. V. BRYANT.

(Filed November 12, 1896.)

1. Slander—Inconsistent defenses—Election—In this action for slander in which the defendants denied the speaking of the slanderous words and also pleaded their truth, the defendants having elected, upon being required by the court to make an election, to rely upon the former defense, it was error to permit the plaintiff to read to the jury the second paragraph of the answer that had been rejected as an admission by the defendant that the slanderous words were spoken as alleged.

2. Same—Although the pleas were inconsistent, it was error to require the defendant to elect.

3. Liability of husband for wife's slanders—By reason of the changes made by statute in the relations between husband and wife as to the rights of property and of personal control by the husband, the reason of the common-law rule making the husband liable for the wife's slanders has ceased to exist, and, therefore, the rule itself no longer exists.

W. A. Morrow for appellants.

O. H. Waddle for appellee.

Appeal from Pulaski Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Pryor.

Wm. Lane and Mattie Lane, the appellants in this court, are husband and wife.

The wife (Mattie) charged the appellee, Bryant, with having committed the crime of perjury when testifying in a certain action between one Vaught and her husband. This action of slander was instituted by Bryant, the appelle, against Mattie and her husband, and a verdict returned, upon which a judgment was rendered against both husband and wife, and a capias directed to issue against the husband. They both appeal, the wife insisting the judgment should be reversed against both, because of the admission of incompetent testimony, and the husband that he is in no manner responsible for the torts of the wife unless he directs or aids in their commission.

The appellants in the first paragraph of their answer denied the speaking and publishing of the words alleged, and in the second paragraph admitted the publication, and said the slanderous words were true. On motion of the plaintiff the defendants were required to elect and make their defense either on the first or second paragraph. They elected, reserving exceptions, the first paragraph, as their defense, and when the plaintiff attempted to prove the words spoken by the wife he was allowed, over the objection of the defendants, to read to the jury the second paragraph of the answer, that had been rejected, as an admission by the defendants that the slanderous words were spoken as alleged. This was error. The defense, however, properly had been denied the right to rely on the plea of justification by being required to elect, and with this defense cut off the plaintiff was nevertheless permitted to read it to the jury as evidence establishing his cause of action, and the defense denied the right to show that the words spoken were true. It was clearly incompetent as against the defendants or either of them, and for this error the judgment must be reversed as to both defendants.

In Rooney v. Tierney, 82 Ky., 253, it is held that in slander the plea of not guilty and justification are inconsistent, and the case of Harper v. Harper, 10 Bush, 447, is no longer the law.

The right of the appellee to a judgment against the husband under the rule of the common law is unquestioned in the event the case is made out for the plaintiff, but it is insisted that when the reason for the recognition of such a rule ceases the rule itself should be disregarded.

The liability of the husband at the common law was based on the idea of his absolute domain over the person of his wife, with the right to all of her personal and the use of her real estate; to the rents and profits of her realty; to her earnings and labor, and the power of the control of the wife by the husband was caused to such an extent as to vest in him the right to use such forcible means as would bridle her tongue or make her of good behavior. The rule is a harsh one at best, and with the progress of civilization, and the changes by a wise, modern legislature of the relations between husband and wife as to the right of property and personal control by the husband, it would seem absurd in this enlightened age to regard the wife as a mere machine, made to labor and to talk as the husband directs, and to make him liable on that ground for her torts when not committed by his direction or procurement.

Under the act of March 15, 1894, now a part of the Kentucky Statutes, the husband has "no estate or interest in the wife's property, real or personal, during her life, owned at the time or acquired after marriage. During the existence of the marriage relation the wife shall hold and own all her estate to her separate and exclusive use, and free from the debts, liabilities or control of her husband." (Kentucky Statutes, section 773, article 3, chapter 66.)

The wife under this statute may make contracts, sue and be sued, collect her rent, and may sell and dispose of her personal property. While it may be and is the marital duty of both to aid each other in the support and maintenance of each and of their children, the control and use of the wife's property by her is independent of the husband, nor subject to his control, and the familiar doctrine that the legal existence of the wife is merged in that of the husband no longer exists, and as on this rule is based the common law liability of the husband for the wife's torts, and even for her debts contracted before marriage, the reason for enforcing this doctrine is gone, and past adjudications on the subject will not be followed. The unity of person has been destroyed, and to say that it still exists, with the constant legislation of this State endeavoring to secure the wife in her person and property, and at last by the act of March, 1894, making the wife the equal of the husband in the control and use of property, would be opposed to the plain legislative intent, and result in enforcing a doctrine that has neither wisdom nor justice in it, and as said by Mr. Justice Thornton, in Martin v. Robson, 65 Ill., —, "the legal supremacy of the husband is gone and the sceptre departed from him. The wife has the legal right and aspires to battle with him in the contests of the forum; to outvie him in the healing art; to climb with him the steps of fame, and share with him in every occupation. Her brain and hands and tongue are her own, and she should alone be responsible for slanders uttered by herself."

As the husband had nothing to do with the publication of the slanderous words charged, and in no manner aided in their publication, the judgment against him is reversed and case remanded as to both defendants for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

On petition the opinion is modified by the interlineations made.

SLUSHER V. CONANT.

(Filed November 13, 1896—Not to be reported.)

1. Vendor and vendee—Agreement—The plaintiff having released his vendor's lien on land upon the execution by defendant of the note sued on, with personal security, in satisfaction of the lien note, an agreement that this note should not be paid until the land should be surveyed and the boundaries located should, if made, have been reduced to writing, and the court can not find upon conflicting parol testimony that there was such an agreement.

2. Same—The testimony is not such as would authorize the chancellor to withhold his judgment in mere anticipation of a recovery by other claimants, the vendee being in possession and from the proof not likely to be disturbed.

Thomas H. Hines and D. B. Logan for appellant.

Tinsley & Faulkner, C. W. Metcalfe and C. C. Turner for appellee.

Appeal from Bell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Pryor.

The appellant is resisting a recovery on the note for $2,000 because of a defect in the title to the land for which it was executed, and because of the failure of the appellee (the grantor) to have the land surveyed and the boundaries located, under an agreement that the note was not to be paid until this was done, or until it was shown that the Patton patent covered the land sold.

On the facts of this case we think it immaterial whether the note sued on is or not a renewal note for the land bought by appellant of the appellee, or is to be regarded as an independent transaction. It is evident this note in controversy was in settlement of a note given for this land, and on its execution the action to enforce the lien was dismissed.

A deed has been made and accepted by the appellant. He has never been evicted, and the patent under which he claims is much older than the patent under which the hostile claim is said to exist.

When the suit was pending to enforce the lien for the purchase money the present note was executed in satisfaction of the lien note and the lien released, the appellees accepting Asher as security in lieu of the lien upon the land and the action then dismissed. On this last note that was evidently taken in settlement of the entire controversy it is now said it was not to be paid unless the boundaries of patent 10701 were ascertained so as the appellant might be enabled to defend against hostile claimants. The insolvency of the appellees is also alleged as making their warranty worthless in the event an eviction takes place.

The vendee is in the possession, and from the proof before us is not likely to be disturbed. Besides, the vendors waived their lien, took personal security, gave additional time for the payment of the debt, and if the agreement to locate the boundary of the Patton patent was of such importance as to defeat the recovery on the note it should have been evidenced by writing and not left to the memory of those who are now making conflicting statements in regard to it.

The testimony is not such as would authorize the chancellor to withhold his judgment in mere anticipation of a recovery by other claimants.

Judgment affirmed.

LUCAS V. LUCAS' ADM'R.

(Filed November 13, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Pleading—Insufficient denial—When facts alleged affirmatively in the pleading of one party are presumptively within the knowledge of the other party, justice requires a straightforward denial or confession, and not merely a statement by defendant that he has not sufficient knowledge or information upon which to form a belief; and whatever is the duty of a party to know, or he is in a position where reasonable diligence would enable him to know, the court will hold to be presumptively within his knowledge within the meaning of subsection 7 of section 113 of the Civil Code.

In this action upon a promissory note brought by an administrator, in which the defendant claimed that he was the surviving husband of intestate, and, therefore, that he was entitled to be appointed administrator, and that the appointment of plaintiff was void, the plaintiff having replied that his intestate and defendant had, prior to her death, been divorced by the judgment of a certain court in the State of Ohio, which had jurisdiction of the subject-matter, a rejoinder by which defendant alleged that he had not sufficient knowledge or information upon which to form a belief whether the Ohio court mentioned in the reply was a court of general jurisdiction, or had jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the judgment, "or whether this defendant was before said court according to the laws of Ohio," was not good.

J. C. B. Sebree for appellant.

Victor F. Bradley for appellee.

Appeal from Scott Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Lewis.

July, 1893, A. O. Lucas executed to Margaretta A. Lucas, then his wife, a promissory note for $900.

George V. Payne, as administrator of her estate, brought this action August 22, 1895, to recover on that note, alleging his appointment and qualification by the Scott County Court. He further stated that before her death, which occurred in February, 1895, the two persons had been divorced by judgment of the Scott Circuit Court, in an action instituted by the husband, and that a judgment, likewise divorcing them, had been rendered in an action instituted by the wife in a court of the State of Ohio.

The latter statement having on motion been stricken from plaintiff's petition, the defendant filed an answer, in which he pleaded as defense, first, coverture when the note was executed; second, the note was executed without consideration; third, that at the date of the judgment of divorce by the Scott Circuit Court Margaretta A. Lucas was in fact dead, and so, they being husband and wife up to the time of her death, he (defendant) was entitled to appointment and qualification as her administrator instead of plaintiff Payne.

Plaintiff in his reply stated that August 24, 1894, Margaretta A. Lucas, while living, obtained judgment of divorce from her husband, in the county of her residence, in the Warren Court of Common Pleas of the State of Ohio, that had jurisdiction of the matter in issue in the action she then instituted, A. O. Lucas being defendant thereto, and before said court according to the law of said State.

To that reply defendant, A. O. Lucas, rejoined simply that he had not sufficient knowledge or information upon which to form a belief whether the Ohio court mentioned in the reply was a court of general jurisdiction, or had jurisdiction of the subject-matter of said judgment, or whether this defendant was before said court according to the laws of Ohio.

Although no formal demurrer to that rejoinder was filed the lower court seemed to have regarded it as insufficient, and instructed the jury to find for plaintiff, which they did do.

If the Warren Court of Common Pleas of the State of Ohio had jurisdiction of the subject-matter of said action, and A. O. Lucas was before that court according to the laws of that State, the judgment of divorce then rendered had the effect to deprive him of all marital rights, including the right of administration upon her estate when she subsequently died; and, consequently, plaintiff Payne, nothing appearing to the contrary, was legally appointed such administrator, and was entitled to recover the judgment now appealed from. For want of consideration of the note is not properly or sufficiently pleaded; nor, as defendant failed at the proper time to move for a transfer of the action to the equity docket, can objection be now made to trial and judgment at law.

Subsection 7, section 113, Civil Code, defines the traverse provided for by section 95 as a denial by a party of facts alleged in an adverse pleading, if they be presumptively within his knowledge, or a denial that he has sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief concerning them, if they be not presumptively within his knowledge.

Where facts alleged affirmatively in the pleading of one are presumptively within the knowledge of the other party, justice requires a straightforward denial or confession that the conscience of the latter may be purged and the former be not put to delay and expense of proving admitted facts.

Whatever it is the duty of a party to know, or he is in a position where reasonable diligence would enable him to know, the court will hold that, in meaning of the Civil Code, it is presumptively within his knowledge.

It seems to us that as the statement was distinctly made in the reply that the divorce was granted in an Ohio court having jurisdiction, and A. O. Lucas was himself a party to the action in which the judgment was rendered, he was required to either admit or deny the allegation explicitly, and, having failed to do either, the statement was properly taken by the lower court as confessed.

Judgment affirmed.

WILLIAMS V. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed November 17, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Carrying concealed deadly weapon—There was no testimony upon which to base a verdict finding appellant guilty of the offense of carrying concealed a deadly weapon, as the weapon which he carried was not concealed, but was stuck in his belt, where a person in front of him could and would necessarily see it.

Blanton & Berry for appellant.

W. S. Taylor for appellee.

Appeal from Harrison Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Lewis.

Section 1309, Kentucky Statutes, under which appellant was indicted and convicted, provides that if any person shall carry concealed a deadly weapon upon or about his person, other than an ordinary pocket knife, he shall be fined, etc.

According to the testimony of the prosecuting witness in this case, upon which alone the jury did or could have based their verdict, he heard his sheep running, and, looking around, saw three boys and three dogs leaving his place and go upon the turnpike road. He then ran, and, getting over the fence, went to within three or four feet of them, having picked up a rock, which was still held in his hand; that upon being thus approached appellant pulled a pistol from in front of his person and pointed it at witness, saying he was ready for him. He testified the pistol was a very large one, being described as long as his arm; that the boys had been out hunting; that appellant did not have on any vest, but a sack coat, and had a leather belt around his waist. He further testifies that he did not see the pistol until appellant turned around and pulled it as he turned.

To conceal, as the word is defined by lexicographers, according to the common and approved usage of language, and, therefore, in the proper meaning of the statute, is to hide, secrete, screen, cover; and, adopting that meaning of the term, which is the only one we are authorized to accept, we think the verdict of the jury in this case is not simply contrary to the weight of evidence, but is totally without any evidence, direct or circumstantial, to support it.

The fact witness, being behind him, did not see the pistol until appellant turned around, does not show or tend to show he had it hid or secreted. On the contrary, considering the size of pistol, absence of a vest, the purpose for which the boys went on witness' place, which was to hunt, it is plain the pistol was not nor could have been concealed, but was stuck in appellant's belt, where a person in front of him could and would necessarily see it.

Wherefore, the judgment is reversed and cause remanded for a new trial.

The Kentucky Law Reporter.

EDITOR:
WALTER G. CHAPMAN, ... Frankfort, Ky.

VOL. 18. MARCH 1, 1897. No. 17

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

TUTTLE V. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed November 17, 1896—Not to be reported.)

1. Homicide—Upon the trial of the appellant for murder, there was evidence before the jury upon which to base their verdict finding him guilty of voluntary manslaughter; and the instructions correctly stated the law.

2. Surprise as ground for new trial—The fact that one of the witnesses for the Commonwealth had misinformed the defendant as to what his testimony before the jury would be, and thereby prevented his having witnesses present who would have shown that the witness had made a different statement, affords no ground for reversal.

W. D. Weaver, H. C. Eversole and Hazelwood & Parker for appellant.

W. S. Taylor for appellee.

Appeal from Laurel Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge DuRelle.

The appellant and Alexander Tuttle were indicted jointly for the murder of Speed Williams, and the appellant has been found guilty of voluntary manslaughter.

The grounds of the appeal are that the verdict is not supported by the evidence; that the court misinstructed the jury; and that a Commonwealth's witness misinformed the appellant as to what his testimony before the jury would be, and thereby prevented his having witnesses present who would have shown that the witness had made a different statement.

The evidence shows that Alexander and Simeon Tuttle went to the Williams house at night, after all the family had gone to bed. Both were armed, Alexander with a pistol, which he carried in his hand, and Simeon with a rifle. On being admitted the family rose from bed; Alexander Tuttle became very abusive and threatening in his language, and slapped a brother of the deceased, saying that he intended to kill the last damn one of the family, and that somebody had to die with his boots on. Speed Williams, in his night-clothes, sat down on a trunk, by which a shotgun stood. Appellant went to the trunk, took the shotgun, and went out with it; as he did so Alexander Tuttle shot Speed Williams and killed him.

There had, it seems, been some trouble between Alexander Tuttle and Speed Williams about a woman, whose house Speed had been compelled to leave without his coat and hat. All three were related, and there had been no previous trouble between Speed and appellant.

But one witness for the Commonwealth testified that he saw Alexander and appellant that evening before the killing, and the latter stated that they were going to the Williams house and raise hell with them.

There was evidence also that appellant procured the pistol with which the shooting was done. Appellant, on his own behalf, swore that he took the shotgun at the request of Jane, the mother of Speed, which statement is contradicted by her. It appears further that he went for the doctor, and assisted in matters connected with the burial; but there was evidence before the jury on which to base their verdict, and we are not inclined to disturb it.

The instructions appear to correctly state the law, and the third objection is hardly a ground for reversal.

Judgment affirmed.

FENLEY V. TYLER, &C.

(Filed November 18, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Judicial sales—Jurisdiction to re-sell upon failure of purchaser to pay sale bonds Where one of several plaintiffs in an action for the sale of land and the distribution of the proceeds became the purchaser at the sale, but failed at the maturity of the sale bonds to pay them, and the court awarded a rule against him and his sureties to show cause why payment should not be made, the court had jurisdiction to order a re-sale of the land, although the rule was not served on the principal in the bond, who was a nonresident, as he, being the plaintiff in the action, was before the court for all the purposes of enforcing the collection of the bonds; and, if not, the service on the sureties gave the court jurisdiction. Besides, it was the duty of the purchaser, when the notes fell due, to come into court and make payment, and not that of the chancellor to hunt him up and inform him that his bonds were due.

O. A. Wehle for appellant.

Dodd & Dodd for appellees.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Law and Equity division.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Pryor.

The land in this action was sold under a judgment of re-sale and purchased by the appellant, Oscar Fenley, who is now resisting the payment of the purchase money on the ground that W. C. Williams, who was interested in the land or its proceeds, was not before the court when the re-sale was ordered, and under which the purchase was made by the appellant, Fenley.

W. C. Williams and others interested with him were the original plaintiffs in the action under which the land was sold, and the first sale having been set aside, in accordance with the mandate of this court, a re-sale was ordered, when one of the plaintiffs in the action, W. C. Williams, purchased the land for $5,900, and complied with the terms of sale by executing his three bonds for the purchase money, with C. L. Kerr and Addie Kerr as his sureties.

When the bonds matured the purchaser, Williams, and his sureties failed to pay them, and a rule was awarded against them to show cause why payment should not be made. The rule was served on the sureties, but not on Williams (the principal), he being a non-resident. The sureties are insolvent, and so state in their response. The court adjudged the response of the sureties insufficient and ordered the land re-sold, when the appellant, Fenley, became the purchaser.

Williams, the purchaser, being the plaintiff in the action, was before the court for all the purposes of enforcing the collection of the bonds, and, if not, those who united with him in the sale bonds were as much liable as Williams, the principal, and, the rule being served on them, gave the court jurisdiction to enforce the payment by a re-sale of the land; but, regardless of all this, it was the duty of Williams, when the notes fell due, to come into court and make payment, and not that of the chancellor to hunt him up and inform him that his notes were due. The object of the sale was to sell the land and distribute the proceeds. It was at his instance the judgment of sale was rendered, and the chancellor had jurisdiction of the parties until this money was paid and deed executed.

Judgment enforcing the payment of the purchase money is affirmed.

WILLIAMS V. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed November 18, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Indictment—Limitation—Allegation as to time—Unless an indictment for a misdemeanor is returned within twelve months after the commission of the offense the statute of limitation operates as a bar to the prosecution; therefore, time is a material ingredient in the offense, and if the indictment fails to allege that the offense was committed within twelve months before the finding of the indictment, and the date alleged shows that it was committed more than twelve months before the indictment was returned, a demurrer should be sustained.

As the indictment in this case for pointing a deadly weapon at another was returned November 12, 1895, and alleges that the offense was committed "on the —— day of November, 1890," a demurrer should have been sustained.

Blanton & Berry for appellant.

W. S. Taylor for appellee.

Appeal from Harrison Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

The indictment charges that the defendant "on the -- day of November, 1890, in the county and State aforesaid, and before the finding of this indictment, did unlawfully and willfully point a deadly weapon, to wit, a pistol, at F. G. Brinker, etc."

The indictment was returned into court on the 12th day of November, 1895. It does not state the offense was committed within twelve months before the finding of the indictment.

Section 129, Criminal Code, is as follows, to wit: "The statement in the indictment as to the time at which the offense was committed is not material further than as a statement that it was committed before the time of finding the indictment, unless the time be a material ingredient in the offense."

The offense with which the defendant is charged is a misdemeanor, and, unless the indictment was returned within twelve months after its commission, the statute of limitation operates as a bar to the prosecution. Therefore, the time is a material ingredient in the offense.

The indictment charges that the offense was committed about five years before the indictment was returned.

Subsection 5, section 165, Criminal Code, provides: "If the indictment contains matter which is a legal defense or bar to the prosecution" a demurrer is proper.

A Demurrer was filed and overruled. It should have been sustained. The demurrer admitted the facts stated in the indictment, and when we apply the law to them we find the right to impose the penalty has been barred by the lapse of time.

It is suggested that the grand jury, by the figures used in stating the time of the offense, meant 1895. To follow this suggestion we would have to conclude the figure "0" was a figure "5." This we can not do, as the figure used does not in the least resemble a figure "5," but is a very good figure "0." We must read the indictment as it is written.

The judgment is reversed, with directions that a new trial be granted the defendant, and that the demurrer be sustained to the indictment.

STURGEON V. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed November 18, 1896—Not to be reported.)

1. Indictment—Objection to the indictment upon the ground that two offenses were charged was waived, no demurrer being filed.

2. Arrest of judgment—A motion in arrest of judgment can not be sustained if the indictment states facts constituting a public offense within the jurisdiction of the court, even though it might have been bad on demurrer.

3. Evidence not prejudicial—Upon the trial of appellant for the offense of drawing upon and pointing at another a pistol the action of the court in permitting the Commonwealth to prove that the wife of defendant said to the prosecuting witness while the difficulty was going on that "he had better go on away or her husband would shoot him," was not prejudicial to appellant, he having admitted in his testimony that he drew the pistol and pointed it in the direction of the prosecuting witness, but toward the ground. Whether the testimony objected to was competent it is not necessary to determine.

4. Contradiction of witness—The defendant having introduced testimony to show that the prosecuting witness "swore" at him, it was proper to permit the prosecuting witness to deny that he "swore" at defendant. This was not a contradiction on a collateral matter.

5. Pointing pistol at another—To draw a deadly weapon upon another is an offense, and it is likewise an offense to point a deadly weapon at another.

As the indictment in this case charges that defendant drew a pistol upon and pointed it at another, it was not improper to give an instruction to the jury authorizing them to find defendant guilty if they believed he drew the pistol upon or pointed it at the prosecuting witness.

6. Same—Instructions—The court, in submitting to the jury the question as to whether defendant had pointed the pistol, etc., did not err in failing to insert in the instruction the words "and not in his self-defense," the question of self-defense being fully submitted by another instruction.

Blanton & Berry for appellant.

W. S. Taylor for appellee.

Appeal from Harrison Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

The indictment charges that the defendant did draw upon and point at Dan King a deadly weapon, to wit, a pistol, etc. It is claimed that the additional allegations in the indictment constitute another offense; that two offenses are charged in the indictment. No demurrer was presented to the indictment, therefore the question was waived.

No motion was made in arrest of judgment, and such motion could not have been sustained, because the indictment states facts constituting a public offense within the jurisdiction of the court. When the indictment states a public offense, though it might have been bad on demurrer for some other reason, we can not disregard the verdict because the court might have sustained the demurrer for such other reason had one been presented.

It is insisted that the court erred in permitting the Commonwealth to prove that the wife of the defendant, while the difficulty was going on, said to the witness, King, that "he had better go on away, as her husband would shoot him," to which the witness replied "he only had one time to die, and would die looking it in the face."

It is not necessary to decide whether or not this testimony is competent. If it were not it could not have been prejudicial to the rights of the defendant. He admitted in giving his testimony that he drew the pistol and pointed it in the direction of King, but said it was towards the ground. The declaration of the wife did not in the least tend to prove that the defendant pointed the pistol at King.

It is contended that the court erred in permitting King to deny that he had "sworn," because, as it is claimed, it contradicts defendant on a collateral matter. The defendant claimed that his acts were in his apparently necessary self-defense. He testified in chief that King hollowed "to know what in the hell he had struck his buggy for."

Defendant also introduced another witness, who testified that King "swore" at the defendant. The purpose of this testimony was to aid in showing that King was the aggressor, and assumed a menacing attitude towards the defendant. The court did not err in permitting the contradiction.

The language in the instruction, "drew upon or pointed at Dan King," is that used in the indictment. To draw a deadly weapon upon another is an offense under the statute. Likewise it is an offense to point a deadly weapon at another. The indictment charges that he drew it upon and pointed it at another.

The court did not err in failing to insert in instruction No. 1, after the word "unlawfully," the words "and not in his self-defense." The court was submitting the question to the jury as to whether the defendant had pointed the pistol, etc. The court fully submitted the question of pointing the pistol in self-defense in another instruction.

The judgment is affirmed.

JACKSON V. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed November 19, 1896—Not to be reported.)

1. Instructions as to self-defense—The instruction in this case as to self-defense, which is set out in the opinion in full, is not liable to the objection that the jurors may have thought from its language that they were required to believe "beyond a reasonable doubt" that the accused believed he was in danger of death or great bodily harm, in order to acquit upon the ground of self-defense.

2. Evidence—Although the defendant's father, who was a witness for the Commonwealth, stated upon his original examination that defendant told him when he met him a few minutes after the killing that he had shot deceased, the court properly refused to permit him to state upon cross-examination that defendant had also told him that he did the killing in self-defense, the first statement being a voluntary one on the part of the witness and not called out by the Commonwealth, and being excluded as soon as any question was made in regard to it.

3. These statements were not competent as a part of the res gestæ.

4. Reversible error—The mere fact that an improper question was asked is not a reversible error, the court refusing to permit it to be answered.

5. Witness—The cross-examination of a witness as to whether she was paid anything for coming from another county as a witness was legitimate cross-examination to the witness' credibility.

H. C. Eversole and W. S. Jackson for appellant.

W. S. Taylor for appellee.

Appeal from Laurel Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge DuRelle.

Appellant has been convicted of voluntary manslaughter.

It appears that he went from his father's residence to the house of his widowed sister-in-law, some four hundred yards away, about 8 o'clock in the morning. Some five minutes before Ed Chestnut, who was paying attention to Mrs. Jackson, had gone to her house. The evidence is contradictory as to whether appellant, from his window, could have seen Chestnut go to Alice Jackson's house, but, before he started to go there himself, he remarked to his father "that he had heard that Ed. Chestnut was keeping a loaded musket up at Alice Jackson's for him, and he believed he would go and see about it, and see if it was so." Dora Jackson, a daughter of Mrs. Jackson, was sweeping the porch as appellant came up, and informed her mother and Chestnut of his approach. It appears also that he came by an unusual route, so that he could not be seen from the window, a fact which he explains by stating that he was afraid Chestnut might be there and shoot him from the window. Chestnut, on hearing that appellant was coming, told Mrs. Jackson to tell him not to come in and that he had nothing against him. She went to the door and told appellant not to come in and have a fuss in her house. Appellant told Chestnut to get out of there, and thereupon drew his pistol and fired three shots past Mrs. Jackson at Chestnut, two of which took effect, one in the left arm and one in the head. Chestnut fell backwards in the room, with his feet about three feet from the door.

Appellant claims that Chestnut drew his pistol with his left hand, his right being crippled, and attempted to use it, having first drawn his pocket knife and dropped it. The shot which struck Chestnut's arm ranged upwards in such a manner as to indicate that his arm was raised towards appellant, and his pocket knife was found on the floor half opened. But Alice Jackson testifies that she took Chestnut's pistol out of his left hand hip pocket after the shooting, and it appears from appellant's own testimony that but three shots were fired and that Chestnut did not shoot. Appellant testifies to an attack upon him by Chestnut, made some time previous to the killing; that Chestnut, upon that occasion, shot at him, and that threats by Chestnut had been reported to him.

Objection is made by appellant's counsel to the instruction upon the law of self-defense, upon the ground that the jury were not sufficiently informed, that if they believed from the evidence that, at the time of the killing, the accused "believed and had reasonable grounds to believe that he was in danger of death or the infliction of great bodily harm at the hands of the deceased, or that it was reasonably apparent to him that such danger existed, they should acquit."

The instruction given seems to us to fully meet the suggestion of counsel. It was this: "If the jury believe from the evidence that at the time the defendant shot with a pistol and wounded deceased, from which he died (if the jury do so believe from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt), he believed and had reasonable grounds to believe he was then and there in immediate danger of death or the infliction of great bodily harm at the hands of deceased, and that to shoot and kill deceased was necessary, or seemed to the defendant, in the exercise of a reasonable judgment, to be necessary to avert said danger, real or to the defendant apparent, then the jury will acquit defendant on the ground of self-defense and apparent necessity."

We see no error in this instruction as to self-defense, and we can not believe that, under this instruction, the jurors thought they were required to believe, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the accused believed he was in danger of death or great bodily harm, as contended by appellant's counsel.

It is further objected that Andrew Jackson, the father of appellant, who was called as a witness for the Commonwealth, stated that, when he met the appellant at Alice Jackson's gate, having gone there on account of hearing the shots, appellant told him he had shot Ed. Chestnut. On cross examination, appellant's counsel asked him if the accused "did not say that he had to kill the deceased in order to save himself; that deceased was trying to kill him." The Commonwealth's objection to this question was sustained, and the court thereupon excluded from the jury the former statement, which "was voluntary on the part of the witness, and not called out by the Commonwealth." It is claimed that, although this was a voluntary statement by the father of appellant, he was, notwithstanding, a Commonwealth's witness, and, as his statement of what his son said to him at the gate was allowed to go to the jury, his subsequent explanation should also have been permitted; and, further, that the whole statement was part of the res gestæ, and should have been admitted as evidence.

There was no objection to the original voluntary statement. Either the prosecution or the defense could have had it excluded at the time it was made, unless it was a part of the res gestæ. It was excluded as soon as any question was made in regard to it. It was not, in our judgment, a part of the res gestæ.

Immediately after the shooting appellant had some talk with Alice Jackson as to how she would testify, and told her she ought not to talk the way she did. He appears, also, to have had some talk with her daughter as to making peace with Alice and Chestnut.

So, when he met his father at the gate, the lis mota may be supposed to have existed, he had time to consider and had actually considered the anticipated litigation, and his declaration was no part of the res gestæ, but a narrative of a past occurrence, and, therefore, hearsay and not admissible as evidence. (A. & E. Ency. of Law, volume 9, page 695, and cases there cited.)

It is insisted, also, that the question asked appellant about being indicted for injuring Chestnut's tombstone was incompetent and calculated to prejudice the jury. It is sufficient to say of this objection that all the objections to questions on this subject were sustained by the trial court, and the mere fact that an improper question was asked and ruled out can not be considered a reversible error.

The cross-examination of Hattie Million (which was also objected to), as to whether she was paid anything for coming from Madison county as a witness, seems to us to be legitimate cross-examination to the witness' credibility. The purpose of this examination was manifest, as it brought out the admission of a previous statement by her that appellant's brother told her if she would come to Laurel county as a witness she could get anything she wanted.

Judgment affirmed.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE R. R. CO. v. BERNARD.

(Filed November 19, 1896—Not to be reported.)

1. Railroads—Duty to trespassers—Punitive damages—Even though a person be a trespasser upon a railroad train, the employes of the company are not justified in forcibly expelling him therefrom while the train is in motion, or in using undue or brutal means for his expulsion. But as the plaintiff in this case, who was a trespasser, had not actually boarded the train, but was simply attempting to get upon one of the cars, when the brakeman compelled him to desist by loosening his grasp upon an iron rod which ran along the side of the car, or by shoving him off the hub of the car wheel upon which his feet rested, the brakeman was not guilty of negligence, as the rate of speed of the train was at the time not more than four or five miles an hour. And in this action to recover for the injuries resulting from the car wheel running over the plaintiff's foot as he fell the court erred in instructing the jury in substance that they should find for plaintiff if they believed defendant, through its servants in charge of the train, by negligence ejected plaintiff therefrom while the train was in motion. The court should have instructed the jury, as requested, that they must find for the defendant if they believed that the brakeman used no more force than was necessary to prevent the plaintiff from getting on the train.

2. Same—As there was no evidence tending to show gross negligence, it was error to give an instruction as to punitive damages.

J. A. Mitchell, H. W. Bruce and Wm. Lindsay for appellant.

Goodnight & Roark for appellee.

Appeal from Simpson Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Lewis.

Appellee, accompanied by eight or ten boys and young men, he being then about full grown, went from Franklin, where they resided, to Woodburn, a town about eight miles distant on the line of appellant's road, where there was a colt show and picnic; but, failing to return on the afternoon passenger train, they about nightfall walked towards Franklin to a water tank, one and a half miles from Woodburn, in order to ride upon a freight train, the arrival of which they awaited three hours.

As that train, after taking water, was starting appellee attempted to board a car upon which was an oil tank, but was prevented by one of the brakemen; and either in his effort to get down or being shoved by the brakeman he fell, a car wheel ran on and partly tearing the flesh from one of his heels, and otherwise so injured him that he was confined at his home, unable to do work, for several months, besides suffering considerable pain.

According to his statement, which was corroborated by two or three of his companions, he had placed one foot upon the box of a car wheel, the other upon an iron bar under the car, and grasped with both hands an iron rod or rail which extended alongside of the oil tank car, in the effort, and was about to spring upon the top of it when the brakeman, without speaking to him, loosened his grasp upon the rod and shoved him down. The brakeman, however, testifies he merely put his hands upon appellee's arms and forbade his getting on the car, when he desisted.

That the purpose of appellee and his companions in going to the water tank was to get a free ride back to Franklin, with or without permission of the conductor in charge of the freight train, is plain. No one of them spoke to the conductor or was seen by him, for he was in the caboose at the rear end of the train, which was composed of twenty-five or thirty cars, and, therefore, two hundred or three hundred yards long. Besides, though it was stationary five or six minutes while taking water, neither appellee nor any of his companions attempted to get aboard the train until it was about to start, or was actually starting.

It is true he, while admitting on cross-examination that he did not have permission of the conductor to ride on the train, stated in a general way that he got permission from the brakeman; but that statement is utterly inconsistent with his previous one that nothing was said by either himself or the brakeman at the time he was shoved or made to get off the box of the car wheel. Besides, he knew if any other brakeman had given such permission it was done in violation of the rules of the company and in disregard of the authority of the conductor, who had charge of the train, for if he and his companions had intended to pay their fare they would have gone to the caboose, where the conductor was and whom they seemed to carefully avoid.

The evidence is satisfactory to us that when appellant attempted to get upon the oil-tank car he was in law and fact, as the lower court in instructions to the jury correctly assumed him to be, a trespasser, and as such he must be treated by this court in determining the relative rights and duties of the parties to this litigation.

The lower court, upon the state of facts as we have substantially stated them, instructed the jury to find for plaintiff in the action if they believed defendant, through its agents and servants in charge of and operating its train of cars, by negligence threw or evicted the plaintiff therefrom while it was in motion, and he was injured thereby, unless they should further believe plaintiff himself was guilty of negligence, which contributed to the injury to such an extent as that but for his own negligence the injuries would not have occurred.

The jury was further instructed that they might, in addition to compensatory damages, find punitive damages in case they believed the plaintiff was injured by gross negligence of defendant, acting through any servant in charge of or operating its train.

There is nothing in this case tending to show the brakeman or other servant of appellant was guilty of gross negligence, and, consequently, the jury was not authorized nor ought to have been instructed they might find punitive damages; nor do we think the facts in this case authorized submission for the consideration of the jury of any other question than is contained in the following instruction asked for appellant but refused: "The court instructs the jury that the plaintiff, Bernard, in attempting to ride upon defendant's freight train, was a trespasser, and if the jury believe from the evidence that at the time the plaintiff was hurt the brakeman used no more force than was necessary to prevent the plaintiff from getting on said train, then, and in such event, the jury must find for defendant."

It is undoubtedly a just and well-established rule, heretofore recognized by this court, that, even though a person be a trespasser upon a railroad train, the employes of the company are not justified in forcibly expelling him therefrom while the train is in motion, or in using undue or brutal means for the expulsion. The reason for that rule is that the ordinary result of expelling a person from a train while in motion is bodily injury to him, danger of which is very little or very great, according to the speed at which it is moving; but in this case the trespasser had not actually boarded the train, clandestinely or otherwise, but was simply attempting to get upon one of the cars. And it is not unfair to assume that if the motion of the train had so recently begun, or was so slow as that appellee could safely climb upon it, which he says he would have done if not prevented, the brakeman was not guilty of any degree of negligence in loosening his grasp on the iron rod, whereby he was compelled to desist, or even in shoving him off the hub of the car axle, unless in doing so he used more force than was necessary, or did it in a brutal manner, for all the witnesses agree the train had moved but a short distance, and none of them put the rate of speed at more than four or five miles an hour when appellee ceased his effort to get upon the car, or was shoved off the places his feet rested upon.

There is enough evidence to satisfactorily show that immediately after the train began to move, for which appellee was evidently waiting, he commenced his effort to get upon the car, and, as it would have required a very short time for him to accomplish the feat, the train was manifestly moving slowly when the brakeman interposed; and, therefore, it would be an abuse of the term to say he was guilty of negligence or any illegal act in using necessary force to keep appellee off the train.

For the errors of the lower court in giving the instructions mentioned and refusing the one asked by appellant the judgment is reversed and cause remanded for a new trial and other proceedings consistent with this opinion.

FIELDS BROS. V. BLANE, &C.

(Filed November 20, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Tobacco warehousemen—Tobacco warehousemen having, in the usual course of business, received tobacco from one who was not the owner, they are not liable to the owner for its proceeds unless they were notified of his claim before the sale or before they had paid over or accounted for the proceeds; and in this action by the owner to recover the proceeds, the evidence as to the notice to defendants of his claim being conflicting, the court erred in taking that question from the jury by instructing them to find for plaintiff if they believed from the evidence that he was the owner.

Burnett & Dallam for appellants.

James T. Webb and R. E. Johnston for appellees.

Appeal from Graves Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Landes.

The action was to recover the proceeds of a quantity of tobacco, which was prized by appellees, George Robbins and W. L. Blane, for appellee, W. E. Blane, and being in part the contents of three hogsheads, which were shipped to the appellants, tobacco warehousemen, by Robbins and Blane, in their name, and sold by the appellants for account of Robbins and Blane.

It was alleged in the petition that said Robbins and Blane and the appellants converted the entire proceeds of the tobacco, amounting to $130.38, to their own use, and that they had "failed and refused to pay said money to plaintiff, or any part of same, although often requested to do so."

Issue was joined, and under the peremptory instructions of the court the jury returned a verdict for Robbins and Blane, and the petition was dismissed as to them. The case was submitted to the jury, however, on the issue made by the appellants, on the evidence and the instructions of the court as to the law, and the jury returned a verdict for the appellee, W. E. Blane, against them for the amount claimed in the petition, upon which judgment was rendered, and this appeal is prosecuted from that judgment, motion for a new trial having been made by appellants and overruled.

It appears from the evidence that the appellants had advanced a large amount of money to Robbins and Blane, who were engaged in the purchase and handling of tobacco, to enable them to buy tobacco, all of which they agreed to ship to the appellants to be inspected and sold at their warehouse in Paducah, who were to make their usual charges for the storing and selling the tobacco, and to credit the proceeds of the sale to the account of Robbins and Blane. Under this arrangement Robbins and Blane shipped to the appellants about 130 hogsheads of tobacco, the tobacco in controversy, which was prized by them under contract with appellee, W. E. Blane, being in three of these hogsheads, and being part of the tobacco that was sold by the appellants for the account of Robbins and Blane. The proceeds of these shipments having been credited by the appellants to Robbins and Blane, it was found at the close of the transaction that the latter owed the appellants a balance of about $2,800 on account of money advanced under the arrangement between them. Meantime, Robbins and Blane, being insolvent, made an assignment for the benefit of their creditors, and the amount of the balance owing by them to the appellants was transferred to Robbins by the appellants for 50 cents on the dollar.

The appellants denied in their pleadings the charge that they had any notice that the tobacco in controversy was owned or claimed by the plaintiff, W. E. Blane, and the testimony on that issue was conflicting.

The appellants complain, first, that the court erred in overruling their demurrer to the petition, and claim that the petition was insufficient.

Although the petition might have been more definite in some essential particulars, yet it is sufficiently definite and plain to a common intent to make known to the defendants, not only the amount claimed by plaintiff, but also the grounds upon which it was sought to make them both liable to him. The demurrer was, therefore, properly overruled.

Further complaint is made that the court erred in the instructions given to the jury at the instance of plaintiff. The instruction complained of is in the following language: "The court instructs the jury that if they believe by a preponderance of the evidence that the plaintiff, W. E. Blane, was the owner of the tobacco sued for or any part of it, they must find for the plaintiff the reasonable cash value of the tobacco owned by him, not exceeding the value alleged in the petition, $49.27 for the lugs, or $81.11 for the leaf, or $130.38 for all."

It is the opinion of the court that the court below erred in giving this instruction. It may be true that the tobacco in controversy did belong to the plaintiff, and that his ownership of it was sufficiently established by the evidence, and yet upon the issues made that the appellants were not liable to him for the proceeds of it. Being warehousemen, and having come into the possession of the tobacco lawfully and in the natural course of business, they were not liable for the proceeds of it unless they were notified before the sale, or before they had paid over, or had accounted for the proceeds if they were paid over, or accounted for by them, to Robbins and Blane, that the plaintiff was the owner, or that he claimed to be the owner of the tobacco or its proceeds. (Abernathy & Long v. Wheeler, Mills & Co., 92 Ky., 320.)

The question of fact in issue as to whether the appellants had paid over the proceeds of the tobacco to Robbins and Blane, their principals, or accounted for the proceeds on a settlement with them, and that before that was done they had actual notice of the plaintiff's claim to the tobacco or its proceeds, was in effect taken by the court from the jury in the instruction complained of. The instruction was, in effect, a peremptory instruction to find for the plaintiff against the appellants.

The evidence on that question of fact being in conflict, the appellants were entitled to have it passed on by the jury, and the instruction complained of was erroneous and prejudicial to the substantial rights of the appellants on its merits. It is not necessary to refer to any other alleged errors. The principles of law applicable to such cases are well settled, and were fully stated in the case referred to.

For the error mentioned the judgment is reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to grant the appellants a new trial, and for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

BALLOWE, &C. V. HILLMAN, &C.

(Filed November 21, 1896—Not to be reported.)

1. Right of plaintiff to introduce testimony after motion for peremptory instruction—There can be no reversal in this case because of the action of the court in permitting the plaintiff to introduce additional testimony after a motion had been made by defendant for a peremptory instruction, the trial court having a reasonable discretion as to that matter, and there being no abuse of discretion in this case.

2. Validity of land patent- A patent for 75,000 acres of land, giving the entire boundary and then excluding "all those surveys of land to which there is now a lawful title," without designating the boundaries excluded, is not void for uncertainty, but passes the title to all the vacant and unappropriated land within the boundary called for by the patent.

3. Same The fact that a patent embraces 10,000 acres of land, although calling for only 8,000 acres, does not affect its validity.

W. G. Bullitt for appellants.

Fenton Sims and R. A. Burnett for appellees.

Appeal from Trigg Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Guffy.

It is substantially alleged in the petition that the plaintiffs below, appellees here, were the owners of and entitled to the possession of 200 acres of land in Trigg county and that appellants were in the unlawful and wrongful possession of the same, and had been and were damaging the same, and appellees sought to enjoin the appellants from further damaging the land, as well as to recover judgment for possession of the land and damages for the trespass, etc.

A demurrer of the appellants to the petition having been properly overruled, they answered. The substance of the answer is that appellant Ballowe is the real party in interest; that Stafford was merely his agent, and that the land was vacant land, and that the county of Trigg had a right to sell the same, and that said appellant bought the same and took out a county warrant therefor, but the county surveyor, who was an agent for appellees, refused to survey the land for appellant, therefore appellant took actual possession of said land with intent to improve it for himself; also denied that plaintiffs had any right or title to the said 200 acres; denied that it was inside of any legal patent or deed to plaintiffs.

The reply of plaintiffs traversed all averments adverse to appellees' title.

A trial resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of appellees, plaintiffs below.

The appellants moved for a new trial and assigned nine different reasons or grounds therefor. The third ground complains of the failure of the court to give a peremptory instruction to find for the defendants, but, on the contrary, suggested to plaintiffs what additional testimony was necessary to their case, and in opening up the case for plaintiffs to introduce such testimony. The bill of exceptions does not show that the court made such suggestion; but does show that plaintiffs were allowed to introduce additional evidence.

The trial court should be allowed a reasonable discretion in such cases, and it does not appear that there was any abuse of discretion in this case, hence we conclude that the court below did not err in refusing the peremptory instruction.

It is also claimed that the court erred in allowing the patent from the Commonwealth of Kentucky to Edwin A. McCaughan, of date 18th April, 1853, for 8,000 acres of land to be read to the jury; also erred in allowing to be read the deed from McCaughan to Hillman, of date 28th January, 1853, for 3,753 acres. Other grounds are relied on, to the effect that the court erred in giving and refusing instructions, which need not be noticed at length.

The chief question presented for decision is as to the validity of the said 8,000-acre patent. Appellants contend that the patent is void because it includes land theretofore patented, and also void for uncertainty and because it includes 10,000 acres when only 8,000 were patented or named.

If the patent passed the title to the patentee to all the land included in the boundary except the parcels excluded, then it is pretty clear that appellees were entitled to recover, for they are certainly the remote vendees of the patentee.

It appears that the entire boundary given in the patent includes or embraces about 75,000 acres; but the patent "excluded all those surveys of land to which there is now a lawful title."

Such patents have been heretofore held by this court to be valid and to pass the title to all the vacant and unappropriated land within the boundary called for by the patent. (Hall v. Martin, 89 Ky., 9.)

It is clearly proven that the patent embraces and includes the land in contest, and the same is true of the subsequent deeds on down to the appellees; and these facts being established, appellees were entitled to recover. Hence it is not necessary to determine whether or not the court erred in giving or refusing other instructions, for the reason that such errors, if any, did not prejudice the substantial rights of the appellants. The fact that the patent embraces 10,000 acres of land, although calling for only 8,000, can not affect appellees' right to recover.

The proof conduces to show that appellants had actual notice of appellees' title before taking possession of the land in contest.

Judgment affirmed.

KALER, &C. V. GRADY.

(Filed November 24, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Statute of frauds—Where the land of a decedent, sold under decree of court to satisfy a lien upon it, brought less than two-thirds of its appraised value, any one of the heirs had the right to redeem, and certain of the heirs having refrained from redeeming upon the faith of the purchaser's promise that if they would not redeem he would pay to one of them the value of her interest in the land or convey to her a part of the land, that agreement, in so far as it related to the promise to pay the value of the particular interest in the land, was not within the statute of frauds, and is therefore enforcible, although not in writing. It is not necessary to determine whether the promise to convey a part of the land was within the statute of frauds, as that part of the agreement is not sought to be enforced.

E. F. Bullock and Thomas G. Poore for appellants.

J. M. Brummel & Son for appellee.

Appeal from Hickman Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Landes.

A tract of about 50 acres of land, which was owned by W. B. Grady in his lifetime, was sold by a commissioner under a judgment rendered in the Hickman Circuit Court in an action commenced after his death by Dr. George Beeler, on a debt owing by him and secured by a lien on the land, against his administrator and his four children, who were his only heirs at law, the appellant, Mrs. Kaler, and the appellee being two of them. Previous to the sale the commissioner caused the land to be appraised as required by the statute, and the appraisers fixed the value of it at $1,000. The appellee was the purchaser of the land at a price less than two-thirds of its value so fixed, and it was therefore subject to redemption by any of the heirs of W. B. Grady, deceased.

It was alleged in the petition, in substance, that the plaintiffs, appellants here, had made arrangements to redeem the land, and that they were able and would have redeemed it within the period allowed by the statute for redemption, but that they were induced to and did relinquish their purpose to redeem it by the promise and undertaking of the appellee (not alleged to be in writing), that if they would not do so, but would allow him to pay the Beeler debt and take a conveyance of the land to himself from the commissioner, by virtue of his said purchase, he would pay plaintiffs the value of the interest of Mrs. Kaler as one of the heirs of W. B. Grady, deceased, in the land, after paying the Beeler debt, or that he would convey to Mrs. Kaler a quantity of the land sufficient to pay her for her said interest or portion, "and if they could not agree upon the price of the land, then he would pay her the money."

The meaning of the last sentence, which is accurately quoted from the petition as it is copied in the record, is somewhat obscure. But the object and prayer of the petition, as it relates to the alleged promise of the appellee, was to recover of him the value of the one-fourth interest of Mrs. Kaler in the land, after deducting one-fourth of the sum that was paid by the appellee in satisfaction of the Beeler debt and costs, it being alleged that the land was conveyed to the appellee by the commissioner, and a copy of the deed filed as an exhibit with the petition, and that the appellee had refused either to pay the appellants for Mrs. Kaler's part of the land or to convey to them any part of the land.

The court below sustained a demurrer to the petition and also to two successive amendments thereto, which were offered by the appellants, and, the petition having been thus disposed of by the judgment of the court, this appeal was prayed and prosecuted from that judgment.

It is contended by the learned counsel for the appellee that the promise, undertaking or contract set up in the petition is within the statute of frauds, and that this action on it could not be maintained because it was not alleged to have been made in writing.

It is not necessary for us now to decide whether the promise alleged to have been made by the appellee to convey a part of the land to Mrs. Kaler is within the statute of frauds or not. But the promise to pay Mrs. Kaler the value of her interest in the land, as one of the heirs of W. R. Grady, deceased, upon the conditions alleged in the petition and performed by the appellants, if true, as admitted by the demurrer, is not within the statute, and an action may be maintained on it, even though it does not appear to have been in writing. Such a promise or contract is not "for the sale of real estate," and therefore need not be in writing in order to be actionable. (Ky.

Stat., sec. 470, clause 6.) And upon that promise or contract this action was commenced and recovery was sought. The amount of appellee's alleged bid for the land at the sale of it by the commissioner was very littte more than one-third of its value as fixed by the appraisers, and it was manifestly very much to his advantage to prevent the appellants from redeeming it. The only interest that appellants had in redeeming it was to secure Mrs. Kaler's part of it, since, if it had been redeemed by them, it would have resulted in equal benefit to the other heirs of W. B. Grady, deceased.

The appellee, having secured to himself what he sought by the promise and undertaking alleged in the petition, must be held to performance on his part. (Green v. Ball, 4 Bush, 586.)

The petition contained a cause of action, and the court below erred in sustaining the demurrer to it. In our view the amendments offered were not necessary.

The judgment is, therefore, reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to overrule the demurrer to the petition, and for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

E. H. TAYLOR, JR. & SONS V. GEORGE T. STAGG CO.

(Filed November 24, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Trade-mark—Right to account of profits—Although this court held upon a former appeal in this case that defendant should be enjoined from using the autograph signature of one of the plaintiffs as a trade-mark, yet as the court also said that upon the record as made out no account of profits should be taken, the chancellor properly refused upon the return of the case to entertain a motion by plaintiffs to have an account of profits, and also a motion to submit the question of damages to a jury.

Wm. Lindsay and George C. Drane for appellants.

Humphrey & Davie, D. W. Lindsey and John W. Rodman for appellee.

Appeal from Franklin Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Pryor.

When this case was heretofore in this court it was with some reluctance the court held that the right to use the autograph signature of E. H. Taylor did not pass under the contract between E. H. Taylor, Jr. & Sons and George T. Stagg Co., and, in holding that the right to use the name in the manner alleged was not within the terms of the sale, it was said that upon the record as made out "no account of profits should be taken," and further said: "The proof does not show any fraudulent intent on the part of the appellants or those under whom they claim. The use of the name E. H. Taylor, Jr., and his autograph by appellant, was in the nature of a license or permit, and we do not see that this has been abused or extended unreasonably. Relief, by way of damages, is frequently refused, when the right to the injunction is conceded."

There was a petition for rehearing filed by the appellees (now appellants) in which the court's attention was again called to the questions of profits and damages, and that petition was overruled.

When the case went back with the same record the appellees (now appellants) made a motion to have an account of profits, and also a motion to submit the question of damages to the jury, and the court refused to entertain either motion. This, we think, was proper, as this court in its opinion had said in effect to the court below that, as the record stood, no profits or damages were recoverable.

The order of reference made in the case heard on the first appeal was, it is true, merely interlocutory, still, to avoid further litigation on the facts presented, this court plainly intimated, and in fact said, that all the relief the appellee was entitled to was the injunction to prevent the further use of the autograph signature of E. H. Taylor, Jr.

Judgment affirmed.

MOORE V. THOMPSON, &C.

(Filed December 4, 1896.)

Renewal of negotiable note—Effect on mortgage lien—Where the principal in a negotiable note executed a mortgage to indemnify his sureties, and the note was renewed and the renewals discounted from time to time, the mortgage continued in force to secure the last renewal, although the name of the principal was omitted from the renewals and there was a change as to one of the sureties, and, therefore, the mortgage lien is superior to the lien of an attaching creditor of the principal.

Bell & Bell and C. A. Hardin for appellant.

John B. Thompson for appellees.

Appeal from Mercer Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Pryor.

The facts of the record show that on the 4th day of April, 1888, John Charles Thompson, then living in Wyoming, executed to Forsythe, Magoffin and Simrall a mortgage to indemnify them as his sureties on three several notes, for $2,300 each, executed on the 4th of April of the same year.

The negotiation for raising the money was made through the appellee, John B. Thompson, to whom the notes were made payable and by him endorsed and the notes discounted by the Fayette National Bank, and the proceeds forwarded to John C. Thompson at his home in Wyoming. The notes were not paid at maturity, and when due were renewed from time to time, with the name of the principal, John C. Thompson, left off.

John B. Thompson, the endorser, was, as the proof shows, a mere endorser for the obligor, and as to him was a surety, but as to those who had signed the notes as sureties he agreed with them to stand as principal; so in fact all the parties to the notes were the sureties of John C. Thompson.

It is insisted that John B. Thompson was a joint obligor, or that the money on the notes was obtained for the use of both John and Charles Thompson in some joint or partnership enterprise, but the testimony is otherwise; but if, as insisted by appellant, a joint liability between the Thompsons, it does not affect the question involved here.

After the renewal of the notes for nearly two years in the Fayette National Bank the notes were again renewed, but discounted with the Boyle National Bank at Danville. On these notes John B. Thompson was principal and the others as sureties, with perhaps a change as to one of the sureties, and these notes are still unpaid.

In January, 1891, D. L. Moore, having a debt against John C. Thompson, sued out an attachment and had it levied on the mortgaged land, and by amended pleading the beneficiaries of the mortgage, the sureties in the original transaction, were made defendants. They answered, setting up their mortgage lien, and claiming priority over the attaching creditor, while the latter claimed that the debt had been paid, or such novation as operated to release the lien. The mortgage is executed to Forsythe, Simrall and Magoffin, with the condition that "when the notes are paid and all the parties as sureties and endorsers saved harmless, and all renewals thereof," the mortgage to be void.

It is conceded that this liability of the sureties, who were adjudged priority in the court below, originated from the execution of the three notes to the Fayette National Bank in the year 1888, and each renewal shows the same liability, less the discount, continuing down to the last renewal in the Danville bank. In other words, the sureties renewed this paper from time to time, making it payable to the original endorser, and their liability for the same debt has never ceased to exist, and why their equity is not superior to that of an attaching creditor we can not well see. If they had paid the original liability at maturity the lien could have been enforced, and the evidence of the fact that these renewal notes were for the same debt and identified in such a way as to remove all doubt on that subject, the mere fact that the name of the original obligor was left off, or that of another surety added, did not have the effect of depriving the appellees of their lien secured by the mortgage. That instrument was properly authenticated and recorded; was notice to creditors and purchasers of the existence of the lien.

It was held by this court in Burdett v. Clay, 8 B. M., 295, where a note had been assigned, a new note taken by the assignee, payable to himself, was no release of his lien by mortgage. As in this case it is the same debt, and the lien has not been surrendered or discharged.

In the case cited the original debt secured by mortgage to Hyatt was renewed and made payable to Hyatt's son-in-law, and Burdett became bound as surety in the place of Letcher, with J. M. Myers, one of the original sureties, who had been secured by the mortgage in his liability, the mortgage also having been given to secure the debt. In that case, as in this, there was no intention or purpose to destroy or waive the mortgage lien, and the sureties were properly given priority in the proceeds of sale.

Judgment affirmed.

ASHER LUMBER CO. V. FRENCH.

(Filed October 3, 1896—Not to be reported.)

1. Breach of contract for purchase of trees—Under a contract between appellant and appellee, by which appellant agreed to pay appellee certain prices for timber, to be paid "when titles are examined and found good and the timber branded," if appellee tendered to appellant trees of the kind mentioned in the contract within a reasonable time after its execution, and if he had good title to the same, it was appellant's duty to receive and pay for them, and, if appellant refused to comply with the contract, appellee was not required after that time to make an actual tender of timber, but he might cease to buy or procure any more under the contract, and sue and recover damages on account of appellant's failure to comply with the contract.

2. An oral contract for the purchase of standing trees to be speedily removed from the land is valid, provided the trees are so marked or described as to be easily identified.

3. It was error to admit testimony as to the statement of persons that appellee had bought trees from them. Nor was it proper to admit proof of statements made by witnesses who had testified unless proper grounds had been laid therefor.

4. Title to real estate by adverse holding may be proved by parol, but paper title, if denied, must be proved by the paper itself.

Beckner & Jouett for appellant.

J. M. Benton, L. H. Bush and E. W. Hines for appellee.

Appeal from Clark Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Guffy.

This action was instituted in the Clark Circuit Court by the appellee, B. F. French, against the appellant to recover damages for an alleged breach of a contract of purchase of trees. The written contract sued on reads as follows:

"FORD, KY., Dec. 4, 1890.

"We will pay B. F. French for poplar, cucumber and ash, 7 feet in circumference 4 feet from the ground, $1.50 per tree. No culled timber to be taken, and for above 6 feet in circumference $1 per tree; paid for when titles are examined and found good, and the timber branded.

"B. F. FRENCH,
"H. L. ASHER."

The petition as amended substantially alleged that within a reasonable time after the execution of the contract appellee tendered to appellant more than 14,000 trees, to which he had good title, and that defendant failed to take up, pay for or brand same, thereby damaging him in the sum of $5,000.

The answer may be treated as a denial of all the averments in the petition except the execution of the contract sued on. A trial resulted in a verdict and judgment for plaintiff for $5,000. Defendant's motion for a new trial was overruled, and it now prosecutes this appeal.

If appellee tendered to appellant trees of the kind mentioned in the contract within a reasonable time after its execution, and if he had good title to the same, it was appellant's duty to have received and paid for the same; and if appellant refused to comply with the contract appellee need not after that time to have made an actual tender of timber, but he might cease to buy or purchase any more under the contract, and sue and recover damages, if any he had sustained on account of appellant's failure to comply with the contract, if it did fail.

Appellant insists that the court erred to its prejudice by remarking in substance, in the hearing of the jury, that appellee could acquire title to the trees by oral purchase.

It is true that an oral contract for the purchase of standing trees, to be speedily removed from the land, is valid, provided the trees are so marked or described as to be easily identified, and it may be that such was the meaning of the judge.

It is also insisted by appellant that incompetent testimony was admitted, and that the verdict of the jury is excessive and not sustained by sufficient evidence.

Without going into details as to the evidence complained of, we deem it sufficient to say that the statements of parties made, to the effect that French had bought their trees, should not have been allowed to be proven in this action, nor should any evidence have been allowed as to statements made by witnesses who had testified, unless the proper grounds had been laid to authorize the same. Title to real estate by adverse holding may be proven by parol, but proper title, if denied, must be proven by the paper itself.

It is manifest that the verdict is not sustained by sufficient evidence. The other questions raised need not be discussed.

For the reasons indicated the judgment of the court below is reversed and cause remanded, with directions to set aside the verdict and judgment and award appellant a new trial and for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

BOARD OF COUNCILMEN CITY OF FRANKFORT, &C. V. BRAWNER, &C.

(Filed November 21, 1896.)

1. Power of city council to abolish office—An office not fixed by the Constitution, but established by statute, may be abolished by statute unless a contract right has been secured by the incumbent.

2. Same—A city council that has, in exercise of discretion given by the General Assembly, established a city office may at its pleasure abolish it; therefore, the common council of a city of the third class having, in the exercise of the discretion conferred upon it by section 3426 of the Kentucky Statutes, established a board of public works, a subsequent ordinance repealing the ordinance establishing the board had the effect to at once abolish the office, although the members of the board had been appointed for four years, the term fixed by the statute, but had served only a few months of that term. But inasmuch as the members of the board of public works, and those employed by them, appear to have in good faith performed the duties of their respective offices, and judgment in their favor in this action to determine their title was not superseded, they should receive compensation up to time the mandate of this court is entered.

3. A contract between the board of public works and a member of the fire department, who bound himself to perform the duties of his office for the stipulated salary, was not binding upon either him or the city any longer than the relation of employer and employe existed, which either might terminate at will.

W. H. Holt and W. H. Sneed for appellants.

T. L. Edelen and R. B. Franklin for appellees.

Appeal from Franklin Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Lewis.

Section 3426, Kentucky Statutes, is as follows: "The common council of the cities of the third class may, by ordinance, establish a board of public works, to consist of three freehold electors of said city, and who have been bona fide residents of said city so establishing said board of public works for two years next before their appointment. Said ordinance shall require the mayor of said city to appoint said board of public works in one month from the passage of the ordinance creating said board, and no two of said members of the board of public works shall be selected from the same ward. When no board of public works has been established the duties herein imposed shall be performed by the common council and such other employes and agents as said common council may elect or designate."

Section 3427 provides: "The members of said board shall enter upon the discharge of the duties of their office as soon as appointed, and shall hold office four years and until their successors are appointed and qualified."

February 1, 1896, there was submitted to the Franklin Circuit Court a controversy between Robert B. Franklin, D. C. Crutcher and John W. Pruett, claiming to be the board of public works of Frankfort, a city of the third class, and George A. Brawner, claiming to be pipeman of the fire department of said city, as plaintiffs against the common council of the city of Frankfort, and James F. Smith, claiming to be pipeman of the fire department, defendants.

It was agreed that October 22, 1895, an ordinance was passed by the then acting and qualified members of the board of councilmen "establishing a board of public works and defining the duties of the same;" that November 2, 1895, the plaintiffs were duly appointed members of said board of public works, and they were in due time qualified and entered upon the discharge of their duties; that November 26, 1895, various municipal officers were by said board of public works duly appointed, including George A. Brawner, appointed pipeman of the fire department, and who took the required oath and entered into a written contract binding himself to perform the duties of that office for the stipulated salary. It is further agreed that January 10, 1896, the council of said city, composed of members thereof, elected at the preceding November elections as successors of those composing the board of council, October 22, 1895, passed an ordinance repealing the one "establishing a board of public works and defining the duties of same."

It also appears that January 21, 1896, James F. Smith was, by the then existing board of councilmen, elected pipeman for the fire department, and thereafter, having taken the oath of office and executed the bond required, notified the captain of the fire department and said Brawner that he was ready to discharge the duties of that office but was refused.

Upon that agreed statement of facts the lower court rendered judgment, now appealed from, that Franklin, Crutcher and Pruett, notwithstanding the repealing ordinance mentioned, were still legal members of the board of public works, empowed to exercise all functions and receive emoluments thereof. It was further adjudged that Brawner was entitled to discharge the duties and receive compensation as pipeman of the fire department.

While powers and duties of the board of public works of a city of the third class are fully prescribed by the statute, and can not, while it exists, be restricted or interfered with by ordinance whether such board shall be established at all in a particular city of that class is by plain language of section 3426 made discretionary with the common council thereof, it is a well-settled rule of construction, always recognized by this court, that an office not fixed by the Constitution but established by statute may be abolished by statute, unless a contract right has been secured by the incumbent. (Standiford v. Wingate, 2 Duvall, 442.)

And we know no reason why a municipal legislature, that has, in the exercise of the discretion given by the general assembly, established a city office, may not as well and at its pleasure abolish it. That the statute was intended to give such discretion to the common council of a city of the third class is made manifest, not only by the language of section 3426, but by section 3135, which, while giving the same discretion to the general council of a city of the second class to establish a board of public works, expressly provides such board, if established, shall not be abolished within six years.

In our opinion the ordinance of January 10, 1896, was valid and effectual to abolish the board of public works, and thereafter the duties imposed upon it by statute were to be performed by the common council and such other employes and agents as said common council might elect or designate.

We further think the contract between the board of public works and Brawner was not binding and enforcible upon either him or the city of Frankfort any longer than the relation of employer and employe existed, which either might terminate at will. But inasmuch as the members of the board of public works and those employed by them appear to have in good faith performed the duties of their respective offices, and judgment in their favor was not superseded, it seems to us they should receive compensation up to the time the mandate of this court is returned.

Judgment of lower court is reversed and case remanded for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

The court delivered the following response to petition for rehearing January 15, 1897:

The petition for rehearing in this case is based upon the theory that there is something analogous to contract right in the tenure by which the members of the board of public works of Frankfort hold their offices. There is no such analogy. They hold, as do persons holding offices created by the legislature, subject to the power of the body which created the office to abolish it. In each case the power is a delegated power. The municipal legislature derives its power from the legislature of the State, and the general assembly derives its power from the Constitution. In each case the power to create implies and carries with it the power to abolish. The general assembly is empowered by section 107 of the Constitution to create county and district offices for a term not exceeding four years. But it will hardly be contended that having created an office with a term of four years the general assembly may not abolish it in two. Nor is there any analogy between the case at bar and the illustration of counsel of an agancy to make a lease for a specified term. The principal through his agent binds himself by a contract. There is no contract right to a statutory office.

We can not agree to the contention of counsel that we can consider the alleged fact that the charters of cities of the various classes were drawn and adopted without any reference to each other. On the contrary, by a cardinal rule of construction, we are required to presume that when adopted by the general assembly they were intended to be parts of a harmonious body of law, and therefore the difference in the language used in the charters of the cities of the second and third classes must be given proper significance.

The case of Todd v. Dunlap, 18 KY. LAW REP., 329, has no application to this case. In that case the sole question was the power of the mayor to remove from office officers who had been appointed for a statutory term.

Petition for rehearing overruled.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE R. R. CO. v. RICKETTS.

(Filed November 21, 1896—Not to be reported.)

1. Railroads—Injury to passenger from alighting on wrong side of train—Defectively lighted platform—Where a passenger in leaving a train at a railroad station left it on that side on which there was no platform, and which was not intended for the use of passengers, the railroad company is responsible for the injuries resulting from defective or dangerous arrangement of the premises upon the side on which he alighted if it was so dark on both sides that by the exercise of ordinary care the passenger could not discover the platform for use of passengers. On the other hand, if the platform on the other side was safe and commodious and so lighted that the plaintiff could, by the use of ordinary care, ascertain that the platform for use of passengers was on that side and to enable him to alight in safety on that side, but without examination he alighted on the other side, he did so at his own peril. And it was error to instruct the jury that it was the duty of the railroad company to so light its platform as to admonish its passengers that that platform was "exclusively used for passengers." Nor should the question as to plaintiff's knowledge of the use of the platform on the opposite side of the train from that on which he alighted have been injected into the instruction.

2. There is no obligation upon a railroad company to keep its train waiting until passengers can leave the platform, and it was error to instruct the jury that such a duty existed. It is sufficient if reasonable time is given passengers in which to safely get off the train and out of the way of the cars.

William Lindsay, Lisle & McChord and H. W. Bruce for appellant.

Samuel Avritt and John D. Fogle for appellee.

Appeal from Marion Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge DuRelle.

This case is now before this court for the third time on appeal (93 Ky., 116; 16 KY. LAW REP., 281). With one exception the facts proven on the two former trials appear to have been substantially the same as those appearing on the trial which resulted in this appeal.

The appellee, Ricketts, was a passenger on appellant's train from Louisville to Lebanon, which reached Lebanon about 11 o'clock at night. When the train reached the station he descended on the right-hand side, where no lights were kept, and walked beside the train in the direction of the engine, while the train was in motion pulling out of the station. He stumbled over a box which had been put around a water crane, nearly opposite the south end of the passenger platform, which was on the left-hand side of the track. In falling his left arm extended over the rail and was so crushed as to necessitate amputation. For the injury thus received this suit was brought.

The law laid down in the two former opinions of this court is the law of the case if the facts appearing on the trial are the same as on the former trials.

In both the former opinions it was held that when a railroad company "has a platform and other facilities for entering and leaving the cars with safety on the depot side of the track, the failure to have the opposite likewise prepared as a place for entering and leaving the cars can not be regarded as negligence. It may select and adhere to such arrangement of its depot and platforms as it may see fit if those are made safe and commodious."

In this case the company's passenger platform was and had been, since about 1883, on the left side of the track, and, so far as appears from the evidence, was safe and commodious. Upon each of the former trials it was by the pleadings admitted to be well lighted, and recovery was sought on the theory that it was the duty of the company to keep well lighted all parts of the depot to which the public had access; but after the second appeal, and over four years after the original reply was filed, an amended reply was filed, putting in issue the averment of the answer that the company had a well-lighted platform on the left of the train from which plaintiff alighted, and denying that either platform on either side of the train was well and properly lighted.

Appellee stated upon this point: "I saw no difference on the two sides of the car where I got off—there was no light on the side where I got off, and I saw no light on the other side. There was no light on either side except what come from the windows and doors of the cars." But he says elsewhere: "I got off on the right-hand side because it was more convenient for me, and nearer my mother's home." And again: "I always got off on right-hand side."

This would strongly indicate that no examination was made by him to ascertain on which side the platform was.

In the second opinion the court said: "The plaintiff himself testifies there was no light at all upon the right side, and as soon as he touched the ground found, if unknown to him before, that there was no platform there; and, independent of other features of the case, it was negligence on his part to attempt to leave the depot ground by going so near as he did to the train that he knew would soon be in motion."

Upon the last trial it is true that the plaintiff testified that after he got off the car he noticed that he was walking on a cinder platform, but what he calls a cinder platform was merely cinders spread upon the ground, at or below the level of the rails, as shown by the photograph, while on the left side was a plank platform, twelve to eighteen inches in height, upon which the other passengers alighted and the baggage was deposited.

In the former opinion this court said, and the language seems to us to be applicable here: "On the other hand the evidence makes it too plain for dispute that if the plaintiff did not know, the exercise of ordinary care would have enabled him to discover the platform for use of passengers was on the left side of the train. All passengers stopping at Lebanon got off on that side, including his traveling companion; the conductor and brakemen, with lanterns, were on that side; baggage was taken out on that side."

If it was so dark on both sides of the train that by the exercise of ordinary care plaintiff could not discover the platform for use of passengers, then the company is responsible for the injuries resulting from defective or dangerous arrangement of the premises upon the side on which he alighted, provided he was not negligent in alighting or in his subsequent conduct. On the other hand, if the platform on the left-hand side was safe and commodious, and sufficiently lighted that the plaintiff, by the use of ordinary care, could ascertain that the platform for the use of passengers was on that side, and to enable him to alight in safety on that side, but, without examination, he alighted on the other side, he did so at his own peril.

The instructions given on the trial appear to us to be fatally erroneous. Instruction No. 4 is as follows: "The court instructs the jury that it is the duty of defendant, in operating its passenger trains, in stopping at stations to give passengers a reasonable time to safely get off said train and out of the way of said cars in safety before starting the cars; and if they believe from the evidence that defendant's employes failed to give reasonable time for defendant to alight from the cars and leave platform before starting the cars, and that plaintiff sustained injuries on account of such failure, the jury should find for the plaintiff."

The latter part of this instruction is clearly error. There is no obligation upon a railroad company to keep its train waiting until passengers can leave the platform. It is sufficient if reasonable time is given to them in which to get safely off the train and out of the way of the cars. Under the facts proven in this case this part of the instruction was peculiarly misleading, for it left the jury to conclude that the train should have waited until the plaintiff could walk the length of the depot to Main street.

Instruction No. 3 is also erroneous. It instructs the jury "that it was the duty of defendant to provide a reasonably safe, commodious and in the nighttime a reasonably well-lighted platform on one side of its road to enable passengers alighting from the cars to leave the railroad premises in safety; and if the evidence show that defendant failed to have its platform on the left-hand side of the railroad reasonably well lighted at the time plaintiff was injured or sufficiently lighted to admonish plaintiff that the platform on the left-hand side of the road was exclusively used for passengers, then defendant can not be excused from failing to keep the platform on the right-hand side reasonably safe and commodious for passengers leaving its depot premises, unless plaintiff knew that the left-hand side was exclusively used for passengers, or by the exercise of ordinary care could have known so; and if the preponderance of the evidence shows that defendant so failed to keep the platform on the left-hand side of the road reasonably commodious and well lighted, and that plaintiff did not know, or by the exercise of reasonable care could not have known, that the platform on the left-hand side of the road was exclusively used for passengers, and that plaintiff sustained injuries on account of running against an obstruction on the right-hand side because said platform was not reasonably safe and commodious for passengers leaving its depot premises, the jury must find for plaintiff."

The company is not required to so light its platform as to admonish its passengers that that platform is exclusively used for passengers. That would require the other side of the depot to be lighted so as to admonish the passengers that it was not used for passengers at all. All that is required is that it should be so lighted as that, by the exercise of ordinary care, the passengers can ascertain that it is the platform used for passengers. The other side not being lighted at all, is notice that it is not so used. Nor should that plaintiff's knowledge of the use of the platform on the right-hand side have been injected into the instruction.

In the language of the last opinion: "Whether, in language of the instruction, adoption of the platform on the left-hand side, in lieu of that on the right-hand side, was unknown to plaintiff is not material." * * *

For the reasons stated the judgment is reversed and the cause remanded, with instructions to grant appellant a new trial and for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

PACE V. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed November 24, 1896—Not to be reported.)

1. Appeal—Motion for new trial—This court can not review the action of the lower court in overruling a motion for new trial, a part of the evidence heard on the motion not appearing in the record.

2. Change of venue—The court properly overruled a second motion for a change of venue, as the statute expressly provides that not more than one application for a change of venue shall be allowed.

3. Prejudicial error—Defendant was not prejudiced by the admission of testimony as to certain acts and declarations of his son as the tendency of the testimony was rather to sustain defendant's defense that his son did the killing.

James Eversole and H. K. Rawlings for appellant.

W. S. Taylor for appellee.

Appeal from Leslie Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

The appellant, John W. Pace, was jointly indicted with two of his sons in the Leslie Circuit Court for the murder of Allen Lewis. He was found guilty of voluntary manslaughter, and his punishment fixed at fifteen years in the penitentiary.

The homicide occurred on the 6th of March, 1896. The indictment was returned in the same month. At the March term of the court the defendant moved the court for a change of venue. In support of the motion filed some affidavits.

In the order overruling the motion the court says: "After hearing proof upon the kinship and character of the witnesses to the affidavits supporting the petition, and being advised, etc." The bill of exceptions fails to show what proof the court heard on the motion. All the evidence which the court heard on the motion not appearing in the record, we can not tell whether or not the court erred in overruling it.

At the ensuing June term the appellant, John W. Pace, made another motion for a change of venue. The court overruled it upon the ground that he had made a previous application for a change of venue.

Section 1118, Kentucky Statutes reads as follows: "Not more than one change of venue or application therefor shall be allowed to any person or the Commonwealth in the same case."

The court followed the plain requirement of the statute, and refused the application for a change of venue. There was testimony tending to establish the defendant's guilt. The jury were the triers of the facts, and we can not invade the province of the jury and disturb the verdict.

It is urged that the court erred in admitting the testimony of Bigley, Moggard, Charles Daniel and Evaline Daniel.

The theory of the defense was that Abe Pace, the son of the accused, had killed Miller. Some of the testimony, which it is claimed was objectionable, was to the effect that Abe Pace was, on the day Miller was killed, trying to borrow a pistol, and he had ill-will against the deceased.

Charles Daniel testified that Abe Pace said he wanted a pistol because George Steele wanted to kill his (Abe's) father, and also that during the day of the killing Abijah Pace said to his brother Abe: "You have got pap's pistol."

Abe Pace was not on trial. The court told the jury such testimony was not evidence against the appellant. Although the evidence may have been inadmissible, yet we fail to see how he was prejudiced thereby. The tendency was rather to sustain his defense that Abe Pace had done the killing.

The judgment is affirmed.

NEEL V. CARSON, &C.

(Filed November 24, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Surcharge of receiver's settlement—In this action to surcharge a settlement made by defendant as receiver of a fund which belonged to plaintiff, the complaint being that defendant was improperly allowed credit by the amount of a note which he had failed to collect, the order of court confirming the settlement and discharging defendant can not be disregarded, especially when the fund was all the while in the custody of the court and defendant acting as the mere receiver; but even if defendant had been a trustee there was no such laches as would authorize a surcharge of the settlement made under the eye of the chancellor and confirmed.

W. S. Taylor for appellant.

Edward W. Hines and W. A. Helm for appellees.

Appeal from Butler Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Pryor.

This action in equity by the appellant, E. J. Neel, is to surcharge a settlement made by the appellee, Carson, as the trustee or rather as receiver of a fund that belonged to her, the result of a litigation between herself and her husband. Her brother was first appointed to take charge of the fund, and, being removed, a man by the name of Skillen was appointed in his stead. Skillen resigned or made an assignment for creditors, when the appellee, Carson, was made receiver of the trust fund. It appears that when Phelps was removed and settled his accounts as trustee he passed over to Skillen a note on one Humphrey for $707 as a part of the trust fund, or if not a part of the fund in discharge of what he owed.

Skillen accepted it, and when he settled he delivered over the note to Carson. Carson then settled under an order of court his accounts as receiver, showing that the note on Humphrey was worthless and was credited by the balance due upon it because of the insolvency of Humphrey, the obligor. The settlement was made by the court's commissioner and reported to court, and the report confirmed, and Carson's resignation accepted.

The settlement made with Carson was of a period over which the court had complete control and made at the instance of the beneficiary of the trust. There is no evidence that Carson was ever ordered to collect the Humphrey note, but on the contrary the obligor had been paying ten per cent. interest on it from time to time, and the interest applied to the beneficiary, and, when the land upon which a mortgage was given to secure the note had declined in value by reason of waste alleged to have been committed by the owner, the receiver is sought to be made liable. There is no evidence of bad faith or of fraud on the part of Carson, and under such circumstances it is difficult to perceive how the order confirming the settlement with Carson and his discharge is to be disregarded and the receiver of this fund made liable, and that, too, when the fund was all the while in the custody of the court and Carson acting as the mere receiver; but if trustee we see no such laches as would authorize a surcharge of the settlement made under the eye of the chancellor and confirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

KIRK, SHERIFF V. WESTERN OIL & GAS. CO.

(Filed November 25, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Taxation of gas and oil leases—Section 4039, Kentucky Statutes, which makes "coal, oil or gas privileges by lease or otherwise," on the lands of another, taxable in the county in which the property is situated, makes an exception to the general rule that personal property is taxable in the county of the residence of the owner; and as that statute did not take effect until August 15, 1894, such property was taxable for the year 1893, under the general rule, in the county of the residence of the owner, and was taxable not under items Nos. 66 and 67 of the schedule (Kentucky Statutes, section 4058) applying to "mineral products" and "coal mines, oil, gas and salt wells," but under item 74, "property not mentioned above."

Kirk & Kirk for appellant.

A. Copley for appellee.

Appeal from Martin Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge DuRelle.

This suit was brought to restrain the appellant from collecting taxes as sheriff for the year 1893 assessed against appellee upon certain so-called gas and oil leases of lands in Martin county, the contracts while in form leases giving the company the right to drill for oil and gas upon the lands described, and to erect such machinery and buildings as may be necessary for the purpose, with a right of way over the lands so far as may be necessary to effect the object desired, nevertheless retain to the grantors the possession and use of the lands.

The question presented is whether these taxes are collectible under section 4039, Kentucky Statutes. That statute was enacted March 19, 1894, and did not take effect until August 15, 1894. It consequently could not apply to any taxes for 1893. This statute makes an exception to the general rule that personal property is taxable in the county of the residence of the owner, and makes coal, oil or gas privileges by lease or otherwise on the lands of others taxable in the county on which the property is situated. Prior to the enactment of section 4039 such property was taxable, not under items Nos. 66 and 67 of the schedule (Kentucky Statutes, section 4058) applying to "mineral products" and "coal mines, oil, gas and salt wells," but under item 74 "property not mentioned above," but was of course taxable in the county of the residence of the owner.

Judgment affirmed.

McLaughlin v. Louisville Electric Light Co.

(Filed November 25, 1896.)

1. Duty of electric light company to insulate wires—Instruction—It is the duty of an electric company to make the insulation of its wires perfect at places where people have a right to go for business or pleasure, and to use the utmost care to keep it so, and for personal injuries resulting from its failure in that regard it is liable in damages. Very great care as to the protection of wires at such points is not sufficient.

In this action against an electric light company to recover damages for personal injuries to plaintiff, resulting from his coming into contact with one of defendant's live wires attached to a house which he was painting, the court erred to the prejudice of plaintiff in instructing the jury that it was defendant's duty to make its wires "reasonably" free from danger to persons who might come in contact with them. The word "reasonably" should have been omitted from the instruction.

2. The court should have instructed the jury, as asked by plaintiff, that if they believed from the evidence that the wire with which plaintiff came in contact had all the appearance of having been properly insulated this was an invitation or inducement to plaintiff to risk the consequences of contact with the wire in the performance of his work.

3. The court erred in refusing to instruct the jury, as requested by plaintiff, that "contributory negligence means the failure to observe that degree of care which ordinarily careful and prudent persons usually observe under the same or similar circumstances to protect themselves from injury, and by reason of such failure helps to cause or bring about the injury complained of."

4. Instructions drawing attention to particular facts or evidence are not favored in law, and such instructions were properly refused in this case.

James C. Klein for appellant.

Gibson & Marshall, O'Neal, Phelps & Pryor and Phelps & Thum for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Guffy.

It is alleged in the petition in this action that "the plaintiff is and was on the 8th day of July, 1893, a painter by trade, and followed the same for a livelihood, and was on said 8th day of July, 1893, engaged in painting a house on the east side of Fourth street, in the city of Louisville, between Market and Main streets, and numbered —; that on said 8th day of July, 1893, and long prior thereto, the defendant, its agents and servants had erected and maintained one of its electric wires, charged with electricity, on the side of said house facing Fourth street; that the said wire on said 8th day of July, and long prior thereto, was insufficiently, carelessly and negligently insulated, and that defendant, its agents and servants were well aware of said want of insulation, or could have been aware of same by the exercise of proper diligence; that plaintiff on said 8th day of July, 1893, while in the discharge of his duties as painter aforesaid and without fault on his part, came in contact with said wire which at the said time was heavily charged with electricity by the defendant, its agents and servants, whereby he was severely shocked and rendered insensible, and that he remained insensible and unconscious for twenty minutes and more; that he suffered severe pain, both physically and mentally, by reason of said shock, and that the flesh on his left hand was burnt and blistered to such an extent as to render the said hand useless, and that ever since and now said plaintiff is unable to use said hand in the performance of his vocation as a painter; that plaintiff is rendered less able thereby to make a living at his trade as a painter; that the said injuries received by the plaintiff are permanent, and his entire nervous system, by reason of said shock, is unbalanced, causing plaintiff much and severe pain; that the said injuries complained of herein were caused wholly by the gross negligence of the defendant, its agents and servants; that the plaintiff has been damaged, by reason of said injuries, in the sum of two thousand five hundred dollars. Wherefore, plaintiff prays judgment against the defendant for the sum of two thousand five hundred dollars, and for his costs and for all proper relief."

The defendant filed a demurrer to the petition which was overruled by the court.

The first paragraph of the answer substantially denies all the averments in the petition which show any right to recover.

The second paragraph of the answer is as follows: "Further answering this, defendant says that the injuries received by the plaintiff, and set forth in the petition, were received wholly and entirely because of his want of proper care and caution in looking out for his own safety, and by reason of his carelessness in coming in contact with an electric light wire which he knew, or by the exercise of ordinary care for his own safety could have known, was then and there charged with a current of electricity, making it dangerous to life for any one to come in contact with the said wire. Defendant says that by the exercise of ordinary care for his own safety, and such as circumstances and surroundings made it apparent was necessary, the said plaintiff could have avoided coming in contact with said wire, and could have escaped all injury therefrom. Defendant says that plaintiff came into contact with said wire by failing to exercise that degree of care which he knew, or ought to have known, under the circumstances was necessary to be exercised by him to avoid injury from said wire. Wherefore, having answered, defendant prays to be dismissed."

The reply of plaintiff traversed the allegations of the answer. The jury found for the defendant, and his petition was dismissed.

Appellant relied on these grounds for new trial, viz:

1st. That the court erred in refusing to instruct the jury as requested by plaintiff in instructions Nos. 1, 2, 3, 8 and 9.

2d. That the verdict of the jury is not sustained by sufficient evidence.

3d. That the court erred in not excusing a juror, William Pryott, for cause, he being a stockholder in the Louisville Gas Co., and it being the owner of the stock in the defendant company.

The motion for new trial was overruled, and plaintiff has appealed.

The plaintiff below (appellant here) testified in substance as follows: "S. T. McLaughlin testified that he was twenty-two years of age, and a house painter by trade; was a contractor in that line, and had the job, in conjunction with Asa Carr, of painting the front of H. C. Green's hotel, known as the Fourth Avenue Hotel, and had almost finished the work on the 8th day of July, 1893, when he came in contact with one of the defendant's electric wires, near the side of a window, and received a shock; that the defendant had two wires running from the west side of Fourth street, in Louisville, Ky.; that these two wires were fastened to brackets attached to the side of the wall between the first and second windows of the hotel, counting from the north; these windows were on the second floor of the building; the first floor was occupied by business firms; that these brackets were fastened to the wall about six inches from each window and about five feet above the sill of the windows; that defendant had an iron box, called a converter, attached to the side of the hotel building, midway between these two windows; that this box was about a foot above an iron cornice, running the full length of the building, immediately below the windows, about six inches below; that these two wires ran from the brackets to the top of this converter or box; that plaintiff was shocked by the wire next to the north side of the second window, at a place where the wire was joined together, and about halfway between the bracket and the converter; that this wire ran down from its bracket along the side of the window, and six inches from the window, for about two feet, and then turned over north to the converter; that the iron cornice was about twelve inches wide, space enough for a man to stand on conveniently and paint; that he and his men had to use this cornice to work from, as there were wires preventing the staging or swinging ladder from being let down between them; when he had painted down to the bracket and wires he pulled the staging up out of the way, and painted around the wires and iron box, while standing on the iron cornice; the window sill was outside, about five inches by five inches, and rested on the iron cornice inside of wood, about a foot wide; that he had put several coats of paint on the house, and was through, with the exception of touching up the right hind ear of the iron box; that he was in the act of getting out of this second window on the cornice to touch up this ear when he received the shock; that he had taken his brush full of paint in his right hand, and nothing in his left, and was on the sill of the window, turning back out onto the cornice, when he used his left hand to steady himself against the north side of the window opening, when his hand came in contact with the wire and he received the shock which rendered him unconscious, and he did not know anything more for about a half an hour, when he was revived, and found himself inside of the house, with Asa Carr, W. J. Cody, his employe, and Mr. H. C. Green working with him to revive him; that his left hand was burnt and blistered on the third and fourth fingers, and at the edge of the palm at base of small finger; that he suffered a great deal at the time of the shock and long afterward; that he went home and went to bed for a week; that he has never fully recovered the full use of his left arm and hand; that he has not been able to work at his trade or calling on account of the weakness of his hand; that he can not properly handle the brush and ropes; that in his trade it requires strong hands and arms to hoist and lower oneself on the staging; that he has not had any work at his trade at all; that he did and is working as a hand on the steamer ————, plying between Louisville an Cincinnati; has worked about two months; that there was no sign or anything else to warn him of a danger about or near those wires."

On cross-examination said S. T. McLaughlin testified that "no one warned him at any time about those wires; that he did not know Squire Green but did know Mr. Green, proprietor of the hotel; that Squire Green did not tell him to keep away from those wires; did not see Squire Green around the building the day before the accident; Squire Green did not offer to cut the wires if he wanted it done, nor did he tell Squire Green he could get along without the wires being cut; that no one told him that the wires were alive or dangerous; that he knew electric wires were dangerous, but that he had been working around the wires all the week and all seemed to be insulated, and yet he was not hurt; that he did not know electricity was turned on; that it was about noon of the 8th day of July, 1893, that he was hurt; that he saw no lights about the building; that he came up to the office of the defendant one Sunday night, whether the first Sunday after the accident or not he did not remember; was there because Mr. Smith had sent for him; did not tell Mr. Smith or anyone else that he was not hurt or was scared more than hurt, and did tell him then and there that he was hurt, and showed him his hand and pointed out the places where it was burned; that he did not meet Squire Green every other Sunday on Third and Jefferson streets. Witness then showed his hand to the jury, pointing out the only indications of the burn at edge of palm; that what appeared to be a wart there was not a wart. It was not there when he was shocked. It came there afterwards when it healed up."

Wm. J. Cody testified: "Was working there on the 8th day of July, 1893, the day on which Sam McLaughlin was hurt; that he was standing on the first window inside of same stirring some paint; the work of painting the building was finished, with the exception of a little space below the second window sill and one of the ears of the iron box on the side of the house between the first and second windows; that McLaughlin got his brush full of paint and was going out to paint this ear, and while I was at the first window he started to get out of the second window with his brush in his right hand; had nothing left in his left; he had hardly gotten into the window opening when I heard a groan, followed immediately by a second one, and I then leaned out of the window and looked in the direction of the groans and saw McLaughlin have hold of the electric wire between this iron box and a bracket, right on the joint of the wire; I quickly ran to the second window, put my right arm between him and the north side of the window out around his body, then reached out over his head and took hold of the wrist of his left hand and jerked it loose from the wire and lifted him into the building and laid him down on the floor. About that time Asa Carr came into the room and then Mr. Green, of the hotel. We all rubbed him, walked him and slapped him for fully twenty minutes before he was revived. At the time I pulled his hand loose from the wire I received a shock myself, but not enough to hurt me. McLaughlin, when I reached him, was doubled up, partly on the window sill and one leg out on the iron cornice below the window. He suffered a great deal; was unconscious for fully twenty minutes; examined the joint he had hold of immediately after we got him to himself; found the joint very loose and rotten. One end of the stuff used in wrapping it was hanging down about two inches. The wires all seemed to be covered with insulation. The place McLaughlin had hold of this wire was very near the north edge of the north side of the second window. The bracket to which it was fastened was within six inches of the edge of the window. These windows were about three feet apart. The sills were of wood and stone. The stone was five inches wide and thick, and rested on an iron cornice running above the storerooms on the first floor. This iron box or converter was placed against the wall between the first and second window in the middle, and about a foot above the iron cornice. This wire entered at the top of the box on the side. The wires come from across the street from the west side, and run over to these brackets, and then down to the box. Whenever we had painted to the top down to these wires we pulled the staging up out of the way and stood on this iron cornice and painted from there. The cornice is twelve inches wide; had worked around the very same wire several times; had experienced no shock, nor did.

he notice anything wrong with the wire; all seemed insulated; did not remember seeing Squire Green around there; did not hear him nor anyone else warn McLaughlin to beware of the wires. Nothing was said about the wires being dangerous."

Other witnesses testified as to the injury.

John M. Bunscomb testified as follows: "John M. Bunscomb testified that he is an electrician; have run similar plants to that of defendant; knows the defendant's plant well and its power; formerly an employe when the defendant was at Third street several years ago. Electric wires are always insulated—that is, covered with a material that is a nonconductor. This is done to prevent a waste of power as for safety. There are different grades of insulation. The insulation is put on at the factory. Whenever it is desired to join two ends of different wires the ends are scraped of all insulation. The clean ends are then twisted around each other closely in order to make close connection. After the joint is then soldered together, this makes a perfect connection. Then to protect this joint it is wrapped usually with a rubber tape about an inch wide, putting on five layers, which is considered by the underwriters as a sufficient insulation. This rubber tape adheres to itself, and if pressed and wrapped on tightly it will not come off easily. This is the method of wrapping joints in high tension wires, which is the character of the defendant's electric wires. These joints, as well as the regular insulation on the wires, is apt to rotten and wear off. The action of weather has something to do with this. The rubber will rotten in time, and in case a layer or two is thus rotten it will more easily catch moisture, which renders the joint dangerous. All wires are more or less dangerous when wet, as in raining weather, and if in such case a good ground was had I would not risk any of them. Iron cornice, as usually used above store buildings, form an excellent conductor, and standing on it and holding a wire charged with electricity of high tension, even though insulated and in dry weather, is risky. Also most certainly so in bad weather. Stone is not as good a conductor as iron in wet weather. Using it instead of iron I would not risk it. There is absolutely no perfect insulation, except at a great cost, which prevents it being extensively used. All insulation is effected by the changes in weather. Rubber, for instance, gets wet, and then it is dried by the sun. This soon wears it out. If a joint has on it less than five layers of wrapping it is just as much or more apt to be dangerous. The smallest pin hole is sufficient to let the electricity of these high tension wires escape in force enough to be fatal. If a joint is wrapped loosely it will catch the rain and moisture and rotten sooner than if wrapped tightly and evenly. A joint with an end of the wrapping hanging down a couple of inches would be considered dangerous. The iron box referred to is a converter. It reduces the force of the current. The wires entered the converter are called the primary wires, and those leaving the box the secondary wires, which are not dangerous, because they carry a light current. Otherwise if a heavy current it would burn out the lamps. The full power or volt of the plant is used on those arc lights we see in the streets, and only a small part is used for lights inside the stores and offices; have seen men apparently receive 2,000 volts of electricity without serious results. The amount taken though is mostly guess work—so many conditions enter into the estimation of amount actually received. Some men seem to be able to stand more than others; would not tempt even the best of insulation if I were standing on a good conductor, especially in wet weather."

At the conclusion of plaintiff's testimony the defendant asked the court to instruct the jury to find for defendant, which motion was overruled by the court.

The testimony of defendant conduced to show that defendant had used reasonable care, and that plaintiff was not severely injured. It also contends that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence.

The following are the instructions offered by plaintiff and refused by the court:

"1st. The court instructs the jury that it is the duty of the defendant, the Louisville Electric Light Co., to so insulate or protect its wires as to make them free from danger to those who may be brought in contact with them; and if they shall believe from the evidence that the said company failed to so insulate or protect the wire with which S. T. McLaughlin came in contact, and that his injuries were caused by the reason of such failure, then the law is for the plaintiff, and they should so find, unless they shall further believe from the evidence that the said S. T. McLaughlin, by his own negligence, contributed to cause his injuries, and that he would not have been injured but for his contributory negligence, if any there was.

"2d. If the jury shall believe from the evidence that S. T. McLaughlin came in contact with said wire while in the act of climbing out of the window, and that the said wire was not so insulated or protected as to be free from danger to him, and that his injuries were caused thereby, they ought not to find him guilty of contributory negligence unless, in so doing, he failed to exercise that degree of care which ordinarily careful and prudent persons usually exercise under the same or similar circumstances.

"3d. That the injury to the plaintiff is conclusive proof of the defective insulation of the said wire and of negligence of the defendant.

"5th. Contributory negligence means the failure to observe that degree of care which ordinarily careful and prudent persons usually observe under the same or similar circumstances to protect themselves from injury, and, by reason of such failure, help to cause or bring about the injury complained of.

"8th. That if they believe from the evidence that the said wire had all the appearances of having been properly insulated at the time plaintiff received his injuries, this was then an invitation or inducement to plaintiff to risk the consequences of contact with same in the performance of his work in painting the house to which said wire was attached.

"9th. That if the jury believe from the evidence that the plaintiff was not cautioned especially as to the dangerous condition of said wire before the accident occurred, then they are not to find him guilty of contributory negligence."

The instructions given are as follows:

"1st. The court instructs the jury that it is the duty of the defendant, the Louisville Electric Light Co. to so insulate or protect its wires at places where they may be dangerous to human life as to make them reasonably free from danger to persons who may come in contact with them; and if they shall believe from the evidence that the wire with which the plaintiff came in contact was not insulated or protected at the point where he caught it, and that he received the injuries of which he complains because thereof, then the law is for the plaintiff, and they shall so find unless they shall further believe from the evidence that he contributed to cause his injury by his own negligence, and that he would not have been injured but for his contributory negligence, if any there was.

"2d. But unless they shall believe from the evidence that the defendant's wire at that point, mentioned in instruction No. 1, was not so insulated or protected as to make it reasonably free from danger, and that the plaintiff was injured thereby, the law is for the defendant, and they should so find.

"3d. Or if they shall believe from the evidence that the plaintiff was negligent, and thereby contributed to cause the injury of which he complains, and that he would not have been injured but for his contributory negligence, if any there was, then the law is for the defendant, and they should so find.

"4th. If the jury find for the plaintiff they should award him such a sum in damages as they may believe from the evidence would fairly compensate him for the mental and physical suffering endured by him by reason of his injuries, and for loss of time and capacity to earn money at his trade and occupation. If they shall find from the evidence that the injuries of S. T. McLaughlin were caused by the negligence of the defendant, and shall further believe from the evidence that the negligence, if any there was, was gross, then they may, in their discretion, award him such a further or additional sum as punitive damages as they may deem right and proper under the evidence and these instructions, not exceeding in all the sum claimed in the petition."

Gross negligence means the absence of slight care.

"5th. Ordinary care means that degree of care which ordinarily careful and prudent persons usually observe under the same or similar circumstances."

Negligence means the failure to observe ordinary care.

"6th. Contributory negligence means the failure to observe that degree of care which ordinarily careful and prudent persons usually observe under the same or similar circumstances to protect themselves from harm, and by reason of such failure helped to cause or bring about the injury complained of."

To the giving of instructions Nos. 1 and 2 the plaintiff excepted.

The demurrer to the petition was properly overruled, as was also the motion for instruction to the jury to find for the defendant. It also seems to us that William Pryott had a disqualifying interest in the action, and should have been excused for cause. But by far the most important question involved is the law applicable to the case.

Electricity is a powerful and subtle force, and its nature and manner of use not well understood by the public, nor is its presence easily determined or ascertained. Its use for private gain is very extensive, and becoming more and more so. The daily avocation of many thousands of necessity bring them near to this subtle force, and it seems clear that the electric companies should be held to the use of the utmost care to avoid injuring those whose business or pleasure requires them to come near such a death-dealing force.

In the case of Clements and wife v. Electric Light Co., 44 La., 695, et. seq., the court said: "The deceased Clements was lawfully on the gallery roof. He was engaged in a service that necessarily required him to run the risk of coming in contact with defendant's wires, either by stepping over them or going under them. It is probable that the latter mode was the most convenient, and there is no evidence that in so doing he incurred any greater risk. The wires were visible, and to all appearances were safe. The great force that was being carried over the wire gave no evidence of its existence. There was no means for a man of ordinary education to distinguish whether the wire was dead or alive. It had all the appearances of having been properly insulated. From this fact there was an invitation or inducement held out to Clements to risk the consequences of contact. He had a right to believe they were safe, and that the company had complied with its duties specified by law. He was required to look for patent and not latent defects. Had he known of the defective insulation and put himself in contact with the wire he would have assumed the risk. The defect was hidden, and the insulation wrapping was deceptive. It is certain, had it been properly wrapped, Clements would not have been killed. His death is conclusive proof of the defect of the insulation and the negligence of defendant.

"He exercised reasonable care in going under the wire in the performance of his duty, as he had a right to believe, from external appearances, that the wire was safe. His action was such as not to tend to expose himself directly to the danger which resulted in the injury. In fact there was no apparent danger. * * * *

"It can not be said that when Clements went on the roof to repair it he went into the presence of known danger and assumed the hazards of the employment. The employment was not dangerous. The wires, if properly insulated as above stated, would have been harmless. It was only a remote danger which he had to risk, and this depending upon the fact whether or not the defendant company had done its duty as specified by law. The external appearances, the only indication of performed duty to which Clements' attention could be fixed, were guarantees that the defendant company had done its duty. These appearances assured him that in the performance of his work in sweeping the roof it was not dangerous for him to risk going over or under the wire. (Bomar v. Railroad Co., 42 An., 983.)

"Even in the presence of known danger to constitute contributory negligence it must be shown that the plaintiff voluntarily and unnecessarily exposed himself to it, unless it is of that character that the plaintiff must assume the risk from the very nature of the danger to which he is exposed. From the appearance of the wire, its wrappings with insulated tape, and the known duty of the defendant to protect the insulation at this particular splice or joint, Clements had no reason to anticipate danger, except from the fault of the defendant company. This fault was the cause of his death, and his act in passing under or over the wires was too remote to give it the character of contributory negligence."

The case of Haynes v. Gas Co., 114 N. C., 211, was an action to recover for death caused by a boy taking hold of a live broken wire that was in the street. We quote from the decision of the court as follows: "It is due to the citizen that electric companies that are permitted to use for their own purposes the streets of a city or town shall be required to exercise the utmost degree of care in the construction, inspection and repair of their wires and poles, to the end that travelers along the highway may not be injured by their appliances. The danger is great, and care and watchfulness must be commensurate to it. Passengers on railroad trains have a right to expect and require the exercise by the carrier of the utmost care, so far as human skill and foresight can go, for the reason that a neglect of duty in such a case is likely to result in great bodily harm and sometimes death to those who are compelled to use that means of conveyance. 'As the result of the least negligence may be of so fatal a nature, the duty of vigilance on the part of the carrier requires the exercise of that amount of care and skill in order to prevent accidents.' (Ray on Negligence, supra, page 53.) All the reasons that support the rigid enforcement of this rigid rule against the carrier of passengers by steam apply with double force to those who are allowed to place above the streets of a city wires charged with a deadly current of electricity or liable to become so charged. The requirement does not carry with it too heavy a burden. Human skill can easily place wires and poles so that they will not break and fall unless subjected to some strain that could not be anticipated, and it can as readily prevent the possibility, under ordinary circumstances, of the contact of wires that should not be allowed to touch one another."

The evidence in this case conduces to show that appellant was at work at his regular trade, and was where he had a right to be, and the joint of the wire being apparently insulated was to some extent at least a guaranty that there was no danger. But independent of that fact the situation of appellant, his work in hand and the proximity of the wire were such that he might without negligence have unthoughtedly taken hold of the wire, because he seemed to need support, and besides it was hardly to be expected that the current was on the wire at about noon, the wire being used wholly to supply incandescent lights or lamps.

It seems clear to us that appellee should have been required to have had perfect protection on its wire at the point and place where appellant was injured. The fact that it was very expensive or inconvenient is no excuse for such failure. Very great care might be sufsufficient as to the wires at points remote from public passways, buildings or places where persons need not go for work or business, but the rule should be different as to points where people have a right to go for work, business or pleasure. At the latter points or places the insulation or protection should be made perfect, and the utmost care used to keep it so.

Instructions Nos. 1, 2, 5 and 8, asked by appellant, should have been given. The others refused were not important, and tended to draw attention to particular facts or evidence. Such instructions are not favored in law.

It results from the foregoing views that the court erred in giving instructions numbers 1 and 2 marked as given. The other instructions given by the court were not excepted to, hence need not be discussed.

For the errors indicated the judgment of the court below is reversed and cause remanded, with directions to set aside the verdict and judgment, and for a new trial upon principles consistent with this opinion.

BRASHER, &C. V. TANDY.

(Filed November 25, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Attachment—The evidence in this case was sufficient to authorize the judgment of the chancellor sustaining an attachment sued out upon the ground that the defendant did not have enough property to satisfy the debt sued on, and that its collection would be endangered by the delay in obtaining judgment and return of "no property," for while the lot upon which the note sued on was a lien, and which was all the property owned by defendant, sold after the judgment for more than the debt, yet it is manifest from the proof that the appellee had reasonable grounds to believe that his debt was in danger from the delay in obtaining judgment and that the property of defendant was not sufficient to satisfy the demand, the residence upon the lot having been burned, and the object of the attachment being to garnish the insurance money.

A. H. Clark for appellants.

J. I. Landes for appellee.

Appeal from Christian Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Pryor.

The only question made on this appeal arises from the order of attachment which the appellants contend was not justified by the facts.

The debt was due and owing by the appellants, and they had the money with which to satisfy the demand and refused to pay. The note sued on was for purchase money of a lot of five or six acres, sold by the appellee to the appellants. The appellants after the purchase sold from time to time, in small parcels, all the ground but about one-half acre, and the appellee released his lien so as the purchasers from his vendees might acquire a perfect title.

On the half-acre improvements were erected by the appellants, and those improvements were destroyed by fire, and the ground, with a small outbuilding, was all the appellee had to secure the balance due of the purchase money.

The buildings on the premises having been destroyed, the testimony shows the realty unimproved was, in the opinion of many, insufficient to pay the debt. An insurance had been obtained on the buildings and household effects, still the appellants refused to pay the debt on the ground that the insurance money could not be subjected to its payment.

While the lot sold after the judgment for more than the debt, it is manifest from the proof that the appellee had reasonable grounds to believe that his debt was in danger from the delay in obtaining judgment, and that the property of the defendants was not sufficient in value to satisfy the demand. These facts were found by the chancellor, and we are not disposed to disturb his judgment.

Judgment affirmed.

BROOKS V. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed November 28, 1896.)

1. Practice in criminal cases—Continuance—The killing on account of which the accused was indicted for murder having occurred on the first day of the term at which the indictment was found, and the indictment returned on the second day and the case set down for trial for the fourth day of the term, the court should, when the case was called for trial on that day, have granted a continuance, it appearing from the affidavits of the accused and of counsel appointed by the court to defend him that there had not been sufficient time to prepare for the trial, there being great excitement in the community on account of the killing, and the accused being unable on account of his nervous condition to give his counsel the names of the witnesses by whom he could sustain his plea of self-defense. While the accused was in custody when the indictment was found, yet the court should, in the exercise of the sound discretion conferred by the law, have granted the continuance, such a course being in harmony with the intent of the provisions of section 187 of the Criminal Code and with the fundamental principles of the law that entitle all persons accused of crime to a fair and reasonable opportunity to procure the attendance of witnesses in their behalf.

2. Evidence of general threats upon trial for murder—Upon a trial for murder. general threats by the accused to commit such an offense. although having no reference to any particular individual, are admissible in evidence to show malice, being proper to indicate the grade of the offense rather than to establish the fact of guilt.

W. W. McGuire and Hobbs & Scott for appellant.

W. S. Taylor for appellee.

Appeal from Morgan Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Landes.

The appellant was indicted by the grand jury of Morgan county for the murder of Gus McKenzie, and upon trial was found and adjudged guilty as charged, and is now under sentence of death therefor. A motion for a new trial having been made and overruled, this appeal is prosecuted from that judgment.

The killing occurred in the town of West Liberty on the first day of the June term, 1896, of the Morgan Circuit Court, about one hour before sunset. The appellant was promptly arrested and imprisoned, and by about 10 o'clock A. M. of the next day the indictment was returned by the grand jury. On the same day the court ordered the case to be set down for trial on the fourth day of the term, and, the appellant being unable to employ counsel, the court appointed two of the attorneys of the court to defend him.

When the case was called for trial on the fourth day of the term the appellant, who had been confined in jail ever since the killing, made affidavit and by his counsel moved for a continuance of the case until the next term of the court to enable him to prepare for trial, without having had any witnesses summoned to testify in his behalf.

While no witnesses were named in this affidavit by whom the appellant expected to be able to prove any material facts in his defense, it was stated in substance that the killing was done while both he and the deceased were under the influence of strong drink, and while they were engaged in a dispute and in the midst of great excitement, which was still prevailing in the county, and that he shot the deceased in self-defense; but so great was the excitement surrounding him, and such was his condition, that at the time he did not know who was present or by whom he could prove the facts to sustain his plea of self-defense; that he had not had time sufficient to prepare for his defense, and that, ever since the killing, he had been in such a condition of worry, excitement and prostration that he had been unable to tell his attorneys anything about his case.

Both of his attorneys made statements in support of the motion for a continuance, showing that they had neither sufficient time nor opportunity to make suitable preparation for the defense. One of them, who had been for many years in active practice both in criminal and civil cases, stated that the appellant was not able, on account of his nervous condition, to tell him who was present at the killing, and that, "on account of the state of public opinion and the additional facts, neither he nor his associate counsel knew the facts of the killing, and the defendant can not tell at this time who does know. He thinks it impossible to obtain a fair and impartial trial for the defendant at this term of the court." He further stated that he believed that "by the next term of the court the defendant can have the facts of his case understood," and that "a trial of this case at this term of the court is to him a leap in the dark, and that he can not do the defendant justice in his defense if forced to try at the present term."

The motion for a continuance was overruled by the court and, exceptions having been properly taken, this is here complained of as error prejudicial to the substantial rights of the appellant.

It can hardly be said that the facts upon which the motion for a continuance in this case was based, as set forth in the affidavit of the appellant and the statements of his counsed, were technically legal grounds for a continuance. At the same time they were of such a character as would have warranted action by the lower court upon the motion favorable to the appellant in the exercise of a sound discretion conferred by the law.

Section 185 of the Criminal Code provides that if the defendant is in custody or on bail when the indictment is found "the trial may take place at the same term of the court, at a time to be fixed by the court."

In every prosecution, before a trial can be lawfully had, the defendant must be "before the court" in some way or by some process, usually before the commencement of the term of court at which it is proposed the trial shall be had (Criminal Code, section 187); but the conditions provided for by the section quoted is where a defendant is "before the court" on some charge before or at the time "the indictment is found." And the object of these provisions is to secure as speedy a trial in all cases as may be consistent with the allowance of reasonable time for preparation, both for the Commonwealth and the accused.

In this case the crime with which the accused was charged was committed after the commencement of the term of the court at which the indictment was found, and he was indicted while in custody, and, therefore, "before the court" on the charge, but without any previous inquisition.

There is nothing in the record to show that the learned judge of the trial court, in overruling the motion for a continuance, was actuated by other than a high sense and purpose of fairness and duty, both toward the Commonwealth and the accused, yet, under the circumstances surrounding and growing out of this deplorable tragedy, and considering the pitiable condition in which the accused was found, we are of the opinion that he or his counsel, who were officers of the trial court and had undertaken the burden of defending the accused in obedience to its order, and whose statements ought to have had great weight with the court upon the question of continuance, did not have sufficient time to prepare, and in fact that they could not have made the proper preparation for the trial of the case at the June term of the court. In this view of the case the continuance asked for ought to have been granted by the trial court. This, we hold, would have been in harmony with the intent of the provisions of the Code, to which reference has been made, and with the fundamental principles of the law that entitle all persons accused of crime to a fair and reasonable opportunity to procure the attendance of witnesses in their behalf. (Wills v. Commonwealth, 12 KY. LAW REP., 111.)

Over the objection of the appellant testimony was admitted by the trial court in behalf of the Commonwealth of general threats made by the appellant on the day and a short time before the difficulty in which the killing occurred, and the object of this testimony was to establish malice.

Henry Rose testified that about a half hour before the killing the appellant came to the store where he was clerking, and that he asked him if he wanted anything, and that his answer was: "Yes; he wanted some damned man to jump on him so that he could kill him. He had tried Jess Blair and James Blair, and they would not stand in."

Coon Rose testified that from twenty to thirty minutes before the killing the appellant came by where he was, about one hundred yards from the place where the killing occured, and said he would "blow some damned man's lamp out."

Dan Caskey testified that a half hour or an hour before the killing the appellant came where he was, with James Blair, and said: "Boys, stay in town to-night; I am going to kill some damned man."

Grant Caskey testified that about an hour before the killing the appellant passed up the street by him, going in an opposite direction from the place where the killing took place, and said "he did not give a damn for hell; the West was his home."

It is claimed that the court erred in admitting this testimony. It was error, under the circumstances prejudicial to the substantial rights of the accused, to admit the testimony of Grant Caskey, the last-named witness. What the accused said, as testified to by this witness, may have been an expression of his sentiments and feelings at the time, and yet the words used were not of the kind that indicated either motive or purpose to commit crime. But according to the weight of authority the testimony of the other witnesses of general threats made by the accused or of his purpose to do an act which would be criminal, the like of which followed, was admissible in order to establish "general malice and purpose to injure or kill some one," of which the deceased became the victim. (Whitaker v. Commonwealth, 13 KY. LAW REP., 504.)

And in such cases it is not necessary to show that the threats had reference to any particular individual.

In Hopkins v. Commonwealth, 50 Penn. St., 9; 88 Am. Dec., 518, the rule is stated in the following language: "Nor was it necessary that the premeditated malice should have selected a victim. If the jury believe that the prisoner had formed the deliberate design to kill somebody, and in pursuance of that purpose, within an hour after declaring it, did kill McMarity, the Commonwealth had the right to insist upon his conviction of murder in the first degree, and that they might thus insist they had a right to prove his declaration an hour before the deed.

Blackstone ranks "antecedent menaces" and "former grudges" as evidence of malice prepense; and he tells us, morever, that "malice prepense is not so properly spite or malevolence to the deceased in particular case, or any evil design in general, the dictate of a wicked, depraved and malignant heart." There are many other authorities to the same effect, a few only of which need be referred to. (Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, volume 4, page 866; Sparks v. Commonwealth, 89 Ky., 644; State v. King, 9 Mont., 445; Hodge v. State, 26 Fla., 11; Note to Wilson v. State (Florida), 17 L. R. A., 662.)

But it may be observed that such evidence is proper to indicate the grade of the offense rather than to establish the fact of guilt, which is the view of Mr. Wharton, as expressed in 1 Wharton's Criminal Law, section 727. The trial court, therefore, did not err in admitting the testimony of Henry Rose, Coon Rose and Dan Caskey as to general threats made by the appellant before the killing.

But for the reasons we have indicated the judgment is reversed and cause remanded, with directions to set aside the verdict of the jury and to award a new trial, and for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

OWENSBORO, FALLS OF ROUGH & GREEN RIVER R. R. CO. v. BARKER.

(Filed November 25, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Railroads -Construction of road upon different strip of land from that granted—In this action against a railroad company to recover a parcel of land alleged to be in possession of defendant without the consent of plaintiff, in which defendant relied upon a deed from plaintiff conveying a strip of ground "66 feet in width lying along and including the established line of railway to be constructed by said railroad company," the reasonable conclusion is that a right of way along the route which had then been surveyed and marked was what was asked and given, nothing else being said, and, the company having constructed its road over a different part of plaintiff's land, the jury were authorized to find for plaintiff, the instructions given containing the law of the case and being as favorable to defendant as it was entitled to have.

J. A. Dean for appellant.

Sweeney, Ellis & Sweeney for appellee.

Appeal from Daviess Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Guffy.

This action was instituted by the appellee to recover a certain parcel of land alleged to be in the possession of the appellant without the consent of appellee.

The appellant relied upon a deed executed by appellee. The appellee in his reply denied that the deed mentioned embraced the land in contest, but appellant alleged that it was so intended, or in other words that it conveyed and was intended to convey a right of way through appellee's land at such point as the road should be finally located. Issue being joined, the jury found for plaintiff, and judgment was rendered in appellee's favor for the land claimed, describing the same.

Appellant's motion for a new trial was overruled, and it now prosecutes this appeal. Seven grounds were relied on for a new trial. The first, second and third grounds are objections to instructions 1, 2 and D. The fourth is that the court erred in rendering judgment on the verdict for the recovery of the land; fifth, that the court erred in rendering any judgment on the verdict; sixth, that the verdict is vague, indefinite and uncertain; seventh, that the judgment is not supported or authorized by the verdict.

We quote from the deed as follows: "A strip of or parcel of ground sixty-six (66) feet in width, lying along and including the established line of railway to be constructed by said railway company, and extended along said line the same width, with all proper and necessary grades, slopes on either side, over, through and across the real estate in Daviess county, Kentucky, known and described as follows, viz: Commencing at Barker's eastern line and running through his said land a width of sixty-six (66) feet to Gillum's line, and containing —— acres." * * *

The contention of appellant is that the conveyance does and was intended to convey to it a right of way across appellee's land, wherever the road should be finally run or located, while appellee contends that he only gave the right of way where the line was then marked. That route is called the Alsop survey. It so happened that the road was not built on the Alsop survey, but located perhaps from forty to seventy yards from it.

The sole question in the case was as to appellee's right to recover the land sued for here. We think the verdict sufficiently definite, and that the judgment entered upon the verdict was legal and proper.

The proof conduces to show that a survey of the route for the railway had been made, stakes driven down and trees marked through appellee's land. Mr. Triplett seems to have been acting for the railway company, and had with him a deputy clerk for the express purpose of taking acknowledgments of land owners of the right of way, and appellee testified that he only donated the right of way as surveyed, and that the route as run and built upon damaged his land much more than the Alsop route would have done, and he is strongly corroborated by other witnesses, and this proof is not, as we view it, so much in conflict with Capt. Triplett's testimony as counsel seems to think, except as to specific statement that the deed was for the right of way along the exact route of the Alsop survey.

The survey having been marked, nothing else being said or specified, the reasonable conclusion would be that a right of way along that route was what was asked and given. If it had been intended that a right of way was to be given on any route thereafter selected the deed or contract should have been so made.

It also appears from the proof that appellee, when he found that another route had been selected, notified the company that he had not given consent to that survey, forbid the construction of the road on the line on which it was finally built.

The first and second instructions contain the law of the case, and are as favorable to appellant as it was entitled to. Instruction D contains a general proposition of law, but need not to have been given in this case, but did not and could not have prejudiced the substantial rights of the appellant.

Judgment affirmed.

SNOW V. MORSE & WILLIS.

(Filed November 24, 1896—Not to be reported.)

1. Action to quiet title—To maintain a bill of peace one must show a right or title at law.

2. Land patents—Location shown by parol testimony—It being clear there is an error in the calls of a patent under which defendants claim, they had the right to show the actual location of the patent by parol testimony.

3. Same—Patents issued by authority of Kentucky warrants, which issued by authority of the act of 1835 and amendments thereto, are void so far as they interfere with previous surveys or actual settlers and no further. Therefore, a partial interference does not render the whole patent void.

Robert J. Breckinridge, jr., for appellant.

Stone & Stone for appellees.

Appeal from Casey Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

Snow brought this action to quiet the title to 229 acres by virtue of a patent granted by the Commonwealth of Kentucky in May, 1869, to him.

Morse & Willis claim that they are the owners of certain boundaries of land embraced in the boundaries of two certain patents, one of which was granted to Geo. L. Owsley in 1849 by the Commonwealth of Kentucky for 125 acres, and the other to one Barnett in 1856 by the Commonwealth of Kentucky for 150 acres. They claim to have acquired the title of the patentees by regular conveyances.

There can be no question that the 229-acre grant interferes with the 150-acre patent to the extent of about 56 acres, and if the 125-acre tract is located where appellees claim it to be, then the 229-acre tract interferes with it to the extent of some 65 acres. To maintain a bill of peace one must show a right or title at law. (Scott v. Means, 80 Ky., 460.)

As to the interference with the 150-acre tract the patent is void to the extent of such interference. Snow did not acquire any title thereto by his patent, and has not since done so by possession, hence he has failed to manifest any right or title to the land embraced in such interference.

The boundary to the 125 acre tract is described in the patent and survey upon which it was issued as follows: Beginning at a chestnut, James Owsley's corner to a 200-acre tract; thence N. 86 E. 282 poles to a white oak, J. B. Barnett's corner; thence with his line E. 130 poles to two poplars and hickory; thence north 112 poles to a black oak; thence S. 72 W. 434 to the beginning."

The contention of the appellees is that the calls of the patent are incorrect in that they do not correspond with the survey as actually made, located and marked by the surveyor who made the original survey.

The calls of the patent of the 125-acre tract do not embrace the land in dispute. Neither are there any lines or corner trees to be found corresponding with such calls. Instead of running to the Barnett corner called for it runs in the opposite direction. The Barnett corner is west, not east, of the beginning corner. To run the first call of the patent a westerly instead of an east course, and the last call an easterly instead of a west course, the patent approximately covers the land as claimed by appellees. To thus run it the surveyor (Gefford) found the lines and corners thus called for in the patent, and that they corresponded in age with the date of the patent. The chestnut, James Owsley's corner, is well known. Likewise are the corners and line of Barnett, called for in the patent. These facts are supplemented by the testimony of the surveyor who surveyed and located the patent boundary and marked off the lines and corners thereto, and who testifies that he marked the lines and corners found by Gefford when the warrant was laid.

It is perfectly clear there is an error in the calls of the patent, and it is as equally clear that the survey of the 125-acre tract was made, located and marked as claimed by appellees. It covers part of the land in dispute.

We deem it unnecessary to cite any of the numerous decisions of this court to sustain the claim that appellees had the right to show the actual location of the patent by parol testimony. About one-half of an acre, embraced by the 125-acre patent, is covered by a senior patent granted John Carpenter. Appellant, therefore, claims that, under the act of 1835 and subsequent amendments, the fact that the interference of the one-half acre rendered the whole patent void. McMillan's heirs v. Hutcheson, &c., 4 Bush, 611, is cited to sustain his contention.

In that case the whole of the junior patent boundary was embraced in the senior grant, and of course the court held that the patent was void. Patents, issued by authority of Kentucky warrants, which, issued by authority of the act of 1835, and amendments thereto, are void so far as they interfere with previous surveys or actual settlers and no further. (Little, &c. v. Bishop, 9 B. M., 246.)

The judgment is affirmed.

GAITHER V. DOUGHERTY.

(Filed December 9, 1896—Not to be reported.)

1. Agreement to arbitrate—The general rule is that an apreement to refer a case to arbitration will not be regarded by the courts, and that they will take jurisdiction and determine the dispute between the parties, notwithstanding such agreement. The exception to that rule applicable in cases where the same agreement which creates the liability qualifies it by providing that before any right of action shall accrue certain facts shall be determined or amounts and values ascertained does not apply in this case.

2. Attorney's fee—Evidence—In this action to secure an attorney's fee under an agreement to pay a "reasonable fee," no fraud or mistake in the contract being alleged, it was error to allow the defendant to state that his understanding of the contract for the fee was different from the plain language of the writing.

3. Same—It was error prejudicial to plaintiff to permit the schedule of fees adopted by the Elizabethtown bar for services rendered in that county to be given in evidence; nor was the amount of legal business the plaintiff had on hand at the time relevant, the question being solely as to the value of the services plaintiff rendered to defendant.

Hobson & O'Meara for appellant.

S. H. Bush and J. D. Irwin for appellee.

Appeal from Hardin Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge DuRelle.

Appellant went to California as attorney for appellee under the following contract:

"JUNE 10, 1884.

"For legal services concerning the estate of Benj. Dougherty, deceased, I agree to pay James E Gaither a reasonable fee, in proportion to what I actually get, to pay his expenses to Ukiah, California, and return, he agreeing to go by excursion, the railroad fare being about one hundred and seventy-five dollars ($175.)

"Z. G. DOUGHERTY."

Appellant remained in California nearly two weeks, exclusive of the time of travel. There is dispute as to the amount and value of the service he rendered while there, but it is not necessary to go into that question. After his return he was paid $150 by appellee. In May of the year following the appellant, with appellee as his surety, executed his note to the Bank of Elizabethtown and borrowed $500. After one or two renewals the bank brought suit and obtained a judgment for the amount of the note, which was then paid by the appellee. Appellee then brought suit against appellant for the amount thus paid, alleging that the money obtained was used by appellant for his own benefit. Appellant pleaded an agreement to arbitrate the unsettled matters in relation to the fee for services in California, and that no arbitration had been had, and to this plea a demurrer was properly sustained. This agreement comes within the general rule that an agreement to refer a case to arbitration will not be regarded by the courts, and that they will take jurisdiction and determine the dispute between the parties, notwithstanding such agreement. The exception to that rule, applicable in cases where the same agreement which creates the liability qualifies it by providing that before any right of action shall accrue certain facts shall be determined or amounts and values ascertained, does not apply in this case. (Story's Equity Jur., 1457.)

Appellant then pleaded a set-off of $750, being the fee claimed by him for legal services on the California trip, and the jury rendered a verdict against him for $325.

It is unnecessary to go into the facts in detail, as we are of opinion that the court erred to the prejudice of appellant in the admission of evidence. There was no plea of fraud or mistake in the contract relied on by appellant. It was, therefore, error to allow appellee, against objection, to state that his understanding of the contract for the fee was different from the plain language of the writing, and that he understood that he agreed to pay only $175 for appellant's entire expenses and services. It was also prejudicial error to permit the schedule of fees adopted by the Elizabethtown bar for services rendered in that county to be given in evidence. The only issue was what was a reasonable fee for the services rendered on the California trip, and this might have been proved by persons familiar with the value of such services. Nor does it seem to us that the amount of legal business appellant had on hand at the time is relevant, as the question is solely as to the value of the service which he rendered to appellee.

For the reasons given the judgment is reversed, with directions to grant a new trial and for further proceedings consistant with this opinion.

FINK, &C. V. LEISMAN.

SAME V. HOBLITZER.

(Filed December 5, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Construction of devise—Under a devise by a testator to his wife of all his property, "personal, mixed and real estate" during her lifetime, with full power and authority to sell if she sees proper, the testator further providing that after her death all his property, real personal and mixed, "what may have been left," shall be divided among his children, the widow had the power to pass the fee by a sale of the property, real or personal.

Samuel J. Boldrick for appellants.

O'Neal & Pryor for appellees.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery division.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Pryor.

In the two consolidated cases there is involved the question of title to the realty sold by Anna M. Fink to the appellees. The power of sale is derived from the will of her husband, Simon Fink. He gives to her all of his "personal, mixed and real estate property during her lifetime, with full power and authority to sell property if she sees proper," etc. He further provides that after her death he wants all his property, real, personal and mixed, "what may have been left," divided between his children, showing clearly an intention on his part to vest in her the power to pass the fee by a sale of the property, real or personal.

Such being the judgment below it is affirmed.

FORD LUMBER CO. V. ARVINE.

(Filed December 5, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Judgment supported by evidence—In this action to recover of defendant the amount of a check given him while acting as agent for plaintiff to pay off certain employes of plaintiff, as it is shown that defendant paid the amount of the check, less a small sum conceded to be due him, to one who was agent of plaintiff, and as such authorized to discharge defendant from employment and to receive back from him the check, and that plaintiff in fact received the benefit of the money, a verdict for defendant was authorized by the evidence.

Riddell & Riddell for appellant.

Grant E. Lilly and White & Smith for appellee.

Appeal from Estill Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Lewis.

The issue was squarely presented in an instruction to the jury whether Noland was agent of plaintiff, and as such authorized to discharge defendant from employment and receive back from him the check for $151.47 drawn in his favor by plaintiff; and as proceeds of that check, less $24 conceded to be due defendant, now deposited in bank to the credit and at the request of Noland, and by him subsequently paid to other employes of plaintiff, we do not see any cause of this action; for the agency of Noland having been found by the jury to be an existing fact, and there being no evidence whatever that defendant appropriated more than $24 that was owing him, plaintiff was not injured, but on the contrary got and accepted the full benefit of the check or proceeds of it.

Judgment affirmed.

GEORGETOWN WATER CO. V. CENTRAL THOMPSON-HOUSTON CO.

(Filed December 10, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Appellate practice--Withdrawal of opinion—While a court should have the power to correct an erroneous opinion during the term at which it is delivered, even after the time for filing petition for rehearing has expired, yet this should not be done unless the case is one that leaves no doubt as to the necessity for the court of its own motion to take back the opinion. An opinion will not be set aside upon facts outside the record which properly constitute the subject of a bill of review.

Bell & Bell, R. P. Jacob, Thomas Turner and C. C. Turner for appellant.

Tyler & Apperson and J. R. Morton for appellee.

Appeal from Scott Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Pryor.

The purchasers of the water plant sold under the judgment in this case have been in the possession some three years. The case has been brought to this court with no supersedeas, and, after the expiration of the time for filing the petition for a rehearing, the modified opinion is asked to be set aside, not upon the facts of the record but upon a state of case that, if it exists at all, is the subject of a bill of review, and not within the jurisdiction of this court.

While the court should have the power to correct an erroneous opinion during the term at which it is delivered, no such precedent should be established unless it is a case that leaves no doubt as to the necessity for the court, of its own motion, to take back the opinion. If the rule is otherwise established there would be no end to litigation and the labors of the court never over, but in this case the court is satisfied the modified opinion is correct.

The counsel asking for the relief, or to have the modification made, was not the original counsel in the case, and seems to have overlooked, as this court did in the original opinion, the facts conceded by the water company and upon which the judgment of sale was based, and if the facts stated by the defense are true, then the water company could not have been prejudiced by the sale, and there was no other alternative but to have it sold, as asked for by both parties. The petition stated a cause of action, and could not be dismissed. The contention is that if this sale is upheld it will result in a great sacrifice of the rights of the company and its property. The petition alleges that $35,000 of bonds had been issued and negotiated, and a mortgage given to secure their payment, with the interest.

The water company in its answer, where the claim against it was asserted and the mortgage asked to be foreclosed or the property sold subject to the mortgage, stated that it had no property but its franchise and plant; that its income was only $350 per month, and that all of its available assets would not pay over $25 per month above running expenses; that the interest on its bonded indebtedness was $2,100 per annum, payable semi-annually. The defendant then proceeds to ask for a sale of the entire plant, subject to the mortgage. It also asks that the petition be dismissed, but, if this could not be done, it wanted the whole plant sold. This is called alternating pleading, and is immaterial to the question here, if it be such.

There was no exception to the sale because of the inadequacy of price, and, on the showing of the water company, a sale had to be made, its plant yielding no income with which to pay. The trust company with its bonds, or whoever holds them, can go into court and have them enforced. The plant and everything connected with it was valued at only $17,000 and sold subject to the mortgage of $35,000.

This is what the record shows, and what equity the defendant has, if any, from facts out of the record, it must go into some other court for relief, and not by motion in this court.

There is no reason for disturbing the modified opinion, and, if there was, this court would not modify it unless it could be ascertained to what extent the purchasers would be affected by it.

Motion overruled.

The Kentucky Law Reporter.

EDITOR:
WALTER G. CHAPMAN, ... Frankfort, Ky.

VOL. 18. MARCH 15, 1897. No. 18

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

GRUBBS & MORANCY v. COLUMBIA FIRE INS. CO.

(Filed November 20, 1896.—Not to be reported.)

Parties to appeals -This is a motion to make those parties appellees who were not parties to the original action. or parties to the petition of the appellants, who are seeking to be made parties in the original action, to enable them to withdraw a part of the fund under the control of the court. Held—That the petition should have been allowed to be filed as other parties are required to be made.

Grubbs & Morancy and John W. Rodman for appellants.

Phelps & Thum for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas division.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Pryor.

This is a motion to make those parties appellees who were not parties to the original action, or parties to the petition of the appellants, who are seeking to be made parties in the original action to enable them to withdraw a part of the fund under the control of the court. The appellants also ask the case to be advanced. The case is in no condition to be heard on its merits.

The petition should have been allowed to be filed, and on the return of the case it should be amended, making the sureties parties, that the question desired to be raised may be heard.

Reversed and remanded for further proceedings consistent with the opinion.

The court delivered the following response to petition for modification December 3, 1896:

If the petition on its face did not present a cause of action as to both claims the court would have said so. Other parties are required to be made. The record has not been examined, but the court below when the parties are before the court, can determine their legal and equitable rights.

FAGAN V. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed December 4, 1896—Not to be reported.)

[Degrees of offense of rape—Under an indictment for rape the defendant may be convicted of the offense of detaining the woman against her will with intent to have carnal knowledge with her.

F. M. Hutchison for appellant.

W. S. Taylor for appellee.

Appeal from Henderson Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

The indictment charges that the defendant, on the 24th day of August, 1896, in Henderson county, did make an assault on the body of Nannie Robertson, a female under twelve years of age, and against her will and consent did ravish and carnally know her. The testimony showed that the defendant did not rape her, and the court told the jury to find him not guilty on that charge.

The testimony did tend to show that the defendant, on the day mentioned in the indictment, stopped Nannie Robertson, put his hands under her clothes, unbuttoned her drawers, put his hand on her person and wanted her to go with him in the cornfield. She cried, and the defendant let her alone. This was done against her will.

The court instructed the jury upon the question of detaining Nannie Robertson against her will, with intent to have carnal knowledge of her, and also told the jury that if they did not find him guilty of unlawfully detaining her, etc., then they could, if the evidence warranted it, find him guilty of an assault. The jury found him guilty of detaining Nannie Robertson against her will, with intent to have carnal knowledge of her himself.

It is insisted that under an indictment for rape it was error for the court to give the instruction in question. The indictment charges the particular circumstances as to time, place, person, motive and intention to constitute the offense of rape. The proof showed that he was not guilty of rape, yet the acts of the defendant were such, at the time and place mentioned in the indictment, that he was guilty of detaining the infant, Nannie Robertson, against her will, with intent to have carnal knowlege with her. The offense of rape comprehends and includes the lesser of which he was found guilty. (Fenston v. Commonwealth, 82 Ky., 549.)

The accused was advised by the indictment that he was charged with rape on Nannie Robertson on the 24th of August, 1896. To have been guilty of it the Commonwealth would be required to prove acts which would constitute the detention of Nannie Robertson against her will, with intent to have carnal knowledge with her.

The offense of which he was convicted is less than the one for which he was indicted, and is included in it.

Judgment affirmed.

EAVANS' ADM'R V. CLEAVER.

(Filed December 11, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Trespass—In this action by an administrator to recover damages for a trespass alleged to have been committed at defendant's instance and request, the alleged trespass consisting in the forcible removal of the furniture of plaintiff's intestate from her house and the placing of another in possession of the house even if a cause of action in any event exists against defendant manifestly none exists unless the acts alleged to have been done at his instance were unlawful, and it was, therefore, sufficient for him to deny in his answer that the plaintiff's intestate was at the time in the rightful possession of the land, or that the person alleged to have done so forcibly and without right took any of the furniture out of her house. And as it is shown that the acts complained of were done under a writ of possession, which so far as appears was legally issued, defendant is not liable.

Winfield Buckler for appellant.

Thomas Owens for appellee.

Appeal from Nicholas Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Lewis.

According to the evidence in this case the lower court did not err in peremptorily instructing the jury to find for defendant, and the only ground relied upon for reversal is insufficiency of the answer of defendant.

The act complained of in the petition is that Eliza A. Eavans, plaintiff's intestate, being in possession of a tract of land described, one G. W. Sparks forcibly and without right took all her furniture out of her house and placed Perry Lytle in the possession of the house, who has held it ever since, whereby she was damaged $325. But neither Sparks nor Lytle are defendants, Frank Cleaver being alone sued for the only cause, as stated in the petition, that said wrongful act of Sparks and Lytle was done at his instance and request, and he approved the same.

It is not certain that a cause of action against Cleaver in any event exists or is stated in the petition, but manifestly there is none unless the alleged acts of Sparks and Lytle were unlawful. It was, therefore, pertinent and sufficient for Cleaver to deny in his answer, as he did do, that plaintiff's intestate was at the time in the rightful possession of the land, or that Sparks forcibly and without right took any of her furniture out of the house; for thus, independent of his further denial, the alleged wrongful acts were done at his instance or request was an issue made and inquiry rendered proper by what authority, if any, Sparks did in fact remove the furniture, if he did do so, and that inquiry developed the fact that the intestate of Cleaver had, prior to his death, recovered a judgment against the plaintiff for the land, and that Sparks removed her furniture as an officer, acting under a writ of possession, so far as this record shows, legally issued, and as a consequence it was not unlawful for the defendant, Cleaver, to request the writ executed if he did do so.

Judgment affirmed.

FOSTER V. GIBSON, &C.

(Filed December 11, 1896—Not to be reported.)

1. Deceit—Personal liability of bank directors for false statement—In an action for deceit against the directors of a bank to recover damages against them individually on account of a false statement published by them as to the condition of the bank, whereby the plaintiff has been induced to purchase stock of the bank and pay for it more than it was worth, the plaintiff must allege in his petition that the representations or statements were false, and so known by the defendants, and made with the intention to deceive. And while the evidence to support such averment may consist in the failure on the part of the directors to exercise proper care in ascertaining the condition of the bank before making such a statement, yet the want of care must be so reckless as to evidence knowledge of the condition of the bank on the part of the directors, and that the statements were made to induce others to part with their money.

In this case, as there is no evidence of bad faith on the part of the directors or of their knowledge of the insolvency of the bank, but, on the contrary, there is evidence conducing to show the directors believed the bank was in good condition, and the court has so found, the judgment for defendants will not be disturbed.

2. The defects in the petition, if any, were cured by the answer.

J. W. Alcorn and D. B. Logan for appellant.

Humphrey & Davie and Warren Montfort for appellees.

Appeal from Bell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Pryor.

This is an action against certain directors of the Pineville Banking Co. to recover damages for the fraudulent and deceitful representation made by them to the appellant, Foster, of the condition of the bank, upon the faith of which he was induced to purchase and did purchase its stock, amounting to $———.

The falsity or deceit relied on consists in the written annual statement made by the cashier of the bank, to which he affixed the signature of three directors. That statement showed the bank to be in a prosperous condition, when in fact, and the testimony so shows, it was insolvent.

It is insisted in argument that the petition is defective, but there was no demurrer interposed, and the answer cured the defects, if any.

In actions for deceit it must be alleged that the representations or statements were false and so known by the defendant, and made with the intention to deceive, and the evidence necessary to support such an averment in a case like this may consist in the failure on the part of the directors to have exercised proper care in ascertaining the condition of the bank before making such a statement. The want of care must be so reckless as to evidence knowledge of the condition of the bank on the part of the directors, and that the statement was made to induce others to purchase or part with their money.

In the case of Prewitt, trustee v. Trimble, 92 Ky., 176, this court held that where one induces another to enter into a contract with him and made statements in regard to the subject-matter of the contract that were false, and in regard to which it was his duty to know, he was made liable in damages for the false representation. That was an action where the president of the bank made statements as to the bank's condition that were false, and were or should have been.

known to him to be false, and not only so but reaped the benefits of the contract. See also Trimble v. Reid, 17 KY. LAW REP., 494.

"In order to sustain an action for damages for deceit where the plaintiff was induced to buy stock, it is necessary to prove the statements were made or acts done that were fraudulent; that the person charged knew they were fraudulent and the plaintiff acted on them, etc." (Cook on Stockholders, page 355.)

This is not an action for the careless management of the affairs of the bank, but an attempt to make the three directors individually liable for the value of the stock that was worth less when the plaintiff purchased. A jury was waived, this being a common-law action, and the law and facts submitted to the court. There was no evidence of bad faith on the part of the directors, or of their knowledge of the insolvency of the bank, but on the contrary there is evidence conducing to show the directors believed the bank was in good condition. The court having so found, the judgment will not be disturbed.

Affirmed.

BAILEY, &C. V. FISHER, &C.

(Filed December 12, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Construction of devise—A devise of land by a testator to his widow for life, and at her death to his son and heirs, but providing that the testator's other heirs, naming them, were to have an equal part out of the proceeds of said land, is not void for uncertainty, but vested in the son the legal title to the land, with power to sell and divide the proceeds with the other heirs, and the son having exercised this power the purchaser from him acquired a perfect title, and can not be disturbed by the other heirs.

Wm. Low for appellants.

Weller & Hays for appellees.

Appeal from Bell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge White.

This litigation arises out of the construction of the will of Wm. Burns, sr., who died in the year 1879, and whose will was probated and admitted to record on January 15, 1879. This instrument being short, we copy the whole of it.

"I, Wm. Burns, of the county of Bell and State of Kentucky, being by proper mind, doth make, ordain and publish this my last will and testament, revoking all former wills heretofore made by me.

"1st. After payments of my debts and funeral expenses I give and bequeath unto my wife, Sarah Burns, my farm and all my land, including the mansion house and all other buildings, together with mill and all other personal property of every description whatsoever during her life, and after her death I give the land and mill, including all the buildings, to may son, Daniel Burns, and his heirs; but the other several heirs, to wit, Elizabeth Huchins, Mahala Huchins, Mary Fisher, Sarah Johnson, Jane Johnson, Catharine Burns, Malinda Burns, Vina Burns, Margaret Burns and Elizabeth Nunn, are to have an equal part out of the proceeds of said land and all of the personal property whatsoever, including all minerals on said land. I further give unto my daughters, Catharine Burns, Malinda Burns, Vina Burns, Margaret Burns and Elizabeth Nunn, all my notes and accounts, to be equally divided between them at my death, should there be any owing to me at that time.

"Third and lastly, I appoint." * * * Signed and witnessed.

The estate of Wm. Burns was finally settled up, and all the personal property was used in the payment of his debts and nothing was left. Sarah Burns, the widow, died about the year 1880. The land devised by the will consisted of a tract of land, containing about 200 acres, on which was situated a mill. Daniel Burns claimed this land under the will of his father, and on the 11th day of November, 1879, sold and conveyed the same to appellant, Elijah Wilson, for the consideration of $500, which was paid. Said deed was recorded in the Bell county clerk's office in February, 1880, and on February 16, 1893, Wilson sold and conveyed this land to appellant Bailey for the consideration of $2,000, which was paid by Bailey to Wilson. Wilson took possession under his purchase and held the same until he sold in 1893 to Bailey. He has held the possession of the land ever since.

The appellants claim that by the will of Wm. Burns they are entitled to an equal interest in this land with appellant Bailey, and seeking to have a division of the same, and also asking a construction of the will of Wm. Burns.

The cause was submitted to the court, and the circuit judge adjudged that the will of Wm. Burns was void for uncertainty, and that the land descended to Daniel Burns and the appellees as children and heirs of Wm. Burns, and not by devise, but the land was held as coparceners or tenants in common by the heirs of Wm. Burns, and that Mary Fisher and the other appellees are entitled to one-eleventh of said land each, and from this judgment the appellants appeal to this court and ask a reversal.

We are of the opinion and so adjudge that the will of Wm. Burns vested in his son, Daniel Burns, the legal title to said land, with power to sell and divide the proceeds with the appellees, and having exercised the power by a sale and conveyance of the land the legal title became vested in Wilson, the vendee of Daniel Burns. Wilson sold and conveyed this land to appellant Bailey for a valuable consideration.

We feel satisfied that this was the intention of the testator, and it is a fair conclusion from the language of the will. If appellants have any right in this matter they must look to Daniel Burns, of which we do not express any opinion.

The case is, therefore, reversed and remanded, with directions to the court below to set aside the judgment, and for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

BAILEY V. KELLEY.

(Filed December 12, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Forcible entry.—A warrant sued out for a forcible entry may be amended before trial or issue joined.

Unthank & Montfort for appellant.

N. B. Hays and N. J. Weller for appellee.

Appeal from Harlan Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge White.

The sole question in this case, on the very imperfect record, is, can an amendment be made to a warrant sued out for a forcible entry.

Appellant, W. N. Bailey, sued out a writ of forcible entry, charging that appellee had forcibly entered upon his land, failing to state in the warrant that he (appellant) was, at the time of such entry, in the peaceable possession of said land so entered on by defendant. On the day of the trial in the country appellee moved the court to quash the warrant on account of this defect in it, which motion the county judge overruled and refused to quash the warrant. Appellant then moved the court to amend the warrant by inserting in its proper place the words "which was in the peaceable possession" of W. N. Bailey at the time, to which motion defendant objected, but the court overruled his objection and permitted the amendment to be made. Exception was taken by appellee in the court at the time. A trial seems to have been had, and a finding against the appellee, Kelly, although no verdict or judgment is copied in this record.

The judgment in the county was traversed to the circuit court. The warrant being lost, we suppose the judgment was lost with it. The appellee filed in the circuit court a copy of the original warrant as sued out, and moved the court to quash the warrant and dismiss the proceedings. The circuit court in its judgment finds the facts to be that the warrant so filed by appellee was a copy of the warrant on which the judgment was rendered in the country, with the exception that before the trial and judgment in the country the writ was permitted to be amended by the court over the objection of defendant by inserting the allegation that the plaintiff was, at the time of defendant's entry, in the peaceable possession of the premises, and the case was submitted on appellee's motion to quash the warrant, which the court sustained, and dismissed the proceeding at appellant's cost, from which judgment appellant has appealed to this court, and asks a reversal of the judgment of the lower court.

It is evident that the court was of the opinion that the warrant of forcible entry could not be amended before trial in the country. After issue joined and trial there could be no amendment made or permitted, but under our Code of Practice, section 134, great liberality is allowed in all pleadings and proceedings in the perfecting of causes of action imperfectly stated.

It would be, we think, exceedingly technical to say that this warrant could not be amended to make it conform to the form laid down and required by the Code of Practice, as it was offered before trial or issue joined, as in all probability it was a mere oversight in the officer that drew up the warrant. We are satisfied that the county judge, who permitted the warrant to be amended, did not err by permitting the amendment and trial. There is no complaint that appellee was taken by surprise on account of this amendment perfecting the warrant.

Wherefore, the judgment is reversed, with directions to set aside the order quashing the warrant and dismissing the proceedings and for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

DEHAVEN, &C. v. OGLESBY, &C.

(Filed December 15, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Construction of devise—Where a testator by the residuary clause of his will directed that the balance of his estate be divided into five shares, and one share allotted to each of his brothers and sisters, naming them, for life, and then provided that at the death of these life tenants, or any of them, the share of the one thus dying should be equally divided "between all my nieces and nephews, share and share alike; and if any of my nieces and nephews be then dead, leaving children or child, such issue are to take the share of the parent," a brother of the testator having died before the execution of the will, leaving children, who were also dead at the time the will was executed, the children of the nieces and nephews who had thus died take the shares which their parents would have taken if living, there being no distinction between the children of nieces and nephews who were dead when the will was executed and the children of those who died after that time, but before the termination of the life estate.

Stone & Sudduth, A. A. Hazelrigg and W. A. DeHaven for appellants.

Burtt & Taggart and W. O. Harris for appellees.

Appeal from Oldham Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Pryor.

This case is here upon a construction given by the court below on the residuary clause of the Hon. Samuel DeHaven's will. The clause reads: "The balance of my estate is to be divided into five equal shares, one share to be allotted to my sister, Mary Oglesby, for life; one share to my sister, Elizabeth Skinner, for life; one share to my sister, Jane Peyton, for life; one share to my sister, Mary Root, for life; and one share to my brother, Christopher DeHaven, for life. At the death of these life tenants, or any of them, then the share of the one thus dying is to be equally divided between all my nieces and nephews, share and share alike; and if any of my nieces and nephews be then dead, leaving children or child, such issue are to take the share of the parent."

When the will was written two of the children, to wit, William Oglesby, who left a son Orville, and Mary Peyton, who left a daughter, Maud Baiseh, were dead. William Oglesby and Mary Peyton, one the nephew and the other the niece, are the children of Warren DeHaven, who was the brother of the devisor, and the nephew and niece, as well as their father, Warren DeHaven. All died before the testator and prior to the execution of the paper, and the appellees, the great nephew and niece of the testator, are claiming to take under the residuary devise, and the chancellor below adjudged them to take what their parents would have taken if living at the date of the publication of the will.

By the rule of the common law a devise to one who was at the time dead was void, and one living when the will was made, by dying before the testator, the devise went back to the estate, but in a devise to a class, as in this case, where one of the class died before the testator, his interest passed to those of the class surviving.

Several statutes have been enacted to cure what was a harsh rule of the common law, and, by a statute in force when this will was made, it was provided: "When a devise is made to several as a class, or as tenants in common or as joint tenants, and one or more of the devisees shall die before the testator, and another or others shall survive the testator, the share or shares of such as so die shall go to his or their descendants, if any; if none, to the surviving devisees unless a different disposition is made by the donor." (Kentucky Statutes, section 2064; see also Revised Statutes.)

This court, in reviewing the authorities based on the common-law rule as well as the statute referred to in the case of Chenault v. Chenault, 88 Ky., 83, held "where the testator desired the remainder of his estate to be equally divided between the children of my brothers and sisters, except in the case of my two living sisters, etc." One of the brothers was dead at the making of the will. It was held that the son took his father's interest in the estate under the statute, and, not only so, that such was the intention of the testator.

The entire body of testator's will shows a purpose to produce equality in the division of his estate, and the expression "if any of my nieces and nephews be then dead, leaving child or children, such issue are to take the share of the parent," shows clearly such an intion.

The devisor, it is true, first provided for his nephews and nieces, and then to their children, if any, should his nieces or nephews or such as might be dead at the termination of the life estate. The testator doubtless knew, as is contended by the appellant, that his brother Warren was dead, but also believed (a contention denied by the appellant) that the clause of the will giving an interest to the child of his nephews or nieces that might be dead when the remainder was to vest included the descendants of his brother Warren, as it is evident he was attempting to make no distinction in the distribution between the offspring of his brothers and sisters, and he no doubt had all of the descendants of his brothers and sisters in view when the will was written.

In Giles v. Giles, 8 Sim., 360, the testator devised the residue of his estate in trust for all his children living at the decease of his wife (who had a life estate) as tenants in common, and if any such children or child should be deceased before his wife, and should leave issue, then the children of such, his son or daughter, should be entitled to the portion of his son or daughter who might die before his wife, with a proviso, etc.

The testator, at the date of his will, had four sons and one daughter, and another daughter who was then dead, leaving children, and it was held that those children were among the objects of the devise. (Jarman on Wills, volume 3, page 634; In re Sibley's Trust, volume 3, page 635.)

The authorities, regardless of the statute, sustain the opinion below. It is now affirmed.

CHENAULT, TRUSTEE V. MADISON COUNTY COURT.

Filed December 16, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Allowance to trustee—Where negotiable bonds issued by a county for $250,000, the amount of a subscription to the capital stock of a railroad company, were placed by the county in the hands of a trustee to be safely kept by him until the conditions of the subscription had been complied with by the company, and one-half the bonds were delivered to the company upon the completion of a certain part of the road as provided by the contract, and the company failing to comply with the conditions entitling it to the other half, they were returned to the county court for cancellation, a judgment allowing the trustee two thousand dollars for his services is not flagrantly against the evidence and will not be reversed either upon the appeal of the trustee or the cross appeal of the county court.

Bennett & Chenault for appellant.

W. B. Smith for appellee.

Appeal from Madison Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hazelrigg.

In 1888 the county of Madison subscribed the sum of $250,000 to the capital stock of the Richmond, Nicholasville, Irvin & Beattyville Railroad Co. Negotiable bonds of the denomination of $1,000 each were issued and placed in the hands of the appellant, who had been appointed master by the county court, to be safely kept by him until the terms and conditions of the subscription had been complied with by the company.

These conditions were substantially as follows: When the company should complete its independent line of road of standard guage from a point in the line between the counties of Woodford and Jessamine, near Keene, across the county of Jessamine and the Kentucky river, at a point within one mile of the mouth of Paint Lick creek or Tate's creek, or some place between these two points, and thence across the county of Madison to the city of Richmond, and should place its line from Richmond to the Estill county line under contract, with a sufficient number of workmen upon same to guarantee its speedy completion, and should grade the roadbed to the Estill county line, and cause a train of passenger cars, drawn by a steam engine, to be run from the city of Richmond and across the counties of Madison and Jessamine, through Nicholasville, over its own road, to the Woodford county line, and thence over the Louisville Southern Railroad and its connections to the city of Louisville, then the trustee was to deliver to the company 125 of the bonds. The other 125 were to be delivered when the company completed its road from Richmond across the counties of Madison, Estill and Lee to a point on the Kentucky river at or near Beattyville, in Lee county, and caused a train of passenger cars to be run over this route.

The company was also required to complete its line to Richmond within two years and one-half from the date of the subscription, and to complete its road to its terminus at or near Beattyville within four years from the date of subscription.

The trustee was also to see that coupons for interest due before the company was entitled to the bonds should be detached and not delivered to the company. For the faithful performance of his duties the trustee was required to and did execute a bond in the sum of $500,000.

When the company had complied with the conditions upon which it was to receive the first 125 bonds, they were turned over to it, and not having complied with the conditions entitling it to the remaining bonds, they were returned to the county court for cancellation. The trustee faithfully performed all his duties, and the sole question before us is what should be his compensation. The county court, composed of the county judge and the magistrates, allowed him $750. He thereupon sued the county, claiming the sum of $7,500. The circuit judge allowed him $2,000. Both parties complain of this, the trustee by original appeal and the county by cross appeal. The trustee shows the reasonableness of his claim by a number of bankers, chancellors, master commissioners, railroad men and officials of trust companies, and this testimony is entitled to great weight.

The county also introduces an array of witnesses of excellent business qualifications and capacity for estimating the value of the service rendered, and these sustain the action of the county court in allowing only $750.

We have no reason to doubt that the learned trial judge—himself having much experience in matters of the kind here involved—gave due weight to all the proof, and we see no reason for saying that his finding is flagrantly against the testimony. A review of the proof would be unprofitable for any purpose.

Judgment on the original and on the cross appeal affirmed.

CAMPBELL, &C. V. EVERSOLE, &C.

(Filed December 17, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Dismissal of action—Right of defendants to rescission of order appointing receiver—In this action by appellees against appellants, widow and children of a decedent, to enforce a covenant of the decedent for conveyance of title to a tract of land, the action having, upon motion of appellees, been dismissed as to appellants, the court should have rescinded a previous order putting the land in posseesion of a receiver of court, as appellants were entitled to be placed in the same position they had in respect to the land when the action was commenced.

J. B. Marcum for appellants.

W. C. Eversole for appellees.

Appeal from Perry Court of Common Pleas.

Opinion of the court by Judge Lewis.

This is an action by appellees, heirs at law of J. C. Eversole, to enforce a covenant given, or alleged to have been given, by John E. Campbell, deceased husband and father of appellants, for conveyance of title to a tract of land; but, although the action was on motion of appellees dismissed as to appellants, the lower court refused to rescind a previous order appointing and putting the land in possession of a receiver of court.

Restoration of possession of land or other property, of which defendants have by order of court been deprived during the pendency of an action, would seem to necessarily follow an order dismissing that action; and as there is nothing in the record affording sufficient reason for making an exception to that rule in this case, we think the court ought to have made an order placing appellants in the same position they held in respect to the land when the action was commenced.

The judgment is, therefore, reversed for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

LUCAS' HEIRS V. LUCAS' ADM'R, &C.

(Filed December 17, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Trusts--Judgment sustained by evidence—Upon an issue as to whether all of a large number of heirs were entitled to share alike in a tract of land conveyed to only a portion of the heirs, the contention of appellants being that the grantees held the land in trust for certain of the heirs, the judgment of the chancellor to the effect that no trust existed is supported by the evidence.

Hill & Brock for appellants.

C. F. Burnam for appellees.

Appeal from Madison Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Guffy.

It is substantially alleged in the petition in this action that Wade Lucas died unmarried, childless and intestate, and that John Lucas was duly qualified as his administrator, and that the personal estate of decedent was not sufficient to pay his debts; and that he died the owner of one undivided third of a tract of land in Madison county, which one-third was worth not more than $500.

It appears that there were then living twelve brothers and sisters of decedent, eight of whom united in the petition for settlement of the estate of decedent and for sale of the said land to pay the debts, and the residue, if any, to be divided between the brothers and sisters equally.

The appellants answered, and in substance alleged that William Lucas, the father of the female appellants as well as of the other heirs of Wade Lucas, died in Laurel county the equitable owner of a tract of land in Jackson county worth $2,000, but the legal title was in his vendor, and that the executors of said vendor conveyed the entire tract to Sarah Lucas and her heirs, widow of William Lucas and the mother of appellants, which deed was considered by all the parties hereto as conveying the land to Sarah Lucas and her children. Soon afterwards said Sarah Lucas and the children united in a deed to George Lucas for part of the said land then worth $600; that in the year 1881 all of the parties hereto and Sarah Lucas agreed that the remainder of the land might be sold, and that the money should be invested in another tract, which is the tract mentioned in the petition, and all of the parties did sell the same to Edwards & Hazelwood, and all united in the deeds, and that the consideration was $1,300, and was paid over to Samuel, James, George and Wade Lucas, who, for plaintiffs and defendants, did actually purchase said land in the petition mentioned for the sum of $1,500, and used the said $1,300, and took the deed to themselves instead of to all the parties aforesaid, and the said Sarah Lucas and others lived upon the land until her death in 1890.

It is also alleged that the said grantees in the deed took and held the title as trustee for all the said children. It is also claimed that decedent, Wade Lucas, only had one-thirteenth interest and one-third of one-thirteenth in said land. Appellants finally prayed for a sale of the land, and for a distribution of the proceeds in the ratio above indicated.

It is alleged in the reply of plaintiff that the land bought by their ancestor was not worth more than $1,000 or $1,200, but that before his death he sold about 100 acres of the land to J. W. Mullins, and that said William Lucas owed a considerable part of the purchase money on his purchase, and that his widow, Sarah Lucas, borrowed the money and paid it off; that the executors of William Lucas' vendor had power to convey the land, and did convey it to the widow, who conveyed to Mullins the 100 acres which he had bought, and that about 200 acres of the said tract was by order of court sold to pay William Lucas' debts, selling at $1.75 per acre; also recites the sale to George Lucas.

It is further alleged that all the heirs agreed to the sale to Edwards & Hazelwood, and also agreed that the money should be paid over to the boys in consideration that they would take care of the mother, and because by their labor the land had become valuable before it could be sold. The reply also traverses the averments of the answer, showing appellants' right to recover. The rejoinder may be treated as a traverse of the reply in so far as it undertakes to affirmatively show a right to recover.

The court below adjudged in favor of the appellees, and appellants have appealed. The testimony conduces to show that the Jackson county tract of land purchased by William Lucas contained 640 acres,and was worth at that time about $1,000, and that he paid all the purchase price except $80 or $100, and that he sold 100 acres to Mullins; 200 acres were sold under judgment of court to pay debts of William Lucas, and 100 acres seem to have been given by general consent to George Lucas, thus leaving about 240 acres, which the widow conveyed to Edwards & Hazelwood, the children also signing and acknowledging the deeds, although not appearing as grantors, and part, if not all, the purchase price was used to pay for the land in contest.

It is claimed by appellants, and denied by appellees, that the title to the land should have been taken to all the heirs, or, at any rate, that they should all share alike in the land. Without reciting the evidence in detail, it is sufficient to say that the contention of appellants is not sustained by the proof.

It is not necessary to determine what interest the appellants had or might have obtained in the Jackson county land, the question in this case being whether or not the grantees in the deed to the Madison county land hold the same in trust for the other heirs of William Lucas, and as to that question we think that the judgment of the court below is sustained by the law and facts in this case, and that judgment is, therefore, affirmed.

BARKLEY v. BRADFORD, &C.

(Filed December 17, 1896.)

1. Introduction of testimony—Prejudicial error—This court will not reverse because of a violation of the provision of subsection 4 of section 606 of the Civil Code, that "no person shall testify for himself in chief in an ordinary action after introducing other testimony for himself in chief," if it appears that the party appealing has not been prejudiced.

In this case the plaintiff was not prejudiced by the action of the court in permitting the defendant to testify for himself in chief after reading to the jury the deposition of another witness, especially as the testimony of that witness was uncontradicted, and the jury would have been compelled to find as they did, even if his testimony had not been supplemented by that of the defendant.

2. Evidence---Upon an issue as to whether defendants were sureties in the note sued on or were jointly bound as principals with another obligor, whose liability as principal was conceded, statements made by that other obligor to the payee were not competent as evidence, the statements being made in the absence of defendants, and the party making them being interested to fix the liability of defendants as principals instead of sureties.

Thomas H. Hines, Wm. H. Holt and George Doniphan for appellant.

H. C. Weaver for appellees.

Appeal from Bracken Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Lewis.

The only question in this case is whether W. J. Irwin and S. W. Bradford were merely sureties of Geo. L. Bradford in the note sued on, for if they were the statute of limitation bars a recovery against them; and as the jury found in their favor under proper instructions of the court the only inquiry is whether, as contended, there was error of court in respect to admission or exclusion of testimony.

It appears Geo. L. Bradford, who was dead when the action was tried, gave his deposition, in which we think he stated distinctly they were sureties. But it is argued that the court erred in permitting S. W. Bradford, one of the defendants, to testify after having offered and caused read in his own behalf the deposition of Geo. L. Bradford.

The Civil Code, subsection 4, section 606, provides that "no person shall testify for himself in chief in an ordinary action after introducing other testimony for himself in chief, nor in an equitable action after taking other testimony for himself in chief."

But that is a rule of practice, not of right, and if a party appealing has not been prejudiced by violation of it this court would not, upon that ground alone, reverse a judgment in other respects regular and proper.

Appellee S. W. Bradford testified only to a fact that Geo. L. Bradford had, before the trial, stated in his deposition was true, and we do not see how he obtained an undue advantage, or appellant was prejudiced by reading the deposition before instead of after the party himself testified; for Geo. L. Bradford being unimpeached and uncontradicted, the jury would have been bound to find as they did, even if his testimony had not been supplemented by that of S. W. Bradford.

We think it was not competent for appellant, payee, to testify in regard to statements made to him by Geo. L. Bradford in regard to the attitude of Irwin, then dead, and S. W. Bradford on the note, and in the absence of both of them, for it was to the interest of Geo. L. Bradford to fix the liability of Irwin and S. W. Bradford as principals instead of sureties, whereby his own responsibility would be lessened, and competency of the testimony can certainly not be based upon the fact that Geo. L. Bradford was agent of S. W. Bradford and Irvin, for the plain reason that fact had to be either assumed or else shown by his statements without their presence.

Judgment affirmed.

EVENING POST CO. v. HUNTER.

(Filed December 18, 1896—Not to be reported.)

1. Libel—It is libelous to publish in a city newspaper concerning a married woman that, having come to the city to visit friends, she "is mysteriously missing, and the police have been asked to search for her," as such a publication tends to injure her good name and reputation.

2. Same—Plea in mitigation of damages—In an action for libel, based upon such a publication, the defendant company had the right to plead, in mitigation of damages, that it made the publication in good faith upon information furnished by the police, and as a matter of kindness to the plaintiff and her friends, in order that she might be quickly found and the anxiety of her friends relieved, and while the error of the court striking such allegations from defendant's answer might have been cured if defendant had been permitted to prove the facts alleged in mitigation of damages, yet, as the court refused to allow that to be done, a judgment in favor of plaintiff must be reversed.

George S. Fulton and John A. Fulton for appellant.

Nat W. Halstead for appellee.

Appeal from Nelson Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge White.

The appellee, Laura Hunter, filed her petition in the circuit court of Nelson county, in which she stated she was the wife of Geo. W. Hunter, and that she had resided with her husband for a number of years in Bardstown, Nelson county, Kentucky, and that the defendant, the Evening Post Co., is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Kentucky, with the right to sue and be sued, and owns and publishes in the city of Louisville a certain newspaper, called the Evening Post, which circulates throughout this State and other States and counties.

The plaintiff avers that on the 15th day of October, 1894, defendants published of and concerning her in its said newspaper, which is circulated throughout said county and State of Kentucky, and in other States and counties, a certain libel as follows:

"MYSTERIOUSLY MISSING.

"Laura Hunter, of Bardstown, has disappeared from her sister's home on First street.

"Laura Hunter, who came here from Bardstown several days ago, and has been staying with her sister at 1023 First street, is mysteriously missing, and the police have been asked to search for her."

Defendant thereby meaning that plaintiff had committed some crime or other disgraceful act which was injurious to her fair name, and plaintiff was injured in her reputation, and for which she sues. To this petition the defendant demurred, and the court overruled the demurrer. Defendant excepted. The court properly overruled the demurrer to the petition. We think the publication of this article about a married woman tends to injure her good name and reputation, for which an action will lie.

The defendant filed his answer, in which he admitted the publication of the matter complained of, but denies that same was maliciously done, defendant averring further that it was the owner of a daily newspaper, being the same paper in which the matter complained of was published, and published it as a part of its duty to the public and its patrons as a chronicler of current events, etc., and particularly is it one of the functions of said paper and its duties to the public, as is usual and customary with all newspapers, to ascertain and publish an account or notice of all persons who may be lost or abducted or misteriously missing, in order that the friends and relatives of such persons, the public and the police authorities, may be advised of such loss, abduction or disappearence, and prompt measures adopted for the restoration of such persons to their relatives and friends; and in pursuance of such policy and purpose aforesaid defendant is always promptly notified by the police authorities of the city of Louisville when such loss, abduction or disappearance occurs, that public notice thereof may be given in the columns of its paper; says that on the day of the publication complained of in the petition it was informed by the aforesaid authorities that one Laura Hunter, of Bardstown, was lost and missing from her sister's home at 1023 First street in said city, and that the police had been asked to search for her, and, in good faith believing same to be true, it published said item in persuance of its policy and duty and as a matter of kindness to said Laura Hunter, her friends and relatives, that the information of her loss or abduction might be widely and quickly disseminated, and she be speedily restored to her friends and relatives and their anxiety and distress of mind concerning her be quickly relieved, and said publication was made for no other purpose and in no other spirit. All of this matter as set out was, on motion of plaintiff, stricken out of the answer, and to this defendant excepted. Defendant's attorney thereupon prepared an amended answer, setting up the matter so stricken from the original answer, and asked to file the same in mitigation of damages and plaintiff objected, and the court refused to permit the amendment to be filed, and defendant excepted to the rulings of the court.

We are of opinion that this ruling of the court below in striking out the matter set forth in the answer and refusing to let the amendment be filed was error. Parties, when sued for publishing a libel, may admit the publication and plead any matter in mitigation of damages and to rebut the presumption of malice. The defendant, by its managing editor, offered to prove the matter set up in the amended answer, being the part of the answer stricken, and to this plaintiff objected, and the court sustained the objection. The error might have been corrected if defendant had been permitted to prove the facts as set up in mitigation of damage. The defendant offered to prove these facts on the trial, and the court refused to let the same be proven, and defendant took the proper exception.

For these reasons the judgment of the court below is reversed, with directions to grant appellant a new trial, and for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

BONNER V. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed December 19, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Instruction as to self-defense—Upon the trial of appellant for murder the court, in instructing the jury as to what would constitute such a bringing on of the danger by defendant as would deprive him of the benefit of the law of self-defense, erred in singling out and making too prominent the facts proved on the trial, and also in not requiring the jury to believe "to the exclusion of a reasonable doubt" that those facts existed, thus authorizing the jury in a certain state of case to convict upon a mere preponderance of the evidence.

George Denny, jr. for apppellant.

W. S. Taylor for appellee.

Appeal from Fayette Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge White.

The grand jurors of Fayette county indicted the appellant, Ed. Bonner, charging him with the crime of having killed and murdered one Newton Lynch, in the county of Fayette, in July, 1896, by shooting and wounding said Lynch with a pistol, from which shooting and wounding the said Lynch died in a day thereafter, and at the September term, 1896, of said court defendant was tried and convicted of the offense of voluntary manslaughter and sentenced to be confined in the penitentiary for eight years, and, having filed his reasons and moved the court for a new trial and the court having overruled his motion for a new trial, he has appealed to this court and asks a reversal, and complains that the evidence was not sufficient to sustain the verdict.

From an examination of the evidence, as appears in the bill of exceptions, we think that the evidence is amply sufficient to sustain and uphold the verdict, as this court can not reverse on that ground alone unless there is no evidence to support the verdict.

Defendant also objected and excepted to the instructions given by the court, and assumes as a reason because the court selected particular portions of the testimony, and directed the attention of the jury to particular evidence given in the case.

The instruction to which defendant refers was numbered 2. The court also gave the instructions Nos. 1, 3, 4 and 5, but we think these instructions (1, 3, 4 and 5) were correct and presented the law, and were not prejudicial to the rights of the accused. No objection to either of these instructions has been pointed out by the able counsel for defendant.

Instruction No. 2 is as follows: "If the defendant did shoot and kill Newton Lynch, but at the time he did so the defendant believed, and had reasonable grounds to believe, that he was then and there in danger of death or of suffering some serious bodily harm at the hands of said Lynch, and it was necessary, or to the defendant reasonably appeared to be necessary, to shoot said Lynch to avert the danger, or what reasonably appeared to the defendant to be such danger, this was a shooting and killing in self-defense, unless the defendant by his own wrongs, as is hereinafter explained in this instruction, brought about such danger, or what appeared to him to be such danger. If the defendant armed himself with a deadly weapon, and sought out Newton Lynch with a purpose of having a hostile meeting with said Lynch; and if defendant, with such purpose, went to the place where said Lynch was, and, in the presence and hearing of said Lynch, intentionally menaced said Lynch, with present danger to him at the hands of the defendant; or if the defendant, in the presence or hearing of said Lynch, used said language to said Lynch as was culculated to and was designed by the defendant to cause said Lynch to assault the defendant; and if said Lynch, upon said menace, or the use of said language, if said menace was made or said language was used, did immediately assault the defendant, the danger arising from such assault was brought about by defendant's own wrong, and defendant had no right to shoot the deceased to repel such assault until the defendant had in good faith attempted to retire from the conflict, but if danger did arise to defendant through his own wrong, as above explained, and the defendant attempted in good faith to abandon or avoid any conflict with the deceased, and after said attempted danger existed or arose to defendant, or he reasonably believed that such danger existed or had arisen, the defendant had the same right to defend himself against such danger, or what he believed to be such danger, as if he had been guilty of no fault or wrong."

Proper exceptions were taken to this instruction by defendant. This instruction is subject to two serious objections:

1st. The circuit judge made too prominent the facts that were attempted, or were actually proven on the trial of the case in the construction of the hypothecated case, to explain a state of facts that would deprive defendant of the law of self-defense.

2d. The circuit judge failed to tell the jury that the facts recited, there took from defendant his right of self-defense, must be proven beyond all reasonable doubt.

And by this failure the jury was only required to believe from the weight of evidence that the accused brought on the difficulty. They were left to act upon a preponderance of testimony, and could find that defendant did all the acts set forth in said instruction, without believing it to the exclusion of a reasonable doubt, although it was a matter upon which his guilt or innocence in a certain state of case depended. (Allen v. Commonwealth, 86 Ky., 642; Scott v. Commonwealth, 16 KY. LAW REP., 702.)

This instruction was prejudicial to defendant, and should not have been given.

Wherefore, the judgment is reversed and cause remanded, with directions to the circuit court to set aside the verdict and judgment and award the defendant a new trial.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE R. R. CO. v. MCELROY.

(Filed November 20, 1896.)

Compromise—Rescission for fraud—Necessity for tender of amount received—One who has accepted a certain sum in settlement of an unliquidated claim for damages can not pursue his remedy for the damages on the ground that the settlement was procured by fraud, or is not binding upon him, unless he tenders to the defendant the amount which he received under the contract of settlement which he seeks to rescind. And the plaintiff in this case having failed to make such a tender the court should have given a peremptory instruction to find for defendant.

H. W. Bruce, W. J. Lisle, Thompson & McChord and B. D. Warfield for appellant.

Lafe S. Pence for appellee.

Appeal from Marion Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

This action was brought by McElroy for injuries which he received on the 10th day of May, 1893, while a section hand in the employ of appellant. James Roller, as foreman, was in charge of the section men.

While deepening a ditch, near Nelsonville, the beam to the plow, which was operated by an engine, broke, making it necessary to secure another beam; to secure which the foreman, with McElroy and Lev. Shreve, proceeded with an engine, operated by its fireman, to a point where there was a switch cross-tie, proposed to be used as a plow beam. It was placed on the pilot of the engine to be carried to the point where needed. It was a square piece of timber, about sixteen feet long. Roller stood near the middle of the pilot of the engine, while McElroy stood at one side and Shreve at the other to steady the timber. Roller's face and McElroy's and Shreve's backs were to the point to which the engine was being run. While the engine was running six to eight miles an hour the end of the timber struck a switch stand. McElroy was either thrown from the engine or jumped off in the effort to save himself from his peril. At any rate he fell in front of the engine, which passed over and crushed his ankle, necessitating the amputation of his leg. The timber lacked only about one inch of clearing the switch stand.

The accident, as stated, occurred on the 10th day of May, 1893, and the amputation took place on that night. On the 12th day of May, 1893, the appellant made a compromise and settlement of the claim which is the basis of the action. The receipt which appellee gave is in language and figures as follows, to wit:

"Received of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Co. seven hundred dollars ($700), in full settlement or all claims and demands on account of injuries to the person and damage to and loss of property sustained by me at or near Nelsonville, Ky., on the 10th day of May, 1893, while a section laborer on said company's railroad.

"Witness my hand at Lebanon, Ky., this 12th day of May, 1893.

His
"ALFRED X MCELROY."
Mark.

"Witness:
His
"ALFONSO X CHANDLER,
Mark,
"B. D. WARFIELD,
"JOHN MCCHORD."

The appellant pleaded the compromise and settlement of the appellee's claim for damages, and further that he has never tendered or offered to pay back the $700 which he received.

The appellee seeks to avoid the compromise and settlement. He alleges that, shortly after receiving the injuries set out in his petition and before he had recovered from the shock resulting from the injuries and amputation of his leg, and while he was in great agony, both of mind and body, when his system was filled with opiates to such an extent that he was not conscious of what he was doing and not able, mentally, to fully understand the purport of the contract, after repeated importunities by appellant's agents, he signed the contract copied above; that he did not understand its contents; that appellant's agents represented to him that the company was not liable to him for the injuries he had sustained; that he would not get anything unless he signed the contract. In short, it is alleged that the company took advantage of his physical and mental condition and, by fraud and false representations, procured the paper to be signed by him and induced him to accept the $700; that the contract was signed by him "under a mistake of law and of fact as to his legal rights, and the money was so received" by him.

The foregoing is sufficient of the substance of the reply to show the grounds upon which he seeks to disregard the compromise and maintain his suit on the original cause of action.

The company denied all the allegations which tended to show the compromise was obtained by fraudulent conduct or that the plaintiff did not have the mental capacity to make the compromise, etc.

In fact the decided weight of the testimony shows that the plaintiff fully understood that he was receiving the $700 in full for his claim for personal injuries, and fully understood the nature and effect of the transaction. We will, however, assume, for the purposes of the further consideration of the case, that the company took advantage of plaintiff's physical and mental condition and fraudulently obtained his signature to the paper, and had him accept the $700 in compromise of his claim for personal injuries.

The money which he received was placed in bank to his credit by the man who was waiting on him. There is no claim that he was not in his usual mental condition when he afterward drew the money and spent it. There is not the slightest evidence tending to prove that the money was paid for anything except in compromise of claims for personal injuries.

By this action the plaintiff seeks a disaffirmance of the contract of compromise, and at the same time fails to repay or tender the money he received to effect a restoration of the status quo.

Fraud may vitiate or avoid all contracts. Contracts obtained by fraud are voidable at the election of the defrauded party. (Bigelow on Fraud, pages 73–4.)

The general rule is that when one has received money or property under a contract that is voidable for fraud or other reason, he must repay the money or tender the property before he is entitled to have the contract rescinded. There are exceptions to this rule.

There are cases where a court of equity would rescind a contract without a repayment or tender by the injured party. For instance, a case which involved the sale of property, wherein the court had control over the property and the distribution of its proceeds. In such cases the court can determine what are the rights and equities of the parties, and adjust them.

This is not a case where this court has any control over the money which the company paid the plaintiff, nor of any property belonging to the plaintiff, out of which the court could enforce a repayment of it. Either the company paid the money to avoid the risk of a greater damage being awarded against it in the event of litigation, or it paid the money in the belief that the expense of the litigation, though it defeated a recovery, would amount to as much or more than the sum paid. It sought to buy its immunity from damages and expense of having the question of its liability determined.

It is not reasonable to suppose that the company would have paid the money if the right of the plaintiff still existed to maintain its action upon the original cause of action. There is no pretense that the company paid its money as a credit on its supposed liability. It paid it to extinguish its liability, if such existed.

If upon the trial of the case the verdict had been for the company because the injury was not the result of the gross negligence of the foreman, or the party operating the engine, then the plainitff would have the money and the company the expense of the litigation which it sought to avoid, and the court powerless to enforce a return of the money.

This statement illustrates the correctness of the well-recognized rule which required a repayment or a tender of the money before bringing the action.

We think the reasoning of the learned judge who delivered the opinion in Vandervelden v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 61 Fed. Rep., 54, is unanswerable, and it sustains the conclusion we have reached.

We also cite the case of the East Tennessee, Virginia & Georgia Ry. Co. v. Hayes, 88 Ga., 588.

We will briefly review some of the cases cited to sustain the opposing view.

In Bliss v. New York, &c., R. R., 160 Mass., 456, the injury was to the clothing and to the person of the plaintiff. The receipt taken by the company covered the injuries to his clothing and to his person. It was claimed the receipt was procured by fraud, and that by the terms of the compromise only the injuries to his clothing paid for. The action was for the injury to his person. The court held that if the plaintiff was induced to execute the receipt by fraud, releasing for both injuries upon being paid a small sum which was understood by him to be compensation merely for the injuries to clothing, he need not return the money so received before bringing an action for personal injuries. The claim for injuries to clothing alone was compromised, and the money paid to cover damages to it. The court was of opinion that it was not necessary to return the money so received before bringing a suit for injuries to the person, for, as a matter of fact, nothing had been paid to compromise that claim.

The inference to be drawn from the opinion is that the court would have decided that a repayment would have been necessary before suit had the money been paid to compromise the claim for injury to the person.

In Stewart v. Chicago R. R. Co., &c., 141 Ind., 61, the court said: "If as alleged the money received was a previous donation and in no way supplied the consideration of the release, there was no duty to return it any more than to have returned previous earnings."

In that case the plaintiff claimed the money was for certain work, while the company claim it was paid in settlement of claims for personal injury.

In Stone v. Chicago & West Mich. Ry. Co., 66 Mich., 83, there was an offer to return the money and duebill which the party had received on the compromise of the claim for the injuries for which the suit was brought.

In the case of the Union Pacific Railway v. Harris, 158 U. S., 331, the railway company claimed the money was paid in compromise of all matters, while the plaintiff claimed that it was for "expenses of sickness and loss of time for two weeks."

The trial court instructed the jury that if they accepted "plaintiff's account of the negotiation between them as against that of the agent of the railway company, then it would appear that the plaintiff at least did not understand the subject-matter of the negotiation," etc.

The trial court further told the jury that "if the settlement was made with a full understanding of the rights of the parties, the plaintiff then being in a state of health to enable him to transact such business, and upon that you may say the settlement is binding upon the plaintiff," etc.

Chief Justice Fuller, in delivering the opinion, and without quoting from the instruction on the question of tender, said: "And the court further charged the jury that if they made an allowance to the plaintiff they should deduct from it what he had received. The question of the necessity of a tender of the money received before suit is not discussed in the opinion. We can easily see if the money was paid to cover expenses of illness and loss of time why a tender is not necessary to maintain an action for personal injuries, but we are unable to understand, if it was so paid, why the court should have directed it credited on the allowance to the plaintiff."

O'Brien v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 89 Iowa, 644, and Railway Co. v. Doyle, 18 Kansas, 64, appear to support the contention of the plaintiff.

In the Kansas case the court said: "He signed a writing which was voidable for want of capacity on his part to execute. Not until the suit was tried was he fully informed of the circumstances under which he made his mark thereto, and hence we hold that under the facts stated in such reply it was not necessary for him to tender the money back."

The court based its decision on the ground that the plaintiff was not fully informed of the circumstances under which he made his mark to the writing. Without stopping to discuss whether or not the court in our opinion was justified in making the exception to the general rule requiring a tender, it is sufficient to say that in this case the plaintiff knew the circumstances under which the writing was executed, and that the money was paid alone for the injury to his person.

Another case relied upon by plaintiff is Mullen v. Old Colony R. R. Co., 127 Mass., 86. This case fully sustains the conclusion which we have reached in this case. The receipt which the company's agent procured from the plaintiff covered personal injuries. In speaking of the money paid the court said: "If it was paid for the support of the plaintiff till his case should be tried or for a year as a gratuity it is clear that the defendant can not insist on repayment."

The court also said: "And if, after accepting a certain sum in settlement of an unliquidated claim for damages under a contract, one seeks to pursue his remedy for the damages on the ground that the settlement was procured by fraud, or is not binding upon him, he must first repay the amount received (Brown v. Hartford Ins. Co., 117 Mass., 479). The principle on which these decisions rest is just, but it applies to those cases only where that which was received and which must be returned was the consideration of the contract or settlement which the receiver intended to make and understood that he was making, and which he seeks to avoid by reason of fraudulent practices of the other party which led him to agree to its terms. It does not apply to cases where a party holds out that he gives the consideration for one thing and by fraud obtains an agreement that it was given for another thing."

The court, upon the facts, should have told the jury to find for the defendant.

We have not deemed it necessary to consider the questions raised as to other instructions which the court gave or refused to give the jury.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to grant the appellant a new trial and for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE R. R. CO. V. SHREVE.

(Filed November 20, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Compromise—Rescission for fraud—Necessity for tender of amount received—In this action to recover damages for personal injuries, the plaintiff having failed to tender the defendant the amount received by him in settlement of the claim, which settlement he alleged was procured by fraud, the court should have sustained a motion made by defendant for judgment on the pleadings after a verdict for plaintiff had been returned by the jury.

H. W. Bruce, W. J. Lisle, B. D. Warfield and Thompson & McChord for appellant.

Lafe S. Pence for appellee.

Appeal from Marion Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

Shreve was injured at the same time and under the same circumstances as McElroy.

The compromise was alleged to have been made under the same kind of circumstances as those under which the McElroy compromise was made.

The facts and conclusions of the court are fully stated in the opinion of the court this day delivered in the case of the L. & N. R. R. Co. v. McElroy (supra 730).

Shreve failed to repay or tender the money he received on the compromise. This is pleaded and not denied. In this case the defendant, after the verdict, moved for judgment on the pleadings. This motion should have been sustained.

The case is reversed, with directions that the court sustain the motion.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE R. R. CO. v. BELL.

(Filed December 2, 1896.)

1. Railroads—Passenger on freight train—Evidence—In this action against a railroad company to recover damages for personal injuries received by plaintiff while a passenger on one of defendant's freight trains the court did not err in permitting plaintiff to testify that "he did not see very well," as the connection in which the statement was made shows that it was not intended to convey the impression to the jury that plaintiff's vision was materially defective except as it may have been incidentally affected by the darkness surrounding him at the time and place he was speaking of in his testimony.

2. Same—It was not competent for the plaintiff to prove that there had been on the route a quarrel between other passengers in the caboose and the trainmen, as such testimony, even if it could be competent in any event to show malice, was not competent in this case, because there was nothing to show that the trainmen who had the qurrrel had anything to do with the switching of the cars which resulted in the injury to plaintiff.

3. While a passenger on a freight train assumes the additional risk, if any, in excess of the risk of traveling on a passenger train, the carrier owes to a passenger on one of its freight trains as high a degree of care as if he were riding on a passenger train.

4. Passenger carriers can not by contract relieve themselves from liability for personal injuries to passengers caused by the negligence of the carriers or their servants, such contracts being against public policy.

5. A passenger on a freight train under a contract for transporting his stock, for which he has paid the freight charges, must be regarded as carried for hire.

6. Punitive damages—It was error to give an instruction authorizing the jury to award punitive damages if they believed the acts of defendant's employes were willful or malicious, there being no competent evidence to justify a finding upon either of those grounds.

J. A. Mitchell, H. W. Bruce and Wm. Lindsay for appellant.

S. M. Payton and Thomas H. Hines for appellee.

Appeal from Hart Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Landes.

In October, 1894, the appellee shipped over the road of appellant company a car load of stock from Horse Cave, in Hart county, to Louisville.

By the stipulations of the contract of transportation the appellee undertook to load and unload the animals at his own risk, and feed, water and attend to them at his own expense and risk while they were in the stockyards of the company awaiting shipment, and while in the cars or at feeding or transfer points, or where they might be unloaded for any purpose. As a part of the contract the appellee was furnished transportation by the company for himself to enable him to accompany his stock to the point of destination without any charge therefor over what he paid for carrying his stock, and executed what was termed a "release," recited to be "in consideration of the free passage" granted him by the company, whereby he agreed that the company should not be liable to him "for injury or damage of any kind suffered by us while in charge of said animals."

The train of cars reached South Louisville about 1 o'clock A. M. of the day after the shipment, the appellee and other stockmen being carried in the caboose that was attached to the train. At that point the caboose was detached, and during the necessary switching and transferring of the freight cars several of them were run back to the caboose for the purpose of attaching it again, but they struck the caboose with considerable force and knocked it back, and the shock produced by the concussion caused the appellee, who was on his feet, to be thrown against the front end and door of the caboose, breaking the glass that was in the door, injuring and bruising him slightly about the shoulder, and causing a painful and serious cut on one of his wrists, which came in contact with the broken glass. To recover damages for his injuries from the appellant company this action was brought by the appellee.

The ground upon which the claim for damage is based was alleged in the petition to be that in switching the freight cars the appellant company, its agents and employes "did unlawfully, willfully, maliciously, negligently and carelessly * * * run a number of heavy-laden freight cars with great force and violence against" the caboose, by reason of which the appellee "was precipitated and thrown from his position against the door and door-post," whereby the injuries were inflicted on the appellee. Issue was joined by traverse and plea of release and of contributory negligence. The case was submitted to a jury, and the result was a verdict and judgment against the appellant company for $1,000 damages. A motion for a new trial was made and overruled, and the case is before us by appeal from that judgment.

It is alleged for appellant as error that the court admitted incompetent testimony to be introduced in behalf of the appellees. First, with reference to the appellee's capacity to sue, and second with reference to some trouble between the trainmen and stockmen in the caboose before the train reached South Louisville.

1st. In his testimony the appellee stated in substance that when the caboose was detached at South Louisville, and while the cars were being switched, one of the stockmen went out of the caboose to look after his stock, and that he and other stockmen started to follow him for the same purpose, but when they got to the door they concluded not to get off and turned back. In giving his reasons for not getting off he stated that "he did not see very well," and it was dark and he did not feel safe in going out. Objection was made to his statement that he "did not see very well," but the objection was overruled.

We are not able to see that this statement was incompetent or that it was either prejudicial in any degree to the appellant or beneficial to the appellee. In the connection in which the statement was made it does not appear to have been intended to convey the impression to the jury that his vision was materially defective, except as it may have been incidentally affected by the darkness surrounding him at the time and place he was speaking of in his testimony. There was no error, therefore, in permitting this statement to go to the jury.

2d. Over the objection of counsel for the appellant the court permitted several witnesses to testify that there was a quarrel between some of the trainmen and stockmen (not the appellee) in the caboose on the route between Horse Cave and South Louisville. This testimony was incompetent and prejudicial to the appellant. It was not a part of the res gestæ, and the petition did not seek to recover damages from the company for alleged insults or abuse or mistreatment of the appellee on the part of the servants of the company. The object of such testimony was doubtless to furnish the ground for punitive damages, and it was likely to influence the jury in that direction to find that the servants of the appellant company were actuated by malice, and that the cars were handled by them in switching with the intent and purpose of injuring the stockmen in the caboose. But if this kind of testimony were competent at all, or generally in cases like this there was no testimony here connecting the servants of the appellant company, who handled the locomotive and cars in switching, with the alleged quarrel with the stockmen in the caboose. In addition to this nothing occurred at South Louisville, from the testimony of the witnesses, that tended to show that those who handled the locomotive and cars in switching willfully or intentionally caused the concussion or shock by which the appellee was injured.

The court below erred in admitting this testimony, and the judgment must be reversed on account of this error.

Since the case will have to be retried, it is proper for us to pass upon some of the questions raised on the exceptions to the instructions given to the jury at the instance of plaintiff's counsel.

In the first instruction the court submitted to the jury the want of ordinary care on the part of the defendant company's servants in handling the cars while switching, together with the absence of contributory negligence on the part of the defendant, as a basis upon which the defendant might be held liable for the injuries sustained by the plaintiff.

The law in this regard was correctly and fairly stated by the court, but the court also told the jury in this instruction that, notwithstanding the release executed by the plaintiff and endorsed in the contract for transportation which has been referred to, "the defendant, its agents and employes in charge and conduct of the train were bound to the exercise of ordinary care and precaution to carry and protect him against injury."

This, we hold, was proper, and was a correct statement of the law so far as it was intended to declare that the defendant was not released, by the term of the "release" executed by plaintiff, from liability to plaintiff for injuries that he may have suffered by reason or in consequence of the negligence of the servants of the defendant company.

The doctrine has been heretofore frequently recognized by this court that, although common carriers may by special contract limit their common-law responsibility as insurers of property delivered to them for carriage, they can not relieve themselves by contract from liability for the loss of or injury to property resulting from their own negligence or that of their servants or employes. (L., C. & L. R. R. Co. v. Hedges, 9 Bush, 645; Rhodes v. L. & N. R. R. Co., Ib., 691.)

Such contracts are held to be against public policy, and we hold that the same doctrine applies to contracts which are intended to relieve common carriers from liability for injuries sustained by passengers while being carried by them either on freight or passenger trains. And while a passenger on a freight train assumes the additional risk, if any, in excess of the risk of traveling in a passenger train, the carrier owes to a passenger on one of its freight trains as high a degree of care as if he were riding on a passenger train. (Ohio Valley Ry. Co. v. Watson's adm'r, 93 Ky., 654.)

In this case the plaintiff, having been a passenger on a freight train under a contract for transporting his stock, for which he paid the freight charges, must be considered to have been carried for hire. The doctrine here recognized, that carriers of passengers can not by contract release themselves from liability for personal injuries sustained by their passengers, by reason of the negligence of themselves or their employes or servants, is supported both by principle and authority. (Missouri Pacific Ry. Co. v. Ivey and others, 37 Am. & Eng. Railway Cases, 47; Carroll v. M. P. Ry. Co., 26 Ib., 268; O. & M. Rv. Co. v. Nickless, 71 Ind., 271; Graham v. Pacific Ry. Co., 66 Mo., 536; N. Y. Cent. Ry. Co. v. Lockwood, 17 Wall., 357.)

The second instruction is objectionable because it submits the question of punitive damages in part on the alleged willful and malicious acts of the defendant company's employes when there was no competent evidence to justify a finding upon either of those grounds. The same may be said of the third instruction.

In the fourth instruction it was for the same reason improper to refer to the alleged willful and malicious acts of the defendant's servants.

The fifth instruction is not objectionable, as it was substantially the same as the first instruction with reference to the negligence of the defendant and the contributory negligence of the plaintiff.

For the reasons indicated the judgment is reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to set aside the verdict and award the appellant a new trial and for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL R. R. CO. V. MIZELL.

(Filed December 5, 1896.)

1. Railroads—Failure to give signal for crossing—Proximate cause—The failure of the servants in charge of a railroad train to blow the whistle for a crossing was the proximate cause of the injury to a traveler on the highway who in ignorance of the approach of the train attempted to make the crossing and was thrown from her horse, which was frightened by the train.

2. Same—Pleading—It was not necessary for the plaintiff to plead that the failure to give the signal was in violation of law, the statute requiring the signal to be given being a general one, and, therefore, not required to be specially pleaded.

3. Contributory negligence—The fact that the plaintiff did not come to a full stop to listen for the train, but brought her horse to a slow walk in order to listen, was not per se contributory negligence.

4. Same—The question of contributory negligence was properly submitted by the instructions.

5. A verdict for $2,000 for the injuries received and suffering and loss of time caused thereby was not excessive.

George L. Husbands for appellant.

J. M. Brummal & Son and W. G. Bullitt for appellee.

Appeal from Hickman Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge DuRelle.

The appellee was riding on horseback along a public highway which crossed the railroad of appellant. At the intersection the railroad and the highway as well passed through cuts which prevented persons on the highway from seeing approaching trains until they were within a few feet of the rails.

According to her statements she was riding very slowly, and was listening for the signal by bell or whistle of the approach of a train. She heard no signal and did not see the train until she was on the track at the crossing, and the train, which was a freight train and going at a rapid rate, was, according to her statements, within fifteen or twenty feet from her when she saw it. Her horse became frightened at the train, ran with her some hundred yards or more, and in turning a curve in the road threw her and dragged her a short distance. She was badly bruised by the fall, and her shoulder was injured to such an extent that at the time of the trial it was an inch and a half lower than the other shoulder. By reason of the injury and her subsequent confinement to her room she was unable to secure a position as a teacher, for which she was at the time an applicant.

For the injuries received and the suffering and loss of time caused thereby, she brought suit against the appellant and the jury awarded her $2,000. The basis of her complaint is that the alleged failure to give the signal required by law for the crossing was the cause of her attempting to make the crossing and of her horse being frightened and the consequent injuries.

It is not pleaded that the failure to give the signal was in violation of law, and we do not think it was necessary to so plead it. The statute is a general one, and is not required to be specially pleaded.

The principal ground relied on by appellant is that the alleged negligence in failure to blow the whistle was not the proximate cause of the injury; but if by reason of that failure the appellee went upon the track and her horse was there frightened by the approaching train the jury, if they believed appellee's witnesses, had evidence from which they were entitled to find that the negligence was the proximate cause of the injury, and that the damage followed as a continuous and natural sequence from the negligent act, and was a result which might have been foreseen and expected as the result of the conduct complained of, for it was to be expected that passengers on horseback might be traveling along the highway. (3 Parsons Contracts, 179.)

The question of contributory negligence was properly submitted to the jury by the instructions. In our judgment the fact that appellee did not come to a full stop to listen for the train, but brought her horse to a slow walk in order to listen, was not, per se, contributory negligence.

There was evidence of other witnesses who corroborated her statement that the signal was not given, and the question was properly left to the jury.

Instruction B, the refusal of which is complained of by appellant, does not appear in the record.

The instructions given appear to correctly state the law. We can not say, under the evidence in this record, that the verdict is excessive.

Judgment affirmed.

LEBUS V. POINDEXTER.

(Filed December 9, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Amendment of pleadings—Failure to verify—So much of the petition in this case as sought to specifically state a cause of action against the appellee having been stricken out, an amended petition offered at the ensuing term alleging that certain terms of the contract sued on, which imposed a liability upon appellee, had been omitted by mistake from the writing evidencing the contract, should have been permitted to be filed. And while the amendment was not verified, and the right to refuse amendments is in the sound discretion of the court, yet as it is manifest that the amendment was not refused because it was not verified the judgment is reversed, with direction to permit the amendment to be filed upon proper verification.

Simon & Cason for appellant.

Blanton & Berry for appellee.

Appeal from Harrison Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Guffy.

The appellant brought this action against W. McTurney and J. W. Poindenter, as partners, doing business under the firm name of Turney & Poindexter, and David B. Veach. A sale of one-half interest in a horse to appellant is alleged to have been made by Veach & Turney, who were then partners.

It is also alleged that said Veach & Turney undertook to do certain things, and among them to pay appellant $400, money loaned to them by appellant, which contract was in writing and is filed with the petition.

Appellant also alleged that Veach sold his interest in the horse and transferred all his right, interest and liability under said contract to Poindexter, who assumed the place of said Veach in the contract, and that said Turney & Poindexter, by their written acceptance in the contract, assumed the same for the year ending July 1, 1894, and that Veach did in writing guarantee the performance of the contract by Turney & Poindexter. The sale of the horse was alleged, and a credit of $185.69 given on the $400 loaned money debt, and judgment was asked against the defendants for the remaininder of said $400.

The contract and endorsements read as follows:

"CYNTHIANA, KY., April 13, 1891.

"We have this day sold to C. Lebus a one-half interest in our bay stallion, known as Carter's King William, for the sum of four hundred dollars, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged.

"The profits or loss, together with the seasons of said horse, are to be divided equally between the firm of Veach & Turney and C. Lebus.

"C. Lebus has also loaned us this day the sum of four hundred dollars, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, due January 1, 1894, but in the event of the sale or death of said stallion before that date then to become due at once, and we are to keep, feed and otherwise attend to said horse free, which is to offset the use of the four hundred dollars loaned us by said Lebus.

"VEACH & TURNEY."

"We assume the above contract for the year ending January 1, 1894. TURNEY & POINDEXTER."

"We guarantee and bind ourselves that Turney & Poindexter will fulfill the within contract. D. B. VEACH."

On motion of appellee Poindexter, so much of the petition as sought to specifically state a cause of action against him was stricken out. At the ensuing September term of court appellant offered and moved to have filed an amended petition, to the filing of which appellee objected, and the court refused to permit the filing thereof but leave was given to further amend, but upon the offering of a second amended petition appellee again objected to the filing thereof, and the court sustained the objection and the action was dismissed as to appellee Poindexter, and from that judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

It is substantially alleged in the amendments that about the — day of ——, 1893, the defendant, Veach, by verbal contract sold to said Poindexter his interest in the horse, as well as his interest in the firm of Turney & Veach, and in consideration of that and the sale of other property Poindexter took the place of Veach in said firm's business, and formed and constituted the firm of Turney & Poindexter, and agreed and undertook with Veach and plaintiff that he would assume the place of Veach in said contract and pay plaintiff Veach's part of the money due on the contract, to wit, the $400, and plaintiff agreed to accept and did accept him in place of Veach, with the condition that Veach would guarantee the performance of said contract, and that at the time of said trade Turney & Poindexter undertook by their written endorsement to assume all the obligations of Turney & Veach under said contract, but by mistake of the draftsman the endorsement was made as before shown.

It seems to us clear that the pleadings offered show a cause of action against appellee, but appellee contends further that the amendment was not sworn to, and that the right to refuse amendments is within the sound discretion of the court. It is pretty evident that the amendments were not rejected because not verified. It might well be argued that if the horse had died or been sold during the year ending January 1, 1894, by the very terms of the endorsement Poindexter would have been bound for the 400; for by the terms of the contract it would then have been due and did become due in January, 1894.

In our opinion the court erred in refusing leave to file the amendments offered by appellant, and for the reasons given the judgment appealed from is reversed and cause remanded, with direction to permit the amendments, upon proper verification, to be filed and for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

WILSON V. WILSON.

(Filed December 12, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Divorce—In this action by the wife, seeking a divorce from the husband upon the ground of cruel and inhuman treatment and upon the ground of the husband's aversion to her to such an extent as to destroy her peace and happiness, as the evidence shows that the husband is a thriftless man, furnishing no means of support for himself or his wife, living from place to place without payment of board, and treating the plaintiff not as a wife, but as one not worthy of his position, the court should have granted the divorce, as these facts show a treatment worse than blows.

J. C. B. Sebree for appellant.

Appeal from Scott Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Pryor.

This is an action for a divorce, brought by the wife against the husband.

The grounds relied on are the cruel and inhuman treatment on the part of the husband—his aversion to her to such an extent as to destroy her peace and happiness. Her action was dismissed.

The testimony of three or more witnesses uncontradicted is that the wife is a kind, clever and an industrious woman, with a disposition amiable and affectionate; that the husband is a thriftless, no-account man, furnishing no means of support for himself or wife, and living from place to place, without payment of board, as long as his friends are content to be imposed on by reason of his indolent and lazy habits; that he subjects his wife to this mode of living, and treats her not as a wife, but as one not worthy of his position.

They are now living apart, the husband having abandoned her, but not a sufficient length of time to authorize a decree on that ground, but the facts of the case show a treatment worse than blows, and a course of conduct humiliating to the wife that drove her to want.

The judgment dismissing her petition is reversed, with directions to enter a judgment of divorce from the bonds that tie her to such a husband.

BROADDUS V. EUBANKS.

(Filed December 15, 1896—Not to be reported.)

1. Oral testimony to show land embraced in deed—It being a well-settled rule of law that courses and distances in a deed must yield to known objects, the court in this action of trespass involving the title to land did not err in admitting oral testimony to show the land embraced in plaintiff's deed.

2. Amendment of pleadings—In view of the facts of this case and of the time at which defendant asked leave to amend her answer to conform to proof which she desired to introduce, the court did not err in refusing the leave to amend.

W. H. Miller for appellant.

W. G. Welch for appellee.

Appeal from Lincoln Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Guffy.

It is alleged in the petition in this case that plaintiff was, and for many years had been, the owner of and occupying a certain tract of land in Lincoln county (giving the boundary thereof), and that part of said farm, consisting of a strip of land 12 feet wide, extends to the county road leading to Stanford, the courthouse, church, depot, schools and other places; and said 12-foot strip extending to the county road, and that the said strip is used by plaintiff and family as a passway to and from the points aforesaid; and that said strip is his only passway to and from his farm to said parts and to enjoy his rights as a citizen. Here follows a description of the passway. It is also averred that he had been so using it for many years, being in the possession thereof, and that he is entitled to the complete and full possession thereof.

It is further alleged in the petition that the defendant did, on the 8th of September, 1894, with the fraudulent design and intention of depriving plaintiff of the use and ownership of said 12 foot strip of land, and the use and enjoyment and possession of his said farm aforesaid, did unlawfully, maliciously, wantonly and willfully enter upon plaintiff's 12-foot strip of land aforesaid and build a fence across the same, thereby depriving him of the use and enjoyment and possession thereof and thus preventing him from using the same to reach the points aforesaid and other points, and has humiliated him and put him to great trouble and expense, and defendant threatens to continue to injure him by further trespassing upon said strip and thus do plaintiff great injury.

Plaintiff finally avers that he has been damaged $1,000 by defendant and prays judgment therefor.

It seems that a demurrer to the petition and a motion to strike out certain parts thereof were overruled and a jury impaneled, and on the next day defendant filed her answer, in which she denied that plaintiff was the owner of the strip of land in contest, and claimed that the strip of land in contest was part of a 17-acre tract conveyed to A. M. Swope by J. H. Swope in trust for her and her children, and that, long before said conveyance, J. C. Bryan, plaintiff's vendor, had conveyed the said land to her remote vendor.

A trial resulted in a verdict and judgment in plaintiff's favor for $500, and appellant's motion for a new trial having been overruled, she prosecutes this appeal.

The principal question involved is the title to the 12-foot strip of land. It is conceded that Bryan conveyed the strip to appellee, but appellant contends that he had, before that date, conveyed the same to others, under whom she holds. It must be conceded that the proof on that point is not perfectly clear when taken altogether.

It is a well-settled rule of law that courses and distances must yield to known objects, and, for the purpose of showing what really was conveyed by Bryan, oral proof was necessarily competent. Hence the objections to plaintiff's testimony were properly overruled.

It was the province of the jury to find the facts, and, being more familiar with the witnesses and objects described than we are, we are not disposed to disturb the finding.

Appellant insists that the court erred in rejecting her testimony as to the strip in contest being included in the home tract, and in not allowing her to amend her answer to conform to the proof, which she desired to introduce. But, under the facts of this case and the time at which leave to amend was asked, we do not think that the court erred in refusing leave to amend.

Appellant also insists that the verdict is excessive and appears to have been given under the influence of passion, etc. But we do not feel authorized to so hold, nor do we think that the court erred to the prejudice of appellant's substantial rights in giving or refusing instructions.

Judgment affirmed.

SLUSHER V. KINNAIRD, &C.

(Filed December 15, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Pleading—Defects cured by judgment—In this action upon certain promissory notes, although the petition would not have been good upon demurrer, yet as no demurrer was filed and judgment by default has been rendered in favor of plaintiffs the defects in the petition are cured by the judgment.

A. K. Cook for appellant.

G. W. Saulsberry and C. C. Turner for appellees.

Appeal from Bell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Guffy.

It is alleged in the petition in this action that on the 7th day of December, 1889, the defendant executed his promissory note to plaintiffs, Robert Kinnaird and Joseph Weisenger, for the sum of $468.75, due the 7th day of December, 1891, to bear interest from date, and on the same day executed and delivered to said parties his other promissory note for a like sum, with interest from date, by which he promised to pay said parties said sums, no part of which had been paid; that William H. Kinnaird alleged that on the —— day of ——, 18—, the said Joseph Weisenger departed this life, and that on the —— day of ——, 18—, he was appointed administrator of his estate, and that he executed bond as such and entered upon the discharge of his duties, and that he sued as such. Judgment for the amount of each note was asked. The notes seem to have been filed.

It seems that the defendant was duly summoned, at least the judgment so recites, and that no defense was made by the defendant, and judgment was rendered as prayed for, and to reverse that judgment the defendant has obtained an appeal to this court, and insists that the petition will not support the judgment.

It may be true that the petition would have been insufficient if demurred to, but it shows an indebtedness of the defendant to one of the parties plaintiff, and the other shows defectively it may be that he has a right to sue, and, no defense having been interposed, the defects in the petition are cured by the judgment.

It results, therefore, that the judgmust must be and is affirmed.

NORTHWESTERN MUTUAL LIFE INS. CO. V. CALLOWAY.

(Filed December 16, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Burden of proof—When a policy of insurance had lapsed and the insured, desiring to renew it, paid to the company's agent for that purpose the required premium, which was to be returned if the company declined to restore the policy or accept the certificate of health, the obligation to return the money being in writing, in this action by the insured against the company to recover the money, the plaintiff alleging in his petition that the company refused to receive the certificate of health or renew the policy, and the defendant by its answer admitting the payment of the money, but denying that it refused to restore the policy or accept the certificate of health, this denial by defendant was equivalent to affirming that the policy was renewed, and that fact being traversed by reply the burden was on defendant to show a compliance with its agreement to renew.

Barnett, Miller & Barnett for appellant.

C. B. Seymour, Calloway & Miller and Thomas H. Hines for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery division.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Pryor.

Upon which party the burden of proof rests is the only question involved in this case.

The plaintiff's policy of insurance had lapsed and he desired to renew it, and for that purpose paid to the appellant's agent $153, to be returned, however, if the company declined to restore the policy or accept the certificate of payment. The obligation to return the money is in writing.

It is alleged that the money was paid; that the company refused to receive the certificate of health or renew the policy. The company denies that it refused to restore the policy or accept the certificate. The payment of the money is admitted.

The answer of the defendant is in effect that it performed the agreement by accepting the certificate and restoring the policy, and this matter is traversed by a reply. On this condition of the pleadings the case was submitted and a judgment entered for the plaintiff without other evidence. The case for the plaintiff required no other proof, and the burden was on the defendant to show its compliance with the undertaking.

The plaintiff was not required to establish the negative of the issue, and, the money having been paid, the obligation to return the money existed unless the policy was restored.

The denial that the policy was not continued is but affirming that it was, and the fact being within the knowledge of the defense, and the company having received the money, the burden was on the company.

The fact that the appellee undertook to prove what the defendant ought to have established on the issue as formed can make no difference, as no testimony was introduced.

Judgment affirmed.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE R. R. CO. v. HARTWELL, &C.

(Filed June 12, 1896.)

1. Carriers—Change of consignee—The shipper of goods may, even after their delivery to the carrier and after the bill of lading has been signed and delivered, alter their destination and direct their delivery to another consignee, unless the bill of lading has been forwarded to the consignee or some one for his use. However, this would not be the case if a state of facts existed which made the delivery of the goods to the carrier a delivery to the consignee and the owner of them.

2. While the consignee in the bill of lading is presumptively the owner of the goods, yet, when the shipper gives notice after the goods have been received by the carrier and before they are delivered to the consignee that he is not to deliver them to the consignee, the carrier must take notice that the consignor intends to retain control of their ultimate disposition, and after such notice the presumption no longer obtains that the consignee is the owner of the goods.

3. Bills of lading are assignable, and, when properly endorsed and delivered with the intention of passing the title to the goods, it is a constructive delivery of them.

4. Where the shipper of goods, after delivering them to the carrier and receiving a bill of lading, made a draft upon the consignee in favor of a bank and delivered it to the bank, together with the bill of lading, at the same time notifying the carrier not to deliver the goods to the consignee unless he presented the bill of lading and paid the draft, the carrier, having delivered the goods to the consignee without requiring him to present the bill of lading and pay the draft, is liable to the shipper for such damages as he has sustained not exceeding the value of the goods, and not exceeding in any event the amount of the draft.

5. A verdict "for plaintiff," without assessing the amount of recovery, was not sufficient to authorize a judgment.

W. H. Marriott for appellant.

R. L. Stith and S. H. Bush for appellees.

Appeal from Hardin Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

On the 9th day of September, 1892, Hartwell delivered to the appellant for shipment to A. Pennington & Co., of St. Louis, Mo., 170 barrels of apples, for which he received from it a bill of lading. On the day following Hartwell made a draft in favor of the First National Bank of Elizabethtown, Ky., on the consignee, A. Pennington & Co., for $300, and at the same time delivered to it the bill of lading. He then notified the appellant not to deliver the apples to the consignee unless he presented the bill of lading and paid the draft which he had drawn in favor of the bank. In violation of Hartwell's order the appellant delivered to A. Pennington & Co. the apples without requiring them to present the bill of lading and pay the draft. The bank gave Hartwell credit for the draft, but Pennington & Co. failing to pay it this action was brought to recover the amount of it of the appellant.

The answer denied that Hartwell was the owner of the apples, and alleged that they were owned by Pennington & Co. The shipper of goods may, even after the delivery to the carrier and after the bill of lading has been signed and delivered, alter their destination and direct their delivery to another consignee, unless the bill of lading has been forwarded to the consignee or some one for his use. However this would not be the case if a state of facts existed which made the delivery of the goods to the carrier a delivery to the consignee and the owner of them. (Hutchison on Carriers, second edition, section 134.)

While the consignee in the bill of lading is presumptively the owner of the goods, and must be treated by the carrier as the owner unless he has notice to the contrary, when goods are shipped deliverable to the order of the consignor for and on account of the consignee the carrier can not deliver them to such consignee except upon the production of the bill of lading properly evidenced by the consignor. When the goods are thus shipped and deliverable the carrier must take notice that the consignor intended to retain control of the disposition of the goods. (Hutchison on Carriers, section 130.)

So when the shipper gives notice, after they have been received by the carrier for transportation, and before they are delivered to the consignee, that he is not to deliver them to the consignee, he must take notice that the consignor intends to retain control of their ultimate disposition. After such notice the presumption no longer obtains that the consignee is the owner of the goods. Bills of lading are assignable. When properly endorsed and delivered, with the intention of passing the title to them, it is a constructive delivery of the goods. (Hutchison on Carriers, section 129.)

In the same way they could be pledged to pay a debt and thus give the assignee control of the goods. There was no proof as to the value of the apples. It was essential that such proof should have been made before there could be a verdict and judgment for the plaintiff. (Subsection 4, section 126, Civil Code.)

Unless they had a value the appellant could not have been damaged except nominally on account of the appellant's delivery of the apples to Pennington & Co. It can not be said because the draft was for $300 therefore the apples were of equal value, and that there is an implied obligation on the part of the railroad company to pay that amount. The company can only be made to pay the bank such damages as it sustained, not exceeding in amount the value of the apples, but in no event more than $300.

Section 329, Civil Code, provides that "if, by a general verdict, either party be entitled to recover money of the adverse party, the jury, in their verdict, must assess the amount of recovery."

In this case the verdict must be general, and if anything the plaintiffs were entitled to recover money of the defendant. The court failed to tell the jury that if they found for the plaintiff they should assess the amount of recovery, and the jury did not fix it.

The verdict is as follows: "We of the jury find for the plaintiff." Although there had been proof as to damages, the court was not authorized to render a judgment on the verdict because the jury had failed to assess the amount of recovery. The testimony of Grimes and Talbot in rebuttal should have been given in chief.

The judgment is reversed for further proceedings in conformity with this opinion.

The court delivered the following response to petition for rehearing January 26, 1897:

The only question in this case under the pleadings and proof is as to who owned the apples when they were delivered to the carrier. There is no evidence tending to show that Hartwell had any authority as the agent of Pennington & Co. to draw the draft. In fact the theory of the bank is that Hartwell bought the apples on his own account, and it furnished the money to pay for them.

It follows that instruction No. 4 should not have been given.

JUDD'S ADM'X V. CHESAPEAKE & OHIO RY. CO.

(Filed November 19, 1896—Not to be reported.)

1. Master and servant—Defective appliances—Peremptory instruction—Negligence—In this action by an administrator against a railroad company to recover damages for the killing of plaintiff's intestate while making a coupling in discharge of his duty as conductor of a construction train, it being his duty to aid in making couplings when necessary, the court erred in giving a peremptory instruction to find for defendant, the evidence showing that the conductor, who was standing upon the pilot of the detached engine for the purpose of coupling it to the caboose, was injured by reason of the fact that the engine failed to respond to the effort of the fireman in charge to reverse it, owing to the fact that the air-brake was out of order, and it being also in proof that the engine had a general bad reputation, which, if justified by its true condition, rendered the defendant guilty of gross negligence, if not willful negligence, in furnishing and using such an engine.

2. Same—It was not necessary for plaintiff to show that his intestate did not know and could not by the exercise of ordinary diligence have known of the defect in the engine, although it was necessary to allege those facts. And even though the bad reputation of the engine may have reached him, yet, as it had been in the shop for repairs the Saturday night before, it is not unreasonable to suppose that he relied upon that fact and believed, as he had a right to believe, that all needed repairs had been made.

3. New trial—The trial court should be allowed a reasonable discretion as to granting new trials, and this court is not inclined in this case to reverse because of the action of the lower court in granting defendant a new trial.

James Andrew Scott, Proctor K. Malin and R. S. Dinkle for appellant.

Wadsworth & Cochran for appellee.

Appeal from Boyd Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Guffy.

This action was instituted by the appellant, Jennie Judd, administratrix of Thomas Judd, against the appellee, Chesapeake & Ohio Ry. Co., to recover judgment for the killing of said Thomas Judd by the appellee.

It is alleged in the petition that the decedent was a conductor of appellee's freight train, and while so employed was killed by the gross carelessness and willful negligence of the defendant, its agents and servants; that the engineer and fireman in charge of the engine at the time were reckless, unskillful and incompetent, and that these facts were known to appellee, or could have been known by ordinary care and diligence, but the same was not known to decedent, nor could have been known by ordinary care on the part of decedent; that the engine, machinery, appliances and apparatus furnished by appellee to propel said train and operation by the crew at the time of the injury complained of were defective and unsafe, and insufficient for the purpose for which they were ordinarily used; all of which was well known to the defendant in time to have prevented the injury, or could have been known by ordinary care, and that defendant was negligent in the use of said machinery and appliances after its dangerous condition was known, or could have been known by ordinary diligence or care, and that decedent did not know, and could not have known by ordinary care and diligence, of the defects and unsafeness of said machinery.

The defendant in the first paragraph of the answer traversed all the material allegations of the petition. The second paragraph pleaded contributory negligence of decedent. The reply traversed the material averments of the answer.

At the April term, 1894, of court the plaintiff was permitted to file an amended petition alleging that by mistake of the pleader it was alleged that Charles Judd was the man who was killed; that his name was Thomas Judd, and that the plaintiff was appointed administratrix of said Thomas Judd. To the petition as amended the defendant pleaded the statute of limitation, to which plea a demurrer was sustained.

A trial at the said April term, 1894, resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of plaintiff for $10,000. A motion for new trial was made, and the motion continued until the next term of court, at which term a new trial was awarded and cause continued, and at the succeeding term a trial was had, and, at the conclusion of plaintiff's testimony, the defendant moved the court to instruct the jury to find for the defendant, which motion was sustained by the court, and the jury under a peremptory instruction found for the defendant, and the plaintiff's petition was, by the judgment of the court, dismissed, and her motion for new trial having been overruled she prosecutes this appeal.

It is the contention of appellant that the court erred in setting aside the verdict and judgment of the April term, 1894, and she asks that the same be reversed and the court below ordered to re-enter the judgment and verdict of 1894; also insists that the court erred in giving the peremptory instruction at the final trial.

We deem it unnecessary to discuss the grounds for new trial filed by defendant at the April term, 1894. The trial court should be allowed a reasonable discretion as to granting new trials, and we are not disposed to reverse the order granting the new trial in question. Appellant also insists that the court erred in giving the peremptory instruction, and erred in overruling her motion for a new trial.

The deceased was the conductor of a construction train, and he and others had detached the engine from the train and rode on it to some point for dinner, and, as they returned, the engineer got off to look for a monkey-wrench that had been lost, the fireman remaining in charge of the engine. The caboose and some flat cars were on the track, and it was necessary to couple the engine to the caboose in order to connect the train for work.

The evidence conduces to show that the speed of the engine was then about five miles per hour. The conductor went upon the pilot and took hold of the bar used in coupling, the fireman reversed or attempted to reverse the engine, but for some cause the engine failed to respond to the effort. The air brake was out of order and no sand in the box, hence the speed of the engine could not, under the circumstances, be lessened, and the result was that the engine approached the caboose so rapidly that the deceased failed to make the coupling, and the bar broke and the deceased was so injured as to cause his death in a few days or weeks.

It seems from the proof that if the air brake had been in order, or if the engine had been in condition to respond to the effort to reverse it, that the accident would not have happened.

The proof conduces to show that it was the duty of the conductor, when necessary, to aid in coupling, and that to stand on the pilot to couple was one of the usual ways to couple, and that the conductor was on the pilot attempting to couple.

It is also in proof that the engine had a general bad reputation; was called a rattletrap or scrap pile, and had been so spoken of for a year or so. It is also in proof that it was the duty of the engineer to report in writing to the proper person the condition of the engine when he would turn it in on Saturday night, and that it was then the duty of a certain officer to have the necessary repairs made; and the proof shows that it had been in the shop the Saturday night before the injury occurred.

Appellee insists that appellant did not show any right to recover because no proof was introduced to sustain the allegation that the decedent did not know and could not, by the exercise of ordinary diligence, have known of the insufficiency of the machinery or appliances.

If such proof had to be made in a case like this, we do not see how a recovery could be had. The injured party being dead, how could such proof be made?

It is regarded as necessary in a suit upon a note to allege that it is unpaid, but we are not aware of any authority which requires the plaintiff to prove that averment.

Appellee also contends that the proof establishes contributory negligence on the part of decedent. It may be that there is some proof tending to show such negligence, but other proof tends to contradict that theory. It may be that the notoriously bad reputation of the engine would reach the conductor, and thus put him on his guard.

If it be true that the bad reputation of the engine was justified by its true condition, it follows inevitably that the appellee was guilty of gross negligence and not willful negligence in furnishing and using such an engine.

As before stated the engine had been in the shop for repairs the Saturday night before, and it is not unreasonable to suppose that decedent relied upon that fact and believed, as he had a right to believe, that all needed repairs had been made, and that all the machinery, air brakes and apparatus were in perfect order; and, if such had been the case, it is pretty clear that the injury would not have happened. The peremptory instruction should not have been given.

The judgment in appellee's favor is reversed and cause remanded, with directions to award appellant a new trial, and for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

The court delivered the following response to a petition for rehearing February 2, 1897:

The case of Bogenschutz v. Smith, 84 Ky., 330, was an action by the servant against the master to recover for injuries received, as alleged, by the negligence of the master, as by his failure to furnish safe or suitable apparatus or machinery for the use of the servant in the discharge of his duty; or, if such machinery or appliances were ever furnished, that they had become defective. The servant's right to recover was under the common law, and he was required to make out his case according to the rules of the common law.

The case at bar is purely a statutory right, not existing under the common law, hence the case in 84 Ky., supra, is not like the case under consideration, and the decision in this case is not in conflict with the one relied on by appellee, even if it be conceded that the latter case announced the rule contended for by appellee. The adoption of the rule contended for by appellee would practically nullify the statute, for it would be impossible to prove that the decedent was not aware of the defects, and could not have known thereof by the exercise of ordinary diligence, or, at any rate, such proof could rarely, if ever, be made. There is nothing in the statute to sustain the contention of appellee.

The question as to whether decedent knew of the defective machinery was a question for the jury, and not for the court.

Petition overruled.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE R. R. CO. V. GUY, &C.

(Filed December 1, 1896—Not to be reported.)

1. Railroads—Carrying passenger past station—Excessive verdict—In this action against a railroad company to recover damages for carrying the plaintiff, while a passenger on one of defendant's trains, beyond her station, and requiring her to get off at an inconvenient place, from which she had to walk back to the station, a short distance, the evidence was sufficient to support a verdict for the plaintiff, and, while the amount of the verdict ($218) is larger than this court may think it ought to have been, it is not so great as to indicate passion or prejudice.

2. The court properly refused to instruct the jury that they could only find nominal damages.

Breckinridge & Shelby for appellant.

Leland Hathaway for appellees.

Appeal from Clark Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Guffy.

It is alleged in the petition in this case that the plaintiff, Millie Guy, paid her fare to the defendant's agent, and was a passenger on one of defendant's regular passenger trains from Winchester station to Elkin, another station on said road, and that said train did not stop at Elkin for her to get off, but carried her over the trestle south of said station, and against her will and consent the conductor of the train put her off on a very high fill, which she had to climb down and cross a creek to get back to the station, very much fatigued and worrying her in her delicate condition and greatly to her damage, in the sum of $2,000, for which she prayed judgment.

The answer of the defendant was in substance a denial of the failure of the train to stop at Elkin long enough for plaintiff to get off, and further denied that defendant put her off at all as charged; and, further, that after the train had passed the trestle the conductor notified plaintiff that he would back the train to the station, but that she declined the offer and got off the train, and walked back of her own free will.

The reply was in substance a traverse of the answer, and further alleged that plaintiff at the station was waiting for the conductor to return her change for a bill given to him to take out of it her fare.

A trial resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of plaintiff for $218, and, defendant's motion for a new trial having been overruled, it prosecutes this appeal.

The evidence conduces to prove that plaintiff was waiting for her change due her from a bill given to the conductor, out of which he was to take the fare due from her, and thus passed the Elkin station, and that she was thereby required to get off the train, and, in a delicate condition, walk 400 pards during a hot day, over a rough and rocky road.

It may be conceded that evidence was introduced conducing to disprove the claim of the plaintiff, yet it was the province of the jury to weigh the evidence and find accordingly, and, while it might be true that the verdict is greater than we might think it ought to have been, still we do not feel authorized to say that it was given under the influence of passion or prejudice, or that it is not supported by sufficient evidence. The court did not err in refusing to instruct the jury that they could only find nominal damages.

Judgment affirmed.

HUFF V. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed December 2, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Unlawfully detaining woman against her will—Upon the trial of appellant under an indictment for unlawfully detaining a woman against her will, with intent to have carnal knowledge with her, the evidence showed a detention within the meaning of the statute, and was sufficient to authorize a verdict of guilty.

H. C. Eversole for appellant.

W. S. Taylor for appellee.

Appeal from Laurel Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

The indictment charges the defendant with taking and detaining Diana Robinson, a woman, against her will, with intent to have carnal knowledge with her himself.

The testimony conduces to prove that the defendant, in company with a negro man, went in the nighttime to the residence of Mrs. Robinson, who is a widow living with her children, waked her, and falsely told her they were her nephews, Preston and Thomas Settles. One of the children let them in the house. The defendant informed her that they had been sent for her to come to the house of her brother-in-law to see her sick daughter. After she dressed she started along the street with the defendant to the house of her brother-in-law. After they had gone part of the way the defendant made an insulting proposal to her, which she rejected, and started to leave him.

The complainant tells what the defendant did, in language as follows, to wit: "He run against me in front, and jammed up against me, and jammed up against my side and back."

As a matter of fact, admitted to be so by defendant, no one had sent for complainant. It was a ruse of the defendant to get her away from her home that he might accomplish his desires. It was for the jury to determine whether or not the defendant was guilty of detaining the woman against her will, with intent to have carnal knowledge with her.

We are of opinion there was a detention in the meaning of the statute under which the indictment was found; besides, we think the facts authorized the verdict.

The judgment is affirmed.

MCGOODWIN V. CITY OF FRANKLIN, &C.

(Filed December 4, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Where the question of incurring an indebtedness by a city is submitted to the voters of the city the proposition does not carry unless two-thirds of all those voting at that election vote in favor of it. It is not sufficient that two-thirds of those voting upon the proposition vote in favor of it. The writer of this opinion, however, does not agree with the majority of the court in that conclusion, heretofore announced in other cases.

G. T. Finn for appellant.

Goodnight & Roark and L. B. Finn for appellees.

Appeal from Simpson Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

At the November election, 1896, there was submitted by proper ordinance to the voters of the city of Franklin the question of incurring an indebtedness of not exceeding $21,000, for the purpose of building and providing the city with a system of waterworks.

There were cast in favor of incurring the indebtedness 259 votes, and against it 28 votes. More than two-thirds of those who voted on the question of incurring the indebtedness voted in favor of it. There were more than 450 ballots cast at the election by qualified electors of the city of Franklin. They voted for presidential electors, etc. There were not two-thirds of those voting at the election who voted for the proposition to incur the indebtedness.

Under the decisions of this court, in the cases of Belknap, &c. v. City of Louisville, 18 KY. LAW REP., 313, and City of Owensboro, &c. v. Baker, &c., 18 KY. LAW REP., 324, it required two-thirds of those voting at the election to vote for the proposition to carry it. To follow the cases cited the required number of votes were not cast for the proposition to authorize the city to incur the indebtedness.

The writer of this opinion did not agree with the majority of the court in its conclusions in the cases referred to, as he then and now believes that, when two-thirds of those who vote on the proposition submitted vote for it, then it has received the assent of the number of votes required by the Constitution to carry it.

The constitutional provision does not attempt to regulate the election of officers, nor does it even refer to an election for that purpose, neither does it say that those who vote at an election for officers, but do not vote on the question of a municipality incurring an indebtedness shall be counted against the proposition.

It simply provides that before such an indebtedness can be incurred two-thirds of those who vote at the election "held for the purpose" must vote for the proposition. It is nowhere said in the section under discussion that the assent of two-thirds of the "electors" of the municipality, or two-thirds of those who may vote for candidates to fill offices, must be obtained before the indebtedness can be incurred.

If it was said the municipality could not incur the indebtedness "without the assent of two-thirds of the voters thereof," then the writer would understand that an elector's failure to vote was equivalent to voting against the proposition because the assent of two-thirds of the electors of the municipality would have to be obtained.

If it had said "without the assent of two-thirds of voters thereof voting at an election," the writer would still be of the opinion that when the word "election" was used it referred to the election on the proposition of incurring the indebtedness. To avoid the necessity of the courts determining the meaning of the word "election," as used, the constitutional convention, by adding immediately after the word "election" words as follows, "to be held for that purpose," so the language used in the Constitution is as follows, to wit: "Without the assent of two-thirds of the voters thereof voting at an election to be held for that purpose."

The writer has added his individual opinion, with the hope that on some occasion the court may reach a correct view of the constitutional provision in question.

For the reasons given the judgment is reversed, with direction to perpetuate the injunction.

HARRIS, &C. V. CALMES.

(Filed December 9, 1896.)

Mistake in deed—Rescission—In this action by the vendor to rescind a contract for the sale of land upon the ground that the vendee had not complied with his covenant to erect a residence and mill on the land conveyed, it being alleged and proved that such a covenant was omitted from the deed by mistake, the plaintiff was entitled to have the mistake corrected and to have the terms of the deed as thus amended complied with on the part of the grantee; or, in case of his refusal, to have the contract rescinded. And this is true although the grantee has sold the land, the purchaser having notice of the consideration and condition of the sale to his grantor.

J. B. White for appellants.

Samuel H. Patrick and G. W. Gourley for appellee.

Appeal from Lee Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Lewis.

In 1890 appellee Calmes executed to appellant Harris a deed as follows: "That the said party of the first part, in consideration of $100, in hand paid, * * * does hereby sell and convey to the party of the second part * * * the following-described property, viz: Two acres of land on the south side of Kentucky river in Lee county, for the purpose of erecting a residence and mill thereon, said land bounded as follows: * * * Also a free right to use water from the spring situated near the above-described tract of land; also the free right to pipe or trough water from any part of the farm now owned by the party of the first part, but not to obstruct any passway nor exhaust said Calmes supply of water, with a free right of way to and from above described tract of land. To have and to hold the same, with all the appurtenances thereon, unto the second party, * * * with covenant of general warranty, for the purposes herein named. * * * The said Calmes is to have refusal if said land is sold by said Harris."

Harris did not erect a residence or mill upon the tract of two acres, nor does he now claim the right or assert an intention to ever do so. On the contrary, he sold the land to appellant, James Durbin, at the advanced price of $200, who has a residence upon it, and he there retails brandy as a distiller.

Appellee, therefore, brought this action to rescind the contract, which the lower court adjudged is to be done upon terms that appellee repay the $100 and interest, be allowed as set-off rents, and also pay for valuable and lasting improvements.

Whether the language used in the deed amounts to or falls short of a covenant by Harris to erect on the land a residence and mill, it is manifest such was the intention of the parties; for, independent of the positive statement of appellee and admission by appellant Harris that he intended at the time of the purchase to do so, it is plainly stated in the deed the land was sold and conveyed and title warranted for such purposes. Besides, the unusual and valuable concession of not only the free use of water from the spring, but also the right to pipe water from any part of appellee's farm, together with the right of way in any direction to and from the two acres, show the parties had, when the deed was executed, in contemplation the erection by Harris of the residence and mill as part consideration for the sale.

We, therefore, think the statement in appellee's petition that an express covenant by Harris to erect the residence and mill was omitted by mistake is fully and satisfactorily established; and, being so, his right to have, in a court of equity, the mistake corrected and the terms of the deed, as thus amended, complied with on the part of Harris, or, in case of his refusal, rescission of the contract, is unquestionable. And as appellant Durbin does not deny he, at the time of his purchase, had notice of the consideration and condition of the sale and conveyance by Calmes to Harris, there is no intervening equity to prevent the rescission.

Judgment affirmed.

TURNER V. TOWN OF PEWEE VALLEY.

NOCK V. SAME.

(Filed December 10, 1896.)

1. Taxation—Void assessment—Provisions respecting the assesment of property must be followed with particularity, and it is essential to the validity of an assessment that it should be made by the proper officer.

2. Same—A town ordinance instructing the assessor in making assessments to adopt the list made by the county assessor for State and county taxation and assessments made pursuant thereto are void, no provision being made even for a report to the board of trustees for its approval, or for giving the taxpayer an opportunity to be heard and correct his list.

3. The assessment of poll tax against the appellants pursuant to the town ordinance was legal and valid, and they are liable for the payment of same.

4. Curative statutes—An act of the legislature seeking to cure the defects in the assessments is void as to the parties to these suits to enjoin the collection of the taxes, the act not being passed until after the suits were instituted.

5. The sheriff had no right to levy upon land and sell it for taxes until the personal property of the taxpayer was exhausted.

D. H. French for appellants.

Stone & Sudduth for appellee.

Appeal from Oldham Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge White.

These two cases, by agreement of parties, were heard together in the court below, and by agreement are to be heard together in this court.

They involve the same questions, and are alike in every particular except Nock seeks to enjoin the sale of his land and collection of taxes assessed for the year 1887 by the town of Pewee Valley, in Oldham county, and Turner seeks to enjoin the sale of his land and collection assessed against him for the years 1885-6-7 by the town of Pewee Valley.

Each of appellants' lands are situated in the corporate limits of the town of Pewee Valley, and each claimed that his land is exempt from taxation because it is land used for farming land and grazing purposes, and is not benefited by reason of the corporation, and that none of said land is laid off into lots and streets; and that said land being farm land, and, therefore, they claim that their land is not subject to town taxes.

Many material questions are raised by the pleading in this record, but we consider the vital question made is the charge that the assessment of the lands of appellants for taxation is void for said town, and we deem it to be unnecessary to decide many points raised in the pleading if the court should hold that the assessment of this land for taxation was void.

The land levied on of appellants is situated within the corporate limits of the town of Pewee Valley, and was about to be advertised and sold when appellants brought these actions, and obtained an injunction enjoining said town, its trustees and the sheriff from proceeding to advertise their lands and sell the same.

The board of trustees passed an ordinance in the year 1885 by which they claim that taxes were duly levied against the lands of all citizens, and a like ordinance was passed in the years 1886 and 1887, and the validity of the assessment made under these ordinances is the question in this case.

We quote so much of the ordinance as will be necessary to an understanding of the case: "Be it ordained by the board of trustees of the town of Pewee Valley, that an ad valorem tax of 20 cents on each one hundred dollars in value of the real estate situated in the town of Pewee Valley, Ky., liable for State taxation, be, and the same is hereby, levied. * * *

"Sec. 2. A poll tax of two dollars is hereby levied on each and every male inhabitant of said town over 21 years of age for the year 1885, for the purposes aforesaid.

"Sec. 3. For the purposes of the levy above provided the assessor is instructed to adopt the assessment list as made by the county assessor for State and county taxation for the year 1885, so far as it applies to persons and real estate within the limits of the town of Pewee Valley.

"Sec. 4. It shall be the duty of the assessor to furnish the sheriff of the county with tax bills, regularly made out, in accordance with the provision of the ordinance, on or before the 1st day of August, 1885.

"Sec. 5. The taxes levied and assessed, as aforesaid, shall be due and payable on and after August 10, 1885."

Under and by virtue of this ordinance the tax bills were levied on appellants' land, and an attempt to sell the same was made when enjoined. The ordinances made in 1886 and 1887 are an exact copy of the one made in 1885.

It is in proof, and not denied in the pleading, that the only assessment of appellants' property was made by taking a copy of the assessment made by the assessor of Oldham county for the years complained of, which list was given to the sheriff of Oldham county for collection, and the sheriff, with that authority alone, levied on the land of each appellant, and each has enjoined the town and its then trustees and the sheriff from selling their land.

We are compelled to hold that the pretended assessment of appellants' property in the mode and manner shown in these cases is void. Every tax is an involuntary charge on the taxpayer, although in some instances a community may desire and vote a tax on themselves, yet there are always some who object to being taxed, and as to those who do object it must be an involuntary charge.

The imposition of such involuntary charges of taxes on citizens is the exercise of sovereign power, and so closely is the exercise of that power guarded by constitutional provisions and by the adjudication of the courts that require a strict observance of the law under which such taxes are to be imposed. As said by Judge Cooley on Taxation: "The assessment being so important, provision respecting its preparation and contents ought to be observed with particularity. * * * The assessment must, therefore, be made by the proper officer or it will be void. * * * So the assessment will be void if the assessor commits the office of making it to a clerk." (Cooley on Taxation, pages 363-4.)

The board of trustees, by requiring the assessor of the town to adopt the assessment made by the assessor of Oldham county, not only prevented him from making an assessment himself, but required the assessor to procure an assessment made by one who was not a citizen of the town, and one who had no common interest with those who were expected to pay the tax. They failed to require even a report to the board for its approval, but directed the assessor to make out the list and give it to the sheriff for collection by these ordinances. No provision was made for the taxpayer to be heard, nor was he given any notice or opportunity to be heard and correct said list.

This question is not new to this court. Similar questions were decided in the case of Slaughter v. City of Louisville, 89 Ky., 112; Davidson v. Sterrett, 13 KY. LAW REP., 176.

But after these suits were instituted the appellees, in the year 1890, procured an act of the Kentucky legislature, seeking to cure the defects in the assessment complained of, but this court has repeatedly held that no legislature can affect the rights of parties litigant enacted after the institution of the suits, therefore, the curative act of the legislature, attempting to affect the parties to these suits, must be treated as a nullity so far as it relates to the rights of appellants at the time of bringing their suits. (Allison v. Railway Co., 9 Bush, 247.)

But the appellees contend that the injunction ought not to have been granted because each of the appellants were charged with poll tax of $2 against appellant Nock and $6 against appellant Turner, and that the assessment of the poll tax was in form and valid.

We can not concur in this contention, although the assessment of poll tax against appellants may have been all right and legal, but still that would not authorize the sheriff to levy on appellant's land; for by the General Statutes, which was in force at the time, the sheriff had no right to levy on land and sell it for taxes until the personal property of the taxpayer had been exhausted.

The proof in these cases show clearly that appellants had an abundance of personal property within the corporate limits of the town to satisfy these taxes against them. (General Statutes, chapter 92.)

The judgment is, therefore, reversed and cause remanded, with directions that the court perpetuate the injunction in each of said cases and for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

The court delivered the following extension of opinion January 15, 1897:

Appellees having petitioned for an extension of the opinion heretofore filed in this case, and for further opinion, we hold that the levy or assessment of poll tax against the appellants was legal and valid, and the appellants are liable to the payment of the same, and as held in the opinion their lands were not liable to sale for the payment of the poll tax until their personal property was exhaused, and all that was intended in the former judgment was to perpetuate the injunction as to the collection of the ad valorem taxes levied, and the sale of their lands for the poll taxes, and the petition is overruled.

CLARK V. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed December 19, 1896—Not to be reported.)

1. Indictment—An indictment under section 1166 of the Kentucky Statutes' which accuses defendant of the offense of "malicious cutting and wounding" is sufficient, it not being necessary in naming the offense to state that the cutting was "willful" or done "with intent to kill," those facts being stated in describing the circumstances constituting the offense.

2. Instructions to jury—In instructing the jury as to the punishment to be inflicted according to the degree of the offense of which defendant may be found guilty, it was sufficient to refer to the degrees of the offense as "malicious cutting and wounding" and "cutting and wounding in sudden heat and passion," the degrees of the offense being specifically defined in another instruction.

A. M. Baker for appellant.

W. S. Taylor for appellee.

Appeal from Fayette Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge DuRelle.

Appellant seeks a reversal of the judgment against him upon the ground that the indictment is insufficient, in that the introductory part accusing the defendant of a named offense does not sufficiently state the offense. The indictment is as follows: "The grand jury of Fayette county, in the name and by the authority of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, accuse John Clark of the crime of malicious cutting and wounding, committed as follows, viz: That said John Clark, on the 23d day of June, 1896, in the county aforesaid, did unlawfully, willfully and maliciously cut, wound, strike and stab one William Creighton with a knife or other sharp instrument, with the intent to kill said Creighton, but from which cutting, striking and wounding the said Creighton did not die, against the peace, etc."

The indictment is drawn under section 1166 of the Kentucky Statutes, which provides that "if any person shall willfully and maliciously cut, strike or stab another with a knife, sword or other deadly weapon, with intent to kill, if the person so stabbed, cut or bruised die not thereby, etc."

The objection to the indictment appears to be based on the fact that the introductory part does not accuse the offender of the crime of willful and malicious cutting and wounding with intent to kill.

It may be conceded that "it is the rule that all indictments upon statutes must state all the facts and circumstances which go to make up the offense as defined in the statute, so as to bring the defendant precisely within it" (Clark Cr. Pros., 259.) But in this case all the circumstances which go to make up the statutory offense have been stated in the body of the indictment, where it is charged that Clark did the cutting unlawfully, willfully and with intent to kill. At common law this would have been sufficient, without undertaking to state the name of the offense.

In the Shouse case, 95 Ky., 621, the indictment, in stating the offense charged under this same statute, did not describe the cutting as willful or malicious, and in "stating the particular circumstances of the offense charged," and "which were necessary to constitute a complete offense," it was not stated that the cutting was done with intent to kill; but this court held that "the positive and direct charge that the appellant cut Reffit having been once made, it was not necessary to repeat the same statement in giving the particular circumstances of the offense, for the Criminal Code expressly declares that the acts constituting the offense shall only be made in ordinary and concise language."

As in that case, so in the case at bar. We are of opinion that "the indictment charges a statutory offense." Moreover, we think that the phrase "malicious cutting" is a "brief, general description as given by law" within the meaning of section 123 of the Criminal Code.

It is objected further that in the fourth instruction, upon the punishment to be inflicted according to the degree of the offense of which the defendant may be found guilty, the grades of the offense are described as "malicious cutting and wounding," and "cutting and wounding in sudden heat and passion," and that the language used does not sufficiently describe the grades of the offense.

This instruction does not purport to describe the grades of the offense which are defined in the first instruction, but merely to fix the amount of punishment to be inflicted, according as the jury might find the accused guilty of the one or the other offense defined in the first instruction. For this purpose we think the grades of the offense are sufficiently stated to enable the jury to understand which of the grades defined in the first instruction is referred to.

The same response applies to the objection urged to instruction No. 5, which instructs the jury to give him the benefit of the doubt as to the grade of offense proven; and, if in doubt, to find him guilty of the lower degree.

Instruction "A," as to self-defense, was properly refused, the law of self-defense having been given in instruction No. 2.

Wherefore, the judgment is affirmed.

LAVELLE & CO. v. CLARK, &C.

(Filed December 16, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Fraudulent conveyance—Burden of proof—A conveyance to a father in trust for his daughter being attacked by a creditor of the father as fraudulent, the plaintiff alleging in his petition that the father paid the consideration, the relationship of the parties, with the title in the father as trustee and the purchase made after the creation of plaintiff's debt, are such circumstances of suspicion as place the burden on defendants to show the good faith of the transaction, the mere denial by defendants that the father paid the consideration not being sufficient to throw upon plaintiff the burden of establishing that fact, there being no recital in the deed as to who paid the money.

A. C. Rucker and C. B. Seymour for appellants.

Phelps & Thum and Alfred Selligman for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery division.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Pryor.

The appellant filed his petition in equity, and by proper averments sought to subject certain realty alleged to have been purchased by the appellee, Asa D. Clark, with his money, and the conveyance made by his direction to himself in trust for his co-appellee, who was his daughter.

It is further alleged that it was done for the fraudulent purpose of passing it beyond the reach of creditors, and particularly the plaintiff, whose debt existed when the property was purchased. The deed is filed with the petition, showing the amount of money paid, but by whom is not stated, and that the father held the title in trust for the daughter.

The answer of both defendants denies the money was paid by the father; denies the improvements placed on the realty were made by the father.

This transaction, if not between father and child, is made by the father for the daughter's benefit; that Clark, the debtor, paid $500 and executed his notes as trustee for the balance appears from the deed. Where the money came from, or that the daughter had any estate, is not made to appear. Good faith must be shown in such a transaction, and a mere denial in this class of conveyances is no answer to the charge of fraud.

There is no evidence on the part of either of the defendants, save the recitals in the deed, and the relation of father and child existing, with the title in the father as trustee, and the purchase made after the creation of plaintiff's debt, are such circumstances of suspicion as place the burden on the defendants to show the bona fides of the transaction.

The judgment is, therefore, reversed and remanded, with directions to allow the defendants, if they care to, to amend their pleadings and establish by proof the good faith of the transaction; if they fail to do so the property to be subjected to the plaintiff's debt. (Garnett v. Whittaker, 3 Bush, 402, and authorities cited.)

The Kentucky Law Reporter.

EDITOR:
WALTER G. CHAPMAN, ... Frankfort, Ky.

VOL. 18. APRIL 1, 1897. No. 19

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

EAST TENNESSEE TELEPHONE CO. v. SIMMS' ADM'R.

(Filed June 6, 1896.)

1. Death from electric shock—Negligence of telephone company—In this action against a telephone company to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's intestate, alleged to have resulted from the negligence of defendant, the court properly refused a peremptory instruction to find for defendant, there being testimony tending to show that the death resulted from negligence on the part of defendant in allowing a "dead wire" to hang in close proximity to an electric light wire, and also in so putting up its wire at the residence at which the accident occurred as that it could come in contact with trellis wires about the porch.

2. Under section 241 of the Constitution, which authorizes a recovery for death resulting from negligence, as well as under the statute enacted pursuant thereto, there may be a recovery although the person killed left neither widow nor child.

3. Willful neglect—The provision of the Constitution was to abrogate the further use of the words "willful neglect" in our law. The words "wrongful act" of the Constitution and "willful act" of the statute do not primarily refer to an act of negligence, which is the opposite of those terms.

In this case, although the petition alleges that the death of plaintiff's intestate, which occurred after the adoption of the new Constitution but before the enactment of the present statute, was caused by the "willful, gross and reckless negligence" of defendant, the suit is not for "willful neglect," the word "willful" being used manifestly as the synonym of "gross."

4. The word "gross," when used to qualify the word "negligence," is a relative one, and is supposed to emphasize merely the want of due care; and negligence is gross or ordinary according to the circumstances, relations and conditions under which due care is omitted to be exercised.

5. Compensatory damages were recoverable, and there was no error in the instruction authorizing such recovery.

6. Evidence—A letter from the secretary of the company, to the effect that the "dead wire" caused the death of plaintiff's intestate, was not competent as evidence, as the secretary was not the agent of the company for the purpose of making damaging admissions after the transaction occurred, and, besides, she had no personal knowledge of the facts.

J. Q. Ward for appellant.

Ward & Lafferty for appellee.

Appeal from Harrison Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hazelrigg.

The appellee, as administrator of Richard Simms, recovered judgment against the appellant for $7,000 in damages for the death of his intestate, which was caused, it is alleged, by the willful and gross negligence of the appellant and the electric light company.

Briefly stated, the facts are that in 1887 the appellant, then operating a telephone system at Cynthiana, put up a wire from its central office in that city to the residence of W. T. Handy, about one mile out. On December 13, 1892, this wire was still in use by Handy, or in condition for use, under his lease or contract with the company, though it appears he was away with his family in Florida, and his term of rental was out or about out. Simms, as a tenant, occupied two rooms in the rear of the Handy residence, and, for purposes of protection, overlooked the premises. At about 10 o'clock on the night of the 13th the family of Simms heard a noise in front of the residence, and, in company with his son and two nephews, he went around to the front porch with a lantern. They discovered the storm doors swaying back and forth, and, fastening them, they came down from the porch onto a pavement, when some sparks were seen on some trellis wires about the porch. Simms stepped off the pavement, saying: "What is that?" at the same time reaching out towards the wires. His nephew exclaimed: "Don't touch it." But at that instant Simms fell dead, and it is supposed that he had touched the wires with his outstretched hand, although there were no burns found on his hands or body. These wires had become charged with electricity from contact with the telephone wire leading from the box in the hall onto the porch, and thence to the ground; and the telephone wire had, in turn, become overcharged from contact with the electric light wire within the city. Just how this came about forms the chief ground of dispute in this record.

It appears that some two years prior to the night in question the telephone company had discontinued a wire theretofore rented to Victor & Whaley, and this wire had been taken down, save a few hundred feet which had been left on the poles. One end of this "dead wire" was connected with the Handy wire, and the other was fastened to a bracket on a pole of the Western Union Telegraph Co., also in use by the light company. This bracket became loose, and turned down, and the dead wire was left to sway and vibrate, sometimes touching the light wire. On the evening in question there was a heavy wind, and some rain, and at about 5 o'clock the bracket was so shifted that the two wires were brought in contact, the one perhaps resting on the other. The current of the electric plant had been turned on at about 4:30 o'clock that evening, and a disturbance was noticed at the central office of the telephone company between 5 and 6 o'clock, when the wire in the keyboard was burned. An investigation made at once seems to have located the cause of the disturbance on the Handy wire, but there the matter rested for the night.

The effort of the plaintiff was directed to showing negligence on the part of the telephone company in allowing its dead wire to hang for so long in close proximity to the light wire, and in so putting up the wire at the residence of Handy as that it could come in contact with the trellis wires then about the porch.

Without setting out the details of the proof it is sufficient to say that it conduced to show negligence in the particulars mentioned; and the court, therefore, properly overruled the appellant's motion for peremptory instructions upon the conclusion of the plaintiff's proof. Such a motion, however, was sustained for the light company.

The appellant attempted to show that it had kept up the usual inspection of its line, and had no reason to apprehend danger from the dead wire remaining on the poles; that the trellis wires were so placed by Handy, or others over whom it had no control, as that connection with its wire was made without its knowledge or consent; and, moreover, that the deceased was the subject of heart disease, and likely to die suddenly under undue excitement, and that he had probably died from natural causes, and not from an electric shock.

The jury found against these contentions, and we proceed to notice the errors of law complained of.

And, first, it is insisted that the petition was fatally defective, in that it failed to allege that the intestate left a wife or child. We are of opinion that this was not necessary. The Constitution, section 241, provides that "whenever the death of a person shall result from an injury inflicted by negligence or wrongful act, then, in every such case, damages may be recovered for such death from the corporations and persons so causing the same. Until otherwise provided by law the action to recover such damages shall in all cases be prosecuted by the personal representative of the deceased person. The general assembly may provide how the recovery shall go and to whom belong, and until such provision is made the same shall form part of the personal estate of the deceased person."

This section was in force when Simms lost his life, though the legislature had not then provided how the recovery should go or to whom it should belong. It was wholly immaterial, therefore, whether there was or not a widow or child.

It is true that under the old statute (General Statutes, chapter 57, section 3), providing for a recovery where death was caused by "willful neglect," it had been held more than once that no recovery could be had unless the deceased left a widow or child; but it seems probable, as held in Wright v. Wood's adm'r, 96 Ky., 56, that the constitutional provision had in view the correction of this supposed defect in the law, and gave a right of recovery to the personal representative in any event, leaving to the legislature the mere distribution of the recovery. And it is true that in Wright v. Woods, where the recovery had been effected in a suit under the old statute on "willful neglect," this court held that the distribution should be made under that statute, and to this extent the old statute was said to be still in force, or was until in July, 1893, when the present statute on the subject was adopted.

The provision of the Constitution (section 241) authorizes a recovery for death resulting from negligence, including all supposed degrees of it, and was intended to abrogate the further use of the words "willful neglect" in our law. The present statute follows the Constitution and nowhere uses those words, but does provide that if the "negligence" is gross, or the "wrongful act" by which death is caused is willful, punitive damages are recoverable.

The words "wrongful act" of the Constitution and "willful act" of the statute do not primarily refer to an act of negligence, which is the opposite of those terms. The word "gross," when used to qualify the word "negligence," is a relative one, and is supposed to emphasize merely the want of due care and negligence as "gross" or "ordinary," according to the circumstances, relations and conditions under which due care is omitted to be exercised.

In this case there appears to have been no intention of conforming the petition to the old statute. It is not a suit for "willful neglect," but recovery is sought for the death of the plaintiff's intestate, caused by the "willful, gross and reckless negligence" of the company, the word "willful" being used manifestly as the synonym of "gross." The demurrer to the petition was, therefore, properly overruled.

It follows from what we have already said that compensatory damages were recoverable in the action, and hence there was no error, as is insisted by counsel for appellant, in the instruction authorizing such recovery.

The case relied on of Railroad Co. v. Privitt's adm'r, 92 Ky., 223, was one under the old statute, and it was held that unless "willful neglect" was shown no recovery could be had. We perceive no error to appellant's prejudice in any of the instructions given.

The court, however, committed a serious error to the prejudice of the company in permitting the alleged letter of Mrs. Lake to Handy to be read as evidence. She was the secretary of the company, it is true, but she was not its agent in making damaging admissions after the transaction occurred in which Simms lost his life (Railroad Co. v. Ellis' adm'x, 17 KY. LAW REP., 259). The letter was to the effect that the dead wire caused Simms' death, and completely silenced the company's contention that Handy's trellis wires were placed in contact with the telephone wire without its knowledge, and thus caused his death, or contributed to it, or that his death was due to natural causes. Moreover, if otherwise competent, it must have been mere opinion, based on hearsay, as the writer had no personal knowledge of the facts, though the statement, coming from one connected with the company, had the force of an absolute admission, and one fatal to the company's defenses.

For the reason indicated the judgment is reversed for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

The court delivered the following response to a petition for rehearing December 19, 1896:

It was insisted at the original hearing by counsel for the appellant that unless "willful neglect" had been shown no recovery for even compensatory damages could be had; that it was a case for punitive damages or nothing.

This contention was based on the case of Cincinnati R. R. Co. v. Prewitt's adm'r, 92 Ky., 223, which we held in the opinion to have no bearing on the case at hand, and we said in answer to this contention that from our views of section 241 of the Constitution compensatory damages were recoverable in the action, and that an instruction so permitting was not erroneous. This was not intended as a restriction of the rights of the plaintiff to recover only compensatory damages, but to meet the contention of counsel that even such damages were not recoverable; nor do we think, as already indicated in the opinion, that the Constitution restricts the recovery to compensatory damages when at the common-law punitive damages were recoverable.

There are certain minor errors not expressly passed on by us in the opinion, and counsel desire these should be acted on. The first complaint is that appellee was permitted to prove by Whaley a conversation between him and Mrs. Lake, in which the latter said she wanted the witness to take down the dead wire, which, as she claimed, was a part of the line of Victor & Whaley, and witness declined because, he contended, it was not his business, etc.

If this conversation was after the death of Sims it clearly falls within the rule announced in the opinion as to the letter of Mrs. Lake and would be incompetent. If before, it would seem to be competent. The bill of evidence does not disclose when it was. The testimony of Handy that the line was overcharged with electricity on several occasions prior to the occurrence under investigation was competent as held below.

The proof of Berkley showing the custom of the best telephone companies in respect to manner of detecting defects and irregularities in their lines would have been competent if shown to be the best known method of such detection, and as the avowal for the witness seems to state this the court should admit it. It may be true that those not acquainted with this mysterious power or agency might think it a poor protection if defects were not to be discovered and corrected until after the damage had likely been done. This would only show the custom or rule a poor one, and does not argue against its admissibility as evidence.

MORTON, &C. V. HAMILTON COLLEGE.

(Filed December 10, 1896.)

1. Corporations - Liability upon contracts of projectors—Where the projectors of a contemplated corporation enter into a contract in its behalf, the corporation, when subsequently created, can not take the benefit of the contract without performing that part of it which the projectors undertook that it should perform.

2. Same—A subscriber to a college, the incorporation of which was contemplated, having been induced in making his subscription to stipulate that it should bear interest like other subscriptions, the consideration for such a stipulation being the execution of a bond by certain of the projectors of the company indemnifying him against the payment of interest, the obligors in that bond, having been required to pay the interest upon the subscription, have the right to look to the corporation, which was subsequently created, to reimburse them, the corporation which received the benefit of the money being estopped to deny its liability. While the correct rule is that a majority of the provisional agents or trustees must have induced those who signed the bond to assume the responsibility before the corporation can be made liable, yet as no objection was made in this case, and it is manifest that all were consenting to this mode of obtaining the subscription, the corporation is liable.

3. Actions—The action to enforce that liability should have been in equity, and upon the return of the case it should be transferred to that docket.

Webb & Farrell for appellants.

Beauchamp & Walton for appellee.

Appeal from Fayette Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Pryor.

This action was instituted by J. B. Morton and others against a corporation known and called Hamilton College. It is on an implied assumpsit on the part of the college to pay to the plaintiffs certain sums of money advanced by them as the promoters of what was then called Hocker College, with the name of the corporation changed to that of Hamilton College by a charter subsequently obtained.

The money, it is alleged, was advanced by the plaintiffs for the college, with the agreement and understanding that it was to be repaid to the plaintiffs when the corporation was brought to life by the charter.

We wish much the action had been in equity as the facts bring the case clearly within the jurisdiction of the chancellor, and, while the action of assumpsit upon an implied understanding is in the nature of an equitable claim, still where money has been advanced, as in this case, and gone into a trust fund to be applied in a particular way, the corpus of the trust should not be interfered with under an execution from a common-law court; and, besides, it is often difficult for the chancellor to raise an equity, although of the highest character, from a given state of facts, and much more difficult for a jury to do so in the absence of an express contract. This case, however, went off on an instruction to find for the defendants.

In the year 1876 J. M. Hocker owned Hocker College, in the city of Lexington, a college of much celebrity and patronized principally if not controlled by the members of the Christian Church. Hocker desired to sell the property, and the members of that church, wishing to place it under their control, entered into negotiations for its purchase, and Hocker agreed to let them have his property for $50,000, on certain terms and conditions. A committee was selected to raise the $50,000 by subscription, and succeeded in raising all but $10,000 or $15,000. At one of the meetings, where nearly all of those were present who were recognized, and made a board for the purpose of organizing the college and raising the fund, a man by the name of Hamilton was present, and agreed to subscribe $10,000 upon certain conditions. He was not willing to make the payment at the time and in the manner of the other subscriptions, and, to prevent the loss of the subscription proposed to be made by Hamilton, it was suggested that he be indemnified against the payment of interest, as was stipulated in the other subscriptions, and accordingly, as is alleged, the appellants gave to Hamilton a bond of indemnity, and he executed his notes, like those of the other subscribers, bearing interest, and, with additional subscriptions made perhaps on the same day the contract with Hocker was executed, and the property passed to the trustees, and a charter obtained by the president, with the name of the institution changed to that of Hamilton College.

Hamilton did not live long after this purchase, and these appellants were compelled to pay a difference of near $1,200 on account of their bond, all of which went into the fund raised to make the purchase. The bond was executed at the instance and persuasion of some of the trustees, and without objection by any, and when one or more of the appellants declined to sign the indemnity they were urged to do so upon the ground that, if they had the money to pay, such just and equitable claims could not be overlooked. They had each subscribed liberally to the enterprise, and, from the facts of the record, it was never intended or supposed by any one present that they were making a voluntary donation to the corporation of any sum they might have to pay by reason of the bond to Hamilton.

They derived no benefits other than those resulting to the subscribers of stock; had no interest in the property, but assumed a liability that was at the basis of the undertaking, and without which the purchase would not have been made.

There is no pretense or claim that the plaintiffs looked to the individual liability of the trustees for contribution, but, on the contrary, it is apparent that this money was regarded as a part of the trust fund with which the property was purchased, and those contributing to its payment could look to the corporation for remuneration. Some one was liable to them, and there is no controversy as to the payment of the money.

The trustees, or those acting as such, were inducing the plaintiffs to pay the money or assume the responsibility, that the corporation might be formed. They were acting at the time for the contemplated corporation. The institution obtained the money on the faith that it would be repaid, and the equity of the appellants should be enforced.

It is contended that a majority of the provisional agents or trustees must have induced the appellants to have assumed the responsibility before the corporation can be made liable, and while this may be and doubtless is the correct rule, here there was no objection made, and the inference is plain that all were consenting to the mode of obtaining Hamilton's subscription. No single member of a corporation can bind it to a contract unless authorized by the board of trustees, or those who have the right to contract in its behalf, but in this case the body, having the capacity to act, obtained this money and paid it on the purchase on the faith that it would be repaid or the parties saved harmless, and the corporation, to which its very payment gave life, will be estopped from saying this provisional body had no power to bind it.

In the case of Low v. Railroad, 45 N. H., 370, the court, in deciding a similar question, said: "In such cases it can avail nothing, by way of defense, to show that in fact the party had no capacity to make such an antecedent request or to bind himself by a contract, as in the case of a corporation, that it was not organized at all."

In 79 Penn. State Reports, 54, in the case of Bell's Gap R. R. Co. v. Cristy, it was said: "We do not desire to controvert the principle established in England, and to some extent recognized in this country, that when the projectors of a company enter into contracts in behalf of a body not existing at the time, but to be called into existence afterwards, then if the body for whom the projectors assumed to act does come into existence it can not take the benefit of the contract without performing that part of it which the projectors undertook that it should perform."

It is true that the corporation, after its organization, in nowise ratified the contract, for it had already received the benefits under the agreement with the projectors, and the money paid invested in the trust estate. If this had been a joint adventure between these projectors and the money or liability assumed by the plaintiffs as alleged, can it be well argued that the joint adventure or the trust fund would be exempt from liability? We think not; and the fact that these projectors obtained a charter and converted the institution into a corporation relieves it from all liability is an argument equally untenable.

This case was heard on the testimony of the plaintiffs alone, and when the case goes back it should be transferred to equity and the parties on each side allowed to take proof, and if the plaintiffs are entitled to relief the money should be required to be paid from the income of the corporation. The report of the committee to investigate the claim of the plaintiffs was properly rejected as evidence.

Reversed and remanded for proceedings in conformity to this opinion.

ROGERS, RECEIVER V. RAINS.

(Filed December 17, 1896.)

1. Conflict of laws—Agreement in note to pay "reasonable attorney's fee"—A stipulation in a note executed in another State to pay "a reasonable attorney's fee" in the event of litigation will not be enforced in this State, although enforcible in the State where the note was executed, as such agreements tend to oppress the debtor and to encourage litigation, and are, therefore, within the well-recognized exceptions to the general rule of comity giving effect to contracts beyond the limits of the State where made.

2. Building associations—Upon premature dissolution of a building association the advanced members may be compelled to pay forthwith the balances due from them on their securities, although the latter be given in terms only for the payment of installments.

3. Same—In winding up an insolvent building association borrowing members are not entitled to have deducted from their indebtedness to the association payments made by them as dues on stock, but must, after deducting payments of premium and interest, discharge in cash the balance remaining upon their indebtedness. Payments upon stock must stand to their credit on the books of the corporation until time for final adjustment, when all the stockholders, borrowers and nonborrowers, will be paid pro rata from the fund for ultimate distribution.

Jesse L. Rogers for appellant.

H. P. Cooper for appellee.

Appeal from Marion Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge DuRelle.

The New South Building & Loan Association was a Tennessee corporation, having its place of business at Cumberland Gap, Tennessee. In October, 1891, the appellant was, by the chancery court of Claiborne county, Tennesee, appointed receiver of the business and property of the company and qualified as such. By decree in the cause, in which appellant was appointed, entered in March, 1892, the corporation was dissolved upon the ground that it was insolvent, and its business was directed to be wound up and settled. It appears that all stockholders in the company were either parties plaintiff or defendant in the cause.

The appellant thereupon instituted suit upon a note executed by appellee to the company which came into his hands among the assets of the corporation, dated June 1, 1890, for $1,000, with 5 per cent. interest and 5 per cent. premiums per annum, and payable on or before 7 years from date, with a proviso precipitating the maturity of the principal upon default for six months in payment of interest or premium.

The note was secured by mortgage of appellee's land in Marion county, and by pledge of stock held by him in the company. The mortgage provided further for the payment of a reasonable attorney's fee in the event the indebtedness should be collected by suit. The appellee had subscribed May 1, 1890, for fourteen shares of the stock of the company, the subscription being for monthly payments of eighty cents per share until the stock should be paid up and matured, and on the maturity of the stock, which it was estimated would occur in about seven years, the shareholder, who was a borrower, would be entitled to have the amount of his loan deducted from the face value of the stock, and be paid the difference in cash. Appellee had paid dues on his stock up to June 16, 1891, and interest and premium on his loan to the same date. The petition sought the recovery of the $1,000, subject to credits by the amounts paid as interest and premium on the loan, and of an attorney's fee of 10 per cent. on the amount due.

By amended petition it was averred that the company was a Tennessee corporation, having its principal place of business in that State; that the note was payable there—the note and mortgage were there delivered and accepted—and that the laws of that State allowed the collection of an attorney's fee when contracted for. Appellee pleaded a set-off of the value of certain paid-up stock held by him, mistake in the drawing of the mortgage, and that the contract entered into by him was that the note was to be paid by the maturing of the stock and in no other way, and prayed that the note be credited by the dues paid on his stock, as well as the interest and premium, and for damages for breach of contract.

By an agreement filed in the cause, it is established that the note and mortgage were executed at Lebanon, Kentucky, but the note was payable in Tennessee; that the laws of Tennessee authorize and enforce contracts for the payment of reasonable attorney's fees in such cases; that appellee subscribed for his stock for the sole purpose of securing a loan of $1,000 from the company, and having secured it executed the note and mortgage sued on; that at the time he secured the loan it was estimated that his stock would mature and be worth par in seven years, at which time the company would owe him $1,400 on his stock, which would cancel his loan and entitle him to $400 in cash, and that he contracted to pay $11.20 per month on his stock, and the interest and premium on his loan until his payments, with the profits of the company, should make his stock worth par, whether this was for a longer or shorter period than seven years; that he "had a right to retain the loan until the same was canceled by the said monthy payments and profits of the association;" that the dues payable on the stock were $11.20 per month, and the interest and premium were $8.34 per month. The amount of payments by appellee on each account was agreed, and that he had not been in default in payment for a period of six months before either the insolvency of the association or the appointment of the receiver, but had been in default for more than six months at the time of the decree of dissolution, and that he ceased payment because he believed in July, 1891, that the association was insolvent and was misappropriating the funds.

The circuit court decreed a reformation of the note and mortgage as prayed in the answer. This is immaterial, as there seems to be a general concensus of authority "that upon premature dissolution of the association the advanced members may be compelled to pay forthwith the balances due from them on their securities, although the latter be given in terms only for the payment of installments." (Endlick on Building Associations, second edition, section 523.)

The circuit court gave judgment foreclosing the mortgage, allowing credits on the note not only for the amount paid as interest and premiums, but also for the amounts paid as dues on the stock. The judgment denied the attorney's fees prayed by appellant.

Although appellee prayed a cross appeal, he appears in this court asking an affirmance. The appeal, therefore, presents but two questions for decision. First, whether the contract for attorney's fee, which was valid according to the laws of the State where contract was by its terms to be performed, is enforcible in this State. This question has been recently decided by this court in the negative.

It was held in the case of Clark v. Tanner, decided December 9, 1896, that the general rule of comity giving effect to contracts beyond the limits of the State where made does not embrace contracts like the one in question. Such contracts come within recognized exceptions to the general doctrine. Those exceptions, as said by Justice Martin in Whitson v. Stodder, 8 Mart. (La.), 95, apply to cases in which the contract is immoral or unjust, or in which the enforcing of it in a State would be injurious to the rights, the interest or convenience of such State or its citizens." And as said by this court in Witherspoon v. Musselman, 14 Bush, 214, of such contracts for the payment of attorney's fees, "they are agreements to pay penalties, tend to oppression of the debtor and to encourage litigation." There was, therefore, no error by the lower court upon this point.

The second question is whether the sums paid as dues on stock subscriptions are proper credits upon the mortgage debt, or whether those payments should stand to his credit until time for final settlement, when all shareholders, borrowers, as well as nonborrowers, will be paid pro rata from the fund for distribution, it being conceded that the payments of interest and premium were properly credited upon the debt.

Mr. Endlick, in his work on Building Associations, in the latter part of section 523 (second edition) thus states the doctrine contended for by appellee: "In one class of decisions it has been declared that the borrower is to be charged only with the amount he has actually received, with legal interest, and credited with all his payments upon stock and interest upon the principle of partial payments."

Quite a number of authorities sustain this view, but on this question we concur with the courts of Pennsylvania and Tennessee, and Mr. Endlick, in summing up the effect of the authorities, in section 531, concurs in the reasoning of those courts, while he contends for a qualified application of it. He says (page 530): "It must be true, therefore, that the basis of the borrower's indebtedness is to be taken to be the amount of money actually passing into his hands, with legal interest thereon. But it can not be true that he is to be allowed as deductions therefrom all that he has paid into the society. That would be overlooking his duty as a member to contribute to the losses and expenses of the common enterprise. What he has paid as interest is to be allowed him as paid upon interest. If he has paid interest upon the premium bid by him he has overpaid his interest, and the excess ought to go in reduction of his debt; and upon it he is entitled (by reason of his right to apply, if he chooses, his stock payments to the reduction of his debt) to a further credit for whatever his shares are worth, i. e., for his proportion of the assets of the association at the same rate per share as the shares of unadvanced members. The balance remaining upon his indebtedness he is bound to discharge in cash."

Mr. Endlick then goes on to argue that the value of the stock of such an association, when in the hands of a receiver, under the supervision and control of a court of equity, can be readily ascertained, or at least approximated, and the advanced shareholder given the benefit immediately, by way of credit on his debt, of a part at least of the value of his stock, an estimated proportion thereof being reserved to cover losses and expense of liquidation, and the surplus, if any, remaining to be paid him on final distribution. But we apprehend that the procedure suggested by Mr. Endlick, and which does not appear to have been approved by the courts, would prove dangerous in actual practice. Over sanguine receivers would put too high an estimate upon the value of the association's assets, and too low an estimate on the probable losses and expenses, with the result of a loss to the unadvanced members and a proportionate gain to the advanced members. Moreover, it would be extremely difficult of application, in a case like the one at bar, where the member's debt is collected through the forums of a different sovereignty from that under which the receiver was appointed.

We are of opinion that the true rule is laid down in the case of Rogers v. Hargo, decided by the Supreme Court of Tennessee, in considering a question arising out of the same receivership involved in this case. The court in that case (92 Tenn., 38) quoted as follows from Stroken v. Franklin Saving Fund and Loan Association, 8 Atlantic Rep., 843, decided by the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania in 1887: "The insolvency of the company, as before observed, puts an end to its operations as a building association. To a certain extent it also ends the contract between it and its members respectively, and nothing remains but to wind it up in such a manner as to do equity to creditors and between the members themselves. As regards the latter, care should be taken to adjust the burdens equally and not to throw upon either borrower or nonborrower more than their respective share. That result may be reached by requiring the borrower to repay what he actually received, with interest. He would then be entitled, after the debts of the corporation are paid, to a pro rata dividend with the nonborrower for what he had paid on his stock. He will thus be obliged to bear his proper share of losses. To allow him to credit upon his mortgage his payments on his stock would enable him to escape responsibility for his share of the losses, and throw them wholly upon the nonborrower. In other words, the borrower would escape without loss. It will not do to administer the affairs of an insolvent corporation in this manner."

The Tennessee court, in commenting upon the opinion quoted, said: "The reasoning of the court, as there given, fully indicated the conclusion reached. To our minds it seems unanswerable. Without further discussion or elaboration we are content to adopt and follow the decision of the Pennsylvania court. Charge defendant with money actually received by him, treating same as due and drawing interest from time received, and credit him thereon by payments of interest and premium when made. Ascertain balance due, making calculation upon the principle of partial payments, and give recovery for such balance. Let amount paid by defendant as dues on stock stand to his credit on the books of the corporation until time for final adjustment, when he and all other stockholders, borrowers and nonborrowers will be paid pro rata from the fund for ultimate distribution. Thus the loss will be apportioned equally." In this conclusion we fully concur.

Wherefore, the judgment is affirmed on the cross appeal and reversed on the original appeal, with directions to enter a judgment in accordance with the principles of this opinion.

STRUSS V. JOHNSON.

(Filed December 19, 1896.)

Elections—Disposition of questioned ballots—The provision of section 1482 of the Kentucky Statutes requiring that doubtful or questioned ballots shall be sealed up and returned to the clerk of the county court with a statement as to whether or not they have been counted, and, if counted, how counted, is mandatory and not directory merely, and where such ballots are returned unsealed and without the required statement, they are not admissible as evidence in a contest of the election.

Walter Evans, George DuRelle, Wm. Kreiger, Fairleigh & Straus and W. O. Harris for appellant.

Kohn, Baird & Spindle and P. B. & Upton W. Muir for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

The appellant, H. C. Struss, and the appellee, William P. Johnson, were candidates for the office of clerk of the Jefferson County Court at the November election, 1894. Johnson's majority was 210, as appeared from the returns of the election officers of the various precincts.

Struss instituted this contest, and claims there were enough legal ballots cast for him, which were not counted by the election officers, to elect him. There were several hundred ballots placed loosely or unsealed, and without endorsement on the ballots or otherwise, in the ballot boxes by the election officers. When they completed the count in their respective precincts, the ballot boxes were locked and delivered to the clerk of the Jefferson County Court. There were other ballots, properly sealed and endorsed by the election officers, which were also placed in the ballot boxes and returned to the clerk of the county court.

There were not enough of the latter class of ballots returned to overcome the majority which had been returned for Johnson. The contestant introduced an election officer or an inspector at the precincts from which the loose or unsealed and unendorsed ballots were returned to prove they were not counted by the election officers.

The question to be determined is as to whether the ballots should have been counted which were placed unsealed in the ballot boxes, unaccompanied by a true statement by the officers of election as to whether they had or had not been counted; and, if counted, what part and for whom. A solution of this question depends upon a proper interpretation of the election law.

Section 1482 of the Kentucky Statutes provides: "When the polls are closed the officers of election shall, in the voting room, immediately count the votes and certify the same as hereinafter provided; and no adjournment shall be had until the same is completed. When the result of the ballot is ascertained it shall be immediately announced by one of the judges in front of the voting room, and thereupon the judges shall, in the presence of the clerk, sheriff and the inspectors, provided for in the preceding section, destroy the ballots voted, mutilated or spoiled and the ballots remaining unvoted: Provided, That if there are any ballots cast and counted, or left uncounted, concerning the legality or regularity of which there is any doubt or difference of opinion in the minds of the judges of election, said ballots shall not be destroyed, but sealed up and returned to the clerk of the county court, with the returns of the election, for such judicial or other investigation as may be necessary, with a true statement as to whether they have or have not been counted; and, if counted, what part and for whom "

And section 1483 provides: "The form of the return to be made on the inside of the cover of the stub-book shall be substantially as follows: State of Kentucky, ——— county, election held on the ——— day of ———, eighteen ———, in ——— precinct. Number of ballots counted as valid, ———; number of ballots questioned or rejected, ———; number of ballots marked 'spoiled,' ———; whole number of ballots cast, ——; number of votes received for governor, —— by ——; number of votes received for lieutenant-governor, —— by —— (and so for other State and county offices); number of votes on question of ——, voted yes, ——; voted no, ——.

"We, the judges, sheriff and clerk of election at the precinct above mentioned, certify that the above is a correct return of the election held therein on the day aforesaid.

"————, Judge,
"————, Judge,
"———— ————, Clerk,
"————, Sheriff."

Until the adoption of the present Constitution there was no law in this State providing for an official and secret ballot. The legislation which followed the adoption of the Constitution prescribed the kind of ballots to be used, and surrounded the elector with such safeguards as the wisdom of the general assembly could devise to render it impossible for any one to know for whom he had cast his ballot. The purpose was to place him beyond the control or influence of any one, that he might vote without the fear of social or political ostracism or of suffering loss in his business, profession or calling.

The general assembly also had under consideration the best method of conducting and ascertaining the result of the election. It knew that frauds frequently followed the casting of the ballots, and by that means the result of the election was often changed. The question arose as to what were the best means to be employed to prevent the perpetration of frauds after the ballots had been cast.

By the provisions of section 1482, when the polls close, the officers of election shall, in the voting room, immediately count the votes, and certify the same as provided in section 1483, and this shall be done before an adjournment takes place. There must be a public announcement made by one of the judges of the result as ascertained. When this is done the judges, in the presence of the clerk, sheriff and the inspectors, shall destroy the ballots voted, mutilated or spoiled, and the ballots remaining unvoted.

If there are any ballots cast and counted, or left uncounted, concerning the legality or regularity of which there is any doubt or difference of opinion in the minds of the judges of election, such ballots shall not be destroyed, but be sealed up and returned to the clerk of the county court with the returns of the election, for such judicial or other investigation as might be necessary, but they should be accompanied with "a true statement as to whether they have or have not been counted; and, if counted, what part and for whom."

The law authorizes political parties to be represented by inspectors at the count made by the officers of election.

As great authority had been vested in the officers of election the law-making power deemed it wise that they should immediately ascertain, certify and publicly declare the result of the election.

The law provides that the ballots which were cast (except those heretofore mentioned) should be destroyed. The general assembly did not believe it was wise to preserve them, as had been theretofore done under the law, because they were admissible as evidence to affect the returns of the officers of election. It did not intend that they should be used as evidence, as it was possible for the ballots to be changed in the box after the election, and thus, in some instances, overturn the result of the election as certified by the officers. The law requires that the ballots remaining unvoted should be destroyed because it removed the possibility of any one using them for the purpose of stuffing a ballot box or substituting them for those which the law required should be returned sealed, etc., to the county court clerk.

The general assembly deemed it proper to preserve, for judicial or other investigation, the ballots cast and counted or left uncounted, concerning the legality or regularity of which there was any doubt or difference of opinion in the minds of the judges of election. It knew if these ballots were preserved in the manner in which they had been preserved under the laws of this and other States that a possibility still existed for the fraudulent substitution of ballots, and thus impeach the returns of the officers of election. It, therefore, provided the method for preserving, certifying and returning them, which rendered the successful substitution of ballots therefor almost if not entirely impossible.

If we hold that the ballots which the officers of election placed unsealed in the ballot boxes, and without the statement from the officers of election, which the law requires, as to whether they have or have not been counted; and, if counted, what part and for whom, then we render possible the evil of the fraudulent substitution of ballots which the general assembly manifestly attempted to guard against by providing for the destruction of all ballots which were cast or spoiled or unvoted. It is just as easy to make such fraudulent substitution when the class of ballots in question are returned in the manner in which they were in this case as it would be were all the ballots which were cast preserved and returned.

Without the statement required by the statute there is no official evidence or certificate to show whether the ballots have or have not been counted.

We held in Houston v. Steele, 17 KY. LAW REP., 1149, in effect, when the questioned or doubtful ballots were sealed up and returned as the law provides, the word "returns," as used in the statute, includes the undestroyed ballots.

To hold that that part of the statute requiring the sealing up of the doubtful or questioned ballots, and a statement of the officers of election as to whether they have been counted, etc., is directory, we sweep away the safeguard which the law places around the returns of the officers of election. To hold it is mandatory, in the particular indicated, we follow the manifest purpose of the law-making power, which was to prescribe how doubtful or questioned ballots should be preserved and returned for "such judicial or other investigation as may be necessary."

To render the doubtful or questioned ballots admissible as evidence in a judicial or other investigation, we are of the opinion that they must be sealed and returned with the statement of the officers of election, as required by the statute.

This view is nowise in conflict with the case of Broaddus v. Mason, 95 Ky., 421. There was no question in that case as to the extent ballots were admissible as evidence but the question was as to the competency of parol evidence to show the officers of the election had made a mistake in adding the votes together after they had been counted. In that case the mistake was shown by the tally sheet and corroborated by the officers of election.

The conclusion which we have reached renders it unnecessary to consider other questions raised by appellant and appellee. It would be unprofitable to review the many authorities cited by counsel because, in our opinion, the policy of admitting ballots as evidence to impeach or change the returns of the officers of election has been reversed by the law-making power, and when it provided for the preservation of a particular class of ballots—a small number compared to the entire number cast—it prescribed a statutory rule to regulate the admission of such ballots as evidence.

Judgment affirmed.

Judge Guffy dissenting, and Judge DuRelle not sitting.

Judge Guffy delivered the following dissenting opinion January 19, 1897:

It seems to me that the majority opinion of the court in this case is erroneous, and if adhered to will enable election officers to disfranchise many voters, and incidentally deprive persons of office to which they would in law and equity be entitled.

Section 1482 of the Kentucky Statutes, after providing for the counting, certifying, etc., of the result of the election, provides that ballots voted, spoiled, mutilated, and those not voted shall be destroyed; provides that if there are any ballots cast and counted or left uncounted, concerning the legality or regularity of which there is any doubt or difference of opinion in the minds of the judges of election, such ballots shall not be destroyed but be sealed up and returned to the clerk of the county court, with the returns of the election, for such judicial or other investigation as may be necessary, with a true statement as to whether they have or have not been counted, and if counted what part and for whom.

In this case it is clear that a large number of ballots were returned in the ballot boxes, some from one precinct and some from another, but without the statement required by law as to whether they had been counted or not; in fact without any statement at all. The majority opinion holds that such ballots can not be examined nor proof heard to show that they were not counted.

Manifestly it was the intent of our law makers to better secure honest and fair elections by the adoption of the present ballot law, but if the opinion in this case is to be settled law then the voters as well as the candidates are at the mercy of election officers, who, either through ignorance, carelessness or perversity, may neglect to make out the required statement as to ballots that one or more judges doubt.

If, as is claimed in this case, none of these returned ballots had been counted, it is not remarkable that the statement was omitted, because to those not versed in law the statement would seem to be unnecessary, and we are, as I think, bound to take notice of the fact that very many election officers are not at all versed in the law and not able to see and comprehend the meaning and importance of all the statutes regarding elections. I doubt if there is a full and strict compliance with the election laws in half the precincts of the State at any election.

It seems to me that there can be no law nor tenable construction of law that can or ought to disfranchise a voter who has in a legal manner cast his ballot. When the voter in the manner prescribed by law has cast his ballot he has nothing else to do. In fact can do nothing else towards seeing that it is counted or certified, and to allow his vote to be rejected or lost by reason of the omission of election officers to comply with the statutes seems to me to strike at the very foundation of our form of government.

Indeed section 1471 of Kentucky Statutes provides that no ballot shall be rejected for any technical error which does not make it impossible to determine the voter's choice. The section supra may be said to directly apply to the officers of election who are to count the ballots at the close of the polls, but it seems to me there can be no good reason why it should not apply in all cases.

As before remarked it is believed that the object of the law-making power in the adoption of our present system of voting was to more effectually protect the voter and prevent fraud of all kinds, and that there was no intention to adopt any new rule as to the right of all voters to have their votes counted if legally cast, and that whenever that fact could be ascertained the vote should be counted, although the officers of election might have omitted to comply with the requirements of the law enacted for the purpose of evidencing how a voter had voted.

I think that the decision in this case is in conflict with the principles announced by this court in many decisions in election cases. In Clark v. McKenzie, 7 Bush, 530, it appeared that a leaf or page of paper not fastened to the poll-book had thirty-four votes recorded on it but the clerk had not signed his name at the bottom of the page as was then required by statute, and the county canvassing board refused to count the votes. Clark brought suit in the circuit court to compel the board to count the thirty-four votes, which suit was dismissed by the court below, and on appeal this court held that the mandamus should issue, and in discussing the question quotes with approval the following from the opinion of Judge Breese of the Supreme Court of Illinois, delivered in an election case: "The question in all such cases should be, whom did the majority of the qualified voters elect? Form should be made subservient to this inquiry, and should not rule in opposition to substance.

"A literal compliance with prescribed forms is not required in any case if the spirit of the law has not been violated, and in all cases the intention of the voters clearly ascertained should govern."

The foregoing principles have, so far as I am advised, never been departed from by this court prior to the rendition of the opinion in this case, and the provisions of section 1471 supra is a statutory endorsement of the doctrine announced in the case of Clark v. McKenzie supra. There is nothing in section 1482 that prohibits a judicial decision respecting the validity of returned ballots unless the required statement is also filed with them. The statutory requirement is but one of the means by which certain facts are proven, established or shown, just as the court said with reference to the clerk's signature to the bottom of each page of the poll-book. The required statement adds nothing to the validity of the ballots, but is only evidence as to whether any of them have been counted, and if so which and for whom, but if that evidence be not furnished by the officers it does not seem to me that if such evidence to establish these facts can be produced that law and justice requires that it shall be heard and considered.

Suppose that the officers should neglect to make out any certificate showing the number of ballots cast and counted, and returned the books and all the ballots, would it be contended that all the voters at such precincts should be disfranchised and some one given an office, when in fact the ballots showed another person had been in fact elected? Surely not.

I think in such a case that if it clearly appeared that the ballots so returned were the true legal ballots cast at the election any court would be bound to count them.

In Broaddus v. Mason, 95 Ky., 421, it was held by this court that the certificate of the precinct officers of election as to the number of votes cast for a candidate might be shown to be the result of a mistake, and then so corrected as to give the office to one who, according to the certificate as returned, was defeated, and that decision is evidently right, and it being lawful to show what the real facts were, although to do so contradicted the returns of the officers, it seems to me that where the officers had failed to certify as to a fact required, that proof as to such facts should be heard in order that the truth should be known and the man really elected get the office. If the official certificate can be contradicted by parol proof to the end that the will of the voter should prevail, surely in the absence of any certificate evidence should be heard so that the voter should not be disfranchised, and persons inducted into office to which they had not been elected.

The court in the opinion in the last-named case said: "It may be difficult, on account of ballots being destroyed, in many cases to determine whether officers of the election have miscounted them, and thereby make a false return, yet it is well settled that in order to ascertain the fact, not who was returned elected, but who was in fact elected, parol evidence is admissible." (McCreary on Elections, section 468.)

In McLaughlin v. Wheeler, lately decided by this court, the principle announced in the above-named case was adhered to. It appeared in the last-named case that the officers in a certain precinct certified to only nineteen votes for Wheeler, which resulted in McLaughlin obtaining the certificate of election. Upon a contest instituted by Wheeler he was allowed to prove that in fact he received one hundred and nineteen votes, thus contradicting the certificate, and thereby obtaining the office in the court below, and this court affirmed that judgment.

Suppose that the returned ballots in question had been sealed up and a statement signed by all the officers of election that none of them had been counted, would not the court hear proof to show that in fact all of them had been counted? It seems unreasonable to me to hold that the required statement of the officers is the only proof that can be heard as to returned ballots.

The same section which requires the statement aforesaid to accompany the questioned ballots returned requires the officers to immediately count and certify the result, and announce the same without adjournment, yet I presume that a failure to do any or all of these without adjournment would not result in the exclusion of the votes so cast. I do not assume that the evidence in this case would have given the office to the appellant, as I do not know what evidence was embraced in the record, because it was held that such evidence could not be read or considered.

I regret to differ from my associates, but the doctrine announced in the majority opinion seems to me to be fraught with so much danger to the voters and candidates that I have felt it my imperative duty to file this, my dissenting opinion, in the case. (Anderson v. Winfree, 85 Ky., 597; Houston v. Steele, 17 KY. LAW REP., 1149.)

STATEN V. STATEN, &C.

(Filed December 19, 1896—Not to be reported.)

James H. Polsgrove for appellant.

Frank Chinn and Ira Julian for appellees.

Appeal from Franklin Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Pryor.

In this case we perceive no error to the prejudice of the appellant, but, on the contrary, the judgment is for the infant's benefit.
Judgment affirmed.

COMMONWEALTH V. EQUITABLE LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY OF THE UNITED STATES.

(Filed January 6, 1897.)

Limitation of penal action—To a penal action by the Commonwealth to recover the penalty prescribed by section 656 of the Kentucky Statutes against life insurance companies and their agents for making discrimination in rates or for allowing rebates of premiums the limitation of one year, prescribed by section 1138 of the Kentucky Statutes, applies, and not the limitation of five years, prescribed by section 2515, the latter section applying to civil actions where damages in the nature of a penalty are annexed.

E. L. Worthington and Wm. J. Hendrick for appellant.

Richards, Baskin & Ronald for appellee.

Appeal from Mason Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Burnam.

This action was instituted in the Mason Circuit Court by the Commonwealth of Kentucky against the Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States, a corporation having its main office in New York, and which, as appears from the petition herein, has been duly authorized to do business as a life insurance company in this Commonwealth, to recover a fine from said defendants for a violation of the provisions of section 656 of the Kentucky Statutes, relating to a rebate of premium payable on a policy issued by them. The allegation of said petition is that "said company did, on the ——— day of February, 1894, by its duly authorized agent, J. D. Rummons, contract with one Yagell to insure his life for the sum of $5,000; in consideration of his agreement to pay an annual premium of $146, and to issue him a policy to that effect, and, in order to induce the said Yagell to agree to take out said policy with it, the said company, by its agent, agreed with said Yagell, prior to issual thereof, that when he paid the first installment premium of $146 it would pay back to him as a rebate the sum of $16; and that the said Yagell under said agreement took out said policy and paid the first installment premium of $146, and that said defendant, pursuant to its agreement made by its agent, gave back to the said Yagell the said sum of $16 as a rebate; and that said rebate was not expressed or provided for in the policy contract of insurance.

This petition was filed in the Mason Circuit Court on the 20th day of May, 1895, about fifteen months after the alleged cause of action accrued. A demurrer was filed by defendant to the petition of plaintiff, and same was sustained, and a judgment entered dismissing said petition, and from this order of dismissal this appeal is taken.

The only question presented by the demurrer aforesaid is whether said action, at the date of its institution, was barred by the statute of limitation in such action made and provided.

It is contended by appellant's counsel that the limitation provided by section 2515 of the Kentucky Satutes, which is fixed at five years, applies to actions brought under section 656 of the Kentucky Statutes, and in support of his contention he makes a very ingenious argument. On the other hand it is contended by appellee that the limitation upon actions under this section is fixed by the provisions of section 1138, and expires in one year from the date of their violation.

In our opinion these sections of the Kentucky Statutes are intended to relate to two entirely different classes of actions, and are in no sense repugnant to each other, although they both apply to actions to recover penalties.

Section 2515 is found in chapter 80, the chapter which is entirely devoted to fixing limitations upon all classes of civil actions, whilst section 1138 is found in chapter 36, which is entirely devoted to the subject of crimes and their punishment.

This is certainly a penal action, brought to recover the penalty for the violation of a penal statute, which is imposed as a punishment for a public offense; and, in our opinion, the limitation upon same is one year from the date when said cause of action accrued.

Section 2515 was intended to apply to civil actions where damages in the nature of a penalty are annexed.

The distinction between these two sections was pointed out by this court in the case of Boyd v. Commonwealth, 91 Ky., 480.

The judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

COMMONWEALTH V. RUMMONS.

(Filed January 6, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Limitation of penal actions—Judgment affirmed for reasons given in Commonwealth v. Equitable Life Assurance Society of United States, reported above.

E. L. Worthington and Wm. J. Hendrick for appellant.

Richards, Baskin & Ronald for appellee.

Appeal from Mason Circuit Court,

Opinion of the court by Judge Burnam.

This action was instituted in the Mason Circuit Court by the Commonwealth of Kentucky against the defendant to recover a fine for an alleged violation of the provisions of section 656 of the Kentucky Statutes, relating to the rebate of premiums payable on a policy of insurance contracted for by him as the agent of the Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States. It appears from the petition that the action was instituted about fifteen months after the date of the alleged offense.

A demurrer was filed by the defendant to said petition, and same was sustained, and said petition was dismissed, and to reverse this order of dismissal this appeal is prosecuted. The sole question raised by the demurrer is whether said action at the date of its institution was barred by the lapse of time and the statute of limitation in such actions made and provided.

On the same day, and to recover a fine for identically the same offense, an action was instituted by the Commonwealth against the Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States (supra, 778), the company which this defendant is alleged to have represented in making said alleged rebate. That case has been decided this day by this court, and the judgment of the lower court affirmed, and for the same reasons therein given.

The judgment in this case is also affirmed.

COMMONWEALTH V. ENGLAND.

(Filed January 8, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. It is lawful to kill gray squirrels at any season of the year.

2. Killing of gray squirrels—Repeal of statute—Section 2 of chapter 183 of the Acts of 1891-2-3, which prohibited the killing of "any black, gray or fox squirrel" between the 1st day of February and the 15th day of June in any year, having been amended in March, 1894, by setting out the section in full, omitting the word "gray," that amendment is now the law, although the amendment makes no reference to an act passed in February, 1894, re-enacting the original act, with the proviso that "gray squirrels may be killed for the protection of crops."

W. S. Taylor and J. C. Muncie for appellant.

Appeal from Monroe Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

The indictment charges that defendant, in March, 1896, killed and had the same in his possession after they had been killed, six gray squirrels.

The court sustained a demurrer to the indictment presumably because he was of the opinion that the killing of gray squirrels was not in violation of law.

Section 2, chapter 183, Acts 1891-2-3, page 813, provides that "no person shall catch, kill or pursue with such intent, or have the same in possession after it has been caught or killed, any black, gray or fox squirrel between the 1st day of February and the 15th day of June in each year."

Section 2 of "An act to protect game and small birds," chapter 28, acts 1894, page 40, is the exact language of the section quoted above, with the exception of a proviso as follows, to wit: "Gray squirrels may be killed for protection of crops."

The act containing this section was approved February 27, 1894. Afterwards the general assembly passed an act entitled "An act to amend section 2 of chapter 183 of Session Acts of 1891-2-3, entitled 'An act to protect game and small birds in this Commonwealth.'

This act was approved March 3, 1894, four days after the act of February 27, 1894, became a law, and contains two sections, which are as follows:

"Sec. 1. That the section above recited be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out the word 'gray' in the third line of said section, which section, when so amended, will read: No person shall catch, kill or pursue with such intent, or have the same in possession after it has been caught or killed, any black or fox squirrel between the 1st day of February and the 15th day of June in each year."

"Sec. 2. Whereas, the gray squirrel in the mountain counties of this State are liable to do a great injury to growing crops, an emergency is declared, and this act shall take effect from its passage and approval by the Governor."

The act approved March 3, 1894, purports to amend section 2 of the act of 1893, yet that section had been re-enacted with the proviso mentioned by section 2 of the act approved February 27, 1894. While this is true, the act declared that the section which it purported to amend should read as amended in a given way. This was equivalent to declaring what the statute should be with reference to the killing, etc., of squirrels.

Under the February act it was lawful to kill gray squirrels at any season of the year to protect crops. By the March act it is made unlawful to kill black or fox squirrels within a specified period but not gray squirrels. The language of the act makes it perfectly clear that the general assembly intended to remove any restriction that had been placed upon the killing of gray squirrels. It is lawful to kill them at any season of the year.

The judgment is affirmed.

COMMONWEALTH V. SHELBY.

(Filed January 8, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Indictment—Resubmission to grand jury—Where a demurrer is sustained to an indictment, the attorney for the Commonwealth is entitled to have the case, by an order of court, submitted to another grand jury unless it is sustained, because it appears that the offense was not committed within the jurisdiction of the court, or the indictment improperly charges more than one offense, or because it contains matter which is a legal defense or bar to the indictment.

The court having sustained the demurrer to an indictment for maiming because instead of charging that defendant did "bite off" the ear of a person named it charged that he did "bite of" the ear of that person, a motion to resubmit the case to the grand jury ought to have prevailed.

2. It was error to sustain the demurrer, the omission of the letter "f" in the word "off" not being fatal to the indictment.

W. S. Taylor for appellant.

Appeal from McCracken Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hazelrigg.

Where a demurrer is sustained to an indictment the attorney for the Commonwealth is entitled to have the case by an order of the court submitted to another grand jury, unless it is sustained, because it appears that the offense was not committed within the jurisdiction of the court, or the indictment improperly charges more than one offense, or because it contains matter which is a legal defense or bar to the indictment. (Section 170, Criminal Code.)

In this case a demurrer was sustained to an indictment for maiming which, instead of charging in the language of the statute (Kentucky Statutes, section 1165) that the defendant did "bite off" the ear of Richard Caldwell, charged that he did "bite of" the ear of that person. The motion to resubmit the case to the grand jury ought to have prevailed. We are further of opinion that the language used is sufficiently clear to indicate what offense was in fact meant to be charged, and that the omission of the letter "f" in the word "off" was not fatal to the indictment.

For the reasons indicated the judgment sustaining the demurrer and dismissing the indictment is reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

COMMONWEALTH v. BALLARD.

(Filed January 8, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Breaking into warehouse with intent to steal—When one by some trick gains admission to a warehouse with intent to steal therefrom, this constitutes a breaking within the meaning of section 1164, Kentucky Statutes.

Where two brewing companies had separate apartments rented in a warehouse for the purpose of storing beer, and a servant of one of the companies, upon telling the superintendent of the building that he wished to get some beer, received a ring containing not only the key to his master's apartment but also the key to the apartment rented by the other company, which he entered and from which he took a keg of beer, the entry under such circumstances constituted a breaking within the meaning of the statute.

2. Same—The ownership of the warehouse broken was properly alleged to be in the company which owned and retained control of the building.

W. T. Bradshaw and W. S. Taylor for appellant.

Appeal from McCracken Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

The indictment charges that the defendant feloniously broke into the warehouse of the Paducah Ice Co. with intent to and did steal a keg of beer therefrom. The indictment is under section 1164, Kentucky Statutes.

At the close of the evidence for the Commonwealth the court instructed the jury to find the defendant not guilty. We have not been favored with a brief for the appellee, and the reason for giving the instruction does not appear in the record. However, the court must have concluded that there was not a breaking in the meaning of the statute, or that it was not the warehouse of the Paducah Ice Co. into which defendant broke.

The Paducah Ice Co. keeps a cold storage warehouse in the city of Paducah. There is a hall, with one door to each of four or five apartments opening into it. The Henderson Brewing Co. and Lemps Brewing Co. each had one of these apartments rented for the purpose of storing kegs of beer. These renters were each given a key to their respective apartments. The Paducah Ice Co. also retained keys to each apartment, which were kept by its engineer, Andrews. The superintendency of the building was retained by the Paducah Ice Co.

The defendant drove a wagon for Lemps Brewing Co. Between 11 and 12 o'clock P. M. the defendant told the engineer that he wanted to get some beer, whereupon the engineer gave him a ring which contained the key to the apartment rented by the Lemps Brewing Co., and also to that of the Henderson Brewing Co. A keg of the Henderson Brewing Co. was missing about that time and found in the possession of the defendant.

The defendant had no authority to enter the apartment of the Henderson Brewing Co. If he did so by the use of the key of that apartment with intent to steal or did feloniously take therefrom the keg of beer there was a breaking within the meaning of the statute. Then the mere fact that he obtained the key from the engineer did not authorize him to enter the apartment of the Henderson Brewing Co. The key may have facilitated his entry into the apartment, but it did not change the effect of the act.

"In cases where the offender, with intent to commit a felony, gains admission by some trick for the purpose of effecting it, the offense is burglary, for this is a constructive breaking. * * * So if admission be gained under pretense of business, or if one take lodgings with like felonious intent and afterwards rob the landlord." (Wharton's Criminal Law, sixth edition, section 1539.)

The ownership of the warehouse was properly alleged and proven. The Henderson Brewing Co. did not rent the warehouse but the use of one of its apartments. The Paducah Ice Co. retained the control of it, except the Henderson Brewing Co. acquired the privilege of storing beer in a particular apartment which it reached through a hall, the use of which was common to the owner and other renters of apartments.

In cases of burglary the rule as to ownership of the dwelling house is stated in Wharton's Criminal Law, sixth edition, section 1586, to be as follows: "When divers persons have several rooms in a house of which they keep the keys, and inhabit them severally with their families, yet if they enter at one outer door with the owner these rooms can not be said to be the dwelling house of the inmates, but the indictment ought to be for breaking the house of the owner."

Under the statute if any person feloniously break in any warehouse with intent to steal, or shall feloniously take therefrom goods or thing of value, whether the owner or other person be or be not in such house, he is guilty.

The evidence was such we think the court erred in giving the peremptory instruction to find the defendant not guilty.

COMMONWEALTH V. HALL.

(Filed January 8, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Practice in criminal cases—Peremptory instruction—Where a verdict of guilty would be palpably or flagrantly against the evidence, the trial court should not submit the case to the jury, as, if it does so and a conviction follows, the verdict must be set aside. The fact, however, that the verdict would rest on evidence not entirely satisfactory or conclusive is not sufficient to authorize the court to take the case from the jury.

In this case a peremptory instruction to find the defendant "not guilty" was proper.

W. S. Taylor and J. T. Simon for appellant.

Blanton & Berry for appellee.

Appeal from Harrison Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hazelrigg.

Whilst this court can not reverse when there is evidence to support the finding of the jury in criminal cases, more latitude is given the trial court, and that court may grant a new trial to the defendant "if the verdict be against law or evidence." (Section 271, Criminal Code.)

In this case the proof of the State—altogether circumstantial, it may be stated—conduced to establish the guilt of the defendant. The opposing proof, however, offered by the defendant to explain the circumstances and establish his innocence, was quite convincing, and led the trial court to give a peremptory instruction to find the defendant "not guilty."

Undoubtedly when a verdict of guilty would be palpably or flagrantly against the evidence the trial court should not submit the case to the jury; as, if it does so and a conviction follows, the verdict must be set aside. If, however, the proof is merely contradictory, and the verdict would rest on evidence not entirely satisfactory or conclusive, still the case should go to the jury, as under our system the jury, and not the court, are the judges of the facts. These principles are so firmly imbedded in our jurisprudence that it would seem hardly necessary to call attention to them.

In this case we can not denounce the peremptory instruction as violative of these well-settled principles.

Judgment affirmed.

SUIT, &C. V. CRAWFORD.

(Filed January 8, 1897.)

Decedents' estates—Right of distributees to maintain an action upon a note held by intestate—While the general rule is that heirs and devisees can not in their own names prosecute suits to recover the unadministered estate of the decedent, yet a note held by an intestate which was turned over by the administrator to the widow and children upon a settlement of his accounts is an administered asset, and the widow and children may maintain an action thereon in their own names, especially after the lapse of nineteen years from the death of the intestate, when all debts against the estate, if any existed, are barred.

W. J. Osborne for apppellants.

Hanson Kennedy for appellee.

Appeal from Robertson Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

This action was brought by the widow and children of Leonard Pyles on a promissory note which it is claimed was an asset of the estate of the decedent.

Leonard Pyles died in 1876 intestate. An administrator of the estate was duly appointed. It is alleged he settled his accounts as such with the county court and was discharged as administrator and from all liability on the note in suit, and that he thereupon turned the note over to the plaintiffs. The court sustained a demurrer to and dismissed the petition upon the ground that the action could only be maintained by the personal representative.

We recognize the rule to be that heirs and devisees can not in their own names prosecute suits to recover the unadministered estate of the decedent, but that such actions can only be maintained by the personal representative, except in cases where the personal representative refuses to administer upon the estate sued for or to prosecute suits for its recovery, or in a case like Bellamy's adm'r v. Bellamy, 3 Bush, 109.

The intestate died nineteen years before this action was brought. His personal representative had settled his accounts as such and been discharged. The presumption is that all the debts of the decedent have been paid. At any rate none could have existed when the suit was brought, as the lapse of time had barred a recovery on any unsatisfied claim that may have existed. It follows that no one had any interest in the note except the heirs at law. The personal representative had relinquished any right he had in it by settling his accounts as administrator and turning the note over to the plaintiff.

We are of the opinion that it is an administered asset. The proceeds of the note are not liable to pay the debts of the intestate, neither has the personal representative any interest therein for reimbursement or protection, as he surrendered the note to its real owners.

Under such circumstances it seems to us to be unreasonable to require that an administrator de bonis non be appointed, and allow him alone to maintain the action, as it would put the heirs to considerable expense. Besides, as this is an administered asset, an administrator de bonis non would have no control over it.

We are of the opinion that when the administrator settled his accounts and turned the note over to the plaintiffs, they were vested with the right to collect the note and maintain an action on it.

The judgment is reversed, with directions that further proceedings conform to this opinion.

CURLE v. JONES.

(Filed January 8, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Garnishment—Lien of attaching creditor—The service of summons upon garnishees gave to the attaching creditor a lien upon money held by them for the debtor, although they had, prior to the service of the summons, given to an agent of the debtor a check for the amount, as they had not thereby surrendered control over the fund, as is shown by the fact that they afterward deposited the amount in court subject to its order. And the debtor having died pending the litigation her personal representative has no greater right to the fund as against the attaching creditor than the debtor herself would have if living.

George C. Webb and J. R. Morton for appellant.

Appeal from Fayette Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Lewis.

February 8, 1893, and subsequent to a return of "no property found" on an execution in favor of T. J. Curle against Lucy M. Jones, the former instituted this action to subject to the satisfaction of his judgment $650, alleged to belong to the latter and in the hands of her sons-in-law, Stuart Taylor and R. D. Steele. Of that sum $345 was conceded to be subject to plaintiff's judgment, and, having been deposited in court, was adjudged to be paid to him; but it is stated by the garnishees that on the same day the action was commenced, and before either of them were summoned, they gave a check for the remaining $300, payable at a specified bank, in favor of Susie J. Steele, wife of R. D. Steele, and daughter, and, as they allege, agent of Lucy M. Jones. And the question in this case is whether that sum is an asset of the estate of Lucy M. Jones, who died intestate February 13, 1893, and to be administered by appellee, Security Trust and Safety Vault Co., as her personal representative, or is subject to attachment in this action.

It is alleged by plaintiff, without denial by any defendant to the action, that no payment of any part of said sum of $300 had been made to Lucy M. Jones, nor any part deposited to her credit or credit of Susie J. Steele, as her agent, until February 10, 1893, after summons was served on the garnishees.

The $300 was not, in the first instance, a debt which Taylor and Steele owed Lucy M. Jones, but money collected and held by them as her agent. And that the check which they gave to Susie J. Steele, even if intended to put the money out of reach of creditors, did not actually deprive them of either control or possession is shown by the fact they, pending this litigation, actually deposited the entire sum of $645 in court, subject to the order of which it has ever since been.

This is not a question between a plaintiff in an execution and another creditor of an insolvent debtor, but simply whether property or money, attached and under the control of the court prior to the death of the debtor, shall be subjected pro tanto to the satisfaction of plaintiff's debt, or transferred as assets of the estate to the administrator. If Lucy M. Jones was still alive there could be no doubt of the right of plaintiff to subject the money in question for the simple reason that his lien had attached, and the property was in the control of the court; and, such being the case, her death did not nor could operate to deprive him of full benefit of such lien, for surely her personal representative did not acquire, as against him, any right or exemption she did not possess.

In our opinion the sum of $300 in question, less about $20, which it appears was actually used by Susie J. Steele for the benefit of her mother, Lucy M. Jones, during her illness, is subject to the judgment debt of plaintiff, and should have been so applied by the lower court.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

AVRITT, &C. V. BRICKEN & DANT'S ASS'EE, &C.

(Filed January 8, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Judicial sales—Commissioner not estopped to deny receipt of purchase money, although he had so reported—When an order confirming a judicial sale directed the commissioner to execute to the purchaser a deed when the bonds for the purchase money should be paid in full, and the son of the purchaser, who was surety in the bonds for the purchase money and also attorney for the plaintiff in the action, persuaded the commissioner to report a deed acknowledging the receipt in full of the purchase money, although in fact none of it had been paid, the promise being made by him to the commissioner that the money would be paid when needed for the purposes of distribution, neither that deed nor a report filed by the commissioner, showing the collection by him of the purchase money in full, is sufficient to estop the commissioner, in response to a rule against him to pay into court the balance shown by the report to be in his hands, from denying that he had collected all the purchase money, or from proceeding against the purchaser and her sureties to collect the balance in fact due by them.

2. Mandate—The opinion of this court reversing the judgment of the lower court, and directing the collection of the unpaid purchase money for the land, is not erroneous upon the ground that the opinion should go no further than to overrule the action of the lower court in sustaining the demurrer, and should allow the appellees, upon the return of the case, to plead further and sustain their plea by proof, since no demurrer was filed but a response by the appellees to the rule against them to show cause why they should not pay into court the sum alleged to be due, and they were allowed to introduce testimony to sustain their response and to defeat the recovery against them.

3. An indebtedness of the master commissioner to one of the sureties on the bond of the purchaser at judicial sale is a matter which in no way can influence the action of the court in regard to the collection of the unpaid purchase money.

J. B. Thompson and Samuel Avritt for appellants.

S. A. Russell for appellees.

Appeal from Marion Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Burnam.

On the 3d day of May, 1887, G. A. Bricken and J. P. Dant made an assignment of their partnership assets to A. K. Russell for the benefit of their creditors, and on the same day they each assigned their individual property to the same party for the same purpose. In addition to a small personal estate, Bricken conveyed by the aforesaid deed of assignment three small tracts of land, aggregating about 47 acres. This land was encumbered by a vendor's lien in favor of C. Gohe for $1,289.54 at the date of the payment of same. In a few days after the date of the assignment the assignee filed a suit in the Marion Circuit Court, asking a judgment for a sale of said land to satisfy the debts of the assignor. In this suit he was represented by Russell, Roe & Lisle, and a sale of same was decreed at the August term, 1887, and G. C. Avritt, master commissioner, was directed to make said sale by the judgment upon credits of six and twelve months respectively, and take from the purchaser at said sale bonds, with good security, payable to himself.

Pursuant to this judgment he exposed said land for sale at public outcry on the 8d day of October, 1887, when Mrs. Sue A. Russell became the purchaser at the price of $30 per acre, and executed her bond for same, with W. E. Russell, her husband, and S. A. Russell, her son, as securities. This sale was duly reported to the court, approved and confirmed, and a writ of possession directed to issue in her favor for said purchase.

At the same term of court an order was entered by consent of plaintiff and his attorney, one of whom was the aforesaid S. A. Russell, granting the purchaser permission to pay off her bonds at any time to the said G. C. Avritt, master commissioner, said order going on to recite that when same should be fully paid she should be entitled to a general warranty deed, conveying title to the 47 acres of land; and on the 13th day of December, 1888, the said Avritt, master commissioner, reported a deed to the said Sue A. Russell, conveying to her the title to said land, and acknowledging receipt in full of the purchase price for same.

This cause was continued on the docket for some time, awaiting the determination of an issue as to the extent of the lien of C. Gohe for purchase money on said land. This was finally adjudged in favor of said Gohe, and the said Avritt, as master commissioner, was directed to discharge same.

At the December term, 1891, of said court an order was entered, on motion of G. A. Bricken, directing the said Avritt, as master commissioner, to file his report of distribution of said fund, and to report what balance would remain after the payment of the lien to Gohe and cost for pro rata distribution amongst the general creditors of said Bricken. This motion was not acted on until the March term, 1892, of said court, and then W. E. Russell, the regular judge, declined to preside because of his relations to the parties, and a special judge was elected to act in his stead. At the said term the master commissioner filed his long-delayed report, and said that the 47 acres of land had sold for a total of $1,410, and that same amounted, with interest, on the 15th of June, to the sum of $1,554.33, and that he had paid the lien debt of Chas. Gohe, amounting, when paid, on the 15th day of June, 1889, to $1,289.54, and this, with the cost of the action and his fee, would leave a balance for distribution to the individual creditors of G. A. Bricken of $121.43.

This case was continued on the docket from term to term until the April term, 1895, when Bricken was awarded a rule against the said Avritt as the late master commissioner, he (presumably) having gone out of office, to show cause why he should not pay into court the balance of $121.43, shown to be in his hands by his report of the 30th of March, 1892, with interest.

In response to this rule the said Avritt filed a reply, and said that, as a matter of fact, he had never collected from the purchaser of the 47 acres but $1,289.54; that there was still due on said bond the sum of $289.97, with interest from the 15th of June, 1889, and that he had paid all of the money collected on said bond to discharge the lien to vendor.

Upon the filing of this response of Avritt a rule was awarded against Sue A. Russell, W. E. Russell and S. A. Russell to show cause why they should not pay into court the balance due on the bond for the purchase of land, viz, $289.97, with 6 per cent. from the 15th of June, 1889.

The said Sue A. Russell, W. E. Russell and S. A. Russell, by way of defense to this rule, relied upon the report of the said Avritt, showing the collection of the money and upon the deed made, reciting payment in full, and the said S. A. Russell, one of the securities, insisted that they should not be required to pay said balance because of claims alleged to be due to him by said Avritt growing out of other transactions.

There was no denial of the evidence of Avritt that the $1,289.54, which was paid to discharge the lien of Gohe, was all that had ever been paid on said bond, or of his evidence that at the date of the execution of the deed to the purchaser, reciting payment in full, not a dollar of said purchase money had ever been paid on same.

On the trial of the issues made by the responses to these rules the lower court gave judgment against G. C. Avritt for the sum of $121.43, and the cost of Bricken on the motion, and sustained the motion of the purchasers to quash the rule against them, and gave them a judgment for their cost. To the entry of this judgment both G. A. Bricken and G. C. Avritt excepted, and asked and were granted an appeal to this court, and we are called on to review said judgment.

The facts in this case are clear and undisputed. Avritt was the master commissioner of the Marion Circuit Court by appointment of W. E. Russell, the judge thereof, and was no doubt grateful and obligated for such, and perhaps other favors. S. A. Russell was the attorney of record of the plaintiff in the suit in which the decree to sell the land was entered, and was responsible largely for the entry of the order directing the execution of the deed. He does not deny the testimony of Avritt that he induced him to make said deed by persuasion, and promises to pay the purchase money when same was needed for purposes of distribution under the order of the court.

It is evident that G. C. Avritt was unduly influenced by these considerations, and was induced to go beyond his duty in his efforts to favor said purchaser in the report made by him and in the execution of said deed aforesaid, but we can not concur in the finding of the lower court; and, for the reasons indicated, said judgment is reversed, both in so far as it gives judgment against G. C. Avritt for the sum of $121.43 and for Bricken's cost, and also the judgment of said court dismissing the rule against the purchaser of the land and her securities upon the bond for purchase money, and this cause is remanded, with instructions to collect the balance of the purchase money due upon the bond of the purchaser, subject to the credit of the sum of $1,289, as of the 15th of June, 1889, and to secure the payment of such balance a lien exists upon the tract of 47 acres of land, for which said bond for the purchase money was executed.

The court does not pass upon the question of what might be the liability of Avritt upon his official bond, if the balance due upon the bond of the aforesaid purchasers of the land could not be collected out of them and from an enforcement of the lien on the land sold, and for which said bonds were executed.

The motion of Sue A. Russell, W. E. Russell and S. A. Russell to dismiss the appeal of G. C. Avritt in this court is overruled, as the grounds for said motion set out in the answer filed by them is insufficient.

The court delivered the following response to petition for modification February 13, 1897:

The appellees, Sue A. Russell, W. E. Russell and S. A. Russell, have filed a petition for rehearing in this case, and asked for a modification of the opinion of the court rendered herein, because, as they allege, the opinion was erroneous in directing the collection of the purchase money for the land bought by Sue A. Russell, insisting that the opinion of this court should have gone no further than to have reversed the ruling of the lower court "upon the demurrer filed by them to the rule awarded against them," and insisting that they ought to be permitted on the return of the case to plead further and to show any facts that would exonerate them from liability on the bond for the purchase money by payments made to Avritt as master commissioner, appellees claiming that the rule awarded against them stands upon the same basis as a petition, and that having demurred to the rule, and the same having been sustained by the trial court, if said demurrer is overruled by this court, the opinion ought to go no further than to overrule the action of the lower court in sustaining the demurrer, and to have remanded the case for further pleading.

To test this contention of the appellee by the facts of this case let us briefly recite them. On the 10th day of May, 1895, G. C. Avritt, in response to a rule of the court to show cause why he should not pay into court the balance of the purchase money due upon the bond executed by Sue A. Russell, filed his response, in which he said that he had not collected from the purchaser, Sue A. Russell, or her securities, $289.79 of said purchase money, with interest thereon from the 15th day of June, 1889. The court, immediately upon the filing of this response by Avritt, awarded a rule against Sue A. Russell, W. E. Russell and S. A. Russell to show cause why they should not pay into court this sum, with interest from June 15, 1889. This rule was served on the parties, and by agreement they were given until the 20th day of the term to respond to the rule. On that day, as was proper, the court heard the case, both upon the response of Avritt and of the appellees, Sue A. Russell, etc. Appellee, Sue A. Russell, did not file a demurrer as contended, and no demurrer could properly have been filed to a rule of this character. The only pleading that the law recognizes which can be filed to a rule of this character is a response, and the appellees responded to this rule, not by a demurrer as claimed, but by a motion to quash on the face of the record. This was in effect not a demurrer but a response to the rule. At the same time the court heard the testimony of G. C. Avritt, and also read the deed, upon which the appellees relied to defeat recovery against them, and also heard the sworn statements of Samuel Avritt and H. W. Rives, and rendered its opinion after a full hearing of the case.

The appellants had their day in court, and if they had actually paid to Avritt a greater sum than claimed by him in his response and sworn to by him in his testimony on the trial of the rule, it was the duty of appellee, Sue A. Russell, then and there to have set up her defense and to have asked a hearing on her claim. As to whether appellant Avritt was indebted to S. A. Russell or not was a matter that could not be considered on the hearing of the rule. The only pertinent question was whether Avritt had collected the purchase money for the land sold under an order of the court; and if he had not collected it, as was clearly made manifest, it was the duty of the court to direct that same be collected, as whatever was owing on the bond was due to Avritt in a trust capacity—was a fund in court—and was subject to the orders of the court, and the fact that he may have been indebted to S. A. Russell, one of the securities in the bond of Sue A. Russell, was not a matter that could in any way have properly influenced the action of the court.

The plea of appellee, S. A. Russell, that there is now pending in the Marion Circuit Court a suit of S. A. Russell v. Avritt, in which the defendant is seeking credit against S. A. Russell for this balance due upon the bond of Sue A. Russell for purchase money as having been paid by him, is not a fact of which this court can take notice, and is not germane in any way to the issues involved herein. Certainly the appellee would not be estopped from pleading the facts as to said balance in defense of such a claim.

In our opinion the long delays which have attended the collection of this money and the settlement of this trust, coupled with the evidence that appellee has had her day in court, forbid any re-opening of the case to enable appellant to plead further.

For the reasons indicated the petition for a rehearing or a modification of the opionion heretofore given is overruled.

WHITE & COCHRAN V. MOORE.

(Filed January 9, 1897.)

1. Judgments—Limitation—Where a second execution was issued upon a judgment, when the right thereto was barred by the lapse of fifteen years since the issual of the first execution. a payment made upon this execution did not operate to revive the judgment, and both the second and a third execution were properly quashed; and this is true, although during a part of the fifteen years an action in equity was pending to enforce the judgment, as this did not suspend plaintiff's right to successive executions or stop the running of the s tatute.

2. Same—Voluntary payment—Where a payment is voluntarily made by the defendant upon a judgment within fifteen years after its rendition, the period between the date of the judgment and the payment is no longer estimated as a part of the period of limitation, but limitation begins to run anew from the date of the payment.

K. D. Perkins for appellants.

R. S. Crawford and G. C. Moore for appellee.

Appeal from Whitley Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Lewis.

August 14, 1872, White & Cochran obtained a judgment against L. and M. A. Moore for $584.55, upon which, September 28, 1872, an execution was issued, and in due time returned with the official endorsement, "no property found."

On and not until February 16, 1890, another was issued, which was returned with this official endorsement: "Received of M. A. Moore $200 on the within execution, and I return the within execution by consent of plaintiff April 20, 1891."

And now this is an action in equity by M. A. Moore, one of the original defendants, in which he asks judgment quashing the third execution, issued February 2, 1894, vacating the levy made under it, and prohibiting plaintiffs in the original action from proceeding further by execution.

As more than fifteen years had elapsed after return of the first before the second execution was issued the statute of limitation operated as a bar to the latter, as also to the one issued in 1894, unless by one of the modes suggested for appellant, running of the statute was suspended, so that the time antecedent to the date of the second execution is not to be counted in computing the bar.

It has been repeatedly held by this court, and may be considered settled doctrine, that a partial payment made on a bond or note within the statutory time operates as a suspension of the running of the limitation between the accrual of the cause of action on the instrument and date of that payment. And we think if there had been a partial payment of the judgment voluntarily made by the defendants within fifteen years after September 28, 1872, when it was rendered, running of the limitation in this case would have been likewise suspended. And if the date of such partial payment had been less than fifteen years prior to the issual of the second execution there would be no bar to either it or the execution issued in 1894.

But more than fifteen years had elapsed, and consequently there was a complete statutory bar to any proceeding on the judgment of 1872, when the payment of $200 was made on the execution of 1892. Consequently no act of the defendants short of an express or clearly implied promise to satisfy the residue of the judgment, founded on moral obligation to do so, could have operated to revive it or entitle plaintiffs to an execution on it.

It appears that in 1876 an action in equity was instituted to subject certain property of M. A. Moore to the satisfaction of the judgment of 1872, which was pending until 1878. But that action was merely a cumulative mode of securing satisfaction of the judgment, and did not have the effect to suspend plaintiffs' right to successive executions, nor to stop the running of the limitation of the time within which they were required by statute to cause execution issued in order to prevent the bar to all proceedings on that judgment.

In our opinion the issual of the execution of 1892, and of course that of 1894, was illegal and ineffectual for every purpose, and the judgment quashing the latter and prohibiting further proceeding under it is affirmed.

MATNEY V. FERRELL.

(Filed January 9, 1897.)

Married women—Fraud in sale of land—Set-off—One who comes into a court of equity must do equity; and the court will either refuse altogether to enforce a contract tainted with fraud or will purge the transaction. Therefore, where a married woman, by fraudulent representations which she induced her husband as her agent to make, effected a sale of her land, which she and her husband conveyed to the purchaser, in an action by her to recover an unpaid balance of the purchase price the defendant should be permitted, if he asks it, to set-off the damages he has sustained, although the plaintiff, being a married woman, could not make herself liable in damages for a failure to comply with her contract. If, however, either party desires it the contract should be rescinded.

Connolly & Connolly and Bart Belcher for appellant.

E. W. Hines and Samuel J. Salyers for appellee.

Appeal from Pike Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge White.

This is an appeal from the Pike Circuit Court. The appellee, Kentucky Ferrell, sued appellant to recover on notes executed by appappellant Matney for the purchase price of a tract of land near Pikeville, in Pike county.

The whole purchase price agreed to be paid by appellant was $2,500, of which he had paid about one-half at the date of the institution of this suit.

At the time of the sale of the land Mrs. Ferrell, the appellee, was a married woman, wife of N. M. Ferrell, who has since departed this life. The land sold to appellant was the property of Mrs. Ferrell, the appellee. The appellant resists the payment of the notes sued on on the ground of fraud in the sale of the land to him.

Appellant by answer charges "that he made the contract with. N. M. Ferrell, the husband and agent of appellee, in making the sale of the land to him, for which the notes were executed. N. M. Ferrell was the plaintiff's husband, and the person with whom defendant made the trade, and who had authority as agent and husband of plaintiff, falsely and fraudulently represented that there was a four-foot vein of stone coal on the land near or about the lower end of the orchard, and which showed up well, and that said vein was worth half what he asked for the land, which was $2,500. Defendant says that by reason of these representations made to him at various times by N. M. Ferrell, plaintiff's husband, believing the same to be true, he was induced to make the purchase, and did buy the land of N. M. Ferrell, plaintiff's husband, and executed the notes sued on.

Defendant, further answering, says that plaintiff's authorized agent and husband, N. M. Ferrell, represented and told him before and at the time he did purchase the land for which the notes were executed that the said coal vein was near the creek and public road, and was four feet thick and a good quality of coal, showed up well and was the same vein as the Dick Sych vein, and giving reasons why he (Ferrell) had not opened up said coal mine, charging that all these representations were false and untrue, and were made by plaintiff's husband with a view to induce defendant to purchase the land.

Defendant further charges that there was not, at the time he purchased said land, such a vein of coal on said land at the place designated by plaintiff's husband, or on said land at all, but there was a vein of coal about the place designated by plaintiff's husband, but it was only about fourteen inches thick and does not enhance the value of the land or add anything to its value, and which could not be worked, and also charges that all of said statements of plaintiff's said agent and husband were false and untrue, and by them defendant was induced to make the purchase at $2,500; that said land was worth not more than one-half that sum at the time of the purchase; that if said vein of coal had been four feet thick on said land, as represented by plaintiff's husband at the time of the trade, said land, would have been worth $3,000. He pleads the difference in the value of the land at $1,250 as it is, and what it would have been worth if the vein of coal had been on it as represented, it being $1,750 as set-off and counterclaim against the notes sued on.

To this answer plaintiff filed a demurrer, which was sustained, and defendant given leave to amend, whereupon defendant filed his amended answer, in which he charges that the false and fraudulent representations set out in the original answer were made by plaintiff through her husband and agent, N. M. Ferrell, to induce this defendant to purchase the land, and were all known to her, and she caused and induced them to be made. She knew at the time of the conveyance they had been made; acquiesced in them; acted upon them; carried out the fraud by conveying the land with full knowledge of the fact that it was a fraud, knowing at the time that the true vendable value of the land was not more than $1,000 or $1,200.

To this amendment and original answer plaintiff insisted on their demurrer, which was sustained by the court, and judgment rendered for appellant for the amount sued for, with decree of sale of the land, and from that judgment this appeal is prosecuted and a reversal asked.

The appellee being a married woman at the time of the sale and conveyance of the land involved in this case, she could not bind herself by promissory contract or make herself liable in damages for a failure to comply with the contract. However, when one comes into a court of equity asking the court to enforce a contract brought about by her fraud or the fraud of her husband while acting as her agent in making the sale of her property, presents a different question. A court of equity could not enforce such a contract without giving its aid to the perpetration of a fraud. In such cases the courts of equity should at least purge the transaction or refuse to stain its ermine by taking jurisdiction of the complaint of a plaintiff asking the enforcement of a contract tainted with fraud.

It is a well-known rule of equity that those who come into a court of equity must do equity. In this case the answer and amended answer charge fraud and false representations that induced the appellant to make the purchase; that these false and fraudulent representations were made by appellees' husband and agent, and that the appellee induced and caused them to be made, knowing they were false and fraudulent, and now, when she is seeking the fruits of this fraudulent transaction, she, to avoid it, relies on her coverture. If the statements in appellant's answer be true, and it must be taken as true on demurrer, we see no reason why he should not have the right to set off the damages he has sustained against the purchase money not yet paid by him.

We think the court erred in sustaining the demurrer to defendant's answer and amended answer.

Wherefore the judgment is reversed and cause remanded, with directions to the lower court to set aside the order sustaining demurrer to defendant's answer and amended answer, and overrule the same, and for further proceedings in conformity with this opinion. On the return of the cause the court should allow either party to amend their pleading asking a rescission of the contract if they should desire to do so.

STARR V. SEARCY, &C.

(Filed January 9, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Vendor's lien—The vendor of an undivided half interest in a tract of land has a lien for the payment of the purchase money upon only one-half the land, and, the land having been sold to satisfy various liens upon it, she can look to only one-half the proceeds for the payment of her claim. And she having united with the vendee in a mortgage, her lien is postponed to that of the mortgagee.

J. C. Wickliffe for appellant.

W. P. Hillsman for appellees.

Appeal from Nelson Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Guffy.

The appellant, Miss Starr, was the owner of one undivided half of a tract of land in Nelson county, Ky., which land she conveyed to R. O. Dorsey. The other half was at one time owned by Julia Dorsey, Tate Offutt and J. T. Offutt. Dorsey and wife conveyed their interest to Offutt. Afterwards Offutt conveyed the whole of the land to Dorsey, taking notes for the purchase money, part of which notes were assigned to appellee Searcy.

It also appears that Offutt, Dorseys and the appellant all united in a mortgage on the land in favor of the Mutual Life Ins. Co. of Kentucky. The insurance company brought suit to enforce its mortgage lien, making the appellees and appellant parties, and by appropriate pleadings the various lien holders asserted their claims.

It seems that, without objection, a sale of the land was adjudged, and the controversy is as to priority of liens, or a proper pro rata of the proceeds of the sale.

The following is the judgment appealed from: "It is further ordered and adjudged that the cross-plaintiff, Nannie R. Starr, has a lien on the fund remaining out of the proceeds of said sale, after paying the debt of the plaintiff and the costs of this action, to the extent of one-half thereof; that the cross-plaintiffs, J. T. Offutt and John Searcy, jointly, have a lien on said fund so remaining to the extent of one-half thereof; and it is ordered that if the land sold does not bring a sum sufficient to pay the debts of said plaintiffs and cross-plaintiffs, including the costs herein, the sum remaining after paying said plaintiffs' debt and said costs be divided equally between the holders of the liens on the respective moities in the following manner, to wit: One-half to said Nannie R. Starr and the remaining half to J. T. Offutt and John Searcy jointly, in proportion to the amounts due to said Offutt and Searcy respectively on their notes filed therein."

It seems to us that the judgment appealed from is fully sustained by the law under the facts as admitted in the pleadings and shown by the exhibits. The appellant was the owner of an undivided half of the land in question, and sold the same for $1,000. She had a lien only on one-half of the land for that purchase money. That being true, she could in equity have a lien or claim on only one-half of the proceeds of the land—that is, half of the price for which it sold. She having united in the mortgage to the insurance company, it follows that the company had a prior lien for the proceeds of the land for its debt.

Whether appellant has any further claim upon Dorsey, growing out of the transaction in question, is not before us for decision.

Judgment affirmed.

JACKSON V. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed December 8, 1896.)

1. Indictment for murder—An indictment against two persons jointly for murder, charging that both did "kill and murder" the deceased "by the one or the other" cutting off her head, the other being present aiding and abetting, but that which did the cutting or which aided and abetted the same is not known to the grand jurors, is good.

2. Criminal trial—Conduct of sheriff—There can be no reversal because of the refusal of the court to designate some other person to perform the duties of the sheriff during the trial of the case, the affidavit of the accused that the sheriff had taken an unusual interest in bringing about his conviction not being sufficient to require the court to make such an appointment, and there being nothing to show that the sheriff did not faithfully perform his duty.

3. The ticket system of admission to the courtroom during the trial, adopted by the sheriff to prevent the courtroom from being overcrowded, did not deprive the accused of his right to a public trial, tickets being issued in the order in which requests were made for them.

4. Evidence—Although no mention was made in the indictment of the killing of an unknown child it was not improper to permit the Commonwealth to show that the deceased was pregnant, and that a fœtus of five months was found, as that fact conduced to furnish a motive for the killing, and, besides, helped to solve the question as to where the killing occurred, there being less flow of blood where the subject is pregnant.

5. Same—It was not improper to permit proof of conversations between appellant and his co-defendant, in which each accused the other of the crime and each denied his own guilt, the parties having voluntarily entered into the conversations.

6. Conversations between the defendants, when confined in the "sensitive cells," were competent, being voluntary.

7. Evidence—It being shown that cocaine was found in the stomach of the dead girl and that the accused had inquired into its effects, it was not improper to allow a witness to state the use of this drug in producing abortions, and its effects on the system.

8. If the accused cut off the head of his victim in Campbell county while she was in fact alive, he was guilty of murder, although he believed her already dead, provided this act succeeded and was but a part of a felonious attempt to kill her in Cincinnati, and the court properly so instructed the jury in effect, there being some evidence upon which to base such a hypothesis.

9. If the accused feloniously administered or procured another to administer drugs to the deceased for the purpose of procuring an abortion when she was so far gone with child as to make it necessarily dangerous to her life, or when the drugs were in themselves or in the manner of their administration dangerous to her life, and, though believing her to have been killed in this way, he cut her head off in Campbell county when she was in fact alive, yet he was guilty of murder, and the court properly so instructed the jury; also instructing them in substance that if the drugs were administered when not dangerous, he was guilty of voluntary manslaughter.

10. Argument to jury—Historical allusions to celebrated cases of circumstantial evidence were not improper in argument to the jury.

L. J. Crawford for appellant.

M. R. Lockhart and W. S. Taylor for appellee.

Appeal from Campbell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hazelrigg.

The appellant was jointly indicted with one Alonzo Walling in the Campbell Circuit Court for the murder of Pearl Bryan, and on his separate trial was found guilty and sentenced to be hanged.

It will be necessary to submit only a brief summary of the facts disclosed in the voluminous record before us to render intelligible the various complaints urged on this appeal against the judgment of conviction.

On the morning of Saturday, February 1, 1896, the headless body of a woman was found on the farm of one Locke, near Newport, in Campbell county. Every effort to find the head proved futile, but the shoes the dead girl wore were marked "Lewis & Hays, Greencastle, Indiana," and this circumstance led to the identification of the body as that of Pearl Bryan, a young girl of that city. Her clothes were saturated with blood, particularly about the neck, and a large quantity of it was found on the ground near the neck, covering a circular spot some six or seven inches in diameter, and also a spot of a similar kind some feet away. Extending near to or over this last named spot there were some privet bushes, the leaves of which were spattered with blood, and drops were discovered pending under the leaves, as though the blood had reached the under side of them by spurting from the neck, which it might do as disclosed by the testimony if the decapitation had taken place or been commenced at the spot near the bushes, and if the victim were alive at the time.

These and other circumstances led the authorities to proceed on the theory that the murder—for such it evidently appeared to be—occurred in Campbell county.

An autopsy disclosed that the girl was pregnant, and a healthy fœtus, of some five months development, was found, which, in the opinion of the experts, was probably alive until the death of the mother. The inquiries which led to the identification developed the fact that appellant, Scott Jackson, a dental student at the Ohio Medical College, but who formerly lived at Greencastle, was probably the author of the girl's ruin.

It was established beyond question that Pearl Bryan, after trying without success certain remedies prescribed by the appellant, left home on the Monday preceding her death, ostensibly to go to Indianapolis to visit friends, but in fact to come to Cincinnati in order that appellant might in some way procure relief for her, and it was shown that when she arrived in the city, where she was a stranger, she applied to him, or to him and Walling, the roommate and intimate associate of Jackson, for the purpose indicated.

On several days succeding her arrival the three, Jackson, Walling and Pearl Bryan, were seen together in different parts of the city, though where she stayed during this time does not clearly appear. By one witness, and by one only, does the Commonwealth directly connect the appellant and his associate Walling with the girl at about the time she must have been murdered. This witness, a negro, George H. Jackson, testifies that at about 1 o'clock on the night of Friday, the 31st (or rather the morning of February 1st), he was employed to drive, and did drive, a hack or cab from Cincinnati across to Newport, and out to a point near where the body was subsequently found, and was accompanied by Walling, who rode on the seat with him, and by appellant, who was in the interior of the vehicle with another person whom he could not see, but whom he took to be a woman in distress, etc.

This witness was discredited by proof seriously affecting his reputation for truth and veracity and by other circumstances, though it is fair to say that he appears to be corroborated in some material respects. To discard his testimony entirely is by no means to affect the State's case against the prisoner.

It is shown that on the Wednesday preceding the murder the accused bought some seventeen grains of cocaine, and an analysis of the girl's stomach discloses that cocaine had been administered to her. He is shown to have had possession after the girl's death of the valise belonging to her, on the inside of which were blood stains and in which was also found some strands of hair, believed to have come off her head, from its color, etc., and also dirt or mud corresponding in microscopical appearance with that where the body was found.

On Jackson's pants, found, however, in Walling's locker, were found blood stains, and on the knee was also found some earth which, under the microscope and by chemical analysis, is found identical with the earth found at the point where the body was discovered. His coat is also found in the sewer, where he admits having thrown it, stained with blood. He is found in possession of her clothing, which he attempted to dispose of. He admits that he attempted to get rid of the valise by throwing it in the river, and by attempting to place it on an outgoing train.

There is produced and he admits writing a letter to his friend and associate, one Wood, in which he asks Wood to write in Pearl's name to her parents from Chicago, or elsewhere, saying she was tired of living at home and was at the place of writing, and concludes with these words: "Get the letter off without one second's delay, and burn this at once. Stick by your old chum, Bill, and I will help you out the same way, or some other way, some time."

The theory of the defense is, and the accused so testified, that Wood was the author of the girl's misfortune, and sent her to Cincinnati, where he had made an arrangement to turn her over to Walling, who was to perform, or had performed, an abortion. He says that he last saw the girl at noon of Wednesday, and affects not to have inquired of Walling thereafter of the success or failure of the plan, or to have known anything of her whereabouts; that he knew nothing or suspected nothing wrong until while at supper with Walling, on Saturday evening, he read a newspaper account of the finding of a headless body on the Locke farm, and at once had a presentiment that "this was Walling's case." He discovered from Walling's conduct on that occasion, and from what Walling confessed to him, that his suspicion was well founded.

He then became panic-stricken, and attributes to this mental condition his subsequent conduct in helping Walling to dispose of the dead girl's effects and in writing the damaging letter to Wood. All this he testifies was done at the instance of Walling, and while he was under Walling's influence and in the mental condition named.

This recital, without an elaboration of the proof, some of which is wholly at variance with the theory of the defense, serves to show that the facts in evidence conduced to establish the guilt of the accused, and further than this we are not authorized to examine the testimony, being confined exclusively, under the express language of the law, to a review of errors of law appearing of record, and then only when they are such as to affect the substantial rights of the accused.

By his demurrer and motion in arrest of judgment the appellant first raises the question of the sufficiency of the indictment. This instrument is as follows: "The grand jury of Campbell county, in the name and by the authority of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, accaccuses Scott Jackson and Alonzo Walling of the crime of murder, committed as follows, to wit: The said Scott Jackson and Alonzo Walling on the — day of ————, 1896, before the finding of this indictment, in the county aforesaid, did willfully, feloniously and with malice aforethough, kill and murder Pearl Bryan by the one or the other, the said Scott Jackson or Alonzo Walling, with a knife or other sharp instrument, cutting the throat of the said Pearl Bryan so that she did then and there die, the other being then and there present, aiding and abetting the same, the exact manner whereof is unknown to the grand jurors, and which did the cutting, Scott Jackson or Alonzo Walling, or which aided and abetted the same is unknown to the jurors, against the peace and dignity of the Commonwealth of Kentucky."

It is urged that this indictment is not direct and certain as regards the party charged, but charges in the alternative that one party or the other committed the offense, when it is permissible only to charge in the alternative the different modes or means of committing an offense.

The indictment, however, charges directly and certainly that Jackson did kill and murder Pearl Bryan, first by himself cutting her throat with a knife, or secondly by aiding and abetting Walling in doing so.

The cutting by himself is one mode, and the aiding and abetting Walling whilst he did the cutting is another mode of committing the murder, and these modes and means may be charged in the alternative.

The indictment is sufficient, and its accuracy and conciseness of expression is to be commended.

Prior to the trial the appellant sought to prevent the sheriff of the county from performing his usual duties, and for that purpose filed his affidavit stating that that officer had taken an unusual and remarkable interest in bringing about a conviction of the accused, and had frequently denounced him and his co-defendant, Walling, as the guilty parties, and had devoted his whole time to hunting up evidence against them, and had endeavored by threats of punishment to force the defendants to confess to the crime. The court's refusal to relieve the sheriff furnishes another ground of complaint.

Unquestionably if it should be shown in any case to the satisfaction of the court that a sheriff was a "party" or was "interested" in the proceeding (Civil Code, section 667, and section 151, Criminal Code), then another officer should be designated to execute the process, and so in criminal proceedings "the court may, for sufficient cause, designate some other officer or person than the sheriff to summon petit jurors." (Section 193, Criminal Code.)

In this case it is not pretended that the sheriff had any personal feeling or bias against the prisoner, or was personally interested in the trial. While the "sufficient cause" named in the law is not defined, this court in Forman v. Commonwealth, 86 Ky., 603, said of a somewhat similar complaint that the unsupported affidavit of a defendant that the officer "was not a suitable person" and was "biased against him" and "would not summon impartial men to act as jurors" did not furnish sufficient cause for his removal.

It does not appear from the record here, and it was not intimated during the trial, that the sheriff or his deputies failed to execute all process placed in their hands by the accused. As to the jury it does not appear whether any member thereof was summoned by the sheriff or any of his deputies, and certainly there is no evidence in the record that he or they failed to perform properly any duty in this behalf.

In this connection, as it involves the conduct of the sheriff, we notice the complaint with respect to what is termed the ticket system of admission, adopted by the sheriff to control the attendance at the trial.

The affidavit of the accused, filed several days before the trial commenced, was to the effect that Sheriff Plummer "had announced his intention of permitting no one to enter the courtroom upon the trial herein excepting members of the bar and court officials who shall not hold a ticket of admission issued by him, and that such tickets should be good for only one half of a daily session, and that no person shall receive tickets more than once; and that if said Plummer shall be permitted to carry out said program, friends of affiant, and all others who are not favorites of said Plummer, will be denied admission to the courtroom during the trial, and that affiant will thus be denied his right to an open and public trial, free from partiality and favoritism, etc."

Accompanying the paper was a motion that the court direct the sheriff "to permit any and all well-behaved and respectable persons, who desired to attend the trial herein, to do so, so long as such persons can be conveniently accommodated in the courtroom, and to refrain from admitting some and excluding others, merely to gratify his own caprice and at his own pleasure, and to refrain from excluding any person for the sole reason that he may not hold a ticket of admission, etc."

Here is an effort to forestall the action of the sheriff, as well as a charge in advance that the sheriff would prostitute his office out of mere caprice or his own pleasure. The court properly refused to take any notice of the affidavit or motion.

It is significant that when the trial was over the accused was not able to say that any of his friends, or any other person who desired to attend, had been prevented from doing so, but contents himself with filing an affidavit that the ticket system had been carried out during the trial, and the admission of persons regulated thereby.

While much has been said in oral argument and by brief on this alleged error there is not the slightest indication that the ticket system was carried on, and the tickets of admission issued otherwise than to those who first applied for them, and for the sole purpose of preventing an overcrowding of the courtroom. This plan was carried on under the eye of the trial judge, and we quote his ruling on the point when discussing this ground for a new trial: "The fifth ground is stated to be 'error of law committed in refusing to permit defendant to have an open and public trial, free from favoritism and partiality.' There is absolutely no foundation for such a statement. There is no suggestion made that there was the slightest discrimination in the admission of persons to the courtroom. The court, to enable it to transact business and as a protection to the defendant, directed the sheriff to have tickets of admission to the courtroom limited in numbers to the seating capacity of the room, and to give them in the order in which requests were made to him for them; that if strangers applied for them to satisfy himself they were not persons who might do violence to the defendant. The court has no knowledge that while the tickets were not exhausted any person was refused one. The ticket system prevented disorder in the corriders of the courthouse."

In the case of People v. Murray, 14 L. R. A., 405, relied on by counsel for appellant, the order of the trial court to the police officer was to "stand at the door and see that the room is not overcrowded, but that all respectable citizens be admitted, and have an opportunity to get in whenever they should apply."

The Supreme Court (Michigan) said: "It is shown beyond question that during the whole trial the courtroom was not overcrowded, nor were the seats provided for spectators occupied to any great extent. This officer was under the control of the court, aud when the court was informed that he was excluding citizens and taxpayers, he refused to take any notice of the complaint, and left the officer to exercise his discretion as to what respectable citizens he should admit."

It is not pretended that any such exclusion or discrimination was practiced in this case. Had the court adopted the suggestion contained in the motion of appellant's counsel, and directed the officer to admit all "respectable persons," then the vigorous language of the case cited, denouncing the plan as violative of the constitutional right of "public trial," would have been applicable here; for, as indicated in that case, no citizen is required to present to a police or other officer a certificate of respectability before he is entitled to attend a public trial, as demanded by the Constitution of his country.

Counsel next discusses the alleged errors of the court in admitting and excluding testimony. These are quite numerous, and, while all have been examined carefully, only the more important seem to demand special comment.

It is to be remembered in this connection that the true solution of this mysterious case rests largely not upon direct testimony explaining the immediate transaction, but upon circumstances affecting or supposed to affect the main transaction; so that, as said by this court in the O'Brien case (89 Ky., 362), "the evidence should be allowed to take a wide range, otherwise the guilty would often go unpunished. It is true there must be some connection between the fact to be proven and the circumstances offered in support of it; yet any fact which is necessary to introduce to explain another, or which afforded an opportunity for any transaction which is in issue, or shows facilities or motives for the commission of the crime, may be proven. Even evidence tending to prove a distinct offense is, therefore, admissible if it shows facilities or motives for the commission of the one in question. The purpose," says the court, "is to weave a net about the guilty, and often this can no more be done by proof of a single circumstance than the building of a house with a single brick."

This language is particularly applicable to the first complaint of counsel on this subject.

The autopsy held by the coroner developed that he found a healthy fœtus, which must have been alive up to the time of the mother's death. This is claimed to be error because no mention is made of the murder of an unborn child in the indictment. We think the existence of the fœtus conduces to furnish a motive for the killing; its age would show the necessity for immediate action if relief was to be afforded or concealment made longer possible. Moreover, it appears that where death is caused by hemorrage, there is less flow of blood in cases where the subject is pregnant, owing to the mysterious effort of nature to maintain the life of the fœtus; and this question of the quantity of blood found about the body affects the very jurisdiction of the court trying the case, as upon it depends chiefly the solution of the question whether the decapitation occurred during life, and at the spot where the body was found.

Serious complaint is urged against the competency of Mayor Caldwell's testimony to the extent particularly that the witness gave any conversation between Jackson and Walling after their arrest. The point of the objection can be understood the better by quoting from the bill of evidence.

"A.—Mr. Jackson was asked about the satchel, and he said he had left the satchel at Mr. Legner's saloon across the street from where he roomed. When asked why he brought that satchel out he said he wanted to loan it to a young doctor, whose name I do not remember, and he intended taking it to the college to give it to him, but he did not give it to him, and finally admitted that it was Pearl Bryan's satchel. Walling then repeated, 'I want to say in the meantime, in one of these conversations, we had told both these young men that they did not have to make any confessions to any person; that they were at perfect liberty to refuse to answer any and all questions that were asked them.' Walling then stated in his presence that when Mr. Jackson came back from his holiday vacation he took him into the corner of his room on Ninth street, where they roomed, and told him that he was in trouble with Pearl Bryan, and that he intended to kill her. When asked how, he says: 'I propose to get a room, take her to the room and give her some quick poison and leave her there.' Then again, he says, he changed, and said: 'No, I will cut her up into pieces and take the pieces and deposit them in different places about the city.' On this evening he said that he saw Pearl Bryan at the postoffice, and I believe that was Thursday evening instead of Wednesday evening. He said that Jackson had made arrangements to take her over to Bellevue (I think it was) or over at the sand-bar or some place and then kill her, take her head off and bury her. He said that Jackson asked of the physicians as to the effects of the different kinds of poisons and that he had a standard medical dictionary in his room studying the effects of poisons, and that he asked one physician particularly as to the effects of cocaine, and he said that Jackson went to Sixth street to a pharmacist and got cocaine, and he brought it back and he said there was a level teaspoonful—a small teaspooful as he described it; that he poured it out and dissolved it in two teaspoonfuls of water and put it in a bottle, as he said, to give her to paralyze her vocal organs or throat, and then cut her head off. Jackson turned to 'Wally' as he called him at this time, and he says: 'Wally, why do you talk that way? You know you are not telling the truth; you know that you killed Pearl Bryan,' whereupon Walling says: 'No, you know that you killed her, and why don't you tell where her head is?' Then, when Jackson was asked where Peal Bryan's head was, he says, 'I don't know;

Wally says he threw it overboard.' Then he (Jackson) said that they took her clothes and made one or two trips, I don't remember, to the river, and threw part of them over into the river and some into the sewers, but he could not tell where. Mr. Jackson then said that there was a bundle that he had given Walling; that Walling had a bundle and asked him what he did with it. Walling says that bundle is up in my locker at the college. The bundle was sent for and brought into their presence, and it was a pair of pantaloons which Jackson identified as his, but said that he hadn't seen them for some time; that Walling must have worn them, and thereupon I asked them as to where the other clothes were, whereupon Walling says: 'Jackson, why don't you tell him where those things are; you might just as well do it now as any time?' Whereupon Jackson said that on the Saturday, I believe it was, that they were walking up Plum street with the bundles, that they met there some young physician or dental student coming toward them in an opposite direction, when they changed around and went down Plum and out Ninth. Jackson, as he said, went in Little Richmond street, and emerged from that, after the other man had passed, and came back down Plum to Ninth, from Ninth to Richmond, and out Richmond street westward, where he threw the bundle in one of the manholes or sewers, but he could not state which. The sewers were drained or searched and the bundle brought to the department and Mr. Jackson identified it as his coat, first denying that it was his; said it was Walling's, but afterwards admitted that it was his coat, but that Walling must have worn it. There were several conversations of this character, one time Walling accusing Jackson of killing the girl, then Jackson accusing Walling of killing her."

It is altogether clear that the statements of both Jackson and Walling were made voluntarily, and are free from the suspicion of having been procured by promises or threats. It follows, therefore, indisputably that Jackson's statements are competent. These, however, without the corresponding portions of the conversation, as made up by Walling's statements, would be unintelligible. The whole must be taken in order to get the sense of it.

Here Walling discloses where a bundle is—a bloody coat—and it is found where he locates it. Jackson also tells where a bundle is—a pair of pantaloons, muddy and bloody—and the bundle is found where he locates it. There is no confession by either party, and no admission of any fact intended to be inculpatory. The conversation was voluntarily entered into by each party to it, and we think the whole of it was competent; but on the following day the court said to the jury: "When upon yesterday I permitted Judge Caldwell to detail to you what Walling had stated concerning the conduct and statements of Jackson to him in Jackson's presence, it was done and admitted to you as testimony in this case for the sole purpose of your determining from what Jackson said, or his conduct at the time, in Judge Caldwell's presence, whether he admitted or denied the statements made by Walling; and you will determine, from all the testimony you hear in this case, whether or not Jackson, by his conduct, expressly or impliedly admitted or denied what Walling said."

We are not satisfied that it was proper to thus limit this testimony. On the contrary, it would seem that those portions of Walling's statements which Jackson did not deny, or, in other words, remained silent about, were the portions which were incompetent, if any were. This is true because Jackson was not called on, or it was not incumbent on him to speak at all. He had the right to remain silent when charged with the crime, and guilt is not to be imputed to him by reason of that silence.

As we have seen, however, he did not remain silent, but voluntarily entered into the conversation, denying every imputation of guilt. Later on the witness, Crim, was testifying to conversations between Jackson and Walling and the officers, and testified that Walling said that the Saturday before the arrest he met Jackson in Cincinnati with a Penny Post in his hand; that Jackson told him "they had something to work on; that if it were not for those damned shoes we would be all right;" and further said that "I see the detectives have gone to Greencastle, and it looks damned blue." In response to this Jackson answered: "It is not true, and you know it is not true, Walling." Thereupon the court said to the jury: "You are to disregard every statement this witness has detailed that Walling made, which Jackson denied the truth of. I take this occasion now to charge you further that you will do the same as to all the testimony that Judge Caldwell gave as to what Walling said upon this same occasion, to which Jackson answered, 'Walling, you know you are not telling the truth.' All that testimony you will disregard, and will not consider it in coming to a conclusion in this case."

Still later in the trial, and after the defendant had testified minutely as to these conversations and his conduct and manner toward Walling, the witnesses, Caldwell, Crim, Deitsch and others, were brought back in rebuttal, and were allowed to testify to the manner of Jackson's denial of Walling's statements, the court saying: "The court now tells the jury that for the purpose of rebutting the testimony of Scott Jackson, and for that purpose only, the jury will consider statements made by Chief Deitsch, Mayor Caldwell, Cal Crim, McDermott, Julius Plummer and Mr. Poock, in reference to conversations that they detailed between Walling and Jackson, in the presence of Chief Deitsch and Mayor Caldwell, in reference to what Jackson had said to Walling when in Jackson's room and Jackson's denial of it;" and finally, in a written instruction (No. 13), the court told the jury that "all the evidence offered by the Commonwealth as to any statement of Alonzo Walling, the truth of which the defendant, Scott Jackson, denied, and, as to the manner and language of the denial, are to be considered by them solely in rebutting the defendant's testimony thereto—that is, to contradict, weaken or explain Scott Jackson's statements in reference thereto, and not as testimony upon which to find him guilty. The defendant's own statements of what Alonzo Walling said, and the language and manner of his denial, are before the jury for every purpose."

As in all the conversations Jackson did in fact deny the truth of every charge looking to his guilt made by Walling, the effect of the court's ruling was to exclude from the jury all that Walling said to Jackson's detriment, except as affecting his own statements on the stand with respect thereto. This we have seen was more favorable to him than he had the right to demand.

We are of the opinion further, in view of the fact that cocaine was found in the stomach of the dead girl, and that the accused had inquired into its effects, that the witness, Cullen, was properly allowed to state the use of this drug in the production of abortion and its effects on the system.

It is insisted that the witness, Poock, was allowed to testify what Jackson said in his presence after his arrest without it being first shown the circumstances surrounding the statement were proper.

It is clear, however, that in no case was any statement of the accused admitted without a full opportunity for a preliminary examination and until the court was satisfied that the statement was voluntarily made.

Complaint is also made that questions intimating other acts of doubtful propriety on the part of Jackson, and touching matters wholly foreign to the trial were, allowed to be asked. Objection to these, however, was sustained and counsel cautioned not to indulge in such conduct further.

We think, too, that the various acts of Walling during the week preceding the death of the girl and after her arrival in Cincinnati were properly shown by the proof of Rogers, Martin, Skidmore and others. These acts were "single bricks in the building," and Jackson was shown to have been closely connected with them. So, too, we think competent the conversation between Jackson and Walling when confined in the "sensitive" cell. The talk was wholly voluntary. Nor do we think incompetent the testimony of the negro witnesses who were introduced in person by the State after their depositions taken for the defense had been read. The jury heard each statement.

Many other rulings of the court touching the admission and rejection of testimony are complained of, but the decision of the court in each case is easily sustained on principles already announced. The instructions of the court have been examined carefully and need no extended comment. The first is on the theory that Jackson did the cutting and killing; the second that Walling did this and that Jackson aided and abetted him; the third we quote in full: "If the jury believe from all the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant, Scott Jackson, willfully, feloniously and with malice aforethought, himself attempted or aided or abetted or procured another to attempt to kill Pearl Bryan, but she was not thereby killed, and that said Scott Jackson, in this county and State, before the 14th day of February, 1896, though believing said Pearl Bryan was then dead, for whatever purpose, cut her throat with a knife or other sharp instrument so that she did then and there, and because thereof die, they will find said Scott Jackson guilty of murder."

The conclusion is fairly deducible from certain portions of the testimony that an attempt was made to kill the girl by the administration of cocaine while in Cincinnati, and that this was done by the defendant or at his instance, but that she was not thereby killed. It is to be remembered that, according to the testimony of Jackson, he did not see the girl in life after Wednesday, and, according to Walling, he did not see her after that day; but the proof conduces to show that they were both with her Friday night when she was in the cab, and that they brought her over to Campbell county.

If she was then dead, as might be supposed from her making no outcry, a verdict of guilty could not have been rendered; but if she was then alive, though appearing to be dead, and by the cutting of her throat she was killed while in Campbell county, then the jury might find a verdict of guilty, although the cutting off of the head was merely for the purpose of destroying the chances for identification or for any other purpose. At last, the instruction does not authorize a verdict of conviction unless Jackson is shown to have cut off the head of his victim in Campbell county—and whilst she was in fact alive—and if he did this, he was guilty of murder, though believing her already dead, if the act succeeded and was but a part of the felonious attempt to kill her in Cincinnati.

Some of the facts on which this instruction is based do not appear as distinctly in proof as others, but there is some basis for the hypothesis put, and the whole arises naturally out of the circumstances in evidence.

The fourth is the same instruction, with Jackson as an abettor and Walling as principal.

The fifth is based on the theory that Jackson feloniously administered, or procured another to administer, drugs to Pearl Bryan, for the purpose of producing an abortion, when she was so far gone with child as to make it necessarily dangerous to her life, or when the drugs were in themselves, or in the manner of their administration, dangerous to her life; and, though believing her to have been killed in this way, he cut her head off in Campbell county when she was in fact alive, yet he was guilty of murder.

The sixth is identical with the fifth, save that appellant is treated as an abettor and Walling as principal.

Keeping in mind the purpose for which, as appears from the proof, the girl was brought to Cincinnati, the fact that cocaine was found in her stomach and the defendants' inquiries with respect thereto, we think these instructions fairly suggested by the proof and embody correct principles of law.

The seventh and eighth are with reference to voluntary manslaughter, and are not seriously objected to.

The ninth also authorizes a verdict of voluntary manslaughter, and is fashioned after the fifth, with the exception of the words "she not being then so far gone with child as to make the same necessarily dangerous, etc.;" and the tenth is like the sixth, with the exception of the above words. Our disposition of the fifth and sixth, therefore, disposes of the ninth and tenth.

The eleventh was on the subject of involuntary manslaughter, and authorized such a finding if Jackson cut the throat of Pearl Bryan in Campbell county, under the belief that she was already dead, and did so, not intending to kill her, but merely for the purpose of concealing her identity, unless he had theretofore himself attempted to kill her, or procured another to so attempt, or had administered drugs, or procured another to do so, for the purpose of producing an abortion, in which event they were to "find as elsewhere instructed;" meaning, it is evident, that if the attempt was to kill her, or if the drugs were administered when dangerous to her life, he was still guilty of murder, as theretofore defined, or of voluntary manslaughter, if the drugs were administered when not dangerous.

The twelfth is the same, except that the accused is treated as an abettor and Walling as principal.

The thirteenth, we have already seen, is a limitation on the scope of certain testimony, and is unobjectionable.

The succeeding instructions are the usual ones on reasonable doubt, presumption of innocence, etc., and substantially embrace those asked for by appellant on these subjects.

Complaint is made that counsel for the State referred in his argument to the state of public sentiment in the case, but what was said on this subject was wholly in response to statements of counsel for the defense on the same subject, and was presently stopped by the court.

The references to the Webster-Parkman case and to the Durant case were merely historical allusions to celebrated cases of circumstantial evidence, and can not be said to have been an improper argument or furnish ground for reversal.

Upon the whole case we are convinced that the accused has had a fair and impartial trial. If upon his arrest and when first confronted with the charge of having committed so horrid a crime he was so disconcerted—as he might naturally be even if ever so innocent—as to tell an incoherent and contradictory story of his connection with it, yet when time had been given to come to himself he seems not to have availed himself of the opportunity to tell a story at all compatable with that of an innocent man, or even of one who had committed a grave error by inadvertence, ignorance or mistake.

The explanation of his damaging letter to Wood, his claim of utter ignogrance of the whereabouts of Pearl Bryan after Wednesday, and his claim of failure to even inquire where she was or what success had attended the plan for her relief, his reasons for disposing of the satchel and other effects of the dead girl, are all improbable stories, and it is not to be wondered at that the jury could not accept his statements as true.

The judgment must be affirmed.

The court delivered the following response to petition for rehearing February 13, 1897:

With great earnestness, force and plausibility two contentions are made by the petitions for rehearing in this case and in the case of Walling v. Commonwealth:

1st. That no facts which occurred in the foreign jurisdiction of Ohio can be tacked on to facts which occurred in Kentucky for the purpose of supplying the elements necessary to constitute the crime of murder in Kentucky.

2d. (And this appears to be the point chiefly relied on) That in giving its instructions to the jury the trial court is not authorized to refer to any fact which occurred in the foreign jurisdiction. Other suggestions are made in the petitions, but in our judgment do not require specific response.

These two contentions may be considered together, as the first is necessarily raised and considered in the decision of the second, and so treated in the petition.

Reduced to its lowest terms, the claim of counsel is that an attempt to commit a murder in another State, supposed by the guilty party to have been there successful, but in reality completed in this State, though by an act not by him believed to be the consummation of his purpose, is not in this State punishable.

Such is not nor should it be the law. By the law of this State a crime is punishable in the jurisdiction in which it has effect. Statutes in numbers have been passed by the general assembly of this Commonwealth providing that jurisdiction should be had of crimes in the county in which the crime became effectual. (Chapter 36, article 2, Kentucky Statutes.) Such we believe to have been the common law before such enactments.

Assuming that what the jury found was true, in what State or district could the crime be punished? If not here, where? If we concede the claims of counsel for appellants no serious crime was committed in Ohio. Nothing was there done but an ineffective attempt to murder. None was committed here. What was done in this jurdiction was only the mutilation of a supposed corpse, and yet the fact, established by overwhelming testimony, remains that the crime has been committed. Not all the refinements of counsel can lead us from the conclusion that, when a crime has been completed the result of which is a death in this Commonwealth, we can take jurisdiction of the offense.

Not for a moment can we admit as law the logical conclusion of counsel's argument, namely, that there is a variety of murder, which, by reason of error in its commission, is not anywhere in any jurisdiction punishable; not in Ohio, for the reason that the attempt there made was not successful; not in Kentucky, for the reason that the act there done, and which accomplished and completed the actual killing, was done upon the supposition that the murder had already been accomplished.

One reliance of the defense upon petition for rehearing is that the indictment charges murder by cutting the throat or decapitation, and that the instructions permit and require the jury to consider a previous attempt to kill in a foreign State and by different means. But in our opinion it was not error in the instructions to present to the jury evidential facts which, if found to be true, showed the criminal nature of the act by which the offense was completed.

We see no good reason why we should not consider the motive which inspired an attempted crime in another sovereignty, and the circumstances of the attempt, with the view to determine the character, criminal or not, of the ultimate fact which took place in this sovereignty; nor is such a determination an invasion of the constitutional right of the accused to a speedy "public trial by an impartial jury of the vicinage." For the accused himself selected the vicinage in which the final act occurred, and thus himself gave jurisdiction to the court which determined the criminal character of that act. Nor can we consider as serious the contention that the ruling of the trial court, approved by the opinion in this case, is punishment in Kentucky of an offense committed in another jurisdiction, and there again punishable, so as to come within the constitutional inhibition against a citizen being twice put in jeopardy. On counsel's own contention no completed crime existed in Ohio, and the crime committed, if punishable under this State's law, can not further or again be punished there.

The objections made to the ticket system of admission to the courtroom during the trial are also insisted on in the petition for rehearing. It is objected that it was impossible for any friend of the appellant to be present during the trial, and that, therefore, the appellant was denied an open public trial; but it has not been attempted to be shown that any friend of the appellant in either case was excluded from the courtroom.

With regard to the objections to the accusatory statements of Walling, made in the presence of Mayor Caldwell, we need only say that they were excluded from the consideration of the jury, except in so far as they tended to contradict, weaken or explain Jackson's own statements in regard to the same conversation.

We have carefully examined the immense mass of testimony in the case, and see no error to the prejudice of any substantial right of the appellant.

The petition for rehearing is overruled.

TARVIN & HALL V. TIMBERLAKE, &C.

(Filed January 7, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Burden of proof—The court having required the plaintiff to first produce their evidence upon the idea that the burden of proof was upon them, it would have been error to deny to them the right to conclude the argument to the jury; therefore, if there was an error in that respect it was in placing upon the plaintiffs the burden of proof at the outset.

2. Same--Attorney and client--Where an attorney has collected money for his client, a part of which he refuses to pay over, claiming it as a fee, in an action by the client against him to recover the money thus retained, in which the only issue is whether the defendant is entitled to retain all or only a part of the money, the burden is upon the plaintiff, as he can not recover any part of the money without proving what part he is entitled to, and would, therefore, "be defeated if no evidence were given on either side."

S. D. Rouse and R. E. Simmons for appellants.

D. A. Glenn for appellees.

Appeal from Kenton Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Lewis.

Appellants, having received the purchase money of real property sold by appellees, retained and refused to pay over $800 thereof, which they claimed and charged as their proper fee for services in investigating and instituting certain proceedings to make the title good to the purchaser.

In this action by appellees to recover that sum, less amount of reasonable fee, the verdict of the jury was for $300; and the only ground now relied upon for reversal is that the lower court erred in ruling the burden of proof was upon plaintiffs, now appellees.

Having been required under that ruling to first produce their evidence, it would, as heretofore held by this court, have been error to deprive appellees of the right to conclude the argument to the jury. (O'Connor v. Henderson Bridge Co., 95 Ky., 633). So the inquiry is whether it was error at the outset to put the burden of proof upon appellees.

Section 526 provides: "The burthen of proof in the whole action lies on the party who would be defeated if no evidence were given on either side." And such, of course, must be the test in every case like the present, when there is no shifting of the issue.

There was no dispute about the right of appellants to collect the purchase money, nor as to their right to retain a part thereof as fee for their services; but the simple issue was how much thereof, if any, appellees were entitled to recover back. As, therefore, appellants legally and rightfully acquired possession of the money, appellees could not recover it, or any part of it, without proving what part she was entitled to, and of course they would, in the language of the Civil Code, "be defeated if no evidence were given on either side."

In our opinion the ruling of the lower court in question was not erroneous, nor do we perceive error in any other respect.

Judgment affirmed.

The Kentucky Law Reporter.

EDITOR:
WALTER G. CHAPMAN, ... Frankfort, Ky.

VOL. 18. APRIL 15, 1897. No. 20

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

COMBS, &c. v. BREATHITT COUNTY.

SAME v. SAME.

SAME v. SAME.

SAME v. SAME.

(Filed December 10, 1896—Not to be reported.)

1. County levy bond—Pleading—In a suit by a county upon a bond executed by the sheriff for the collection of a special tax, although the act providing for the tax required that the bond should be "approved by the county judge and a majority of the justices of the peace," it was sufficient to aver in the petition that the bond was accepted and approved by the court, for while the court must speak by its records, a record will be presumed upon demurrer; and the fact that the county judge endorsed his approval upon the bond does not negative the presumption that there was an order of approval by the whole court.

2. Same—Although the covenants of the bond are not specifically set out in the petition, the pleading must be held good after judgment, the defendants having filed a special demurrer, but no general demurrer. Besides, the bond being referred to as part of the pleading, "as if fully set out," must be held to aid in some degree the averments of the petition.

3. Verification of pleading—The county judge was the proper person to verify the petition under the rule awarded requiring a verification of the pleading.

4. The judgment was properly rendered without the intervention of a jury or the introduction of proof, as might have been necessary if the proceeding had been summary in its nature.

5. The suit was properly brought in the name of the county, although the covenant was to the Commonwealth, the county being the real party in interest.

6. One who was appointed by the fiscal court to receive the money from the sheriff will be presumed to have accepted the appointment, as he in fact undertook the duties imposed on him and demanded the money.

7. Clerical misprision—The rendition of judgment against defendants for a few dollars more than the prayer of the petition authorized was a clerical misprision, and must be corrected by motion in the lower court.

8. Pleading—The petition admitting a credit of "$—," the defendants can not complain that the blank was not filled and the credit allowed, as they did not ask that this be done.

9. Liability of sureties on county levy bond—Even if the court could presume from the date at which a county levy bond was executed that the sheriff had already collected the county levy, yet as the undertaking was also that the sheriff would "pay over," and this, it is averred, he has not done, the sureties are liable.

J. J. C. Bach for appellants.

Edward W. Hines, J. B. Marcum, T. T. Cope and S. H. Patrick for appellee.

Appeal from Breathitt Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hazelrigg.

These cases are alike in their main features, and, for that reason, are heard together. They are suits by the county of Breathitt against the sheriff and his sureties for revenues due the county for the years 1890, 1893 and 1894, and which, it is alleged, were collected by that officer and not paid over. To none of the suits were any answers filed or offered to be filed.

In the case first named (444), in which special taxes levied for building a courthouse are involved, a special demurrer, for want of parties plaintiff, was overruled, and, no other pleading being filed by the defendants and no other defense being shown, judgment was rendered in accordance with the prayer of the petition.

It is now urged as a fatal objection to the petition that it does not aver that the bond was "approved by the county judge and a majority of the justices of said court," as was required should be done under the special act under which these taxes were levied.

The petition, however, does aver that the bond "was signed and delivered to the judge of the county court in open court, and was accepted and approved by the said court at its ——— term, 18—, and a copy of it was filed and made part of the pleadings, as if fully set out." At the foot of the bond appeared this endorsement: "Approved in open court this 10th day March, 1890," which endorsement was signed by the county judge.

A county court must speak by its records, as is argued by counsel, but, as held in Commonwealth v. Davis, 9 B. M., 128, the record will be presumed on demurrer, when the bond bears on its face the characteristics of an official bond. Here the written statement of the county judge does not negative the presumption that there was an order of approval by the full court, as the special law required, but rather strengthens it. However, as argued by counsel for the State, and as held in the case heretofore cited, the bond is good as a common-law obligation without such order, nothing appearing to the contrary.

It is also urged that the petition fails to set out the covenants of the bond; and it is true that the bond is referred to only in a general way, though made part of the pleading, "as if fully set out."

The bond is alleged to have been executed "for the collection of the ad valorem tax of said county for the year 1890;" and it is further alleged that the "sheriff has violated and broken the covenants of said bond by having failed and refused to pay said $1,003.07."

A bond executed "for the collection" of the county levy means that the obligor undertakes to collect that levy, and if a failure to pay it over be a breach of the bond it must be because the bond requires the obligor to so pay it. At any rate the same strictness will not be followed by this court in the construction of pleadings after judgment, and when the party appears and files a special demurrer, but does not raise the question involved by a general demurrer. Besides, the bond was referred to as part of the pleading as if fully set out, and must be held to aid in some degree the averments of the petition. (Totten v. Cooke, 2 Met., 279.)

It would seem to be entirely clear that the county judge was the proper person to verify the petition under the rule awarded requiring a verification of the pleading (Estill county v. Richmond, &c., R. R. Co., 91 Ky., 349); and it is equally clear that the judgment was properly rendered without the intervention of a jury, or the introduction of proof, as might have been necessary if the proceeding had been summary in its nature.

The special demurrer was properly overruled, as the county was the real party in interest. Hagin's acceptance of his appointment by the fiscal court to receive the money from the sheriff will be presumed, as he in fact undertook the duties imposed on him, and demanded the money.

The foregoing applies in the main to all the cases. In the second-named case (436) it is also urged that the judgment is not rendered for the exact amount named in the prayer of the petition. The prayer is for $1,582.16, with interest from January 1, 1894, and judgment is for $1,953.03, with interest from January 1, 1894, less $218.75 as of April 9, 1894, $75 as of June 15, 1894, and $78.12 commissions.

There would seem to be a judgment for a few dollars more against the defendants than the prayer authorized; but, if so, it is a clerical misprision, and must be corrected by motion in the lower court. Again, if the defendants desired the blank space left in the petition for an additional credit to be filled, it was their duty to make known that fact to the court; otherwise this court will presume the defendants not entitled to further credit, or the amount was so small as not to be worthy of notice.

In case No 438 it is insisted that as the bond was not executed until on June 7, 1894, for the collection of the county levy of 1894, the sheriff may have already collected the levy, and hence the sureties can not be held liable. The petition, however, in this case avers that by this bond the obligors covenanted that the sheriff "would well and truly collect, account for and pay over to the persons entitled to receive the same, according to law, the county levy and public dues of the county of Breathitt for the year 1894, etc."

Therefore, even if the revenue for the year 1894 had already been collected, there was an undertaking that the sheriff would pay it over, and this, it is averred, he has not done, although a settlement of his accounts had been made by a commissioner appointed for that purpose, and the amount demanded of him.

In No. 439 the judgment appears to be for less than the prayer authorized, and if commissions are not allowed it was because they were not asked for by the defendants.

Judgment in all the cases affirmed.

The court delivered the following response to a petition for rehearing, February 13, 1897:

It is still insisted, as urged in the original brief of counsel for appellants and which we then fully considered, that because the petition averred that the bond sued on was for the collection of the ad valorem tax, and the copy of the bond filed showed it was a covenant to collect and pay over the county levy and public dues of the county, there could be no recovery.

The bond filed purports to be the "sheriff's bond for collection of county ad valorem." We considered the question from the standpoint argued by appellant's counsel, and we still think the sureties liable for the reasons indicated heretofore; but if not, still the sureties on the bond sued on, executed on March 10, 1890, as averred in the petition and as shown by the date of the bond, are liable for the taxes collected for courthouse purposes under the provisions of the general law, without reference to any special act authorizing such a levy. (Sections 6 and 7, chapter 89, General Statutes.)

Petition overruled.

WALLING V. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed December 12, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Evidence—Prejudicial errors—Testimony may be technically competent, but when its rejection below is urged as a ground of reversal the circumstances surrounding it may be such that this court may be entirely satisfied of its worthlessness as a factor in the trial, and where that is true the error in rejecting the testimony can not be said to affect the substantial rights of the accused, and, therefore, this court will not reverse on account of the error.

It being important for the accused to show that he had spent Thursday and not Friday night at a certain hotel, and he himself having testified that he had done so, the refusal of the court to permit him to prove by a friend that he had declared to him his intention of spending Thursday night at the hotel in question was not prejudicial, even if the declaration was competent as a part of the res gestæ, the court being convinced that its admission would not and ought not to have affected the verdict.

Other objections urged to the judgment are the same as those made in the case of Jackson v. Commonwealth (ante, 795), and the opinion in that case is referred to by the court for an answer to those objections.

George Washington for appellant.

W. S. Taylor and M. R. Lockhart for appellee.

Appeal from Campbell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hazelrigg.

The appellant was indicted for the murder of Pearl Bryan jointly with Scott Jackson, whose appeal has just been determined by this court, and on his trial below was likewise found guilty and sentenced to be hung.

The case has been gone over carefully, but a restatement of the facts is unnecessary. It is sufficient to say that Walling's connection with the movements of the girl during the week preceding her murder, and his attempts to dispose of her effects after that occurrance, are clearly established by the proof, to say nothing of the direct and conclusive testimony of the negro cab driver. The verdict, therefore, can not be disturbed for lack of evidence to support it. What we determined as to the sufficiency of the indictment and the correctness of the instructions in the Jackson case is conclusive of the same points here raised, and this ground need not be again considered.

We are also of the opinion in this as in that case that the conversations between Walling and Jackson when they were interrogated by the officers are competent, as well as the statements of the accused to the officers and newspaper reporters when Jackson was not present. These conversations and statements were freely and voluntarily made and entered into, and were not obtained by threats, promises or the like. In fact while Chief Deitsch did say to Walling in one of the talks that "it would be well for him to tell all he knew," yet no confessions were thereby obtained, or any statement intended to be at all inculpatory. Besides, the statements made at the time of the alleged promise or suggestion from the chief were afterwards excluded.

The objectionable remarks of the attorney representing the State with reference to the finding of napkins and tablecloths in Walling's trunk were not calculated to prejudice the accused or have the slightest bearing on the case. Besides, the remarks were denounced as improper by the trial court.

It is most seriously insisted that the rejection of a portion of Fred Albion's testimony was a prejudicial error. This witness was the intimate friend of Walling. He roomed in the same house, was his barber and companion. The valise of the dead girl was found in the barber shop where he worked and in his stand. The proof comes suspiciously near showing that he had some connection or at least some knowledge of the crime or of Jackson and Walling's connection with it. About the first thing said by Jackson to Walling in the "sensitive" cell was, "Fred is all right, ain't he?" He was not present at the trial, but by his deposition taken at some point in Ohio, when he was cross-examined, he proves that he was slightly acquainted with Walling, and was with him on Thursday night, January 30, visiting a number of places in the city in his company (Cincinnati) until about 1 o'clock, when he parted from him.

He then offered to testify, but the State's objection to it was sustained, that when he and Walling separated "Walling told him that he was going to stay at Heider's hotel all night," and that he was going to do so because "he had a fuss with Jackson."

The Commonwealth had shown in the Jackson case and in this that Walling came to Heider's on Friday night, the 31st, or rather on Saturday morning, at about 3 o'clock and stayed there the remainder of the night. This fact is established by Martin and Rogers, night waiter and clerk at the hotel, and circumstances are shown which render it certain that this was on Friday, the night of the murder, and not on Thursday night.

It seemed important, therefore, for the accused to explain away the circumstance of his being out on this night, or rather to contradict it outright, and he attempts to do so by himself testifying that it was Thursday night he stayed at Heider's, and by having his friend corroborate him by testifying to his declared intention of staying there on that night. The value of this declaration of intention, conceding it to have been competent on the ground that it was part of the res gestæ, depends on whether it was made by Walling in good faith and in the ordinary course of things, or was manufactured to meet an emergency, and the seeming necessity of rebutting the positive proof for the State. This, it is true, was not a question for the trial court, because if competent the declaration should have been admitted, but when this court is asked to nullify the trial below because it was not admitted, an inquiry into all the circumstances attending the alleged declaration, whether it was genuinely made and by whom it is proposed to show it was in fact made, becomes vital. Testimony may be technically competent, but when its rejection below is urged as a ground of reversal the circumstances surrounding it may be such as this court may be entirely satisfied of its worthlessness as a factor in the trial, and be convinced, as we are in this case with respect to the testimony offered, that its admission would not and ought not to have affected the verdict. To reverse the judgment below under such circumstances and when so convinced would be to do so on most unsubstantial and unsatisfactory grounds. We are not the triers of the facts, but we are authorized to determine what errors affect or do not affect the substantial rights of the accused.

Besides, if the appellant ever made such a declaration it is entirely satisfactorily established that he did not carry out his declared intention and stay at Heider's on Thursday night. As further discrediting the declaration the motive alleged to be assigned for staying there is shown to have been groundless and evidently the result of an afterthought. Walling had had no fuss with Jackson nor the semblance of one. On the contrary their intimacy continued as usual, even after the pretended suspicions of Walling on Wednesday.

Perceiving no errors of record prejudicial to the substantial rights of the appellant, the judgment below must be affirmed.

GARR, &C. V. BOSWELL, &C.

(Filed January 12, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Sale by joint tenants—Fraud—While one of several joint tenants has the right to sell his interest in land without consulting his co-tenants, and at any time and price he may choose, yet where, as in this case, the parties propose to sell together, and the act of one is dependent upon the act of the others, good conscience and fair dealing require that one should not undertake secretly to procure for himself more than it is understood and agreed each and all shall have; and, if he does so, the money thus fraudulently obtained should be divided between the parties, as the nominal consideration for the land was divided.

Thos. F. Hargis and Oscar Turner, jr., for appellants.

F. Hagan for appellees.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

The facts of this case sufficiently appear in the opinion of the Superior Court, delivered by Judge Barbour, which is as follows, to wit:

"In 1891 the appellants, Lucinda Garr, Dixie Garr, James Garr and Mrs. Beeler, and the appellees, Mrs. Boswell and Mrs. Blankenbaker, sold and, by a joint general warranty deed, conveyed to Daniel E. O'Sullivan about 20 acres of land in Jefferson county, in consideration of $700 per acre. The appellants, claiming that the appellees had, by a secret arrangement with O'Sullivan, received in addition to their shares, as described in the deed, the one $1,200 and the other $1,750 more than either of the others, brought this action to recover their respective proportions of this $2,950.

"Mrs. Garr, an old woman over seventy, had a life estate in the land—the interest of the others, who were her children, was the remainder in fee. Mrs. Garr, Dixie Garr and Mrs. Beeler and her husband lived as one family in the city of Louisville. Mrs. Boswell and her husband and Mrs. Blankenbaker and her husband had their respective homes in the same city. James Garr lived in Dakota.

"A park was about to be established in the neighborhood of this land. O'Sullivan offered $700 per acre for it if the owners would give him a perfect title. Mrs. Garr, Dixie Garr and Mrs. Beeler were willing to accept this offer if the others in interest would also accept it, and so expressed themselves to O'Sullivan. O'Sullivan then obtained this writing:

"'LOUISVILLE, June 1, 1891.

"'We, the undersigned, heirs at law of Mrs. L. J. Garr, do hereby give our consent to the sale of twenty acres of ground, more or less, situated on Chestnut street, near the river, in Jefferson county, Ky., provided the said sale is made at a price of not less than $700 per acre,' which was signed by Mrs. Beeler and her husband and Dixie Garr. He then endeavored to obtain the consent of Mrs. Boswell and Mrs. Blankenbaker, but they insisted upon better terms.

"We will have each of them to speak for themselves as to what occurred about this time. Mrs. Blankenbaker says her mother had spoken to her about selling the ground to the park commissioners. 'I never asked her any questions, and this was the last I saw of ma or knew of the thing until Mr. O'Sullivan came. When he came he told me he understood ma wanted to sell, and came to see if I was willing to sell my part, and he also brought an agreement with Beeler's and wife's and Dixie's names signed to it; and wanted to know if I would agree to let ma sell the property at $700 per acre. I said I would not sell my interest for that. He said the others are willing. I said they can sell it to you for what they want to; * * I won't sell for that money. After some talk he said if you will sign this agreement to let your mother sell for $700 an acre I will give you $500. I said no. He finally said I will give you $1,000 in cash if you will sign this. I said I would not take it, and would have to study the matter over. In a few days I wrote and offered to take $2,000, in addition to the $700 an acre. In a few days he came to see me and said, I can not give you $2,000, and I will have to go and tell your mother that you won't let her sell. I said hold on, Mr. O'Sullivan, I don't care to be considered the only black sheep; before I will let you go and tell mother that, I will take $1,750, and he said he would give me $1,750—$1,200 the day the deed was signed, and $550 with interest for a year. That is the only talk I ever had with O'Sullivan about the matter.'

"Never, in all the talks she had with her mother, did Mrs. Blankenbaker allude to her talk with O'Sullivan or say to her or any of the other appellants that she would not be willing to have the land sold for $700 per acre. She does say, though, 'I saw them several times after I signed the agreement, but I never said anything to any of them about the sale of the property. The only thing I said to ma was, are you satisfied? Do you think $700 an acre is enough for the ground? Ma seemed to get excited, and said that is as much as Hiram got and as Dixie got. That was after we had signed the agreement. She never asked me anything, and I never said anything.' It is passing strange if she was dealing fairly that she did not then tell her mother what she was getting.

"Mrs. Boswell, after speaking of the efforts of others to buy the land, said O'Sullivan came to see her and her husband in regard to 'mother's dower, and said she was anxious to sell, and the rest were willing, and had signed a contract to sell. I told him that was none of my lookout, and that the price was too low; that I was looking out for myself. He said that if we would make a good deed for the ground the day of the sale he would give us $1,000, and would give my husband second superintendent of the park down there. My husband said he would study over it. So when he came back we asked him $1,200. In the meantime mother had never come to consult me about the matter. So when Mr. O'Sullivan came I said it is funny the park commissioners want that land. He said they don't want it; I want it to speculate on. After he left I went down and told ma there is no park commissioners want the ground; it is Mr. O'Sullivan—he told me himself he wanted it to speculate on. In the meantime, after they had all signed it and O'Sullivan had agreed to give us $1,200, there was some trouble about a tenant on the place that was wanted to be gotten off. I refused to give one cent to get him off. In the meantime she (the mother) gave to O'Sullivan, unbeknown to any one, to send on the deed to James Garr. When the deed came back she sent for me, and said the deed has come. I said what deed. She said the deed to the ground. I said that deed is not drawn up right. She said if he buys you out he don't want to wait for the deed. I said he will have to wait for a new deed. She said you and Annie (Mrs. Blankenbaker) will fool around until O'Sullivan won't wait any longer. You will not have another chance to sell that ground;' and still she never told her mother how anxious O'Sullivan was to buy it, and what inducements he had offered to her to get her to consent to the sale.

"The result of all this maneuvering was that Boswell and wife and Blankenbaker and wife signed the writing, dated June 1, 1891, and Mrs. Garr in writing agreed to sell for the $700. About this time Boswell and wife saw Mr. Watts, an attorney, and Mr. Watts wrote to James Garr in Dakota his first letter, which miscarried. On the 12th of June he wrote another letter, in which he said: 'Enclosed is a power of attorney, which is given to your mother for the purpose of enabling her to make a deed in your name, etc. Your mother and the people generally are offered $700 per acre for the nineteen-acre tract. It is quite a good figure for the property, and all are anxious to accept it as soon as possible. In order to do so there must be a good deed given, and, to do that, some one must represent you. * * * I am employed to represent the whole family in arranging this matter. * * * The land is only bringing this figure because a syndicate has thought there is a speck in it. Unless closed shortly it will go back to its old price. The sale, so your people say, is to be one-third cash, the balance in one and two years.'

"That Watts was acting as Mrs. Boswell's attorney in this matter is plain. He says, as to the information conveyed in this letter, 'I got it from Mrs. Garr and Boswell and wife, and Mrs. Garr, at that time, was more anxious to get it through than Boswell.' He further says: 'Mrs. Boswell asked me if I thought $700 was a reasonable price, and said she was going to try to get more, and I advised her if she took more everybody else ought to get the same; and think I advised her that everybody would be entitled to the same under a general rule.' He says, however, that he never knew how much she was to receive until O'Sullivan's attorney paid him the money for her.

"About this time the appellants and the appellees, with perhaps the exception of James Garr, drew up a writing—which seems to have been lost— the substance of which, as proven by the witnesses, was that the amount received from the land was to be invested, and Mrs. Garr was to receive the interest upon it during her life; but they afterwards agreed that Mrs. Garr should have absolutely the value of her life estate in money—this value was fixed at $2,500, and they entered into this agreement, dated August 21, 1891: 'Whereas, Lucinda Garr is entitled to an interest in the estate, etc.; and, whereas, the said parties, and all of them hereto, are about to and intend to sell said property to O'Sullivan, and desire to pay to Lucinda Garr the value of her interest, now it is agreed that she shall have $2,500, each of the five heirs to pay the one-fifth of said $2,500, or $500 out of their share, and Lucinda Garr accepts said sum and releases all claim, etc. The parties hereto agree that there is to be received from the sale of said property one-third cash, and the balance in one and two years;' and the writing then provides for an equal division of the cash and notes among the five children.

"In the meantime the deed had been drawn up and O'Sullivan had sent it to James Garr, who signed and acknowledged it, and returned it to his mother.

"James Garr had refused to sign the power of attorney sent to him by Mr. Watts. In O'Sullivan's letter to James Garr, which accompanied the deed, he said: 'Your sister has sent you full information about the proposed purchase of your mother's property. It was necessary to gain your consent before the sale could be made. From your letters, however, I would judge that you do not understand entirely the situation here. There is about 20 acres. I have offered your mother $700 an acre for this property, which would come to a little less than $14,000. She has agreed to sell at that price, and all the other heirs except yourself have signed a contract to that effect. It is necessary to have your signature before anything can be accomplished. * * It may seem that you are working in the dark away out there in regard to the property, but, after the sale is made, neither the notes nor the money can be touched without your consent, so you are perfectly protected by the law, even if your mother and sisters wanted to take advantage of you, which they do not. Your mother has acted on the advice of her relatives and friends—$700 is a good price for the property.'

"After James Garr returned the deed the other parties, Boswell and wife, with their attorney, Mr. Watts, Blankenbaker and wife, with their attorney, Mr. Parks, and Mrs. Garr, Dixie Garr, and Beeler and wife, met at Judge Hargis' law office—Judge Hargis was O'Sullivan's attorney—and executed the deed, when the cash payment was made and the notes for the deferred payments executed, as provided in the deed. After this was done Mr. Watts and Mr. Parks—no one else being present—received from Judge Hargis the bonus O'Sullivan had agreed to pay—Mrs. Boswell receiving $1,200 in cash and Mrs. Blankenbaker receiving $1,200 in cash and O'Sullivan's note for $550. Mrs. Garr, Dixie Garr and Mrs. Beeler were kept in absolute ignorance of this matter.

"Some idea of this proceeding may be gathered from Mr. Watts' evidence. He says he didn't count the money Judge Hargis handed him, saying that he was perfectly content in receiving it blindly. 'I thought the other side could not afford to beat us;' and again: 'If everything was open and above board I should probably have counted it, because there was no reason ——.'

"Question.—'What (was asked him) was under board on that occasion?'

"Answer.—'Simply I was sent into a room to get money when no one else was around except maybe Mr. Parks.'

"We have only stated the evidence of Mrs. Boswell, Mrs. Blankenbaker and Mr. Watts. That their testimony, independent of all the damaging facts and circumstances testified to by other witnesses, establishes a clear case of fraud we think can admit of no question. We concede the right of one joint tenant to sell his interest in land without consulting his co-tenants, and at any time and price he may choose. But where, as in this case, the parties propose to sell together, and the act of one is dependent upon the act of the others, good conscience and fair dealing require that one should not undertake secretly to procure for himself more than it is understood and agreed each and all shall have.

"The fact that those who do not participate in the secret arrangement receive what they were, with the lights before them, willing to take can not affect the question. The property in a great measure possessed a mere speculative value, and it was not so much a question as to its actual value as it was a question as to what was the best price they could get for it.

"In such a case, considering the relationship existing between the parties--the fact that they were selling for the best interest of all—each had the right to have the opinion and to rely upon the judgment of the others, and it was a most unconscionable deception for two of them to hold out the impression that they were willing and were taking the price named in the deed, when they were in fact each receiving almost double what any of the others were receiving. They knew that O'Sullivan was willing to give more than $700 per acre. This excess they proposed to sequestrate themselves, recognizing the fact that the less their mother and the other children would be willing to take the more they would be able to get.

"The money thus fraudulently obtained should be divided between the parties as the nominal consideration for the land was divided.

"The judgment is reversed and the cause remaded, with directions to enter a judgment to conform to this opinion."

We concur in the conclusions reached by the Superior Court.

Wherefore, the judgment of the Jefferson Circuit Court is reversed, with directions that a judgment be entered in accordance with this opinion.

SMITH V. CORNETT.

(Filed January 15, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Ejectment—Uncertain verdict and judgment—In this action for the recovery of land, a verdict finding "for the plaintiff and twenty-five dollars for damages" is "not sustained by the law" because it is not sufficiently clear under the pleadings and proof what the jury intended to award the plaintiff.

2. Same—Judgment upon the verdict for the recovery of "the boundary of land fully set forth in the petition" is erroneous, because it does not describe or identify the land.

3. Evidence—It was error to allow witnesses to testify as to statements made to them as to the location of lines or corners by persons who were still living.

4. Same—Assignment of deeds—The assignment of a deed to one of plaintiff's remote vendors did not pass any title to the assignee except an equitable title, and such assigned deed, if competent at all as evidence, was competent only for the purpose of showing the boundary claimed.

5. It was within the sound discretion of the court to allow or disallow the filing of a special plea offered by defendant, and at the time it was offered it was no abuse of discretion to refuse to permit it to be filed; but upon the return of the case defendant should be allowed to file the plea.

6. Undue haste in completing trial—If the facts are as stated in the grounds for a new trial, there was undue haste in completing the trial, as the members of the jury should have been given time to attend to their horses and to get supper, if it was important to complete the trial that night or day; and unless it was important to go on with the trial it should have been adjourned until the next day.

7. Instructions—The court erred in giving an instruction which left the jury the sole judges of both the law and the facts.

D. D. Fields, John L. Scott & Son and Dishman & Hays for appellant.

Thomas H. Hines for appellee.

Appeal from Perry Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Guffy.

The plaintiff, Cornett, instituted this action in the Perry Circuit Court against the appellants, seeking to recover judgment for 50 acres of land and $250 for the wrongful holding thereof.

Appellants denied plaintiffs title and ownership of the land sued for; also claimed that Smith was the owner of a certain boundary of land which, it seems, included part, if not all, of the land sued for.

After the filing of many pleadings, and some amendments thereto, a trial was had, and the jury returned the following verdict: "We, the jury, do agree and find for the plaintiff, and twenty-five dollars for damages. DANIEL DUFF, Foreman."

Thereupon the court rendered the following judgment: "It is, therefore, adjudged by the court that the plaintiff recover of the defendant the boundary of land, fully set forth in his petition and pleadings in the cause, and twenty-five dollars damages and all his cost herein expended, and plaintiff may have a writ of possession for said land."

It seems that appellants excepted to the verdict and judgment, but the same was entered.

Numerous grounds for new trial were relied on by appellants, but their motion for new trial was overruled, and they have appealed.

The verdict of the jury, under the pleadings and proof in this case, is not sustained by the law because it is not sufficiently clear as to what they intended to award to plaintiff, and it is clear that the judgment is erroneous because it does not describe or identify the land adjudged to plaintiff. It has been held by this court that a judgment of sale, directing a sale of the land in the pleadings mentioned, is erroneous. (Ross v. Adams, 13 Bush, 370.)

It was error to allow witnesses to testify as to statements made to them, as to the location of lines or corners, by persons who were still living. It is true that hearsay testimony as to the location of corners to land may be admitted when the parties making the statements, which it is desired to be proven, are dead; but that rule can not be extended to statements made by persons still living. Such persons should be introduced to prove the fact themselves.

The reading of the assignments on the various deeds by plaintiff's alleged remote vendors was error except in so far, if at all, that it tended to make certain the boundary of the land he claimed. Such assignment did not pass any title to the assignee except an equitable one.

It was within the said discretion of the court to allow or disallow the special plea to be filed, and, at the time it was offered, it was no abuse of discretion to refuse to permit the filing, but, upon the return of this cause, appellant should be allowed to file the plea.

If the facts are as alleged in the fifth ground for new trial, there was undue haste in completing the trial. The jury should have had time to have attended to their horses and to get supper, if in fact it was important to complete the trial that night or day; and, unless it was important or necessary to go on with the trial, it should have been adjourned until the next day.

Appellants also complain of the instructions given and refused. The first instruction is as follows: "The court instructs the jury that if you believe from a preponderance of the evidence that the plaintiff, R. N. Cornett, is the owner and entitled to the possession of the land described in plaintiff's petition, you will find for the plaintiff; and if you believe from such preponderance that the defendants wrongfully entered upon said land, and wrongfully held same from the plaintiff, you will fix the damages at any sum you may find he has been damaged, by reason of such wrongful withholding, not to exceed the sum of $250."

This instruction is clearly erroneous. It leaves the jury the sole judges of both law and facts. It is questionable whether the other instructions given are sufficiently authorized by the testimony, but the court can, on the next trial, determine as to the sufficiency of the testimony then introduced to authorize such instructions.

Appellants asked an instruction to the effect that, if the jury believed that defendant Smith had title to the land described in defendant's amended answer older than the one under which plaintiff claimed, they should find for defendant unless they find as in instructions Nos. 1 and 2. This instruction should have been given, with such modifications as would have indicated to the jury what constituted a title.

For the reasons indicated the judgment of the court below is reversed and cause remanded, with directions to award appellants a new trial and for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

VICK'S GD'N, &C. V. HIBBS' GD'N, &C.

(Filed January 20, 1897—Not to be reported.)

W. D. Greer for appellants.

Bush & Worten and John K. Hendrick for appellees.

Appeal from Livingston Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

The facts of this case are very similar to those in the case of Swaysee v. Miller, 17 B. M., 564. By the authority of that case we are of the opinion that the demurrer should have been overruled to the petition as amended.

Wherefore, the judgment is reversed, with directions that the further proceedings conform to this opinion.

SCANLON V. TORSTADT, &C.

(Filed November 17, 1896—Not to be reported.)

1. Service of process on lunatic—Return of officer—In this action for the sale of land to pay the debts of a decedent, in which summons was served on one of the defendants, who was a lunatic, by delivering a copy to the physician in charge of him, who was superintendent of the asylum in which he was confined. the sheriff having neglected to have the physician certify, as required by the statute, that in his opinion the service would be injurious to the lunatic, the court, after the case was ready for submission, properly permitted the physician. in aid of the sheriff's return, to file his affidavit showing the condition of the lunatic required by the statute to be certified.

2. Same—Even if the affidavit had not been filed, the court would not disturb the judgment, a summons having been actually served on the lunatic upon a cross petition seeking to foreclose a mortgage on the land, and all of the parties being before the court and a sale of the land being necessary.

Charles M. Lindsay for appellant.

Matt O'Doherty for appellees.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery division.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Pryor.

Where a lunatic or person of unsound mind is made defendant to an action he must be served with a summons, and also his committee or his father, etc. (Carroll's Code, section 53.)

By an amendment to this section the lunatic may be served by a service on the physician having charge of the lunatic, if the physician give a certificate, attested by the officer making the service, that, in his opinion, the service would be injurious to such person of unsound mind.

In this case the service was on the superintendent, Dr. Pusey, of the asylum in which the lunatic was confined, and the fact existed that the service could not be had on the lunatic without injury to him, but the sheriff neglected to have the certificate made out and returned as part of the mode of service.

After this action had been brought and ready for submission the affidavit of Dr. Pusey was offered as in aid of the sheriff's return, showing that the condition of the lunatic, at the date of service on him as superintendent, was in such condition as would work an injury to the lunatic by making personal service. This was regarded as sufficient, and on the service the judgment was rendered.

The action was for a sale of land to pay debts of the decedent, and to distribute between his five heirs or children. Service was had on the committee of the lunatic, as well as Dr. Pusey, and on all the other heirs. The sheriff amended his return under an order of court, which was proper. Besides, in the cross action of the German Insurance Co. to foreclose a mortgage on this land in this same action, a summons was actually served on the lunatic; and all the parties being before the court, and a sale of the land being necessary, the judgment would not be disturbed or the sale set aside if no affidavit of Dr. Pusey had been filed.

The order overruling the exceptions of the purchaser and the judgment thereon are each affirmed.

TURNER'S ADM'R V. TURNER, &C.

(Filed January 12, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Parent and child—Implied contract—To entitle a daughter to recover for personal care and attention bestowed upon her mother there must be a promise to pay, express or implied. And the law will not imply such a promise from the mother's mere request of the daughter to bestow care and attention on her. Such services were presumptively gratuitous, and there can be no recovery therefor unless the proof shows otherwise.

R. H. Tomlinson, R. P. Jacob and W. J. Landram for appellant.

W. O. Bradley for appellees.

Appeal from Garrard Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hazelrigg.

This is a contest among brothers and sisters—children of Rolinda Turner, who died in March, 1890. Appellant Tain, a son-in-law, qualified as her administrator, and, with his wife, presented a claim for $1,250 against the estate of his intestate for care and attention to her during the last five years of her life.

It appears that for a number of years previous to the five years for which this charge for care and attention is made Tain and wife and their children lived with Mrs. Turner, their mother and mother-in-law, on her farm. They lived as one family, and in large measure used and occupied the lands owned by them respectively as one farm.

In March, 1885, however, the Tains, having moved to their adjoining lands, the mother followed, and, except for a few months, lived there until her death. There is not the slightest circumstance in all this voluminous record of family history and bitterness to establish the fact that the services now charged for were rendered with the expectation on appellant's part of receiving, or on the mother's part of making, compensation therefor. The conditions were not such as to show a mutual intention to contract with reference to the care and attention shown the old lady. Presumptively the services were gratuitous, and the proof does not show otherwise. In such cases there must be proof either of an express contract to pay or of such facts and circumstances as fairly show that both the party rendering the service and the one receiving it expected and understood that compensation would be made. (17 A. & E. Ency., 336; Reynolds v. Reynolds, 92 Ky., 556; Heck v. Heck, 10 KY. LAW REP., 281 [Superior Court]; Hurst v. Stanberry, MS. opinion, 1 Barbour's Digest, 392, 1855.)

Tested by these principles, not only must the claim be rejected on the testimony offered, but the verification and proof accompanying the demand must be held insufficient. This is to the effect merely that the services were rendered at the instance and request of the decedent.

As we have seen in this class of cases the law requires a promise or contract to pay, express or implied, and the law will not imply such a promise or contract from the mother's mere request of her daughter to bestow care and attention on her. This is no more than the daughter ought to bestow without pay and no more than the mother might request without expecting to pay therefor.

The judgment rejecting the claim must be affirmed.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE R. R. Co. v. MATTINGLY.

(Filed January 14, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Personal injuries—Excessive verdict—A verdict for $10,000 for personal injuries not very serious in their nature, and resulting only in slight lameness, is so excessive as to indicate passion or prejudice on the part of the jury.

2. Master and servant—The plaintiff having been injured by falling slate while repairing a tunnel on defendant's railroad, it was error to instruct the jury to find for plaintiff if the injury to him was caused by the gross negligence of defendant's servants superior in authority to plaintiff in permitting the tunnel to be and remain in an unsafe and dangerous condition and to fall or cave in upon the plaintiff, as defendant was not liable unless the foreman knew, or could by the use of reasonable care have known, of the unsafe condition of the tunnel, and the jury should have been so instructed.

Wm. Lindsay, H. W. Bruce and Lisle & McChord for appellant.

Thomas H. Hines and H. P. Cooper for appellee.

Appeal from Marion Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hazelrigg.

The appellee was a bridge carpenter, and while he was engaged with other workmen in repairing or taking out the old framework in a tunnel on the line of the appellant a quantity of slate suddenly fell from the walls of the tunnel and seriously injured him. The extent of his injuries is a matter of uncertainty under the proof, and it is doubtful if they are shown to be permanent, save perhaps that which renders one of his ankles somewhat less free in its movements than it was in its natural and original state. In this suit for damages for the injuries he received a judgment for $10,000 was rendered.

One of the physicians called by him testified that he found the left leg of the appellee smaller than the right; that the left ankle seemed to be impaired, but there was no malformation of either ankle or leg; that the right side measured an inch and one-half or two inches larger than the left, and this might have been caused by a hurt, and was perhaps permanent to some extent.

Another physician testified that the ankle was stiffened some, and appellee could not make all the natural movements with his ankle; that when appellee stooped over he did not seem to have good use of his back, and the muscles in the side of his back seemed swollen; that on examination of his urine, two or three times, he found blood in it; and, if this was caused by the injury, it was probably permanent, and would grow worse and chronic.

It seems to us clear that this verdict is excessive, and strikes the mind at first blush as having been superinduced by passion or prejudice. The appellee was confined to his house but a few weeks, and if his injuries have resulted in anything very serious he has not demonstrated it by the proof.

It is further insisted by the appellant that there was no proof of negligence on the part of any of its agents or servants, and the case ought not to have gone to the jury.

It appears from appellee's own testimony that he did not see "any cracks in the wall of the tunnel at the point where the slate fell from, or anything that indicated that the slate would fall;" and it is also true that his opportunity for seeing was as good as that of the foreman. But it appears from other testimony that the foreman, Andes, was not as efficient in making an examination of the walls as he ought to have been and was not as careful in doing this kind of work as he ought to have been.

This testimony was gotten before the jury mainly by a witness detailing a conversation on the day following the accident between Andes, the foreman of the crew of which the appellee was a member when he was hurt, and one Lee, who was the supervisor of the division, including the tunnel under repair. The conversation was not objected to, and on all the proof, as it is presented in the record, we are inclined to think the motion for a peremptory instruction by appellant was properly overruled.

By the chief instruction the jury were told to find for the plaintiff if the injury to him was caused by the gross negligence of the appellant's agents or employes superior in authority to plaintiff, in permitting the tunnel to be and remain in an unsafe and dangerous condition, and to fall or cave in upon the plaintiff.

This is misleading. Undoubtedly, in a sense, the appellant permitted the tunnel to be in an unsafe condition. Its sides caved in and fell on the plaintiff, hence it was unsafe; but did the appellant's foreman know this or could he have known it by the use of reasonable diligence and care? Unless he so knew or could have so known the appellant is not liable.

For the reasons indicated the judgment is reversed for proceedings consistent herewith.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE R. R. CO. v. BOLTON.

(Filed January 14, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Nuisances—Insufficiently burying dead animals—Punitive damages—In an action against a railroad company to recover damages on account of dead animals being insufficiently buried by servants of the company, near the residence of the plaintiff, an instruction directing the jury to find for plaintiff only in the event they should believe the acts complained of were maliciously and wantonly done was more favorable to defendant than it was entitled to have, as plaintiff would have been entitled to recover compensatory damages upon proof of the acts alleged and consequent injury, and, upon showing, as was done, that it was wanton or malicious, he was entitled to punitive damages. Nor is it material how much it would have cost plaintiff to cover with dirt that part of the dead animal left by the agents of defendant exposed, as it was their duty at first to have so buried it as to prevent offensive stench.

Wilson & Rawlings for appellant.

B. B. Golden, J. D. Tuggle and W. H. Holt for appellee.

Appeal from Knox Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Lewis.

This action was brought by appellee to recover of appellant damages alleged to have been done on account of dead animals being put and insufficiently buried by servants of the latter near to the residence of the former.

The lower court instructed the jury as follows: "If the jury believe from a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant by its agents so buried a steer or horse so near the dwelling house of plaintiff that foul and obnoxious stenches and smells arose, polluting the air in and around plaintiff's said dwelling house, and that same was done wantonly or maliciously, they will find for plaintiff such damages as they may deem right, not exceeding $250 for each. If, however, they shall believe that the burying was done simply in such a negligent manner as to cause such smells, and not from malice and wantonness, they will find for the defendant."

The evidence shows the acts complained of were done against the protest of appellee in such wanton manner and under such circumstances as precludes this court from believing or deciding the verdict of $250 is excessive, or was rendered by the jury through passion or prejudice.

Really the instruction was more favorable to appellant than the law and facts proved authorized, for appellee would have been entitled to recover compensatory damages upon proof of the acts alleged and consequent injury; and upon showing, as we think was done, that it was wanton or malicious, he was entitled to punitive damages, which was in the instruction denied him.

How much it would have cost appellee to cover with dirt that part of the dead animal left by the agents of appellant exposed was immaterial, because it was their duty at first to have so buried it as to prevent noxious and offensive stench, and their failure to do so rendered appellant liable in damages.

Judgment affirmed.

EASTERN KENTUCKY RY. CO. V. BROWN.

(Filed June 23, 1896.)

Petition for rehearing overruled Dec. 2, 1896.

1. Injunction bond—Jurisdiction of State courts—A State court has jurisdiction of an action upon an injunction bond executed in the United States Circuit Court.

2. Same—It is only where the enforcement of a judgment has been enjoined that the court is required to ascertain the damages at the time of the dissolution of the injunction.

Edward W. Hines, Rodney Haggard, Wm. H. Holt and E. B. Wilhoite for appellant.

W. M. Beckner for appellee.

Appeal from Clark Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Pryor.

This action is on an injunction bond, and a demurrer sustained to the petition. The bond was executed in the United States Circuit Court for Kentucky, and, by a mandatory injunction, the appellant was compelled to deliver the appellee, Brown, an engine upon which it claimed a lien for repairs.

It seems the State court had jurisdiction, although the bond was given in the Federal court (Myers v. Black, 120 U. S., ——). Under the rule in this court or in this State it is only where the enforcement of a judgment has been enjoined that the court at the time must ascertain the damages (Alexander v. Gish, 88 Ky., 13).

The demurrer should have been overruled. Reversed and remanded that this may be done.

RICHART v. GOODPASTER.

(Filed September 25, 1896—Not to be reported.)

1. Judicial sales—Writ of possession—Motion to quash—Appellant and appellee being the purchasers of different parts of certain real estate sold under decree, a motion by appellee to quash a writ of possession in favor of appellant was improperly sustained, it appearing that the writ embraced no part of the property purchased by appellee.

2. Same—Although appellee had not been placed by writ in the possession of the lot purchased by him, it was proper for him to make the motion to quash the writ in favor of appellant in order to ascertain his rights in the premises, since the original action in which the writ was allowed was still pending. Therefore, the court properly overruled the motion of appellant to dismiss the motion to quash.

Reuben Gudgeil & Son for appellant.

C. W. Goodpaster for appellee.

Appeal from Bath Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Landes.

The real estate embraced in the mortgage executed by S. E. Fratman to the appellee to secure a note for the sum of $3,750, which was sold by the master on the 9th day of April, 1894, under the judgment of the Bath Circuit Court, in the action of J. B. Goodpaster against S. E. Fratman, &c., to satisfy the said mortgage and other liens, was described as being "bounded on the west by the lot of Miss Jennie Elliott; on the north by the lot of James Donnon's heirs, formerly owned by G. W. Bowen; on the east by Jefferson street, and on the south by Main street," in the town of Owingsville.

This boundary or area embraced the lot which was purchased by Fratman from the heirs of J. M. Nesbitt, which was described as being bounded as follows: "Beginning at the northeast corner of the said large brick building; thence southward with the west margin of the pavements 16 feet; thence westward 32 feet 6 inches; thence northward 16 feet; thence eastward 32 feet 6 inches to the beginning."

The "large brick building" mentioned in this boundary stood on the lot described above, as embraced in the mortgage executed by Fratman to Goodpaster.

In the judgment the master was directed to sell the above-described Nesbitt lot first to satisfy a lien for purchase money owing to the heirs of J. M. Nesbitt, deceased, which was prior to the mortgage lien of the appellee. After directing the sale of some other property, it was adjudged "that the remainder of the said lot, lying on the corner of Main and Jefferson streets" (which was the remainder of the lot first described above as embraced in the said mortgage), "including the 12 feet width upon which B. D. Lacy's law office once stood, * * * be next sold, etc."

Thus the judgment in the case of Goodpaster v. Fratman and others provided for the sale of the whole of the lot first above named, and "the remainder of the said lot, lying on the corner of Main and Jefferson streets," evidently embraced the small strip of about 31 inches of ground lying immediately in the rear of the Nesbitt lot above described.

The appraisers, who were appointed to value the lots adjudged to be sold, described the Nesbitt lot as "a parcel of land or lot beginning at the north corner of the property of S. E. Fratman, which lies on the corner of Main and Jefferson streets, * * * and is the lot upon which J. M. Nesbitt's law office formerly stood;" and they described the other as "a parcel of land in said town, and bounded as follows: On the west by the lot of Miss Jennie Elliott; on the north by the above-described lot, on which J. M. Nesbitt's law office formerly stood; on the east by Jefferson street, and on the south by Main street, the same being known as Fratman's corner, and the lot on which B. D. Lacy's office formerly stood."

In the master's notice of the sale he described the Nesbitt lot as follows: "Also a parcel of land or lot, beginning at the north corner of the property of S. E. Fratman, which lies on the corner of Main and Jefferson streets, in aforesaid town; thence northwardly with the west margin of the pavement about 16 feet; thence westwardly about 32 feet and 6 inches, to the property of S. E. Fratman; thence southwardly about 16 feet to said Fratman; thence eastwardly with the lines of the property of said Fratman about 32 feet and 6 inches to the beginning, and is the lot upon which J. M. Nesbitt's law office formerly stood."

In the same notice the rest of the Fratman lot, "known as Fratman's corner, and the lot on which B. D. Lacy's law office formerly stood," is described as the appraisers described it.

It appears from the diagram, which is a part of the evidence, that Miss Jennie Elliott's lot lies on the west of and adjoining the Fratman lot along its whole depth northward from Main street.

At the sale made by the master of this property under the said judgment the above-described Nesbitt lot was sold first, and purchased by the appellee. This lot was a part of the lot on which Fratman's storeroom stood, which was known as "Fratman's corner," on the corner of Main and Jefferson streets, and all of which, as we have seen, was covered by the mortgage executed by Fratman to Goodpaster.

After the Nesbitt lot was sold, as directed by the judgment, the master offered the rest of the lot, and it is reported as follows: "I next offered the Fratman storehouse (known as Fratman's corner), * * * at the same time and place." The appellant, Richart, became the purchaser of it. The sales were reported by the master and confirmed by the court, and the court ordered and adjudged that "the purchasers of the real estate, to wit, J. M. Richart and J. B. Goodpaster, * * * are now adjudged to be the owners of the real estate purchased by them, and each may have a writ of possession for the said real estate so purchased, after the lapse of thirty days from this date, which the clerk of this court is ordered to issue when demanded."

The appellant sued out a writ of possession in due time for the property purchased by him, which was described in the writ as being the whole of the Fratman storehouse and lot, excepting so much of it as was purchased by the appellee—that is, the Nesbitt lot as above described, fronting 16 feet on Jefferson street and running back westward 32 feet and 6 inches. The sheriff executed the writ by placing the appellant in possession of the whole of said lot (with the above exception), which included the small strip of ground in controversy.

The appellee, upon notice, moved the court to quash the said writ, and the return of the sheriff thereon, upon the ground, as claimed, that the writ embraced a portion that was not purchased by the appellant but that was purchased by the appellee, and was still owned by him.

The court sustained the motion, and by its judgment quashed both the writ and the return of the sheriff thereon, and from that judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

The appellant moved in the court below to dismiss the motion to quash, which was denied by the court. This is complained of as error. But we are of the opinion that, although the appellee had not been placed by writ in the possession of the lot purchased by him, it was proper to make the motion to quash in order to ascertain his rights in the premises, since the original action of Goodpaster v. Fratman, &c., in which the writ was allowed, was still pending and had not been finally disposed of. We, therefore, hold that the motion to dismiss was properly overruled.

But upon the merits of the motion to quash we are of the opinion that the court erred. From the facts of the case as we have gathered them in detail from the record before us it is clear that it was intended by the judgment of sale, and it was in fact expressly provided therein, that there should be a separate sale of the Nesbitt lot before any part of "the remainder" of the Fratman storehouse and lot should be sold, and that the remainder of the lot, after selling the Nesbitt lot, which "remainder" it was adjudged could not be divided without materially impairing its value, should be sold as a whole. And that this was intended by the master in making the sale is manifest from the description of the property in the appraisement and in the notice of sale. The notice, as the evidence showed, was read at the time the property was offered, and we can not conceive how the purchaser or purchasers could have been misled or deceived with reference to the property offered. The appellee, under his purchase, acquired the right to no part of the ground in controversy, unless it was embraced in the Nesbitt lot, which is 16 feet in width by 32 feet 6 inches in depth, and it is clearly shown by the evidence that the ground in controversy is not included in the bounds of the Nesbitt lot. In addition to this the description in the notice of the "remainder of the lot," although not as full in detail as it might have been, is sufficiently accurate to enable anyone to identify it as being what was left of the Fratman storehouse and lot, situated on the corner of Main and Jefferson streets, after deducting the Nesbitt lot, which was purchased by the appellee.

The judgment quashing the said writ and the sheriff's return thereon is, therefore, reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to overrule the motion to quash.

CHESAPEAKE & OHIO RY. CO. V. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed January 11, 1897.)

Taxation of costs in Commonwealth cases—An attorney's fee of $20 is still taxable in favor of the Commonwealth in appeals in Commonwealth cases notwithstanding the provision of section 117 of the Kentucky Statutes, that "the attorney general shall receive an annual salary of $4,000 in lieu of the fees and salary heretofore allowed by law," as the attorney's fee was, by the act of March 2, 1882, required to be taxed "for the benefit of the Commonwealth and paid into the public treasury."

Wadsworth & Cochran for appellant.

W. S. Taylor for appellee.

Appeal from Boyd Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

The act approved March 2, 1882, provides that, in all cases in the Court of Appeals in which it is made the duty of the attorney general to represent the State, he shall for his services in each case be paid out of the treasury of the State the sum of $20. At the time this act was passed the fees which were taxed in cases to which the Commonwealth was a party were for the benefit of the attorney general, not for the Commonwealth. The act of March 2d supra contained this proviso, to wit: "That in all cases in which an attorney's fee is now by law taxed against the unsuccessful party the same shall be for the benefit of the Commonwealth and paid into the public treasury."

In other words the fees that were then taxed for the benefit of the attorney general were taxed for the benefit of the Commonwealth, and instead of having the attorney general depend for compensation for his services upon the contingency of collecting the fee from the unsuccessful litigant the Commonwealth became bound for such fee, and for reimbursement depends upon the contingency of a collection.

Under section 117, Kentucky Statutes, the attorney general is paid a salary for his services. He is no longer paid a given sum per case. This section does not repeal the previous act providing that fees should be taxed for the benefit of the Commonwealth. The section does not relate to the matter of the taxation of costs in Commonwealth cases, but relates alone to the salary of the attorney general. It is in nowise inconsistent with the act which requires that $20 shall be taxed for the benefit of the Commonwealth.

The motion to correct the taxation of costs is overruled.

LEE, BY, &C. v. CHESAPEAKE & OHIO RY. CO.

(Filed January 12, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Master and servant—Negligence—In this action against a railroad company to recover damages for injuries received by plaintiff while in the discharge of his duty as a section hand, the section foreman, who, with another, was assisting plaintiff in carrying a cross-tie, having stumbled and fallen, and thus caused the injury complained of, the evidence fails to establish actionable negligence, as the plaintiff, without compulsion and with knowledge of the attendant perils and difficulties, undertook to perform the service, which was in the scope of his employment, and the section foreman being a stout man and able to carry his part of the load, it was not improper or negligent for him to undertake to assist plaintiff.

James Andrew Scott and Frank Prater for appellants.

John T. Shelby for appellee.

Appeal from Carter Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Lewis.

Appellant brought this action to recover for his leg being broken, while in the employ of appellee as a section hand, by reason of the alleged negligence of the section foreman.

The circumstances under which the injury was done, as appears from the evidence introduced by him, is as follows: In putting new in place of old cross-ties at a certain switch station on appellee's road it became necessary to carry the latter across and away from the railroad track, three persons, two of them using a handspike and one of them lifting the rear end, being assigned to each tie.

Three of the hands had in that manner successfully and safely transferred one of the ties, and three others, including the appellant, had lifted and started with another tie when one of them named Tabor, who held one end of the handspike, announced his inability to carry his share of the load and the tie was put down. Thereupon Campbell, the foreman, took Tabor's place, appellant having the other end of the handspike. But they had, after again lifting up the tie, gone but a short distance when Campbell stumbled and fell, causing appellant to also fall, and the tie to fall upon and break his leg.

The evidence shows the ties were about sixteen feet in length, being used for both main and switch track, six inches wide and seven thick, and, being old and soggy, were a heavy load for three men of ordinary strength, but it was demonstrated one of them could be carried in the manner to the place required by three of the hands, and there is no evidence showing a heavier burden was put upon appellant than he was able and willing to bear, for he had shown his ability to carry his share of the load, and if not able to do so he might first, as did Tabor, have either called for assistance or given place to another hand.

It is true the ground over which they were required to carry the ties was rough, but the difficulty or danger arising from that fact was before appellant, and one of the usual and necessary incidents of the service he had undertaken to perform.

Appellant, having then without compulsion and with the knowledge of the attendant perils and difficulties undertaken to perform a particular act in the scope of his employment, can not attribute his injury to the negligence of either the appellee or its section foreman, unless the accidental stumbling and falling of the latter, which might occur to the strongest, most active and vigilant man, should be held actionable negligence.

The evidence is that the foreman was a stout man, able to carry his part of the load, and they had carried it several steps when the accident occurred, and it was not, therefore, improper or negligent for him to take the place of Tabor.

In our opinion appellant showed no evidence whatever of appellee's liability for the injury complained of, and the lower court did not err in giving a peremptory instruction.

Judgment affirmed.

ALSOP V. CENTRAL TRUST CO.

(Filed January 12, 1897.)

1. Power of partner to bind firm—In a commercial partnership the extent of a partner's power to bind the firm is a question of law, while in a non-commercial partnership the power of one partner to bind his co-partner is a question of fact, and the burden of proof to establish the validity of the contract is upon the party seeking to hold the firm liable. Therefore, in order to recover upon a written obligation signed in the firm name by one of the partners of a non-trading partnership, it is necessary for the plaintiff to allege affirmatively the nature of the partnership, that the obligation was executed for something necessary for the transaction of the business of the firm, or that the partner who made the contract was authorized to do so by the terms of the partnership. And as none of the necessary allegations appear in the petition in this action to recover rent upon a written contract to which a firm name was signed by one of the partners, a demurrer to the petition should have been sustained.

2. Pleading—When a petition shows on its face that several paragraphs relate to the same cause of action, the plaintiff should be required to elect which one he will prosecute, and the others should be stricken out.

Reuben A. Miller and Little & Little for appellant.

J. D. Atchison for appellee.

Appeal from Daviess Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Burnam.

This action was instituted in the Daviess Circuit Court by the Central Trust Co. of Owensboro, Ky., against George Griswold and J. N. Alsop, doing business in the firm name of Griswold & Alsop, upon a written contract for the rent of two rooms in the building of the trust company in Owensboro. The contract was signed by the Central Trust Co. of Owensboro, Ky., by J. D. Atchison, president, and in the firm name of Griswold & Alsop, by G. Griswold. The cause of action is set out in two paragraphs. The first paragraph is in the following language:

"1st. The plaintiff, the Central Trust Co. of Owensboro, Ky., states that it is a corporation, duly created, organized and existing by and under the laws of the State of Kentucky, and especially by and under the provisions of an act of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, which became a law March 28, 1890, and that it was vested with the right to make contracts, sue and be sued, etc.; and the plaintiff further says that on the 22d day of December, 1892, the defendants, George Griswold and J. N. Alsop, partners, doing business in the firm name of Griswold & Alsop, signed and delivered to this plaintiff a certain written contract, whereby and wherein the said defendants rented and leased from this plaintiff for a period of one year, from December 22, 1892, to December 22, 1893, two certain rooms, being rooms situate on the second floor of the south side front, and next adjacent thereto, in its building at the corner of Fredrica and Fourth streets, in the city of Owensboro, Ky. The said defendants agreed and promised to pay to plaintiff, for rent of said rooms, the sum of two hundred ($200) dollars, to be paid in quarterly installments of fifty ($50) dollars each. The defendants used and occupied said rooms during all of said year, and never paid plaintiff any part of said rent except thirty ($30) dollars, paid June 26, 1893, and sixteen ($16) dollars, paid June 28, 1893, which credits are endorsed on the margin of said contract, which is filed herewith as part hereof. Plaintiff says said rent was to be paid in four quarterly installments of fifty ($50) dollars each, the first of which was due and payable on the 22d day of March, 1893, and the second on the 22d of June, 1893, the third on September 22, 1893, and the fourth on the 22d of December, 1893, and it says that it is entitled to recover of defendants interest on each of said installments from the time of their respective due dates, subject to the credits hereinbefore mentioned."

The second paragraph of said petition was as follows: "The plaintiff, the Central Trust Co. of Owensboro, Ky., says that the defendants, George Griswold and J. N. Alsop, doing business in the said firm name of Griswold & Alsop, entered into a contract with the plaintiff, whereby and wherein they agreed to pay to said plaintiff the said sum of two hundred ($200) dollars for the rent of two rooms, as set out in paragraph No. 1; and plaintiff further states that defendants used and occupied said rooms from the 22d day of December, 1892, until the 22d day of December, 1893, and that a reasonable rental for the use of said rooms was two hundred ($200) dollars, and that by reason of the use and occupation of said rooms the said defendants, and each of them, became indebted and are indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of two hundred ($200) dollars, no part of which has ever been paid, except thirty dollars paid June 26, 1893, and sixteen dollars paid June 28, 1893."

The written contract referred to in the first paragraph of the petition is filed herewith as part hereof, and said defendants agreed and promised to pay the sum of money aforesaid for the use and occupation of said rooms, closing with a prayer for a judgment for the balance due on obligation against George Griswold and J. N. Alsop.

The defendant, J. N. Alsop, entered a general demurrer to the first paragraph of plaintiff's petition for the reason that same did not state facts sufficient to support a cause of action against him, and defendant at the same time moved the court to require the plaintiff to elect which of the two causes of action set out in the two separate paragraphs of his petition he would prosecute, and also filed answer.

Upon consideration of the demurrer to the first paragraph of the petition the court overruled same, to which ruling of the court the defendant, Alsop, at the time excepted and now excepts. The court also overruled the motion made by Alsop to require plaintiff to elect which of the two causes of action set out in the two separate paragraphs he would prosecute, to which ruling of the court the defendant, Alsop, excepted, and appealed to this court.

We will first consider the questions raised by the demurrer to the first paragraph of the petition. Partnerships, when considered with reference to the business in which they are engaged, may generally be divided into two classes, one of which is known as trading or commercial partnerships, and the other as nontrading or noncommercial partnerships. Any member of an ordinary trading partnership can bind the firm by the signing of the firm name in the usual course of business as a part of the usual routine of their affairs irrespective of restrictions in the articles of partnership not brought to the knowledge of the payee.

In a nontrading partnership, however—that is, a partnership engaged in some occupation which is not of a commercial character—a partner does not generally possess the power to bind the firm, and the extent of his powers are not fixed by the rules of law. The general rule is that the partners in such a firm have no implied power to bind the partnership, but each case is left to be decided upon its particular facts, and one who seeks to hold the firm bound upon a contract made by a single member must be able to show such acts as will warrant the conclusion that the partner had been invested by his copartner with the requisite authority to make the contract.

The distinction, as set out by Judge Cofer in the case of Judge v. Braswell, 13 Bush, 75, is that in a commercial partnership the extent of a partner's power to bind the firm is a question of law, while in the noncommercial firm the power of one partner to bind his copartner is a question of fact, and the burden of proof to establish the facts as to the validity of contracts so executed by one member of such a partnership rests with the party claiming to hold the firm liable; therefore, it follows that, in order to recover upon a written obligation, signed in the firm name by one of the partners of a nontrading partnership, it is necessary for the plaintiff to allege affirmatively the nature of the partnership; that the obligation was executed for something necessary for the transaction of the business of the firm, or that said partner was expressly authorized to make the contract by the terms of the partnership.

In the case at bar plaintiff's petition fails to make any of these necessary allegations. We are, therefore, of the opinion that the demurrer to this paragraph should be sustained, with leave to plaintiff to amend same to conform to the views of the court herein indicated.

The court is of the opinion that the second paragraph of said petition does not set out any separate or distinct cause of action different from that sought to be set out in the first paragraph. The two paragraphs in reality only tend to set out one cause of action, but as they plainly relate to the same contract, and in fact they both expressly so allege, the only difference between them is there is some amplification of the evidence alleged in the second which was not in the first.

When a petition shows on its face that several paragraphs relate to the same cause of action the plaintiff should be required to elect to prosecute one, and the other should be stricken out. In this case the motion to require plaintiff to elect which paragraph he would prosecute should have been sustained.

In view of the rulings of the court upon the questions raised by the demurrer of defendant, and upon his motion to require plaintiff to elect which paragraph he will prosecute, it will be unnecessary to pass upon the questions raised as to the sufficiency of defendant's answer.

For the reasons indicated herein the judgment of the lower court in favor of plaintiff against defendant on the contract sued on is reversed and this cause is remanded, with instructions to allow the plaintiffs to amend their petition, if they so desire, in accordance with the views herein expressed, and that the case may then proceed in accordance with the rights of the parties.

WOOD, BY, &C. V. WOOD, &C.

(Filed January 12, 1897—Not to be reported.

Judicial sales of property of lunatic - Agreement to prevent competitive bidding- The rights of persons of unsound mind are under the special protection of courts of equity and it is their duty to see that no injustice is done to such persons in the sale of their property under judicial decree. But in this action by a person of unsound mind suing by next friend to set aside the confirmation of a sale of his land under decree, upon the ground that there was a fraudulent agreement by the purchaser with another to prevent competitive bidding, the evidence fails to establish the alleged fraud; and, as it is not obvious that the property would bring more upon another sale, the ends of justice do not require that the sale should be set aside, although the land sold for something less than its salable value.

Winfield Buckler for appellants.

Hanson Kennedy for appellees.

Appeal from Robertson Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Burnam.

The plaintiff, who is a person of unsound mind, brings this suit by Winfield Buckler, his next friend, to set aside the sale of a tract of 90¾ acres of land, situate in Robertson county, which was sold pursuant to a judgment of the Robertson Circuit Court, entered at the December term thereof, 1893, in an action instituted by the same party and in the same way against the same persons who are made defendants hereto.

This land was held jointly by plaintiff, who owned one-sixth part of same, and the defendants, J. B. Wood and Elizabeth Taylor, who each owned one-sixth part of same, and Rosa Wood, who owned the other three-sixths of said land. The sale was made by the master commissioner of the court on the 19th day of February, 1894, before the courthouse door, at public outcry, to the defendant, Rosa Wood, who executed bond for same in accordance with the terms of said sale, and same was reported to the court, and was, at its March term, 1894, duly confirmed without exception. This action to set aside said order of confirmation was filed on the 30th day of May, 1894.

Upon the allegation that previous to the sale, and on the same day thereof, the defendant, Rosa Wood, agreed with J. B. Wood that if he would not bid on said land at said sale that she would buy same and convey to said J. B. Wood a portion of said land, the object of the agreement being to prevent competition at the sale, and, to enable defendant, Rosa Wood, to buy same at a sacrifice; and that, by reason of said agreement, the said J. B. Wood did not bid on or buy said land, although he was present for that purpose and would have given much more for same than it brought, except for this fraudulent and collusive agreement with the said Rosa Wood and J. B. Wood.

The defendant, Rosa Wood, denies fully that she had such an agreement with the defendant, John B. Wood, or that he failed to bid on said land at the sale because of such agreement, or that he was present for the purpose of bidding, or that he would have given more for the land than it sold for except for such agreement; denies she was guilty of any frauds in connection with said sale. She admits that she bought said land for about $2 per acre less than its fair saleable value, but that she is entitled to her purchase.

Upon the trial of this action in the lower court a judgment was entered dismissing plaintiff's petition, with a judgment for defendants' cost, to which plaintiff excepted, and brings his appeal to this court, asking a reversal of same.

The rights of persons of unsound mind are under the special protection of courts of equity, and it is their duty to see that no injustice is done to them in the sale of their property by judicial decrees, and, if the ends of justice require it, this court would have no hesitation in setting aside the order of confirmation of the sale of plaintiff's land.

The only question in the case is, was there such unfairness and frauds in the conduct of the purchaser, previous to and on the day of sale, as to affect the rights of the plaintiff, and to warrant the chancellor in setting aside the order of confirmation?

The special acts alleged by plaintiff in his petition stand substantially upon the testimony of J. B. Wood alone; and he is contradicted in his statements by the evidence of defendant, Rosa Wood, Wm. Dryden, James Perkins and Thomas J. Wood, as to what occurred between the defendant, Rosa, and himself on the porch of the jailer just before the sale of the land, the testimony of all these witnesses being in support of the evidence of the defendant.

The plaintiff has failed to establish by the weight of the evidence the fraudulent agreement relied on to vacate the order of confirmation; and, while the evidence tends to show that the land sold for something less than its fair saleable value, there is no gross inadequacy in the price bid for same, and no bid is made by any one, offering any advance upon the price it sold for at the sale of the commissioner. It is not obvious that any greater sum would be realized for same if it were sold over again.

For the reasons indicated we concur in the judgment of the chancellor, and same is affirmed.

CROCKETT V. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed January 13, 1897.)

1. Change of venue—Discretion of court—The circuit judge has a sound discretion in passing upon a motion for a change of venue, and this court will not disturb his judgment upon such a motion unless it is satisfied that discretion has been abused.

2. Continuance—The court properly refused a continuance asked upon the ground of the absence of a material witness, due diligence not having been used to obtain the deposition of the absent witness.

3. Error cured by instruction—An error in admitting incompetent testimony was cured by an instruction telling the jury to disregard the testimony.

4. Conspiracy—Instruction—As there was competent evidence conducing to show the existence of a conspiracy an instruction upon that subject was not prejudicial.

5. Instruction as to self-defense—Upon the trial of appellant under an indictment against him and his brother jointly for murder, in which the principal defense was that the shooting by appellant was done in defense of his brother, the court properly qualified the instruction as to the right of appellant to act in defense of his brother by telling the jury in substance that they could not acquit upon that ground if the brother "had sought and brought on the difficulty in which the killing was done by drawing a pistol upon the deceased, and thereby made the danger to himself necessary or excusable on the part of deceased." The fact that there had been two or three previous difficulties between the brother and deceased, in which insulting and abusive language had been used to the brother accompanied by threats, did not render the qualification improper, as the difficulty in which the killing occurred was the one for the consideration of the jury, and in the conflict of testimony it was for them to decide who brought on the difficulty.

6. Instruction as to manslaughter—The court properly instructed the jury to find the defendant guilty of manslaughter if he did the killing in sudden affray or in sudden heat and passion and without previous malice and not in self-defense, and "upon some provocation which was reasonably calculated to excite his passions beyond the power of self-control." The words quoted are not open to the objection which the court has made to the use of the words "legal provocation" and "considerable provocation."

Garnett & Garnett for appellant.

W. S. Taylor for appellee.

Appeal from Adair Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge DuRelle.

The appellant, James Crockett, was indicted jointly with his brother, John Crockett, Charles Helm and Josiah Salms, for the murder of Dan Kidd, it being charged in the indictment that the defendants conspired and confederated together for the purpose of committing said murder, which was effected by James and John Crockett shooting and killing Kidd.

It appears from the evidence that the killing occurred at a picnic near Pellyton, in Adair counly, near the Casey county line. There had been some words between John Crockett and the deceased, and, without stating the evidence in detail, it may be briefly stated that Kidd was very drunk, and, after some words in regard to Kidd's son, who was at the picnic, called John Crockett a "damn son-of-a-bitch." John Crockett thereupon knocked Kidd down. It appears from the weight of the evidence that when Kidd arose from the ground John Crockett had already drawn his pistol. He was seized by one of the bystanders and pulled backwards.

Upon the question of whether Kidd advanced toward John Crockett there is considerable contradiction in the testimony, the evidence for the Commonwealth stating that he staggered away from his enemy, and that Crockett, breaking away from the man who was holding him, pursued Kidd, following a path on the other side of a log from that on which Kidd had fallen.

On the side of the defense there was evidence to show that Kidd advanced upon Crockett with an open knife in his hand, and that Crockett fired over his head the first time, and afterward fired four shots in rapid succession directly at Kidd. Just about the time that John Crockett fired his last shot James Crockett came up behind Kidd and fired at him twice. The evidence upon the subject of the wounds in Kidd's body indicates that several of them were fired into his back and side. He died almost instantly, and the four defendants, who were jointly indicted, then left the picnic, after a challenge from the Crocketts addressed to the crowd in general or any one who wished to take up the difficulty.

The defendants demanded separate trials, and the Commonwealth elected to try the case of James Crockett first. A motion was made for a change of venue, and testimony heard on both sides. It does not appear to us that the trial judge abused his discretion in refusing the change of venue. "The circuit judge has a sound discretion in deciding such motion, and, of course, better opportunity of properly estimating credibility of witnesses and weight of evidence than this court; and, therefore, while we have authority to revise and reverse his judgment on such motion, it is not nor ought to be done except when we are satisfied that discretion has been abused." (Howard v. Commonwealth, 15 Ky. Law Rep., 874.)

The appellant was indicted at the September term, 1895. At the May term, 1896, he applied for a continuance upon the ground of the absence of four witnesses, and on account of the absence of one of his attorneys. The attorney for the Commonwealth agreed that the affidavit as to three of the witnesses might be read as their depositions; as to the witness, Oscar Evans, as to whom the affidavit was not permitted to be read as a deposition, it was stated that he would state that, a short time before Dan Kidd was killed, Ed. Kidd, a son of Dan Kidd, came to the witness, got a pistol, and, during the difficulty between Dan Kidd and the Crocketts, shot at John Crockett.

The lower court, in the exercise of its discretion, ruled that due diligence had not been used to obtain the deposition of Evans, and we are not disposed to disturb his ruling.

It is objected on behalf of appellant that evidence was admitted of conversations between the other defendants and outsiders, at which neither John nor James Crockett was present, but in instruction No. 8 all testimony of that character was excluded from the jury, and they were directed to disregard it. In our opinion the error was cured by this instruction.

It is urged on behalf of appellant that an instruction upon the subject of conspiracy was not justified by the evidence. There was evidence competent to go to the jury conducing to show the existence of a conspiracy. We are of opinion that no error to the prejudice of the substantial rights of appellant was committed in giving this instruction.

The defense mainly relied on was that the shooting by this appellant was done in the defense of his brother John; and upon this the court instructed the jury that if at the time appellant did the shooting charged, aiding and abetting John Crockett in doing said shooting, "he, the said James Crockett, believed, and had reasonable grounds to believe, that his codefendant, John Crockett, was then in immediate danger of losing his life or suffering great bodily harm at the hands of said Kidd, and that the defendant, James Crockett, did said shooting, aiding, abetting or assisting solely to prevent or avert said danger or apparent danger of his said brother, John Crockett, and, in doing so, used no more force than appeared to him at the time to be reasonably necessary for the purpose, they will acquit defendant upon the ground of self-defense, unless they shall believe from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that his co-defendant, John Crockett, had sought and brought on the difficulty in which the killing was done by drawing a pistol upon the deceased, and thereby made the danger to himself necessary or excusable on the part of the deceased, and in the event they do so believe from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant, James Crockett, can not avail himself of the danger to his brother, so incurred as an excuse for said shooting, aiding, abetting or assisting."

The objection to this instruction is that the qualification should have been omitted which instructed the jury that if John Crockett sought and brought on the difficulty, by drawing a pistol on the deceased, the defendant could not rely upon the plea of self-defense. The ground of this objection is that there had been two or three previous difficulties between John Crockett and the deceased, in which insulting and abusive language had been used to John Crockett, accompanied by threats, and that these facts rendered the qualification unnecessary and improper. We do not think so. The difficulty in which the killing occurred was the one for the consideration of the jury, and, in the conflict of testimony, it was for them to decide who brought on the difficulty.

There remains but one important objection to the instructions, and that is to the instruction upon voluntary manslaughter.

In instruction No. 4 the jury were told that if the defendant, "in a sudden affray, or in sudden heat and passion and without previous malice and not in self defense, and upon some provocation which was reasonably calculated to excite his passions beyond the power of self-control, shot and thereby killed said Kidd, or aided, abetted or assisted the said John Crockett in said shooting and killing, they will find the defendant, James Crockett, not guilty, as charged in the indictment, but will find him guilty of voluntary manslaughter, and fix his punishment at confinement in the penitentiary not less than two nor more than twenty-one years."

The objection is to the words "upon some provocation which was reasonably calculated to excite his passions beyond the power of self-control." This instruction is not open to the objection which has been heretofore made by this court to the use of the words "legal provocation" and "considerable provocation." The true test is "whether the law deems the provocation calculated to excite the passions beyond control; if so, it reduces the offense from murder to manslaughter." (Lewis v. Commonwealth, 93 Ky., 242; Bishop's Criminal Law, 711.)

In fact in this case the language is very similar to the language suggested in the case of Lewis v. Commonwealth, supra, where the court said: "It would have been better to have told them that the provocation must be such as was ordinarily calculated to excite the passions beyond control."

In our opinion the instructions given properly stated the law, and the verdict was fully sustained by the evidence.

Wherefore, the judgment is affirmed.

CROCKETT V. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed January 13, 1897.)

Amendment of verdict—Where defects of substance or form appear in a verdict upon its rendition the jury should be required to perfect it either in the presence of the court or by returning for the purpose to their room.

The jury having returned a verdict finding the defendant guilty of murder and fixing his punishment "at confinement in the penitentiary for ninety-nine years," the court properly required them to return to their room and make their verdict in accordance with the instructions, which they did by so amending their verdict as to fix the punishment "at confinement in the penitentiary for life," and the verdict as thus amended was properly received by the court, especially as the verdict as amended was in substance the same as the original verdict.

Garnett & Garnett for appellant.

W. S. Taylor for appellee.

Appeal from Adair Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge DuRelle.

In this case the facts have been sufficiently stated in the case of James Crockett against the Commonwealth, this day decided, and the questions of law raised in argument are the same as in that case with one exception.

After being instructed and hearing the argument of counsel the jury retired to their room to consider, and, after some time, returned into court and offered and read the following verdict: "We, the jury, find the defendant, John Crockett, guilty as charged in the indictment, and fix his punishment at confinement in the penitentiary for the period of ninety-nine years.

"P. H. BRIDGEWATER,
"One of the Jury."

Thereupon the court said to the jury that he would not receive that as a verdict; that it was not in accordance with the instructions, and called their attention to the instructions, and directed them to return to their room and make their verdict in accordance with the instructions.

Proper objections were made and exceptions taken at the time. A motion was made to discharge the jury and another motion to discharge the appellant from custody. Appellant's objections and motions were overruled by the court, and the jury then retired to their room, and, after some time, returned into the court and delivered the following verdict: "We, the jury, find the defendant, John Crockett, guilty as charged in the indictment, and fix his punishment at confinement in the penitentiary for life.

"P. H. BRIDGEWATER,
"Foreman."

The objection to the course of the trial court as to this verdict is based upon the case of Roberts v. Commonwealth, 90 Ky., 655. In that case a verdict had been returned, correct in form and substance, imposing the lowest punishment permitted in a case of voluntary manslaughter, as given in the instruction. The instruction, however, was erroneous, in that the court, through inadvertence, instructed the jury that if the accused was guilty of manslaughter his punishment was confinement in the State prison for not less than ten nor more than twenty-one years. The jury under this instruction fixed the punishment at ten years' confinement. The verdict had been announced and the jury was being polled, when it was suggested that the instruction was erroneous because it fixed the minimum at ten instead of two years. The court then gave another and correct instruction, and required the jury to return to the jury-room and further consider the case.

This court held in that case that while the jury in their second verdict lessened the punishment imposed from ten to four years, yet they might have made the punishment, when considering the case for the second time, greater than was originally found, and that the court, finding the instruction first given erroneous, should have permitted the verdict entered and then set it aside, granting the appellant a new trial. That, however, is not the case at bar. In this case the instruction given was correct, and it was no more erroneous to require the jury to make their verdict conform to the instruction given than it would have been to send them back to the jury room to further consider of their verdict if they had announced that they were unable to agree. Moreover, the verdict rendered after the second retirement of the jury was the same in substance as that rendered when they retired the first time.

Mr. Bishop, in his new Criminal Procedure, volume 1, section 1004, says: "A verdict inadequate in form and substance should not be received, but the jury should be required to perfect it, either in the presence of the court or by returning for the purpose to their room, due consultation having been had with the judge, and, if necessary, further evidence delivered."

And in the American and English Encyclopedia, volume 28, page 365, it is said: "Where defects of substance or of form appear in the verdict upon its rendition the jury may be allowed to alter or correct it at their own request, or the court may require the proper amendments to be made." (See also Abbot's Trial Brief, page 512, and authorities there cited.)

The judgment in this case is affirmed.

BARTH V. BARTH, &C.

(Filed January 13, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Construction of devise—Life estate—Under a devise by a testator to his widow of all his estate, real and personal, "absolutely and forever, with power to sell or dispose of as she deems proper, the widow took the fee notwithstanding a subsequent provision of the will that all the property that remained at her death should be equally divided among the testator's sons, the devise over of what might remain being inconsistent with the fee, and, therefore, void.

2. Mental incompetency of executrix—The evidence fails to show such want of capacity upon the part of the widow to manage the estate as executrix as to authorize the appointment of a committee or receiver, or at least the chancellor's finding upon that question will not be disturbed.

Humphrey & Davie and Burwell K. Marshall for appellant.

Dodd & Dodd and Phelps & Thum for appellees.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Guffy.

Geo. W. Barth departed this life in Jefferson county, Ky., in 1886, having first published his last will and testament, which is as follows:

"I, Geo. W. Barth, of the city of Louisville, Ky., make and declare this my last will and testament, hereby revoking all former wills by me heretofore made.

"1st. I direct my executrix and executor hereinafter named as soon after my decease as possible to pay all my just debts and funeral expenses.

"2d. I devise and bequeath to my wife, Sarah Ann Barth, all my property, real and personal, and choses in action of every description of which I may be the owner, or to which I may be entitled to at the time of my decease; also any and all insurance on my life absolutely and forever, with power to sell or dispose of as she deems proper, and all the property of whatever kind and description which remains at her death to be equally divided among my three sons, John C. Barth, Philip Barth and Charles Barth, each to receive share and share alike.

"3d. I appoint my said wife, Sarah Ann Barth, and my son, John C. Barth, executrix and executor of this my last will and testament, and request the honorable judge of the Jefferson County Court to let them qualify as such without giving bond or security. In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand this 17th day of March, 1886.

"GEORGE W. BARTH."

The will was duly probated and the executrix and executor qualified as such, but within less than a year the executor, John C. Barth, either resigned or was removed, and afterwards the appellee, Sarah A. Barth qualified as sole executrix.

It seems that appellant made a proper settlement of his accounts, so far as he attended to the business; was allowed full commission for his services, and paid over the few dollars shown to be in his hands to the executrix, who seems, by herself or agent, to have taken and exercised the sole control of the business without complaint until the institution of this suit.

This suit was instituted in March, 1892, by the appellant, John C. Barth, against the appellees. The substance of the petition and complaint is that Mrs. Barth took only a life estate under the will with remainder to appellant and the two other appellees, and that she was wasting the estate, giving large sums of money to appellees, Philip and Charles Barth, to the extent of perhaps $7,000 in cash, and had conveyed to them some valuable real estate, and that they had undue influence over her, and that she would convey other property to them unless restrained; that she had not settled her accounts as executrix, and was mentally and physically unable to attend to the business.

An injunction to restrain her from further waste was asked, as was also an injunction asked to restrain the other appellees from selling the property conveyed to them. Appellant also sought to have a committee or receiver appointed to take charge of the business and care for the appellee, Mrs. Barth.

Upon final hearing the chancellor dismissed the petition and plaintiff has appealed.

It is very ably and earnestly argued for appellant that Mrs. Barth only took a life estate under the will of her husband, but it seems to us that the language of the will is such that there can be no doubt but that the fee passed to Mrs. Barth. The language of the will under consideration is quite as clear and emphatic as the will of Lord Sterling, decided by the Court of Appeals (9 New York) in Jackson v. Rebins, 16 Johns, 537.

It was held in that case, after a careful review of the authorities, that an absolute devise to the wife passed the fee, and that another clause providing that such property as remained undisposed of by the devise should go to a certain person was void, being inconsistent with the fee or as seeking to limit or restrict it. We are not aware of any decision of this court in conflict with the decision supra. We do not so understand any of the decisions of this court quoted by appellant, and we have examined them carefully. It may be that some wills that devised property without saying that it was for life only have been held to pass only a life estate, but in such cases there was something in the will that indicated that such was the intention of the testator.

We recognize the force of the argument that the last part of a writing must control rather than the first when there is a contradiction or inconsistency. In this case, however, the wish or direction as to the disposition of the residue of the estate remaining after the death of the devisee does not contradict the preceding portion of the will, and can not amount to more than an expression of desire on the part of the testator as to the disposition of property, the title to which he had already passed to another. It is, therefore, clear that appellant had no vested interest in remainder in the property in question, hence no ground of complaint on that account. He does not claim to be a creditor of the decedent, hence can not maintain a suit for settlement of the estate. In fact it is evident that the debts of the testator have all been paid.

It is further insisted by appellant that Mrs. Barth is old, feeble, and her mind so impaired that she is not capable of attending to the business, and that her own interest requires that a committee or receiver be appointed. It may be conceded that if that fact was made sufficiently clear to the chancellor that he ought to make proper orders or cause proper proceedings to be had for her protection. More than forty depositions were taken in the action, making more than a thousand pages, and embracing more than nine thousand questions. Hence it is impracticable to recite even the substance of the testimony.

It may be that Mrs. Barth is old-fashioned and somewhat peculiar or eccentric, and might many years ago have been so distressed by the loss of some of her children as to have been entirely out of her right mind, but it is pretty evident that she is as capable now as she had been for twenty or thirty years before the death of her husband, and he ought to have been a pretty good judge of her capacity to take charge of the property, having lived with her about forty years or more.

The proof tends to show that she is very close, almost if not quite parsimonious; so much so that she will keep a servant who mistreats her for the sole reason that she can not get another so cheap. She may not have that high degree of business capacity that would be required of a person who essayed to control any of the important business meetings frequently held in the nation, but we think that she is competent to manage the business entrusted to her by her husband.

It is urged that Philip and Charles have much influence over her; too much it is said. She would be an unnatural mother if they did not have some influence with her. Charles Barth is a member of the city council of Louisville, elected by the voters of the commercial metropolis of the State, if not of the whole South. That should be a sufficient guaranty of his business capacity and integrity, for it is to be presumed that a very large majority of the city favor the very best business methods and men known to our civilization. Besides, it isclaimed by appellees that the reason for the gifts to Charles and Philip was that appellant had received much financial aid from his father, and was at the time of the gifts in good financial condition, and that the appellees had not had any such assistance and were needy, and that Mrs. Barth would not give them anything more.

Upon a careful consideration of the law and facts we are of opinion that the judgment of the court below should be sustained, and the same is, therefore, affirmed.

FUQUA & SMITH v. MASSIE & SONS.

(Filed November 11, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Breach of contract—Damages—Under a contract by which appellees agreed to assist appellants in purchasing and putting up tobacco, appellees, having by fraudulent practices violated the contract and thereby rendered themselves properly amenable to discharge from service, occupied the same attitude as if they had voluntarily quit the service of appellants; but, as it does not appear that appellants sustained any actual damage, they are not entitled to recover anything on that account. The fact that appellants suspended purchasing and putting up tobacco does not show that they were damaged by the breach of appellees, as such suspension may have been for other reasons.

C. S. Walker for appellants.

Noe & Massie and Sweeney, Ellis & Sweeney for appellees.

Appeal from Daviess Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Lewis.

April 1, 1889, Fuqua & Smith entered into a written contract with John Massie & Sons, in which, following a recital they had secured, an order for 400 or 500 hogsheads of strips to be put up in Owensboro was an agreement that in consideration of John Massie & Sons leasing their tobacco factory and putting in their services in assisting to purchase and put up the tobacco, Fuqua & Smith were to give them a half interest in the commissions. It was further agreed that Fuqua & Smith were to take tobacco already purchased by John Massie & Sons at cost originally paid by them.

In August of that year John Massie & Sons brought an action to recover for the tobacco sold by them, also damages for an alleged breach of the contract by defendants in refusing to allow plaintiffs to continue their services in purchasing and putting up the tobacco.

The lower court adjudged that plaintiffs had made fraudulent representations as to the quality of the tobacco sold to defendants, and had consequently received from the latter an excess of $1,212.88, being the difference between the value of the tobacco as represented and what it was actually worth.

It was also adjudged that although plaintiffs had used false weights and loaded peas, and defendants had the right to discharge them from the employment, they were still entitled to half the commissions on the tobacco stemmed and prepared up to the time of the discharge.

That judgment upon appeal was reversed (see 95 Ky., 387), it being held that John Massie & Sons having been rightfully discharged were not entitled to any part of the commissions on the tobacco purchased and put up, but were entitled to rent for the use of their building, and though having grave doubt whether they were entitled to recover for services rendered this court remanded the case for the lower court to ascertain and determine the value of the services up to the date of the discharge and rent of the factory building, subject to the claim of Fuqua & Smith for damages on account of the breach of contract.

The chancellor has found and fixed the value of the rent and of the services of John Massie & Sons, and looking to the testimony we do not think he erred to the prejudice of Fuqua & Smith, but he refused to adjudge that Fuqua & Smith had sustained damage by reason of the alleged breach.

It was held in the former opinion that John Massie & Sons, having by fraudulent practices violated the contract and thereby rendered themselves properly amenable to discharge from service, occupied the same attitude as if they had voluntarily abandoned the contract and quit the service. But it does not necessarily follow Fuqua & Smith sustained, by reason of such abandonment, any actual damage.

The conduct of John Massie & Sons caused the loss to themselves and gain to Fuqua & Smith of half the commissions or profits on the tobacco, which would have been much more than the chancellor has adjudged to be the value of the services rendered by them up to the date of their discharge.

If, then, Fuqua & Smith have or could have sustained damage as the proximate result of the alleged breach by John Massie & Sons, it was because their business of purchasing and putting up tobacco was thereby stopped or in some way interfered with. But it does not appear that Fuqua & Smith failed to procure, tried or even desired to procure other persons to supply the places of Massie & Sons; for anything appearing to the contrary Fuqua & Smith suspended purchasing and putting up tobacco of their own volition, and either because they did not desire or were not able to continue it longer. There is no evidence showing such suspension was caused by the breach of John Massie & Sons.

Judgment affirmed.

BUGG V. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed January 13, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Homicide—Instructions—Upon the trial of appellant for murder the instruction given by the court to the jury as embracing the whole law of the case, and which is set out in the opinion in full, was unobjectionable.

2. Same—The court properly refused instructions asked by defendant as to self-defense, as to insanity and as to manslaughter, there being no evidence upon which to base such instructions.

3. Reversible error—There can be no reversal because of the refusal of the court to permit the defendant, while testifying as a witness, to answer a particular question propounded to him, there being no avowal as to what his answer would be.

E. H. Gaither for appellant.

W. S. Taylor for appellee.

Appeal from Mercer Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge White.

At the October term, 1896, of the Mercer Circuit Court the appellant, J. W. Bugg, was indicted, tried and convicted, and given a life sentence on the charge of murder by shooting and killing Wm. Board, and his motion for a new trial having been overruled he has appealed to this court and asks a reversal.

The reasons assigned for a new trial are that the court misinstructed the jury; second, the court refused to properly instruct the jury; third, verdict is against the law and evidence; fourth, the court admitted improper evidence against the protest of defendant; fifth, the court refused to admit competent evidence offered by defendant.

The evidence in the case, as shown by the Commonwealth's witnesses, was that they were at a meeting house known as Benton Church, in Mercer county, on the day of the killing; that about sundown the appellant drove up to the church with his wife, and that the deceased (Board) arrived about the same time, accompanied by his wife and child, and his wife and child went into the church, Board remaining on the outside, and very shortly afterwards appellant Bugg and his wife passed into the church, passing not far from Board; that after Bugg had gone into the church Board, the deceased, and several others took seats upon a stile, Board facing the north, the stile being east of the church; that shortly after this Bugg came out of the church walking towards the stile, stopping an instant at the well, passed to the south side of the stile, spoke to one of the witnesses sitting on the stile and almost immediately aftewards a shot was fired striking Board in the back. Board fell off the stile on his hands and knees, and as he (Board) arose Bugg shot two more shots in Board's back. Witnesses did not see Bugg when the first shot was fired, but hearing the report immediately saw Bugg with a pistol, and saw the other two shots fired by him. After Board had risen up he fired one shot at Bugg and threw his pistol at him. Bugg walked off snapping his pistol at Board. Board staggered a few steps and fell and died in about half an hour from the effects of the wounds. Bugg then went to the corner of the church, returned with his pistol in his hand near where Board was lying. One witness stated that Bugg said on his return that "no damn man can talk about my wife and live." Another said his statement was, "I tried to kill the damn son-of-a-bitch." Bugg then called his wife from the church and drove off, but afterwards surrendered to an officer. Defendant being sworn, made his statement, in which he says that about the 26th day of May, 1896, he was living close neighbor to the deceased; that he was an intimate friend of Board's, and that their families were very intimate; that he had known Board and lived near him most of his life; that on that date Jake Brady told him Board was too intimate with his (Bugg's) wife, and that he was carrying a pistol for him; that Tom Claunch could tell him everything. Appellant saw Claunch, who told him of Board's connection with his wife, and that Board said he would tell him (Bugg) the truth if he asked him about it, but he must come to him in a good humor or he would kill him; that he (Board) did not intend that Bugg should get the advantage of him.

Claunch also told him that Board was carrying a pistol for him; that the circumstances detailed to him so upset him he hardly knew what he did, but he determined to see Board and ask him about it, but before he went to see Board Claunch and wife, who was appellant's sister, made him promise to go to Board in a good humor. If he did not they assured him that Board would kill him. The appellant went to see Board about it. When he called Board out Board came out with his hand on his pistol, which was in his right pants pocket. When he asked Board about it Board said, partly drawing his pistol at the same time, sit down and I will tell you all, when Board said it is all true, and by G— if you had been in my place you would have done the same thing with my wife, wouldn't you? Appellant says, being very much distressed and wholly unarmed, he does not remember what he answered, but may have given his assent to the proposition. Appellant then says he left the State to avoid the disgrace, and not wishing to commit a crime by killing Board that he went to the State of Indiana to his brothers and returned about four weeks before the killing; that while in Indiana he purchased a small pistol, 38 caliber, but did not buy it for the purpose of killing Board. After his return home he avoided Board; that Board passed appellant's place several times and he kept out of his way and avoided meeting Board; that on the week of the killing Will Smith told appellant that Board had said to him (Smith) that he (Board) had something, here indicating his pistol pocket, that would settle him.

On Wednesday before the killing Lyman Brunfield told appellant that Board was doing as he pleased with his wife, and that he (Bugg) could not help himself; if he made any move about it he would kill him, and during the same conversation Board said he would not let defendant get the drop on him; that on the day of the killing, sometime in the morning, he met several parties on a bridge near his house; that Board was with them. As he passed he did not speak to Board, but did speak to the persons with Board; that in the evening of the killing, about two hours before sundown, he was catching his horse to go to church when James Cary came along and asked defendant where he was going. Defendant told him he was going to church. Then Cary said to him he had better look out for Board, for Board had recently told him that he was sleeping with his (Bugg's) wife whenever he wished, and offered to make arrangements with Bugg's wife for the witness; and then witness told him (Board) that he had better look out as some day Bugg would slip upon him and kill him. Board drew a pistol, showing it to the witness, and said if that son-of-a-bitch made a move I will kill him; I have got this timed for him. He said on hearing these statements he made up his mind to kill Board, and went home, examined and loaded his pistol and went to church. When he got to the church he saw Board with his wife and child. Appellant went into the church with his own wife, sat there an instant and came out. When he left the church it was with the determination of hurting Board. He felt that either he or Board must die. He says he lost control of himself and killed Board; that appellant and his wife had had some domestic trouble, but it was no such trouble as this; he had never suspected his wife of infidelity.

John Claunch, witness for appellant, testified on behalf of defendant, and corroborated the appellant in his testimony as to the conversations detailed by defendant as having been had with him. Claunch also stated that Bugg was terribly distressed, and when spoken to on the subject cried like a child, and that Board told him, when speaking of the visit of Bugg to Board in reference to the matter, that he was prepared for Bugg and that he got a shotgun and pistol; that he had gun on one side and pistol on the other, and made Bugg admit he would have done the same to Board's wife under like circumstances.

Jake Brady corroborated him as to what Brady told him what Board had said about his wife. In fact the testimony of the witnesses corroborates all the statements made by appellant in his testimony as to what said witnesses had told him what Board had said about his wife. Many of defendant's witnesses testify that appellant, on account of these charges, said to have been made by Board, was much distressed and would break down and cry when spoken to on the subject.

This extended statement of the evidence is necessary to determine whether the instructions given covered the whole law of the case, and whether the refused instructions should have been given by the court. At the conclusion of the evidence the defendant asked the court to instruct the jury as to the whole law of the case, whereupon the court gave instruction No. 1, as follows: "If you believe from the evidence in this case, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant, J. W. Bugg, in Mercer county, Kentucky, and before the finding of the indictment herein, willfully, feloniously, and with malice aforethought, shot and killed Wm. Board with a pistol, you will find defendant Bugg guilty of murder, as charged, and fix his punishment at death, or at confinement in the State penitentiary for life, in your discretion, under the evidence. If you have a reasonable doubt that the defendant has been proven guilty, you will render a verdict of not guilty."

By the word "feloniously," as used in the preceding instruction, is meant a deliberate intent to do a "wrong act." This instruction was excepted to by defendant, but we are unable to see any objection to this instruction, and no defect in it has been pointed out by the able counsel that represents the defendant.

The defendant then asked the court to give to the jury instruction No. 2, which was refused, as follows: "If the jury believe from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant, J.W. Bugg, shot and killed Wm. Board, yet if they further believe from the evidence that when he shot and killed said Board he had reasonable grounds to believe, and did believe, that the said Board was then about to inflict upon him loss of life or great bodily harm, and that the killing of Board was necessary, or apparently necessary, to to protect himself from such loss of life or great bodily harm, they should acquit him."

The third instruction asked for and refused is as follows: "If the jury believe from the evidence that J. W. Bugg, at the time he killed Wm. Board, if they believe he did kill him, was so mentally insane as not to know that such act was either legally or morally wrong, or not to have sufficient power of control to govern his actions, they should acquit him."

No. 4, also refused, is as follows: "The word 'willful,' as used in the first instruction, means an intentional act done by one in the sufficient possession of his faculties to control his action."

Instruction 5, also refused, is as follows: "If the jury believe from the evidence that at the time of the killing the defendant was acting under excitement or passion, and not through malice, they should find him guilty of manslaughter, and fix his punishment at not less than two nor more than twenty-one years' confinement in the State penitentiary."

Sixth, also refused by the court: "If the jury believe from the evidence that at the time of the killing the defendant, Bugg, had been recently informed of any acts and threats of Board, and that the said information had so unsettled defendant's mind that the sight of Board caused in him an ungovernable passion, they are instructed that while these facts would not excuse Board for killing the defendant, they would reduce the offense from murder to voluntary manslaughter, and the jury should so find. It is not necessary that the circumstances revealed to the defendant should be true, but it is sufficient if the defendant believed them to be true."

Without commenting on these instructions as abstract principles of law—for neither of these instructions were authorized by the proof in this case—no such facts were shown to exist that would authorize the court to instruct the jury on any other hypothesis but that of murder, and no error was committed by the refusal to give the instructions asked for by appellants.

During the progress of the trial the appellant, while testifying, was asked by his counsel to state to the jury what Claunch had told him Board had said about his (appellant's) wife, the attorney for the Commonwealth objected, and the court sustained the objection and refused to let appellant state what Claunch told him Board had said, to which ruling of the court appellant excepted. The bill of exceptions does not show what the witness would have answered if permitted to answer. The rejected testimony should have been made known to the court, and certified in the bill of exceptions to authorize this court to pass on it.

We find no reversible error in this record, and the judgment of conviction is, therefore, affirmed.

McBRAYER V. DEAN, &C.

(Filed January 13, 1897.)

Assignment of judgment—Set-off.—The defendant in a judgment may set-off against it a judgment against the plaintiff which has been assigned to him by another; and it is immaterial, as far as this right is concerned, whether or not there was any consideration for this assignment or whether, if there was a consideration, it was conditional merely. Nor does it make any difference that the judgment against which the right of set-off is claimed has been assigned to another if the defendant had no notice of such assignment when he received the transfer of the judgment which he seeks to use as a set-off.

P. B. Thompson, sr., for appellant.

L. C. Willis for appellees.

Appeal from Anderson Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Lewis.

In June, 1890, Joe E. Cohen recovered judgment for $938.52 against John H. McBrayer, and in March, 1892, the latter brought this action to have various demands he then held set-off against that judgment upon the ground of insolvency of the former who, with others, his creditors, were made defendants.

By the judgment in this action the one of 1890 was by credits allowed on account of payments made thereon and debts against Cohen subsequently acquired by McBrayer reduced to the sum of $711.12, which was applied according to priority first to a demand of appellee, W. R. Dean, and, next, to one of appellee, K. B. Cohen, administratrix of G. C. Cohen.

In his petition McBrayer set up and asked said judgment of 1890 be credited by the amount of a judgment for $315 and interest, which Murphy & Co. had recovered against Joe E. Cohen, and in December, 1890, sold and assigned to him (McBrayer.) But precedence and priority of the claims of Dean and the administratrix of G. C. Cohen having been adjudged, there was nothing of the fund of $711.12 left to satisfy the judgment of Murphy & Co., hence this appeal by McBrayer.

Neither validity or subsistence of the judgment in favor of Murphy & Co. appear to have been controverted, but we suppose the lower court was of the opinion McBrayer had not acquired such interest as would entitle him to the benefit of it as a set-off.

The writing showing a transfer or attempted transfer and assignment of it is as follows:

"JANUARY, 15, 1892.

"Whereas, I have this day sold unto John H. McBrayer a judgment against Joe E. Cohen for $315, now I hereby agree to receive only one-half of the amount that said McBrayer may recover on the same and no more. Signed: ED. MURPHY,

"By ROARK."

Whether the true meaning of that instrument is that the payment by McBrayer of any part of the consideration for the assignment of the judgment is wholly dependent upon his recovery of the same is not entirely plain. But it was proved that McBrayer did in fact execute his unconditional promissory note to Murphy & Co. in consideration of the assignment, and such being the case we do not see anything to hinder him from pleading and relying upon it as offset to the judgment of 1890. But however that may be he did unquestionably acquire legal title to the judgment of Murphy & Co., and, whether held by him in trust or his liability to pay therefor was dependant upon the amount of it he might succeed in setting off and having deducted from the judgment of 1890, he had the right, according to decisions of this court in such cases, to plead and rely on it as set-off.

In the case of Dorsey v. Reese, 14 B. M., 157, it was distinctly held that a judgment debtor, being invested with title to a note executed by his judgment creditor to a third party, it was wholly immaterial whether it was assigned without any consideration or upon one that was conditional, his right existed to make that use of it which the law authorizes owners to make of such demands as belong to them, including the right to set it off against a judgment that had even been assigned to another.

In Otwell v. Cook, 9 B. M., 357, it was held that a plaintiff, having acquired a note after defendant acquired the note offered as a set-off, can not resist the set-off on the ground that the latter note was assigned to the defendant for the benefit of a third person, especially when it appears that the beneficiary concurs in the set-off. And the same doctrine was held in Graham v. Tilford, &c., 1 Met., 112.

There is no evidence showing that McBrayer had, at the time the judgment of Murphy & Co. was assigned to him, notice of the assignment by Joe E. Cohen of the judgment of 1890 to either Dean or Geo. C. Cohen, and we see no reason why his demand should not, in application of the fund of $711.12, have precedence and priority of the demands of both.

Wherefore, the judgment is reversed and cause remanded for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

LOUISVILLE GAS CO. V. DULANEY & ALEXANDER.

SAME V. STONE.

(Filed January 14, 1897.)

1. Right of gas company to charge meter rent.—Where the charter of a gas company limits the amount which it may charge for gas the company can not charge small consumers an additional amount as "meter rent," it being the duty of the company to provide some means of measuring the gas which it furnishes; and the fact that the charter provides that the company shall furnish gas "under reasonable rules and regulations" does not authorize such a charge.

2. If the price of gas were unrestricted by the charter the rule charging a higher price to small consumers might be upheld, and the question would then be the ascertainment of what is a reasonable rate.

Humphrey & Davie for appellant.

Dulaney & Alexander, Stone & Suddeth, J. M. Chatterson and Laf Joseph for appellees.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hazelrigg.

The charter of the appellant confers on it the exclusive privilege of erecting, maintaining and operating gas works in the city of Louisville for the manufacture and sale of gas for illuminating purposes, and section 12 thereof provides that "said company shall furnish illuminating gas to private consumers who may apply therefor, under reasonable rules and regulations to be prescribed by the company, at a price not to exceed one dollar and thirty-five cents for one thousand cubic feet, less a discount of five cents per one thousand cubic feet, to all persons, including the city, except as to street lamps, paying their bills within five days after same are due." * *

The appellees are private consumers of the appellant's gas, and upon their refusal to pay a charge for meter rent the company was about to shut off the supply. This the appellees enjoined, relying on the provisions of the section quoted as furnishing the total charge for gas to which they could be subjected.

The meter rent is sought to be upheld as a "reasonable rule and regulation," within the meaning of those terms in the charter, and is not imposed on consumers, as appears from the answer, unless they fail to use a minimum amount of gas in a given month.

This process of charging rent is illustrated by the memorandum on the back of the gas bills on file, as follows:

"METER RENT.

"3 light meter, consuming 500 cubic feet or less, 10 cents per month.

"5 light meter, consuming 800 cubic feet or less, 12 cents per month.

"10 light meter, consuming 1,000 cubic feet or less, 15 cents per month.

"20 light meter, consuming 1,200 cubic feet or less, 17 cents per month.

"30 light meter, consuming 1,500 cubic feet or less, 20 cents per month.

"45 light meter, etc."

Appellees, Dulaney & Alexander, used (in their law office) a three-light meter, and, having consumed in a given month only 200 cubic feet, were charged ten cents in addition to the regular price of the gas. Appellee Stone used a 30-light meter (in his residence), and, having consumed less than 1,500 cubic feet in three given months, was charged sixty cents in addition to the price of the gas.

It is averred in the answers that there are many persons in the city to whose fixtures in their houses, stores and offices the appellant has attached its pipes, but who procure their lights from certain electric light companies, and who use the gas light furnished by the appellant only occasionally, and when by accident they are deprived of their electric lights; that these persons, therefore, use a very small quantity of gas, and are the persons mainly affected by the meter charge; that in adopting this rule to furnish gas to all who apply, however small a quantity may be demanded, and fixing a uniform charge on rent of meters when a minimum amount of gas is consumed, it has attempted in good faith to do justice to all without discrimination. A demurrer was sustained to the answer in each case, and the injunction perpetuated. In this we concur.

The gas meter is the property of the company, and is as necessary to the company in the measurement of its gas as are its works for its manufacture. At least some process of measurement is as necessary, and while other methods have been used, the meter, we believe, is regarded as the best known method, and is generally adopted. While the consumer may cause it to be inspected, and may test the accuracy of its work, his concern is only to ascertain and pay for what gas he has consumed, and can not be called on to pay for the apparatus used in its measurement any more than he can be made to pay for the machinery used in its manufacture. He is required to pay the legal rate for the quantity consumed, and this quantity must be ascertained by the company by some correct method.

The company can only charge for the quantity it actually furnishes, and, to ascertain what it furnishes, it must measure it—how, the consumer does not care, so it is measured correctly.

The appellees, therefore, are entitled to have their gas furnished to them already measured; and, for it so measured, they can be made to pay at the price of $1.35 per thousand feet, and no more.

If the price of gas were unrestricted in the organic law of the corporation, the rule charging a higher price to small consumers might be upheld. A wholesale merchant sells for a less price than does the retailer, and this is entirely reasonable. The question would then be the ascertainment of what is a reasonable rate, and this is the question involved in this case, relied on by the appellant, of the State of Missouri, ex rel., &c. v. Sedalia Gas Light Co., 34 Mo. App., 501. There the company required the payment by the consumer of $1.25 per month when the amount of gas used was less than 500 cubic feet, and this sum was denominated "rent of meter." It was held that this charge was not unreasonable, and that while the sum fixed was designated as "rent of meter," it was in fact pay for all gas consumed by the customer to the extent of 500 cubic feet.

Presumably the company was aware when it obtained its charter and established its monopoly that there would be small consumers as well as large ones, and there would be less profit in furnishing the one class than the other, but it did not on that account reject the charter or obtain the right to add to the price of the small consumer's bill.

The judgments are affirmed.

CLORE, &C. V. ROBINSON.

(Filed January 14, 1897.)

Sales of personal property—Refusal of purchaser to receive—Where the purchaser of personal property refuses to receive it the seller may sell it at the best price that can by reasonable effort be obtained, and recover of the purchaser the difference between what he has received for the property and what it would have amounted to at the contract price. And in order to give the seller this right it is not necessary that he should give to the purchaser notice of his intention to sell.

S. B. & R. D. Vance for appellants.

Wilfred Carrico for appellee.

Appeal from Daviess Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Lewis.

In May, 1893, appellee Robinson sold to appellants, F. L. Clore & Co., all saw logs cut from a certain class or description of timber growing upon a certain tract of land at fixed prices, the logs to be delivered on the cars at the mill of the latter. After receiving a portion of the logs appellants declined to receive any others, and at their instance appellee agreed to stop cutting upon condition they would receive all up to that time cut and placed at the railroad station, whence they were to be shipped to the mill of appellant. But afterwards appellants refused absolutely to receive them, and then appellee brought this action to recover the difference in amount at which he had sold those remaining logs to other parties and the amount to which he was entitled at the prices agreed on between him and appellants.

A jury having been waived and the law and facts submitted to the court, we must accept its finding, supported as it is by evidence, to be true. Indeed there is no objection made by counsel to the correctness of that finding of facts, but the principal ground for reversal relied upon is that appellee sold the logs to another party without first giving to appellants notice of his intention to do so. The material inquiry in all such cases is whether the seller, after the refusal of the purchaser to receive personal property according to contract, made due effort to sell at the best attainable price, and did in fact sell at the best price that could by reasonable effort be obtained, and if so it is certainly not indispensable and hardly material or necessary that he should have given previous notice to the purchaser. Courts in some of the States do hold such notice to be requisite in order to entitle the seller to recover the difference between what he sold the property for and what it would have amounted to at the contract price, but such has never been the announced doctrine of this court.

Nor do we now see any reason for holding the notice to be a prerequisite to recovery where the purchaser has abandoned the property to destruction or decay, and but for the voluntary act of the seller, who might have also abandoned it, a total loss to the former, not to the latter, would have resulted.

The lower court not only found as a fact in this case that appellee sold the logs in question at the best price he could obtain for it after due effort, but found and determined, as we think correctly, that appellant by a written communication to appellee waived notice of such sale.

The point made by counsel that it does not appear all the logs were cut from the particular tract of land in contemplation of the parties can not avail, because there was an agreement by appellants in consideration of forbearance of appellee to cut more logs to take those already at the railroad station.

Judgment affirmed.

JOHNSON'S ADM'R V. HASKINS.

(Filed January 15, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Premature rendition of judgment—Where summons in an equity action was served August 28th, judgment rendered at a term beginning September 7th was not premature, there being ten days between the service and the beginning of the term.

2. Judicial Sales—Death of defendant before conveyance—Where one whose land has been sold under decree dies after the confirmation of the sale, although before the expiration of the period allowed for redemption, no revivor is necessary in order to give validity to the conveyance to the purchaser. (Kentucky Statutes, section 521.)

Hill & Hill for appellant.

Carrico & Miller for appellee.

Appeal from Daviess Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge DuRelle.

This was an action by the administrator and children of Granville Johnson, deceased, for the recovery of real estate alleged to be held by the defendant, Haskins, for a sale thereof, and a settlement of the estate of the decedent.

The petition as amended shows that the property was sold under a judgment of the Daviess Circuit Court; that Haskins was the purchaser, and that after the equity of redemption had expired it was conveyed to him. It was claimed on behalf of appellant that the judgment was prematurely rendered; and further, that Johnson died before the equity of redemption had expired, and that, therefore, the proceedings in that suit were void.

As to the first objection the petition in this case shows that the service of summons in the suit on the mortgage was on the 28th of August, and the first day of the term was on the 7th of September, which makes ten days between the service and the first day of the term.

As to the second objection the petition shows that the sale was made, reported and confirmed before Johnson's death, but that, as the property had sold for less than two-thirds of its appraised value, the deed was not made until after his death.

As to this objection it is only necessary to cite section 521 of the Kentucky Statutes, as follows: "If by the judgment of any court of this Commonwealth having jurisdiction thereof real estate shall be sold, and any party to the action shall die after the sale has been confirmed, or if any conveyance of real estate shall be ordered by such court to be made by a commissioner, and a party to the proceeding die before the conveyance is perfected, it shall not be necessary on that account to revive the action; but such sale or conveyance, when perfected, shall be effectual to pass title to the same extent as if all parties were living."

The judgment is affirmed.

SHIRE'S ADM'R, &C. V. JOHNSON, &C.

(Filed January 15, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Verification of claim against decedent's estate—Even if it is required that all of several joint claimants against the estate of a decedent shall verify the claim, the failure of one or more to join in the verification in this case is not sufficient to authorize the reversal of a judgment upon the claim, as the objection not being made in the court below was waived.

2. The recital in a deed that the purchase money has been paid is, at most, only prima facie evidence of payment; and, under the facts and circumstances in this case, was fully overcome.

3. Acceptance of deed by administrator—Where the purchaser of land, by parol contract, died before the deed was delivered, his administrator had no power to bind his estate for the purchase money by accepting the deed; and, therefore, it was error to render personal judgment against the administrator therefor. But the heirs can not hold the land without paying for it; and, therefore, a judgment for the sale of the land to pay the purchase money was proper.

Wright & McElroy and Edward W. Hines for appellants.

Lewis McQuown for appellees.

Appeal from Allen Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Guffy.

It appears that in April, 1892, W. L. Hollis purchased of the appellees the small tract of land mentioned in the pleading at the agreed price of $125, but that no written contract was entered into, although it seems that Hollis took possession of the land. The vendors lived in different parts of the country—some in Tennessee and some in different counties in this State—and the deed to the land was not fully acknowledged until the 30th day of December, 1892, at which time it appears that Hollis was dead.

It further appears that the sale of the land was made by the vendors through or by their father as agent for them, who also died about the time of the death of Hollis; at any rate was dead before the deed was delivered to appellant Shire.

Miss Morehead, who seems to have been the last one to acknowledge the deed, sent it to the administrator of Hollis by her brother, and that, too, without any direction to demand payment, and it was so delivered. The administrator, it seems, received the deed, and it was put to record on the 6th day of March, 1893. Afterwards some request by some of the vendors for payment was made, and, the same being refused, this suit was instituted. The deed acknowledged payment in full, but appellees alleged that such recital was a mistake, and that no part of the purchase money had been paid, which was denied by appellants.

The court upon final hearing rendered judgment against the administrator for the amount claimed, and adjudged a sale of enough of the land to pay the same, and from that judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

It is insisted for appellants that the judgment should be reversed because of the insufficiency of evidence, and for the further reason that all the claimants had not verified the demand as required by law. Several of the claimants made the proper affidavit, and, as no objection was made in the court below on the ground of failure of all the parties to verify, that objection must be now held to have been waived, if indeed any further verification was required.

The recital in the deed that the purchase money had been paid was at most only prima facie evidence of payment, and, under the facts and circumstances in this case, was, we think, fully overcome or disproved by the deposition of Mr. Read.

It would have been negligence on the part of Hollis to have paid for the land before he had an enforcible contract, and it was but the ordinary way of doing business to recite payment in the deed, if payment was to be made upon the delivery of the same.

The administrator, Shire, had no power to bind the estate of Hollis for the purchase of real estate, hence his acceptance of the deed did not create any obligation upon the part of Hollis' estate to pay for the land, the title to which passed directly to the heirs of Hollis, if it passed at all; but the heirs can not hold the land free from the purchase-money lien, and not having distinctly repudiated the contract or conveyance, the judgment for a sale of the land to pay the purchase money was proper, and is affirmed, but the judgment against the administrator, James M. Shire, is reversed and cause remanded for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

JUNG BREWING CO. V. CITY OF FRANKFORT.

(Filed January 15, 1897.)

1. Constitutionality of ordinance—Discrimination—A city has no right to make a discrimination in the imposition of a license tax as between the sales of goods manufactured in the city and goods manufactured outside the city. But a city ordinance providing for the payment of a license fee by "every person or corporation who will engage in the business of selling or delivering any beer, ale or porter, or any kind of malt or fermented liquor, which has been brewed out of the city, to a licensed dealer in the city," will not be declared unconstitutional in the absence of an averment that such a license fee is not required for the sales of such goods manufactured in the city, the presumption being in favor of the constitutionality of the ordinance.

2. License tax—Where a corporation which manufactures goods outside a city places them in the hands of an agent in the city, who delivers them to its customers as they need them, the sales of the goods must be regarded as completed in the city, and the city may require the payment of a license tax therefor.

Newton G. Rogers and W. McKee Duncan for appellant.

Hugh Rodman and James A. Violett for appellee.

Appeal from Franklin Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Guffy.

The plaintiff in this action sought a judgment against the defendant for $250 license fee or tax which, as alleged, had been wrongfully collected of appellant by appellee, upon the assumption that appellant was subject to be charged that sum for the privilege of selling beer, etc., in the city of Frankfort.

The material portion of the petition alleges that the following ordinance was enacted by the city council of Frankfort: "Each and every person, firm or corporation who will engage in the business of selling or delivering any beer, ale or porter, or any kind of malt or fermented liquor, which has been brewed out of the city, to a licensed dealer in the city, shall be treated as wholesaling beer, ale or porter, and shall pay to the treasurer of the board of sinking fund commission a license therefor of two hundred and fifty dollars per annum."

It is also alleged in the petition that "appellant is a corporation organized under the laws of Ohio, and has no place of business except in Cincinnati, Ohio, and no other place of sale for such products aforesaid; that heretofore various persons engaged in business in the city of Frankfort desiring to purchase beer of it (the plaintiff), the product of the said plant in Cincinnati, and it desiring to supply such demand, employed a representative in the city of Frankfort to deliver its said product to such persons, and did proceed to employ such person or representative, who did deliver said product in said city, and was engaged in so doing prior to May 1, 1894; that it made no sales of said products in Frankfort before nor since 1st of May, 1894, except as above set forth; that its patrons, who desired its products, purchased the same from it in Cincinnati, and that it sold said products to its said patrons in Cincinnati, and that its only connection with the city of Frankfort, in any manner, was to deliver said product, as so sold by it in Cincinnati, to its patrons in Frankfort; that the necessities and demands of said business requiring that said product or beer should be kept cold or in cold storage, it did make arrangements with a certain person in Frankfort to keep said beer in cold storage, and deliver it from time to time as those who had purchased it might desire the same; that it simply did this as a matter of compliment or accommodation to its said patrons in the premises."

The circuit court sustained a demurrer to the petition, and, appellant declining to amend, the action was dismissed, and to reverse that judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

It is claimed in the petitition, and earnestly argued in the brief of appellant, that the ordinance is void, being unconstitutional because it discriminates between persons whose preducts are manufactured outside of Frankfort and those who manufacture beer in the city. If such discrimination was really made the ordinance would be void and unconstitutional, and appellant would be entitled to recover the money paid, if paid under the conditions alleged in the petition; but there is no averment in the petition that any person in Frankfort is allowed to manufacture such articles in the city and sell them there without paying the $250 license fee.

Indeed it rather seems that appellant carefully refrained from making any allegation as to what license was required for the sale of beer, etc., made and sold in the city, and, under the well-established rule that pleadings are construed most strongly against the pleader, it follows that the presumption is that no one was exempt from paying the license fee, and that presumption is strengthened by the general presumption that legislative acts are not generally unconstitutional; and before a law can be so declared it must be made to clearly appear that it was enacted without constitutional authority.

The contention of appellant that all his sales were in Ohio can not be sustained. It is perfectly clear from the averments in the petition that the sales were perfected and completed in the city of Frankfort. If appellant's contention is sound, then it would be an easy matter for manufacturers outside of the city to sell to the people in the city all the beer, etc., they needed, and thus deprive the city of any license fees for the sale of beer and all other liquors.

The case of Commonwealth v. Russell, 11 KY. LAW REP., 576, does not sustain appellant's contention. It is not at all in point. The other questions argued by counsel on each side need not be discussed.

Judgment affirmed.

The Kentucky Law Reporter.

EDITOR:
WALTER G. CHAPMAN, ... Frankfort, Ky.

VOL. 18. MAY 1, 1897. No. 21

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

STONE, AUDITOR, v. THOMPSON.

(Filed December 18, 1896.)

Fees for holding examining courts—Under section 353 of the Kentucky Statutes the county judge, and other magistrates sitting as examining courts in felony cases, are entitled to receive for such services $2 in each case, but not to exceed $4 in any one case where the trial takes more than one day.

Petition for rehearing overruled March 13, 1897.

W. S. Taylor for appellant.

Kohn, Baird & Spindle for appellee.

Appeal from Franklin Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Pryor.

This question involves the construction of the statute, fixing the fees of the courts in this Commonwealth for holding examining courts in felony cases.

In the General Statutes, under the title of "Fees," we find this item: "For presiding at examining courts in felony cases, per day, to be paid out of the treasury, $2.00."

This court, in a case reported in Auditor v. Kinkead, 80 Ky., 596, in determining the legislative intent, said that the purpose of the Legislature was to allow only $2.00 per day, and no more, although the judge or magistrate might try as many as two or more cases on the same day; that he was paid by the day, and not for the trial of each case. Under this construction, the magistrate or justice of the peace, if trying only one case, could prolong the trial from day to day; and if the trial continued as long as five days, and it lasted sometimes longer, the magistrate would be entitled to $2.00 for each day, making $10.00 for the one case, increasing thereby the burden on the treasury, and offering an inducement to prolong the trial that the fee might be enlarged. To remedy this evil, or at least to make the fees of such officers more definite and certain, the Legislature changed the statute, and the fees of examining courts so regulated as that no greater fee could be charged for holding an examining court in any one case than $4.00.

The statute, as it now stands, reads: "To county judges and other magistrates for holding examining courts in felony cases, for the first day's service, $2.00; for each additional day, $1.00, not to exceed $4.00 in any one case." The Legislature, by the act just quoted, was more explicit and certain as to its meaning than in the General Statutes, and limited by the language used "not to exceed $4.00 in any one case," the magistrate to that sum, and no greater, where he held his examining court longer than four days; in other words, you shall not charge more than $4.00 in any one case, $2.00 for the first day and $1.00 for each day thereafter, not to exceed $4.00 in any one case, making manifest an intention on the part of the Legislature to pay for each case tried, not to exceed $4.00, instead of permitting such courts to be held for an indefinite period that greater fees might be obtained.

It is insisted that this view of the question is in conflict with the case of Auditor v. Kinkead, 80 Ky., 596, when it is apparent the language used, "not to exceed $4.00 in any one case," which is not in the General Statutes, was intended to explain the legislative meaning, and give to the magistrate his fees in each case, but not to exceed the sum fixed by the statute.

Judgment affirmed.

Judges Lewis, Guffy and DuRelle dissenting.

ADAMS' ADM'R, &C. V. REED.

(Filed December 19, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Life insurance -Insurable interest—To give one an insurable interest in the life of another, it is enough that in the ordinary course of events loss or disadvantage will naturally and probably arise to him from the death of the insured. Therefore, while a mother-in-law had no insurable interest in the life of her son-in-law by reason of that relation alone, yet as the two were living together under an arrangement by which each was to pay one-half the living expenses, and to divide between them the profits derived from keeping boarders, the assignment by the son-in-law to the mother-in-law of a policy of insurance upon his life, taken out for the benefit of his wife, who had since died, was valid, although the arrangement under which the two were living together was not for any definite period; and the assignee, having paid the premiums, was entitled upon the death of the insured to the proceeds of the policy, the assignment of the policy having been made with the consent of the company, which does not now question the validity of the assignment, but has deposited the fund subject to the order of the court.

C. W. Milliken, G. H. Galloway, Whitesides & Moore and Edward W. Hines for appellants.

Thos. H. Hines, Geo. C. Harris and Goodnight & Roark for appellee.

Appeal from Simpson Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Pryor.

This controversy is between the appellee, India Reed, on the one side, and M. C. Adams, as the administrator of D. C. Adams, on the other, and originates from the claim of each to the proceeds of a policy of insurance issued by the Mutual Benefit Life Insurance on the 22d of May, 1885, on the life of D. C. Adams for the benefit of his wife; or, if she should die, then to his children; and, if no children, to his personal representatives or assigns. The wife, for whose benefit the policy was issued, died childless, and some four or five years after her death the insured, D. C. Adams, died, and the appellant is his personal representative.

The facts of the case are these: The insured was the son-in-law of the appellee, and during the life of his wife, and for some time after, they lived together as one family, each contributing to the support of the other. They lived from the proceeds of their daily labor; and, in order that each should contribute to the support of those having claims upon them, it was agreed that each should furnish one-half the supplies, the mother-in-law agreeing also to do the housework. They kept boarders and divided the profits. When the wife of the insured died the same arrangement continued, and, in looking for a beneficiary and some one to keep the policy alive, the proof tends to show that the relatives of the insured were asked to advance the money to pay premiums but declined; and, after much persuasion from the insured, the mother-in-law, the appellee, finally consented to pay the premiums, and have the policy assigned to her. This was done by the consent of the company, and she paid the premiums annually for several years, and up to the death of the insured. After her death the company was willing to pay her the money, and, in fact, she gave them a receipt acknowledging payment; but the next of kin of the insured, or his personal representative, appeared and asserted their claim; hence, the present action by the appellee to recover on the policy. The insurance company paid the money into court, leaving the chancellor to determine which of the claimants were entitled to the fund, and a judgment was rendered in favor of the appellee.

The policy had been assigned to her by the insured upon notice to the company, and the latter is making no claim as against her right to the money, as from year to year she had paid them the annual premiums. There is nothing in the policy or charter of the company preventing the assignment of the policy, and, the wife of the insured leaving no children, there is no reason why the assignment to the appellee by the consent of the company is not binding on all the parties, unless in violation of a sound public policy.

The company is making no question with the appellee upon that or upon any other ground; but it is contended by the appellant that public policy forbids the recovery by the appellee, and that the personal representative, who occupies no better position with reference to the appellee than the insured, is entitled to the money.

This is not a charter embodying any other idea of benefits than the payment of the premiums by the insured for the beneficiary named in the policy. The case of Bayse v. Adams, 81 Ky., 368, is relied on by the appellant as conclusive of this case; but when considered with reference to the relation existing between the insured and his mother-in-law, and the actual interest the latter had in the life of the assured, there is but little reason in the attempt to apply the rule in Bayse v. Adams to the facts of this case.

In fact, if the appellee had no other claim to this fund than the high and pure equity she presents, the chancellor would not hesitate to give her this money as against those who, neither in law, equity or good morals, are entitled to it; and, in recognizing to the fullest extent the rule of public policy as settled in Bayse v. Adams, and applying it to the facts of this case, the judgment in favor of the appellee was proper.

It is true the mother-in-law, by reason alone of her relation to the son-in-law, could not enforce the collection of this policy, as she would not have an insurable interest; but when this case is considered with reference to that relation, and the facts inducing the appellee to become the beneficiary, her right of recovery is based upon both equitable and legal grounds.

In the case of Bayse v. Adams, this court said: "In all cases there must be a reasonable ground founded on the relation of the parties to each other, either pecuniary or of blood or affinity, to expect some benefit or advantage from the continuance of the life of the assured."

The facts of this case bring it directly within the doctrine of that case, and the expectation of pecuniary benefit was the mutual agreement between the assured and the appellee by which they undertook to live as one family and divide between them what little was made. That this agreement existed when the policy was assigned clearly appears, and that it was for an indefinite period, or such as either could have abandoned, can make no difference. It had not been abandoned at any time, and was the basis for the assignment of the policy, that the comfort and welfare of the appellee and her child might be secured under the assignment as long as the assured lived, and after his death.

In Hoyt v. New York Life Insurance Company, 3 Bos., 440, it is said: "It is not necessary in life insurance that the one for whose benefit the life of another is insured should be a creditor of that other. It is enough that in the ordinary course of events loss or disadvantage will naturally and probably arise to the party in whose favor the policy is written from the death of the person whose life is insured."

Under this rule the partner may insure his co-partner, the employer the life of his employe, and in all cases where from the relation the parties sustain toward each other, whether from near kindred or from a contractual relation, such policies have been upheld. This appellee realized the benefits resulting to her from the agreement between herself and her son-in-law, and to provide against want paid these premiums for years from her daily labor, and the question of lapses of policy is not involved.

Judgment affirmed.

McLAUGHLIN V. WHEELER.

(Filed January 6, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Contested election—Failure of one member of board to act— The fact that only two of the three members of the county board, provided by section 1534 of the Kentucky Statutes for determining contested elections, take part in deciding a contest does not invalidate a finding in which both members acting concur, they being a majority of the board. Nor is their finding invalidated by the fact that the place of the member who did not act was taken by an unauthorized person, and not by the officer designated by the statute to take his place.

2. It is competent in the contest of an election to show that an error was made by the officers of election in making their return, and that a certain candidate received at a particular precinct more votes than were certified in his favor.

Wm. A. Byrne, D. A. Glenn, Walker Hall and Wm. Goebel for appellant.

Tisdale & Gray for appellee.

Appeal from Kenton Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

The appellant, W. P. McLaughlin, and W. H. R. Wheeler were opposing candidates for justice of the peace in Kenton county in the city of Covington at the November election, 1894.

The certificate of election was given to McLaughlin. Wheeler contests and claims that he received 119 votes at precinct B, Ninth ward, instead of 19 as returned by the officers of election. If this claim be correct then Wheeler was elected and is entitled to the office.

It is contended that the county board of contest was not properly organized, because the county judge did not act as a member of it, and further if he properly declined to so act then the board was unlawfully constituted because Wes. B. Wilson, clerk of the Kenton County Court, did not act as a member of the board of contest.

Section 1531, Kentucky Statutes, provides that the judge of the county court and two justices of the peace residing nearest to the courthouse shall be a board to determine the contested election of any officer elective by the voters of the county or any district therein, except a member of the general assembly and certain municipal officers.

The county judge declined to sit as a member of the board because, as stated, he could not "properly act." No further reason was given. It is insisted that the judge should have stated the facts upon which he based his conclusion that he could not properly act. Two of the members of the board of contest who, under the law, were entitled to act, did act and concurred in the finding. It is, therefore, unnecessary to inquire whether the county judge or county clerk were properly excused from acting as members of the board.

Under section 448, Kentucky Statutes, "words purporting to give authority to three or more public officers or other persons shall be construed as giving such authority to a majority of such officers or other persons."

Section 679, Civil Code of Practice, provides that "an authority conferred by law upon three or more persons may be exercised by a majority of them concurring; and an act directed by law to be done by three or more persons may be done by a majority of them concurring."

It seems to us if the justice who took the place of the county judge on the board of contest was not authorized to do so (which we do not decide), the fact that he concurred with the two who did act and concur would not render invalid such finding. The mere fact that they allowed an unauthorized person to act with them would not render invalid a judgment in which both concurred.

Under the rule enunciated in Broaddus v. Mason, 95 Ky., 421, it is competent to show an errer was made by the officers of election in making their return.

We think the evidence in this case sufficient to show there was an error in the certification of the returns, and that Wheeler received 119 votes at the precinct in question instead of the 19 as certified.

The judgment is affirmed.

KING'S ADM'R V. ROSE, CURATOR, &C.

(Filed January 13, 1897.)

1. Administrator—Where, after an order by the county court admitting to probate the will of the testator, the appellant was appointed administrator, with the will annexed, of the estate of the decedent, the powers of the appellee as curator, who had been appointed by the court under section 3901, Kentucky Statutes, during the contest over the will, ceased, and his only duty left was to settle his accounts as curator and to turn over what remained in his hands to the appellant as administrator.

2. An appeal to the circuit court from the orders of the county court admitting the will to record did not have the effect to suspend the appellant's powers as administrator, no appeal having been taken from the order appointing him, which order was entered at a special term of the court subsequent to the order probating the will.

3. Supersedeas—To suspend the powers of the administrator appointed by the county court, it was necessary to execute a supersedeas bond.

K. D. Perkins, Tye & Sharp and John T. Hays for appellant.

R. D. Hill for appellees.

Appeal from Whitley Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge White.

The will of E. J. King was presented to the county court of Whitley county at the January term, 1894, of said court, and some of the heirs of said King resisted its probate, and during the pendency of the contest the county court appointed the appellee curator of said estate, who executed bond and qualified as such curator, and as such took possession of the personal effects of the decedent. At the April term, 1894, the court, on the trial of the question will or no will, adjudged the said paper to be the true last will and testament of the decedent, and thereupon ordered the same to record, and from this order admitting said will to record some of the contestants prayed an appeal to the Whitley Circuit Court, but took no appeal until after the appointment of the curator, and at a special term, April, 1894, the appellant, Sharp, was appointed by said court administrator, with the will annexed, of the estate of said King.

The appellee refusing to deliver up to the administrator the property belonging to the estate, he, after demand of appellee, brought this action in the Whitley Circuit Court to recover possession of the same, setting out a list of property in the hands of said appellee belonging to the decedent's estate.

The appellee filed answer to this petition, in which he alleges that "the order of the Whitley County Court, admitting the will of E. J. King to record, was appealed from by Nan E. Laforce, H. Catleff; * * * that the appeal was taken from the order probating said will to the Whitley Circuit Court, and the same has been filed in the circuit court; that the appeal was taken and record filed in the circuit court within twelve months after the said will was probated by the county court."

Defendant says that the Whitley County Court has no right or authority to appoint the plaintiff administrator, with the will annexed, of the estate of E. J. King; that the said appointment by the Whitley County Court is void.

To this answer appellant filed a reply, in which he denied that the Whitley County Court had no authority to appoint appellant administrator, with the will annexed; denies the appointment by the Whitley County Court was void, or the Whitley County Court had no jurisdiction to appoint an administrator, etc., and further says that said Sharp was appointed administrator of the estate of E. J. King long before any appeal was taken to the Whitley Circuit Court from the orders probating the last will and testament of the said E. J. King in the Whitley County Court, and he was appointed administrator some time after the orders probating the will of said King, and that no appeal was taken from the orders of the Whitley County Court probating the said will until after the institution of this suit.

On this state of the pleadings the court adjudged the law was for the defendant, and dismissed plaintiff's petition, rendering judgment for defendant for costs, and from this judgment appellant has appealed to this court and asks a reversal.

By section 3901 of the Kentucky Statutes, during the contest about the probate of a will or when the court, for any valid cause, shall be delayed in granting letters testamentary or administrative, it may appoint a curator to collect and preserve the estate of the decedent until probate of the will be granted, etc.

The will of King having been admitted to record it was then the duty of the county court to permit the executor named in the will to qualify as executor; and should the person named in the will as executor decline to qualify, then the court should appoint some suitable person as administrator, with the will annexed.

The county court of Whitley had the jurisdiction and authority to appoint an administrator of said King's estate, and, by the appeal to the circuit from the orders of the county court admitting said will to record, did not have the effect to suspend his powers and duties as administrator of said estate.

There was no appeal from the orders of the county court appointing the appellant administrator, with the will annexed. These orders were made sometime after the orders probating the will. By the appointment of appellant the powers of appellee as curator ceased, and his only duty left him was to settle his accounts as curator, and turn over whatever remained in his hands belonging to the estate of the decedent to the appellant as administrator.

The appeal from the orders of the county court, admitting to record the will of E. J. King, did not have the effect to suspend appellant's powers as administrator, and was not an appeal from the orders or the Whitley County Court appointing appellant administrator. The orders appointing an administrator by the county court may be appealed to the circuit court by anyone who is interested, but to suspend the powers of the appointee a supersedeas bond must be given.

But we are referred to section 4851, in which appellee contends that the mere fact of an appeal to the circuit court would have the effect to supersede the appointment of the administrator. We are of the opinion that the only effect of said appeal is to prevent a division, distribution and final settlement of the estate, and are strengthened in this view by the proviso to said section authorizing the circuit court in which proceedings may be thereafter pending an appeal to make an order restraining the further distribution and division of the estate, which shows the meaning of the legislature; and, if taken as a legislative interpretation of said section, would make it harmonize with sections 3901 and 3902.

We think the court erred in its judgment. We are of opinion that upon the pleading the appellant was entitled to judgment for the recovery of the property belonging to the estate of decedent.

Wherefore, the judgment of the lower court is reversed and cause remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

SCHAEFER-MEYER BREWING CO. V. CITY OF FRANKFORT.

(Filed January 15, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Constitutionality of ordinance—License tax—Discrimination—Affirmed for reasons given in case of Jung Brewing Co. v. City of Frankfort, reported above.

Newton G. Rogers and W. McKee Duncan for appellant.

Hugh Rodman and James A. Violett for appellee.

Appeal from Franklin Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Guffy.

This action is in all respects similar to that of Jung Brewing Co. against the appellee, city of Frankfort (supra, 855), this day decided, except that the appellant does business in Louisville, and claimed that the sales were made there.

The court below sustained a demurrer to the petition, and, appellant declining to amend, its action was dismissed, and from that judgment it has appealed, and its contention is the same as that of the appellant in Jung Brewing Co. against this appellee.

For the reasons given in the opinion in that case the judgment of the court below in this case is affirmed.

HON V. HARNED.

(Filed January 15, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Exceptions to depositions not passed upon by the trial court were waived.

2. Suit on forged notes—As the entire basis of appellant's claim consists of the notes sued on, and there was ample evidence upon which to hold these notes to be forgeries, a judgment denying a recovery thereon was proper.

G. W. Stone for appellant.

J. S. Wortham and J. C. Graham for appellee.

Appeal from Grayson Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge DuRelle.

This action seeks to hold appellee liable upon three notes, one for $125 and two for $70 each, alleged to have been executed by Lide Carroll for the deferred payments upon a piano purchased by her. At the time the notes are alleged to have been executed she was unmarried, but subsequently became the wife of appellee, and had died prior to the institution of this action. The petition also prayed for a lien upon the piano.

It is alleged in the petition that appellee acquired by his marriage property sufficient to pay the claim. The answer is a plea of non est factum, denying specifically the execution and delivery of each of the notes, and that any of them was her act and deed.

It is not necessary to pass upon the competency of the depositions taken for appellee, which were excepted to, but the exceptions not passed upon by the trial court.

It is also unnecessary to pass upon the plea of payment to Reinhart, the agent of Hon, of the two notes for $70 each. It is conceded by the appellant that he can not recover upon the note for $125, it being shown to be a forgery.

Appellant's own deposition, which was practically all the testimony on his behalf, shows that the entire business with Mrs. Harned was transacted by Reinhart, and that all that he (Hon) knew of the transaction was obtained from Reinhart, who is not produced nor his absence accounted for.

It is sufficient to say that the entire basis of appellant's claim consists of the notes sued on; that there was ample evidence upon which to hold those notes to be forgeries, and that the trial court so held.

The judgment is affirmed.

ROBINSON, &C. v. ÆTNA INSURANCE CO.

(Filed January 16, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Fire insurance—Effect of house becoming vacant—Where an insured house was vacant and unoccupied at the time it was burned, a tenant having left it in that condition fifteen or twenty days before that time, the owner, although he expected the tenant to return, was not entitled to recover upon the policy of insurance, which provided that the company should not be liable if the house should become vacant and unoccupied and so remain for more than ten days.

R. H. Tomlinson for appellants.

Wm. Herndon for appellee.

Appeal from Garrard Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hazelrigg.

To a suit against it by the owners of a small house in the village of Kirksville, which it had insured for the sum of $400 and which had been destroyed by fire, the appellee company answered that the house had become vacant and unoccupied, and so remained for more than ten days prior to the fire, and relied on a clause to that effect in the policy of insurance as releasing it from liability.

The proof showed that the house had been occupied by a stonemason as tenant, with a wife and child; that the husband went off in search of work, and the wife went to live with her brother, carrying her bed and bedding with her; she lived at her brother's, her husband providing provisions for her; she also sent back to the house and got her wearing apparel.

It appears that the owner or his agent knew all this, and, while they may have expected the tenant to return, no steps were taken to have the house occupied or watched over. Only a naked bedstead and a few articles of very small value remained in the house belonging to the tenant.

The fire originated in the house some fifteen or twenty days after it became unoccupied, and was the work of an incendiary or of the carelessness of loose characters who, as the proof conduced to show, infested the place after night. Under these circumstances the court properly instructed the jury to find for the defendant company.

Judgment affirmed.

BOSTICK V. HOPKINS.

(Filed January 16, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Settlement of partnership—In this action for the settlement of partnership accounts, growing out of the joint ownership of an orange grove in Florida, the evidence is sufficient to support the chancellor's finding that plaintiff and defendant each is entitled to one-half of the assets of the firm.

D. G. Park and S. H. Crossland for appellant.

Robbins & Thomas for appellee.

Appeal from Graves Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

Appellant and appellee each owned an undivided half of an "orange grove" in Florida. For something over four years they continued to improve it. During that time it paid but an inconsiderable part of the expenses incurred, but during the time Hopkins remained on it, and labored to improve it for the benefit of both. Nearly all this time Bostick remained in Kentucky. Bostick furnished some means to be used in improving the property, while Hopkins made a large contribution in labor (for which he was to be paid), as well as contributing otherwise to the same end. Bostick loaned Hopkins $750, which was used in purchasing his interest in the "grove," and the question of Hopkins' liability therefor is involved. In fact there are various transactions between the parties sought to be settled in this action. The action was brought to settle the partnership between them. They sold the "grove," and the notes for the balance were executed to Bostick & Hopkins, three of them remaining unpaid, amounting to something over $3,000, and there is in the hands of the receiver of the court $1,049.76, which notes and money constitute the partnership assets.

The court below adjudged that "upon a full and fair statement of their accounts between them, the plaintiff and defendant each is entitled to one-half of the assets of the firm."

There was a great deal of testimony taken by the parties as to their respective accounts and demands. The issue before the court was largely one of fact. After having reviewed the case we are of the opinion that the judgment of the court should not be disturbed.

The judgment is affirmed.

GRAUMAN & CO. V. CLARK, &C.

(Filed January 16, 1897—Not to be reported.)

New trial—In this ordinary action in which a jury was waived and the law and facts submitted to the court, the plaintiff was entitled to a new trial upon each of the three grounds of accident and surprise, of newly-discovered evidence and of the insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings of fact.

Tinsley & Faulkner for appellants.

Appeal from Clay Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Burnam.

This suit was instituted in January, 1893, in the Clay Circuit Court by the plaintiffs, Grauman & Co., against defendants, Robert Clark and David Bowman, alleging that they were a firm, doing business in the firm name of Louis Grauman & Co., and that the defendants were indebted to them in the sum of $175.55 for goods and merchandise sold and delivered by the plaintiffs to the defendants at defendants' instance and request. The same was sold and delivered on the 11th day of October, 1890, and by the terms of the said sale the money was due and payable in thirty days. The prices charged were reasonable, etc., and they, therefore, prayed for a judgment for the debt and interest.

No answer was filed by David Bowman, but Robert Clark filed a separate answer, in which he denied that he and the defendant, Bowman, were indebted to the plaintiffs in the sum of $175.55, or any other sum, for goods and merchandise or anything else or in any manner. He denied that he and Bowman bought from plaintiffs any goods, or that plaintiffs delivered same at the instance and request of himself and Bowman in 1890 or any other time; denies that any bill was ever rendered him, and prays that plaintiffs' petition be dismissed; and at the October term, 1893, of the Clay Circuit Court both parties announced themselves as ready for trial.

The law and facts were by agreement submitted to a special judge, J. W. Baker, who, after hearing the testimony and argument of counsel, dismissed plaintiffs' petition against the defendant, Robert Clark, with a judgment for defendants' costs. A motion for a new trial was made by appellant upon several grounds:

1st. That of accident and surprise, which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against.

2d. That the verdict was not sustained by sufficient evidence, and was contrary to law.

3d. Upon the ground of newly-discovered evidence, which was material to appellant, and which they could not, with reasonable diligence, have produced at the trial.

In support of this motion appellant filed the affidavits of Silas Field, D. A. Jones and the deposition of David Bowman, whose statements tend very strongly to establish the contention of the appellant herein; that the goods were purchased, received and appropriated by Bowman and the defendant, Clark. The motion for a new trial was overruled by the special judge, which ruling was excepted to by the appellant at the time, and to reverse said judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

A careful examination of the record satisfies this court that there were good reasons why the new trial should have been granted upon each of the grounds relied upon, and it clearly appears to us that the decision of the special judge, who passed both upon the law and the facts of the case, was flagrantly against the weight of the evidence, and is contrary to the law, and that the ends of justice require that plaintiff should have a new trial.

Wherefore, the judgment of the lower court is reversed and this cause is remanded for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE R. R. CO. v. WHITLEY COUNTY COURT.

(Filed January 16, 1897.)

New trial--Newly-discovered evidence. Newly-discovered evidence, which will entitle a party to a new trial, was not intended to be confined merely to testimony given or that might be given by living witnesses, but applies to any character of evidence competent and allowable to illustrate and determine an issue of fact involved.

A large verdict having been returned against a railroad company in favor of a county court for injury to a public highway, caused by the construction of the railroad below the highway, so as to cause the sliding away of earth forming the foundation of the highway, the evidence in the case showing that it was impossible to stop sliding of the earth and preserve the bed of the highway without expenditure of a large sum of money, in this action to vacate the judgment upon that verdict and for a new trial, it appearing that since the trial of the original action the county court has, by the expenditure of two or three hundred dollars, placed pipes under the highway, so as to conduct away the water of a spring previously hidden, and that as the result sliding of earth has been stopped, and also that there is now exposed a rock bluff above the loose earth, existence of which, not hitherto known, shows entire practicability of preserving the highway at comparatively small cost, these facts were sufficient to entitle the railroad company to a new trial.

J. W. Alcorn and R. D. Hill for appellant.

Tinsley & Faulkner and K. D. Perkins for appellee.

Appeal from Whitley Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Lewis.

April 14, 1892, a judgment was rendered in favor of the Whitley County Court against the Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. for $10,000, and, on appeal to this court, was affirmed.

This is an action for vacation of said judgment and for a new trial upon the ground of newly-discovered evidence; and the inquiry is whether that evidence is material for the party applying, and could, with reasonable diligence, have been discovered and produced at the trial.

As appears from the record of the original action, made part of this, the railroad bed of appellant was located and constructed on the side of a certain hill in Whitley county, below a public highway, and, as a consequence, there was such sliding of earth away from the foundation of the highway as to render it almost, if not quite, impassable and useless. Moreover, at the time of trial of the original action it appeared, and evidence introduced showed, that it was impossible to stop the sliding of the earth and preserve the bed of the highway without the expenditure of a very large sum of money, witnesses putting such required sum at $10,000 and more.

What appellant alleges in this action is that since the trial of the original action the Whitley County Court has, by the expenditure of $200 or $300, placed pipes under the highway so as to conduct away the water of a spring previously hidden, and, as the result, sliding of earth has been stopped. They also say there is now exposed a rock bluff above the loose earth, the existence of which, not hitherto known, shows the entire practicability of preserving the highway at comparatively small cost.

Notwithstanding appellant alleged and proved on the trial of this action said facts, the lower court decided the evidence offered by it "in support of its allegation of newly-discovered evidence was and is not, within the meaning of the law, newly-discovered evidence."

In our opinion newly-discovered evidence was not intended to be confined merely to testimony given or that might be given by living witnesses, but applies to any character of evidence, competent and allowable, to illustrate and determine an issue of fact involved. To reject the alleged newly-discovered evidence in this case would involve the rejection of a newly-discovered landmark, showing the location of an ancient survey or the newly-discovered fact that what was believed to be human blood, and upon the faith of which an accused person had been convicted, was since the trial demonstrated not to be blood, or indeed any other physical fact.

The unusually large verdict the Whitley County Court obtained against the Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. was rendered because the jury believed, and were induced by the evidence to believe, the highway could not be reclaimed and preserved without the expenditure of that sum of money. If the newly-discovered evidence shows it to be practicable to accomplish such object at greatly less than that amount, the Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. should not be required to pay, and the Whitley County Court can not, in justice and good conscience, ask for such sum.

In our opinion the new trial ought to have been granted, and the judgment denying it is reversed and cause remanded for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

GATEWOOD V. COOPER.

(Filed January 16, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Passway--Obstruction of—In this action brought by appellant to enjoin appellee from passing over her land except by a particular route, in which appellee claimed the right, by adverse use for more than fifteen years, to a passway other than that admitted by appellant, the evidence is sufficient to establish appellee's right to the particular passway claimed by him, and appellant, therefore, did not have the right to obstruct that passway, or to make any change in its location. If she desires to change the location of the passway she can petition the county court, and that court can take into consideration all the equities of the case and act accordingly.

J. M. Benton and L. H. Bush for appellant.

Leland Hathaway for appellee.

Appeal from Clark Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Burnam.

The appellant instituted her suit in the Clark Circuit Court alleging that she was the owner and was in the possession of a tract of 90½ acres of land situated on the waters of Howard's creek in said county; that there was a passway through said land which followed the course of Duncan's branch, which the defendant, Cooper, had the right to travel, but that said defendant, instead of traveling over said passway along the proper course of same, had gone out of same and had trespassed upon the bottom lands of plaintiff by passway over same with his horses and wagons and teams; that he had broken down her fences around her said bottom and threatened that he would cut and tear away her fencing around said bottom, and that he would continue to do so unless restrained by the court, and she asked for damages against defendant and for an injunction restraining him from passing over said land or from interfering with her fences around said bottom.

Appellee in his answer filed herein denies that he passed over the said lands of appellant unlawfully. He claims in substance that for more than twenty-four years there has been a public passway over the lands of appellant along the route taken by him; that the passway was over a well-defined roadbed that had been continuously used by him and the public as a matter of right for more than twenty-four years; that his father, W. C. Cooper, had opened this way and taken the passway out of the branch at that date, and that such change had been acquiesced in by the public all that time, as they were given a better road, and that its use had been uninterrupted and continuous, and charges appellant with wrongfully obstructing said passway by plowing up said passway and erecting fences across same, and asks damages on cross petition and for an injunction restraining appellant from future acts of obstruction of said passway.

On these issues raised by the pleadings a large number of witnesses were examined, and upon the trial of the case the petition of appellant was dismissed by the lower court, and she was enjoined and restrained from obstructing the passway over and through the shore bottom land. To the entry of this judgment appellant excepted and brought her appeal to this court.

Without entering into any elaborate review of the evidence introduced on the trial of the action we will say that in our view it clearly supports the contention of appellee as to the character, location and duration of said passway, and raises the presumption that said passway over the bottom lands of appellant had been used by the appellee and the public for more than fifteen years, and the right of appellee to its continued use was fully established. We, therefore, conclude that appellant did not have the legal right to obstruct said passway or to make any change in its location. To concede that she could make such change in said passway at her pleasure or convenience would in effect convert the right of appellee to use same into a mere privilege, dependent upon the will of appellant.

If she desires to change the location of the passway from the place it occupies over and through the bottom lands aforesaid "she can petition the county court to make such change, and said court can take into consideration all the equities of the case and act accordingly." See Hansford v. Berry, 95 Ky., 56.

For reasons indicated the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

SWEATMAN V. HOLBROOK.

(Filed January 16, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. One acquires title by accretion when real estate owned by him is gradually added to by alluvial deposit. But when a stream which forms the line between two estates suddenly changes its course, as by a freshet, the original thread of the stream continues to mark the line between the estates; and, therefore, in this action, involving the title to a point of land which had thus been cut off from the main body of plaintiff's land and joined to the land of defendant, it was misleading to instruct the jury as to title by accretion.

2. Adverse possession—It was error to give an instruction to the jury from which they might have believed that it was necessary for plaintiff to show, in order to recover, that he had been in the "actual, continual adverse possession of the tract of land" for fifteen years next before the suit was brought. If he acquired title to the land by possession or by deed, he might have been out of possession for any period short of fifteen years next before the suit was brought, and defendant might have been in possession for the same period, and still he would have been entitled to recover.

3. Testimony as to land that had been added by accretion to plaintiff's land at some other point on the stream than that in controversy was incompetent, but there seems to have been no objection thereto.

F. R. Moore, J. M. Riffe, R. T. Burns and Wm. H. and M. J. Holt for appellant.

G. E. Fugett, G. W. Skaggs and Alexander Lackey for appellee.

Appeal from Lawrence Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

Since 1883 the appellant has lived within a boundary of land situated on the north side of Big Blaine creek in Lawrence county, claiming it as his own.

Some time after he had thus taken possession of the land his father made him a deed thereto, which described the southern boundary line of the land as follows, to wit: "Beginning on top of the bank of Blaine on the northwest side of the upper end of the farm now occupied by C. L. Sweatman on a stone set up for a corner; thence three poles to the middle of Blaine; thence with the meanders of said creek * * * to the mouth of Hood's fork of Blaine; thence, etc.," giving the courses and distances of the other lines of the tract.

Those under whom appellee Holbrook claim owned land on South side of Big Blaine, opposite that belonging to Sweatman, claiming as did Sweatman to the meanders of Big Blaine creek.

In fact the deeds conveying land on the south side of the creek call for C. L. Sweatman's line. Some time between the close of the late civil war and 1876 there was a freshet in Big Blaine creek that caused it to leave its original channel and make a new one through the lands of Sweatman, thus cutting off a point of his land and leaving it on the south side of the new channel. Upon this point thus cut off trees were left standing, and which were remaining on the point when this cause was tried.

The petition alleges that Holbrook has wrongfully taken possession of the land, and Sweatman asks to have it restored to him.

The land in controversy was on the north side of the creek before the freshet, and it is not pretended that Holbrook or those under whom he claims owned or had possession of any of the land which was situated on the north side of the creek as the channel originally existed. The witnesses for both plaintiff and defendant who testify in relation thereto prove that the point of land in controversy was left on the south side by the creek changing its channel in the manner stated. The point was not added to the south side of the creek by accretion.

When one acquires title by accretion is where real estate possessed is gradually added to by alluvial deposit.

When a stream changes its course so as to perceptibly cut off a point of the property of a land owner and leave it beyond the thread of the stream the ownership will not be changed.

There are two acres and three roods in controversy. The original channel still exists. From the undisputed testimony the land was added to the south side of the thread of the stream not by accretion but by avulsion.

"If the change is violent and visible, and arises from a known cause, such as a freshet or a cut through which a new channel is formed, the original thread of the stream continues to mark the limit between the estates." (Gould on Waters, section 159.)

The only way Sweatman has been deprived of his right to the possession of the land in controversy, if at all, is by continuous, adverse possession.

While it was proper for the court to tell the jury the effect of the freshet in leaving the parcel of land on the south side of the thread of the present channel as to its ownership, it was improper to give instructions Nos. 4 and 5 as to the subject of title by accretion. The undisputed facts, as we have said, show the land was not added by accretion; therefore, it was misleading to the jury to instruct them on that question. Besides, undue prominence was given in these instructions to a question not involved, because instructions 4 and 5 as copied in the record are literally the same. They were calculated to mislead the jury.

As instruction No. 1 was offered by the appellant no reversal could be had because the court gave it. It is inartificially drawn. Under it the jury might have believed that before Sweatman was entitled to recover it was necessary for him to show that he had been in the "actual, continuous, adverse possession of the tract of land" for fifteen years next before the suit was brought.

If he acquired the title to the land by possession or the deed from his father, he might have been out of his possession for fourteen years and 364 days next before the suit was brought, and for the same period it might have been in the possession of Holbrook and still he would have been entitled to recover. There seems to have been no objection to the admission of testimony as to land which had been added by accretion to Sweatman's land at a point on the creek other than the one in controversy; in fact it is proven by appellant and his witnesses. Of course this testimony was incompetent and misleading.

The fact that Sweatman gained land by accretion at another point on the creek did not affect his title to the land which had been left on the south side of the stream by the freshet.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to grant appellant a new trial and for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

The court delivered the following response to petition for rehearing February 25, 1897:

The court understand that Sweatman is seeking to recover the land which lies between the thread of the channel of Big Blaine creek as it ran before the freshet and the thread of its present channel—that is to say the point of land which was left on the south side by avulsion. If this point of land has been added to by accretion since the avulsion then Sweatman became the owner of the soil thus added by accretion as much so as if such addition had been made by accretion on the other side of Blaine, opposite the point in question, for he owned the land on both sides of the new channel at that point.

The court on another trial of the case can give an instruction embodying the principle we have stated as to the right of Sweatman to the land which may have been added by accretion to the point which was left on the south side by Blaine changing its channel in the manner stated.

The deed of C. L. Sweatman to A. M. Holbrook purports to convey an undivided interest in certain lands, and it was made before the freshet. It calls to run to the mouth of Spring branch, "thence meandering Blaine to the beginning," and conveys an interest in land on the south side of Blaine creek.

ROBERTS, DEPUTY SHERIFF V. ROSS, &C.

(Filed January 16, 1897—Not to be reported.)

School tax—District including parts of two counties—The county superintendents of two adjoining counties may lay off a school district composed of parts of both counties, such district to be reported only as belonging to the county in which the schoolhouse of same is situated. And the evidence in this case is sufficient to show that appellees were included in a district thus laid off, the schoolhouse of which is in a county other than that in which they reside, and they are, therefore, not liable for a tax levied to build a schoolhouse in a district including them subsequently laid off in the county of their residence.

J. M. Lassing for appellant.

G. G. Hughes for appellees.

Appeal from Boone Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hazelrigg.

In this action the appellees seeks to enjoin the collection of a tax levied to build a a schoolhouse in district No 26 in Boone county, on the ground that they are residents of school district No. 22 in the adjoining county of Gallatin, and which was laid off in 1869 by the two superintendents of common schools in and for the counties of Boone and Gallatin.

The appellants deny that such a district was laid off, or that there is any record of it in Boone county, and aver that district No. 26 in Boone county has always included the appellees.

The proof shows that in 1869 a district was laid off by the two superintendents, and that since that the appellees have contributed to the building, repairing and furnishing a schoolhouse in that district, No. 22, and have sent their children there and not to the school in district No. 26, and if any of the children have been listed in the latter district it has been done over their protest.

The Boone county record does not show this, but on the contrary shows at least since 1874 that district No. 26 includes these appellees. It would seem, therefore, that they are included in both districts. As the law existed in 1869, and as it still exists (volume 1, Acts 69 and 70, page 124, Kentucky Statutes, sections 4427-4430), the county superintendents of two adjoining counties might lay off a district composed of parts of both counties, and such district was to be reported only as belonging to the county in which the schoolhouse of the same was situated. For this reason, perhaps, the Boone county records do not speak of district No. 22 of Gallatin county and show its boundary, though the school officials had ample notice of its existence.

The superintendents making this district are both dead, but the proof is conclusive that they made it. There is some confusion as to the time it was done, the appellees proving it in 1869, while it appears that Foster, the superintendent of Boone county, whom the appellees say did it, was not superintendent until 1872. That, however, is earlier than any record evidence of district No. 26. The oral testimony offered does not contradict but supplements the record evidence of the establishment of district No. 22.

The judgment enjoining the tax is affirmed.

BRACKETT v. CARRICO.

(Filed January 16, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Continuance—In the equitable action tried at the September term, 1894, of the Boyle Circuit Court, the issues having been made up at the January term, 1893, the court properly refused a continuance asked by defendant in order to enable him to take depositions to prove the contents of an important letter which had been lost, the desired testimony being in chief, and defendant's affidavit failing to show that he had used any diligence in making his investigation as to the whereabouts of the letter. The fact that he had acted upon the supposition that one of the defendant's witnesses, to whom the letter had been written, had it in his possession, and did not know that such was not the case until that witness gave his deposition a short time before the trial, did not excuse his failure to search for the letter before he testified in chief, he having admitted that he had it in his possession at one time.

2. Vendor and vendee—The evidence is sufficient to sustain the chancellor's finding that no fraudulent representations were made by plaintiff in the sale of the land for the purchase price of which he sues, extraordinary opportunities having been given to defendant to thoroughly inform himself as to the character, the quality and the condition of the land and the improvements thereon.

Robert Harding and C. C. Fox for appellant.

R. P. Jacobs for appellee.

Appeal from Boyle Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Burnam.

This suit was instituted in the Boyle Circuit Court by plaintiff Carrico against the defendant, Brackett, upon a written obligation dated October 7, 1890, in which the defendant agreed to pay to the plaintiff, twelve months after date, $3,629.85, with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from date until paid, the allegation being that the note was given by the defendant to the plaintiff as a deferred payment on a tract of land situated in Boyle county, sold by plaintiff to defendant, and conveyed to said defendant by deed dated October 7, 1890, in which a lien was reserved to secure the payment, in which suit plaintiff asked for a personal judgment for the amount of the obligation with interest, and for an enforcement of his lien on said land by a sale of same for the payment of his debt.

This petition was filed May 3, 1892, and on the 20th day of September, 1892, the defendant filed his answer, set-off and counterclaim, in which he admits the execution of the note sued on, and that it was for the purchase price of the land described, but he seeks to avoid the payment of said note and asks a rescission of the contract of sale upon the alleged grounds that before the execution and delivery of said note the plaintiff falsely, fraudulently and with the intention of defrauding the defendant, represented to him that the land for which said note was given as a deferred payment had upon it two never-failing ponds of water, which statement as to both of said ponds was false and was known by plaintiff at the time he made it to be false, and were made with the fraudulent purpose of inducing the defendant to buy the land; that this statement did induce him to buy the land, and except for the aforesaid false representation he would not have purchased the land or executed the note.

He charges that after he got possession of the land one of the ponds became dry and there was no water in it for four months in 1891, and for one month in 1892, and that the water had repeatedly failed in said ponds since his purchase, and that they had repeatedly gone dry before the purchase, and that plaintiff knew it. He says that at the time of the purchase both of said ponds were full of water.

2d. He seeks to avoid the payment of said note upon this additional ground that the plaintiff, in order to induce him to purchase the land and execute the note sued on and make the cash payment, falsely and fraudulently represented to him that said land was clear of rock except near certain sinkholes, and that said rock was not close enough to the surface to be reached by a plow in the cultivation of said land, which statements, defendant says, were false and fraudulent and were known to be false and fraudulent at the time of plaintiff's making them, and that they were made with the fraudulent intent of inducing defendant to buy said land and execute the said note and make the cash payment; that he did rely upon said statements, believing them to be true, and that he would not have purchased said land except for such belief, and alleging further that at the date of the purchase the farm was covered with grass and weeds, and the rocks were not visible, except in the sinkholes, but that he found when he attempted to cultivate the land it was full of rocks near enough to the surface for a plow to strike them and to interfere with the cultivation of it, and that said rocks materially affected the value of the land, and on account of the aforesaid fraudulent misrepresentations he asks for a rescission of said contract and to have the cash payments made by him paid back to him.

In a second paragraph of said answer he claims that by reason of the aforesaid false and fraudulent representations as to the water and rocks on said land he has been damaged in the sum of $1,000, and that if he is not entitled to a rescission that he is entitled to have the purchase price of said farm abated by said sum of $1,000.

In addition to these things the defendant alleges that the plaintiff sold to the defendant twenty-five head of hogs, and that he paid him therefor, which hogs were left upon the farm; that plaintiff, without his authority or consent, took possession of fifteen of said hogs and converted same to his own use and has never accounted to defendant for same, and that said hogs were reasonably worth $225.

He also charges that plaintiff is indebted to him for $20 for two weeks board for himself and family, furnished at his special instance and request in 1890. He also charges that he bought of the plaintiff a certain mare at the price of $150; that plaintiff represented said mare to be sound and free from defects, and warranted her to be sound, while she was in fact unsound, in that her eyes were defective; and he pleads each of the aforesaid items as a set-off against the note sued on.

All the affirmative allegations of this answer were denied in detail by the plaintiff herein, and on the issues raised by the pleadings a large amount of proof was taken. The case was continued from term to term until the September term, 1894, at which term the plaintiff pressed for a submission of the case. At this term the defendant moved the court for a continuance upon the grounds that previous to the purchase of the land the plaintiff, Carrico, had written to one Tom West a letter, in which he gave a description of the land, and which was written before he ever saw same; that in said letter the land was represented as being well watered, and that it it had on it two never-failing ponds, or words to that effect; that said West was the agent of plaintiff in making the sale to this defendant; that said letter was given to him for his information, and as an inducement for him to buy said land, and that he relied upon the statements in said letter.

He alleges further that he made diligent search for this letter and could not find it, and supposed it was in the possession of said West until he gave his deposition a short time before that term of the court.

Immediately after West gave his deposition the defendant, who had previously given his deposition in this case, gave a new deposition, in which he and several members of his family proved the contents of said letter.

Upon exceptions being made to the competency of this evidence as to the contents of said letter, the court sustained the exceptions and ruled out said testimony upon the ground that the same was testimony in chief and could not be given by way of rebuttal, and by such action of the court the contents of said letter were eliminated from the consideration of the court. He says that same was material and important for his defense, and that a continuance ought to have been granted him in order to enable him to take the deposition of his son, Gail Brackett, and one Robert Goodwin to prove the contents of said letter.

First, upon the question of the continuance the pleadings show that the issues were made up in this record at the January term, 1893, and that this action was not tried until the September term, 1894. The burden of proof was upon the appellant to establish the defenses relied on by him, and if he regarded the letter to West as important in establishing his defense it was certainly necessary for him to produce this letter or testify as to its contents in his deposition in chief, if the letter itself could not be found.

His affidavit for continuance does not state any fact showing why he had not introduced West as a witness if he desired to take his testimony, or why he could not have discovered, during this long interval of time, more than a year and a half from the completion of the issues to the trial of the case, as to whether he had said letter in his possession or where same was. We do not think that the affidavit of the defendant shows that he used any diligence in making his investigation as to the whereabouts of the letter. He admits that the letter was given to him by West, and says that he had made search for it and could not find it. It is not apparent why he could not have done this before he testified in chief.

It seems to us that all the evidence set forth in appellant's affidavit, and upon which he based his motion for a continuance, were matters in chief. The burden was on him to make out his defense. In view of all these facts in the case it seems to us that the court below properly overruled his motion for a continuance.

Now, as to the judgment on the merits of the case, the facts show that the plaintiff was exceedingly anxious to sell this property; that he had spoken to Tom West, a neighbor of his, who was at that time residing in Bell county, Kentucky, about the matter, and had promised to pay him liberally if he would send him a purchaser as early as July of that year; that West, mindful of this agreement, had called the attention of the defendant in this case to the place, knowing that he desired to purchase land; that said West had written to the plaintiff, and that said plaintiff had written back to him a letter pricing this property at $45 an acre and describing same, which letter was delivered to the defendant herein. The testimony of West shows that several different dates were fixed when said defendant should come and examine said land; that finally in August, 1890, the defendant did go to Boyle county pursuant to an arrangement made with plaintiff and West; that he went out to this place and went over the entire farm, going over every field on the place; that he spend the night on the farm of the plaintiff; that he had with him his son, A. L. Brackett, who seems to have been a practical farmer at the date of this inspection; that he saw both ponds which were, to furnish the water supply necessary for the farm.

The proof shows that this son actually moved to this place in September, and that he engaged in the cultivation of that land, sowing wheat, rye, timothy and other small grain, until some time in October, when the the defendant came again to the premises and consummated his agreement to purchase.

It seems to us that extraordinary opportunities were given to the defendant to thoroughly inform himself as to the character, the quality and the condition of this land, and the ponds and other improvements on same.

The evidence conduces to show that these two ponds were simply artificial depressions made to hold water, and the cost of same would not have exceeded $25 to $30 each.

The evidence also conduces to show that in order to make these ponds a source of water supply they must be frequently cleaned out and kept in order. The evidence of the son of the defendant shows that the large pond was situated in a field which was broken up and had been cultivated the year after the purchase, and had been in continued cultivation up to the date of the suit. This deposition also shows that all the land was cultivated, except about fifteen acres, for the years 1892, 1893 and 1894.

Whilst it may be deduced from the evidence in this case that the price paid for this land by the defendant was a liberal one, it seems to us that the evidence entirely fails to sustain the contention of the appellant as to any fraud or fraudulent misrepresentations in regard to the same by the appellee. Nor is it apparent that the court may reasonably conclude that any fraud which this court could relieve against was practiced upon the defendant by the plaintiff or by his agent, West, from the fact that the plaintiff executed his note to the said West for $500 upon the condition that same was not to be paid until plaintiff had collected the whole of his purchase money from the sale of the land in question as compensation for his services. The compensation was doubtless liberal, but the conditions attached to it that same should not be collectible until after the payment of the full amount due upon the land were more reasonable on this account, as the said West understood that he would have to wait a long time for his compensation for the services rendered.

We do not think that the contentions of the defendant as to the representations and guaranties made by appellee in regard to the rocks and ponds on said land have been sustained by the evidence, or that this court would be justified in setting aside said sale on account of said misrepresentations, or in allowing to appellant any credit by way of compensation.

We are further of the opinion that the conclusions reached by the chancellor as to the justness and legality of the credits claimed by appellant on account of the fifteen head of hogs, which appellant claims appellee appropriated, valued at $225, or the two weeks' board, valued at 20, and the allegations as to the unsoundness of the mare, valued at $150, were fully supported by the evidence in the record.

For the reasons indicated the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

TRUMBO, &C. V. RICHARDSON, &C.

(Filed January 19, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Jurisdiction to appoint administrator—Domicil of infant ward—Upon an issue in this case as to the jurisdiction of the Montgomery County Court to appoint an administrator of the estate of a minor who died intestate in Montgomery county, the evidence is sufficient to show that the residence of the intestate was in that county, where his guardian resided, and not in the State of Kansas, where he had remained with his father for eighteen months prior to his return to Kentucky a few weeks before his death, the guardian being given by the statute the custody and control of his ward.

J. J. Cornelison for appellants.

O'Rear & Bigstaff and Fenley E. Fogg for appellees.

Appeal from Montgomery Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Guffy.

In 1889 James W. Coons, a minor, departed this life intestate in Montgomery county unmarried and without descendants, and in 1893 the plaintiff, Richardson, was granted administration upon the estate of the decedent, and afterwards brought this suit for a settlement of the estate of his intestate, and sought a sale of twenty-one acres of land, owned by decedent, situated in Bath county. It seems that the parents of the decedent had been separated by a decree of divorce in Bath county several years before, and that the custody of the children had been adjudged to the wife, Anne E. Coons, who is also dead. The father, Thos. Coons, removed many years ago to Kansas. It also appears that T. J. Coons, a brother and two sisters survived the decedent, and being informed that they inherited the land aforesaid, two of them united in a deed to Jos. E. Roberts, conveying their supposed interest in the land to him. The father, Thos. Coons, brought suit and recovered the land, and afterwards sold it to appellant Trumbo, but the sale was made after the institution of this suit. Thos. Coons made defense to this suit, as also did Trumbo, claiming that the residence of decedent was in Kansas, and that the court of Montgomery county had no jurisdiction to appoint an administrator, also disputing the claims of T. J. Coons and Ramey. The cause was referred to the master commissioner for settlement. A considerable amount of proof was taken and exceptions filed to the commissioner's report, etc.

The court, upon final hearing, confirmed the report, which allowed part of the claims filed, and adjudged a sale of the land, and also allowed appellant Trumbo a lien for the $60 that he had paid Thos.

Coons on the purchase price of the land; and, from the judgment allowing the claims and adjudging a sale, Trumbo and Thos. Coons have appealed.

The contention of appellants is that the decedent was a resident of the State of Kansas, and only on a visit to Kentucky when he died. The proof shows that T. J. Coons, a resident of Montgomery county, was the guardian of decedent, appointed, however, in Bath county in place of a former guardian; that decedent had resided for a time with his guardian in Montgomery county, and afterwards went to his father's in Kansas, and was absent from this State about eighteen months, and became afflicted with diarrhœa, and returned to Montgomery county, and in a few months died of said disease, and the claims of T. J. Coons and of Ramey was for care and attention to him in his sickness. It may be conceded that the proof is, to some extent, conflicting as to the residence of decedent, but it is clear that most all his life had been spent in Kentucky; that he had lived with his guardian, T. J. Coons, before going to Kansas, and resided with him part of the time after his return, and by section 2032 of Kentucky Statutes the guardian is given the custody and control of his ward; hence, we conclude that the evidence shows, with reasonable certainty, that decedent's residence was in Montgomery county at the time of his death, and, therefore, the county court of that county had jurisdiction to grant letters of administration. The proof also sufficiently sustains the report of the commissioner as to the allowance of the claims reported by him, and it was, therefore, proper to confirm his report.

Judgment affirmed.

McKEE'S ADM'R V. PURNELL, &C.

(Filed January 20, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Obligation of lunatic—The civil acts of a lunatic are on a parallel with those of an infant, and he can not bind himself by contract. Therefore, a note executed by a person of unsound mind has no obligatory force as such.

2. Attorney's compensation—For the necessary services of an attorney, rendered for one on the trial of a proceeding to have such one adjudged of unsound mind, the attorney is entitled to be paid a reasonable compensation.

G. C. Lockhart and Hanson Kennedy for appellant.

Wm. J. Hendrick for appellees.

Appeal from Bourbon Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

The action is on a note executed by Dinwiddie McKee, now deceased. It imports that the consideration therefor is "professional services on second hearing, inquest as to said McKee's capacity to manage his estate."

The petition is in the usual form of petitions on promissory notes, except it recites the consideration of the note in the language quoted.

The answer pleads that McKee was of unsound mind at the time he executed the note, and did not have sufficient mind to know the nature and effect of it, etc. To this answer a demurrer was sustained.

In Breckinridge's Heirs v. Ormsby, 1 J. J. M., 238, it is said: "A parallel is supposed to exist between the civil acts of lunatics and infants. This is the well-established doctrine of the law as evidenced by a series of decisions in England and the American States."

This court said, in Beeler v. Young, 1 Bibb., 520: "Even for * * necessaries an infant cannot bind himself in a sum certain, if that sum be an unreasonable price, for an infant is incapable of contracting; therefore, the bond, note, or promise or deed of an infant does not bind him as a contract, although for necessaries; but as an infant must live as well as a man, therefore the law allows a reasonable price for necessaries to those who furnish him. A count upon an insimul computassent will not lie against an infant, although it should be for necessaries; for he, having no discretion in contemplation of law, is incapable of stating an account, and is not liable to false or unreasonable accounts."

Neither has a note executed by a person non compos mentis any obligatory force as such.

If the facts are as alleged in the answer there could be no recovery on the note in suit, and the demurrer thereto should have been overruled.

For necessary services of an attorney, rendered for one on the trial of a proceeding to have such one adjudged of unsound mind, the attorney is entitled to be paid a reasonable compensation. As this question was fully discussed in the opinion this day delivered, in the case of Dinwiddie McKee's adm'r v. Ward & Dickson, we deem it unnecessary to discuss it further here.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to overrule the demurrer to the answer, and for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

JUDY V. FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF NEWPORT, KY.

(Filed January 21, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Construction of order of submission—The plaintiff having entered upon the motion docket a motion "for judgment," and an order being subsequently entered at the same term reciting that the plaintiff "moves to submit the cause for judgment," and that "on motion of plaintiff this cause is submitted," the plaintiff must be regarded as having by this motion submitted the whole case, there being nothing to show that it was merely the motion upon the motion docket that was intended to be submitted. And as the petition and answer were the only pleadings filed, and the answer presented a good defense, the judgment dismissing the petition must stand.

M. H. McLean for appellant.

Wright & Anderson for appellee.

Appeal from Campbell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge White.

Appellant sued appellee in the Campbell Circuit Court to recover $200, alleging that he had deposited large sums of money with appellee, which appellee agreed to repay to him on appellant's written order, and that on the —— day of ——, 189–, there was in said bank of appellee the sum of $200 due him; and on said date he drew his check or written order, addressed to said bank for said sum, which was presented to said bank for payment and payment was refused by it, and said check or written order was duly protested for nonpayment, and for which sum he now sues and asks judgment.

Appellee answered and denied that it at any time agreed to pay back to the plaintiff, on the written order of plaintiff or otherwise, the $200 herein sued for. It says that the $200 herein sued for was a part of $1,150 deposited by plaintiff in its bank, and charging that N. H. Walthal owed the appellee a large sum of money, which was a lien on a planing mill in the city of Covington. After the creation of said lien on said planing mill the plaintiff, Judy, bought the said mill property of the said Walthal, and assumed the payment of the said debt due from Walthal to appellee bank, and in consideration thereof appellee agreed to receive said money from appellant, and apply to the debt of said Walthal; that it applied all of said money, including the $200 sued for in this action, to said Walthal debt, and there still remains due on Walthal debt to appellee $400, claiming appellant was estopped to claim said money, and asking to be dismissed.

No further pleadings were filed in the case. On the 4th of May, 1894, appellant entered on the motion docket of the court a motion as follows: "Plaintiff moves the court for judgment in the above-styled case." What disposition was made of this motion the record does not show.

On the 14th of May the record shows this order was made: "Comes plaintiff and moves to submit this cause for judgment, and defendant objected. The court overruled the objections, and, on motion of plaintiff, this cause is submitted, and defendant excepts."

This motion of plaintiff was made in open court, and on the 16th day of May the court on said submission rendered judgment dismissing plaintiff's petition and adjudging cost against him, and from which judgment appellant has appealed to this court.

On the 28th of May appellant moved to set the judgment aside, but filed no reasons therefor, and on the hearing of said motion it was overruled, and appellant excepted. Plaintiff then entered a motion to set aside the judgment, charging clerical misprision, and this motion was overruled by the court. On this motion there is nothing in the record to show what evidence was heard by the court. There is no statement made by the clerk to show, in transcribing the motion from motion docket, any error was committed by him, and, therefore, we can not say that the court erred in overruling said motion.

There is nothing to show in this record that there was any attempt to submit the motion on the motion docket for judgment, but, from the record before us, it appears that plaintiff comes and moves the court for judgment, etc. This was in open court on the 14th of May, 1894, sometime after the entry of the motion on motion docket.

We think that plaintiff by this motion submitted the whole case, and upon the pleadings the appellee was entitled to judgment.

The judgment is affirmed.

BECKER V. CITY OF HENDERSON, &C.

(Filed January 22, 1897.)

1. Defect in record of passage of city ordinance—Where the journal of a city council shows the names of the members who were present at a particular meeting, and that the whole number present voted upon a certain ordinance, and the names of those who voted "nay" are given, the record shows, with reasonable certainty, the names of those who voted "yea" as well as those who voted "nay." As the evidence in this case was sufficient to authorize the conclusion of the trial court that the interlineation of the names of those who voted "yea," which now appears on the record, was made before the minutes were signed by the presiding officer, the requirement of section 3279, Kentucky Statutes, that the yeas and nays shall be entered on the journal, is satisfied.

2. Necessity for mayor's signature—An ordinance for the improvement of a street is not an ordinance "involving the expenditure of money," within the meaning of section 3304, Kentucky Statutes, and need not be signed by the mayor, although it provides that the council, in its discretion, may advance the money to the contractor on the cost of such improvement and take an assignment of his lien.

Yeaman & Lockett, John L. Dorsey and Montgomery Merritt for appellant.

Clay & Clay for appellees.

Appeal from Henderson Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Burnam.

Section 3449 of the Kentucky Statutes gives to the common council of cities of the third class the power to pass ordinances to require the improvement of streets and alleys by grading, paving, etc., any portion thereof, not less in length than one block.

Section 3450 provides that, upon the passage of any ordinance requiring the improvement of a street as contemplated in section 3449, it shall be the duty of the mayor to enter into a contract with persons offering to do the work required to be done by such ordinance upon the best and most advantageous terms, and to do this he is directed to advertise the letting of such work in some newspaper published in said city for at least ten days for sealed proposals for doing said work and report such contracts in writing as he may be able to effect to the common council for its acceptance or rejection, and such contracts are not binding until ratified by the common council; and it is the duty of the common council to require such contractor to give bond with security for the faithful performance of his contract.

By section 3451 the work contracted to be done must be performed under the supervision of the mayor and the engineer, and is subject to the acceptance of the common council, and it is made the duty of the engineer to make out and report to the common council accurate estimates and apportionments of the cost of said work and improvement against the owners of property liable to pay same, designating each one's liability.

Section 3452 says that when the common council shall have passed an ordinance requiring said improvements to be made, and when the contract in pursuance of such ordinance shall be executed and ratified, and the common council shall have received the report of the engineer estimating and apportioning the cost of the work, and by order or resolution shall have received said work as done according to contract, then the liability of the owners of the property chargeable with the cost of said work shall be fixed, and there shall be a lien on the property for same.

Section 3453 provides that a lien given for the purposes named in the above section may be enforced by a petition in equity in favor of the contractor or his assignee against any or all the persons liable for the cost of said work, and that it shall only be necessary for the plaintiff in the action to file a copy of the ordinance of the common council requiring the work to be done, a copy of the contract for doing same, a copy of the engineer's report showing the respective liability of each person sued and a copy of the order or resolution of the common council receiving the work as done according to the contract, which shall be, together with the corresponding allegations in the plaintiff's petition, prima facie evidence of the plaintiff's right to recover, in which it shall be lawful for the court to adjudge a sale of the lot of each person as will pay his or her part of the cost according to the estimate of the engineer against him or her for such, and it shall be lawful for the court hearing the case to adjudge a sale of so much of the lot or lots as will pay his or her part, and may have personal judgment against the defendants liable for the cost of the work also.

Pursuant to the authority conferred by the aforesaid sections of the charter of the city of Henderson, the common council of that city passed an ordinance ordaining that the south side of Washington street, from Main to Green streets, be graded and improved by a gutter and pavement in accordance with the specifications of said ordinance.

The records of the city show that this ordinance was first read and adopted on the 9th day of May, 1894; that it had its second reading on May 10, 1894; that at these readings same was passed by a vote of more than two-thirds of all members of the common council present upon a yea and nay vote, yeas and nays being recorded. The records further show that this ordinance was published in the Daily Journal, a newspaper published in the city of Henderson, for at least ten days, and that a contract was entered into to do this work between the city of Henderson on the one part and one Ed. Mamion, with Gabe as his security, on the 24th day of May, 1894, and that this contract was approved by the common council on the same date, the contract being signed by J. B. Johnson, mayor pro tem.

Section 4 of the ordinance aforesaid provides it is further ordained that "the city of Henderson shall not in any event be held liable for any of the costs of furnishing any materials or doing said work. The contractor furnishing the material and doing said work shall look exclusively to the property holders fronting said improvement for his pay; provided, however, that the common council may, in its discretion, advance the money or any part thereof to the contractor on the cost of said improvement on the condition that the said contractor assign to the city his lien on the property fronting on said improvement on which said advance is made."

And the contract aforesaid also stipulates, in addition to agreeing to do the work in accordance with the specifications, "that in the event the city of Henderson advances the money on the cost of said improvement that the said Mamion will assign the city his lien on the property fronting on the improvement. Said ordinance is made as in said ordinance provided."

On the 30th day of June, 1894, S. H. Kimmel, the city engineer of the city of Henderson, reported to the common council of the city that the work of constructing the brick sidewalk and the brick gutter on Washington street, between Main and Green streets, as authorized by the ordinance adopted by the common council of the city of Henderson on the 10th of May, 1894, and recorded in the proceedings of the common council, had been completed as contracted for; that there was on the south side of Washington street, between Green and Main streets, 449.1 lineal feet; that the cost of the work at $1.42 amounted to $637.72; that Nick Becker owned 207.05 of said feet, and that he owed for the work so done $294.01, at the rate of $1.42 per front foot.

It also appears from the record that on the 5th day of July, 1894, the contractor, Mamion, assigned all his right, title and interest to said claim against the said Becker and others to the city of Henderson for the work done as aforesaid in front of his property in accordance with the ordinance heretofore recited.

And it is to enforce this lien that this suit has been instituted by the city of Henderson against said Becker, and same is resisted by said Becker upon a number of grounds: First, by demurrer to the plaintiff's petition, which was properly overruled, and then by answer, in which the following defenses are relied upon:

1st. They charge that the copy of the ordinance filed with plaintiff's pleading was not a true copy; that the yea and nay votes were not recorded when the ordinance was passed or approved or signed; that the names of the councilmen voting for the passage of said ordinance were inserted in the journal of the proceedings of the council after said ordinance had been passed and approved, and after the contract for doing the work had been let, and when same was without authority, and upon the further claim that same was not passed by a two-thirds vote of the council at any session.

2d. That the ordinance itself authorized the city to advance to Mamion, the contractor, the money to do the work in question, and that this money was furnished by the said city; that the city had no power to advance money to improve streets that by ordinance are required to be improved at the expense of the abutting property, and that plaintiff voluntarily paid said debt, and had no cause of action.

3d. Upon the ground that the charter of the city required every ordinance involving the expenditure of money within three days after its passage to be correctly and legibly engrossed by the clerk and presented to the mayor, approved by him or returned to the council with his objections in writing before the first regular meeting, which shall not be held within five days after it is presented to him; and if he returns same with his objections it is not valid until it is passed by a vote of two-thirds of all the councilmen then in office, the yeas and nays being recorded in the journal, the defendant alleging that said ordinance was an ordinance involving the expenditure of money, and it was necessary to its validity that it should have been engrossed and presented to the mayor, and that it was never presented to the mayor for his approval, and was, therefore, void.

Let us take up these defenses in the order in which they are made. First, section 3279 provides that no ordinance shall take effect and be binding until same shall be twice publicly read and passed by the common council at two sessions held on different days, a majority of those present voting for same on both passages, the yeas and nays being called and entered upon the journal; provided, however, that all ordinances requiring the improvement of streets and alleys or the construction of sewers or fixing salaries, etc., or appropriating money where the amount appropriated is in excess of $100, shall on each passage receive the vote of two-thirds of all the councilmen then elected, yeas and nays being called and entered on the journal.

Section 3246 provides that at each regular meeting the proceedings of the preceding regular meeting and any intervening meeting or meetings shall be publicly read, corrected, approved and signed by the presiding officer and attested by the clerk.

Now the facts in this case seem to be that this ordinance was twice publicly read and passd by the common council at two sessions held on different days. It further appears from the proof that the clerk failed to record the yea and nay votes, simply noting that of the eleven members of the council present nine had voted in favor of the ordinance and two against it, giving the names of the two who voted against it. The minutes of the meeting show the names of the members of the common council who were present, and the record, therefore, with reasonable certainty shows both the names of those who voted yea and those who voted nay. The evidence for plaintiff conduces to prove when the proceedings of these two meetings were read by the clerk at the regular meeting held by the common council on the 15th day of May, 1894, the presiding officer called the attention of the clerk to the fact that it was his duty to write out fully the names of the members of the council who voted yea, and this was done by the clerk on the 15th, and before said minutes were signed by the presiding officer.

About the date when this interlineation occurs there is some contrariety of proof, the mayor pro tem., the clerk and four of the members of the council all swearing positively that this interlineation was made on the 15th, before the minutes were signed or the contract let.

The appellant, on the other hand, proves by his own testimony and that of his attorney, J. L. Dorsey, that they examined this record as late as the 24th, after the ordinance was signed and the contract let, and that at that date the names of the councilmen voting yea had not been interlined, and same was done after that date.

It is very difficult for the court to determine what are the exact facts in regard to this matter, but we think the conclusions reached by the trial court are sustained by the weight of the evidence and should not be disturbed.

Appellant in this case stakes his claim for reversal chiefly upon the fact that the ordinance for the improvement of Washington street was an ordinance appropriating or involving the expenditure of money, and that it was necessary, in order to give validity to said ordinance, that same should have been correctly and legibly engrossed by the clerk and presented to the mayor for his approval, and that this was not done, and that for that reason the ordinance was void.

Section 3304 requires every ordinance, resolution, order or measure appropriating or involving the expenditure of money, etc., to be so engrossed and presented to the mayor by the clerk for his approval; that if he approves same he shall sign it; that if he does not approve same he shall return it with his objections in writing to the common council at the first regular meeting, which shall not be held within five days after the same shall have been presented to the mayor, and same shall be immediately reconsidered by the council, and shall not take effect and be binding unless again passed, two-thirds of all the members elected voting for same, and the yeas and nays being called and recorded upon the journal; or, if the mayor fail to return the ordinance or resolution or measure as herein provided, it shall take effect and be in force from the time he should have returned it.

Section 3309 provides that a mayor pro tem. shall be chosen by each common council at its first regular meeting after its organization, or as soon thereafter as practicable, from among its members, and he shall, in the absence of the mayor, or during his disability, or in case of a vacancy, perform the duties and exercise all the powers vested in the mayor, but he shall not approve or veto an ordinance, resolution or measure during the absence or disability of the mayor, unless such absence or disability shall have continued longer than ten consecutive days.

It is an admitted fact that this ordinance was never presented to the mayor; it is also an admitted fact that the mayor, at the time of the passage of the ordinance on the 15th day of May, 1894, was in the city of Henderson, and the records also show that on the 19th he approved a considerable number of other ordinances.

It is manifest that the validity of this ordinance at last turns upon the question as to whether the ordinance itself was a measure involving the expenditure of money by the city. It is very earnestly contended for the appellant that it did involve the expenditure of money, because the ordinance itself provided that the council, in its discretion, might advance the money or any part thereof to the contractor, on the cost of such improvement, on condition that said contractor assign to the city his lien on the property fronting on said improvement, and that in the contract made with Mamion he agreed to assign to the city his lien in the event the city advanced the money to him.

It is true that these provisions, both in the ordinance and the contract, seem to contemplate the possibility of the city becoming the purchaser of the liens, which would inure to the contractor upon the completion of the work in accordance with the terms of the contract; but primarily it was in no sense an ordinance involving the expenditure of money by the city, as the ordinance clearly provides that the work should be done at the expense of the property holder. It was one of the usual and customary orders passed by the common council in the discharge of the necessary duties imposed upon it by law. "An ordinance for the improvement of a street by building a pavement and sidewalk does not necessarily involve an appropriation of money because none is appropriated; it does not involve the expenditure of money because none is expended through the ordinance, and same is not such an act or ordinance as is required by the charter to be approved by the mayor." (Preble v. Portland, 45 Maine, 241.)

"The signature of the mayor of a city incorporated under the general laws of a State is not usually essential to the validity of an ordinance of such city when it is regularly passed by the proper body, and has been duly recorded by the proper officer." (Martindale v. Palmer, 2 Ind., 411; Fisher v. Graham, 1 Cin., 113; Chaffee v. Grainger, 6 Mich., 651.)

There is nothing in the charter of cities of the third class which requires the mayor's signature to the ordinances, minutes or resolutions passed by the common council, unless they appropriate money, or involve the expenditure of money, or grant some license, privilege or franchise. All other proceedings may be approved and signed by the presiding officer at a regular meeting of the council.

The only resolution of the council directing an expenditure of money in connection with this work was the resolution accepting the work and directing the clerk to issue the scrip advancing the money to the contractor, and same is the only resolution involving the expenditure of money. There is no controversy as to the signature and approval of the mayor to that resolution and contract.

It does not seem to us that appellant in this case should complain, because the contractor who did this work has reason to believe that he could collect the money due him for same without being driven to the expense of enforcing his lien against the property of the appellant. Certainly the knowledge that he could sell his claim and realize the money for same at its full value did not add anything to the cost of the improvement for the appellant.

It is not apparent to us why the city of Henderson could not become the purchaser of this claim and be invested with all the rights of an assignee to collect same, or how such transfer or assignment in any way was injurious to the rights of this defendant. There is nothing in section 3304 which is mandatory upon the mayor; he can sign the ordinance or not sign; he can return it either with or without his veto, or he can do neither, the whole object of this section being to bring to the attention of the mayor as chief executive officer of the city all ordinances which require the expenditure of money, or the grant of license, franchise or privilege.

We conclude that the ordinance in question was not such an ordinance as by law had to be presented to him for his approval, as provided in section 3304, but that same was such an ordinance as the common council of the city had full power and authority to pass; and, when the minutes adopting said ordinance were approved and signed by the presiding officer and attested by the clerk, they had all the binding force and legality which could be given them.

For the reasons indicated in this opinion this cause is affirmed.

HILL V. RUDD, &C., AGENT, &C.

(Filed January 23, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Hill & Hill for appellant.

Wilfred Carrico for appellees.

Appeal from Daviess Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge White.

This is an appeal from a judgment of the Daviess Circuit Court in favor of appellee and against appellant. The suit was instituted by appellee to recover of appellant installment due on contract or lease of house in the city of Owensboro, Ky. The same issues were tried by this court in the case of Hill v. Rudd, decided by this court April 20, 1896, and reported in ante, page 55, and in that case the court decided against appellant, and this court affirms and adopts the opinion in that case as being decisive of the issues in this case.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed with damages.

JOHNSON V. TRUSTEES COMMON SCHOOL DISTRICT NO. 13, &C.

(Filed January 22, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Liability of trustees of common school district—In this action against "The Trustees of Common School District No. 13, Mason County," as a corporation, to recover a balance alleged to be due plaintiff as teacher under a contract of employment with the trustees, the court erred in sustaining a demurrer to the petition, the trustees being a body corporate, with perpetual succession, and their corporate name being that quoted. It is not necessary to determine what is the appropriate remedy to enforce payment of the judgment that may be rendered.

L. W. Galbraith and E. L. Worthington for appellant.

Cochran & Son for appellees.

Appeal from Mason Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

The trustees of Common School District No. 13, Mason county, entered into a contract with Milton Johnson to teach the common school of the district, beginning on the 2d of September, 1889, for the consideration of $1,350, for a ten months' school. Johnson was to employ and pay an assistant teacher, and also the janitor. The amount was to be paid in monthly installments. The trustees were not to be responsible further than for the special tax, and the amount to be furnished by the State. It was also agreed that if the "tax and public money do not amount to $1,350 that the school shall run at that rate, and not for ten months."

The year following a similar contract was made with the trustees of the district with Johnson to teach the school, etc.

The petition fully alleges the terms of the contract, and that he had fully complied with it, etc. He alleged facts showing that a tax had been properly levied in the district to supplement the amounts which would come to the district from the State; that for the year of 1889 the fund from the State was $246 and district tax $1,034, making $1,280; that the State fund was paid the plaintiff and $950 of the district tax, leaving due him for that year $84. It is also alleged that the State fund for 1890 was $322.34 and district fund was $1,061.18; that the State fund was paid him and $900 of the district fund; that on these balances the sum of $100 has been paid.

The balance due for the year of 1890, before the payment of the $100, is erroneously alleged to be $161.18, as under the contract he was to receive $1,350 for teaching the school, etc., on which he was paid the sums of $322.34 and $900; total $1,222.34. This amount, deducted from $1,350, left the balance due $127.66, as the contract does not provide that he shall have an amount equal to the State fund and district tax, but only $1,350 for the ten months.

The trustees of the district were authorized to make the contracts. The plaintiff rendered the services as required by the contracts. He has not been paid the amounts to which he is entitled under them. The trustees and their successors are a body-politic and corporate, with perpetual succession by the name of trustees for their district, and as such may sue and be sued, etc.

For whatever amount that may be due the plaintiff under his contracts, he is entitled to a judgment against the "Trustees of Common School District No. 13 of Mason County."

In this action we are not called upon to consider the question as to what is the appropriate remedy to enforce payment of the judgment. The court erred in sustaining a demurrer to the petition and in dismissing it.

Wherefore, the judgment is reversed, with directions that further proceedings conform to this opinion.

POWER V. WALKER.

(Filed May 18, 1896—Not to be reported.)

Damages for breach of building contract—Judgment sustained by evidence—In this action against a building contractor upon a written contract, and an alleged modification thereof, by which plaintiff undertook to furnish to defendant for the building of a courthouse "all the galvanized iron work, slating and tin work," and to put up and complete same according to certain plans and specifications, the defendant pleaded as a counterclaim the damages he had suffered by plaintiff's abandonment of the work before it was completed; and plaintiff, having pleaded as an excuse for his abandonment of the work the defendant's failure to comply with the alleged modification of the contract as to the terms of payment, the evidence being conflicting upon the issues of fact as to whether there was a modification of the contract as alleged, and as to the amount of damages, this court will not disturb the finding of the lower court upon these issues.

Tyler & Apperson for appellant.

J. L. Elliston for appellee.

Appeal from Montgomery Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

John H. Walker had contracted with Montgomery county to build a courthouse at Mt. Sterling.

Power entered into a written contract with Walker, by which he agreed to furnish all the galvanized iron work, slating and tin work put up, complete the same in every particular in a neat and workmanlike manner according to certain plans and specifications which had been prepared by certain architects. He agreed to complete the work as fast as the "general progress" of building would permit, and for which Walker agreed to pay him $1,625, eighty per cent. of "all work executed under this contract and put up in said building, once every thirty days," and the balance was to be paid when the work was completed.

Power proceeded to execute the work, but before its completion abandoned it, as, he claims, because Walker failed to pay him according to the terms of the contract. He claims that the written contract was modified in this, to wit: Instead of Walker paying him every thirty days eighty per cent. of all work executed under the contract and "put up in said building," Walker agreed to pay him every thirty days eighty per cent. of whatever material he should have on the ground for the purpose of being used in the building in addition to that which should be "put up" in the building.

This action was brought on the written contract and the alleged modification of it.

It is clear from this record that when Power abandoned the work Walker had paid him more than eighty per cent. of the work under the contract which he had "put up in the said building."

It follows then, if the contract evidenced by the writing was not modified, Power had no excuse in law for refusing to complete the work which he had undertaken to do.

The court dismissed the petition in this case by which Power sought to recover the difference between the contract price and the amount which he alleges he had been paid thereon. The court necessarily passed upon the question as to whether there had been a modification of the contract.

The case seems to have turned principally upon this question. Walker claimed it cost him $554 to complete the work which Power had undertaken to do; that he had been damaged several hundred dollars because of Power's failure to execute the work in such manner as his contract required him to do; that he had paid Power on on the work $983.20, which was more than he was entitled to receive.

These were all questions of fact, as well as was the question as to the modification of the contract. There was much testimony taken upon them. We will not disturb the conclusions of the learned judge on these issues of fact.

Therefore, the judgment is affirmed.

Judge Hazelrigg not sitting.

The court delivered the following response to petition for rehearing February 27, 1897:

We will assume that Power had the right to abandon the work because Walker had failed to comply with the terms of the contract. From this point of view the judgment must be affirmed.

This action was upon the covenant, and Power had the right to maintain an action upon the covenant, if anything was due him thereunder. (Jewell v. Blanford, 7 Dana, 472; Rankin v. Darnell, 11 B. M., 30.)

Under the doctrine enunciated in Elizabethtown & Paducah Railroad Co. v. Pottinger Bros , 10 Bush, 188, he had the right to maintain his action for the value of the work done under the contract, and also for damages which he had sustained for its breach by way of profits.

Under the rule announced in Rankin v. Darnell he could not have maintained an action of assumpsit, but only an action on the covenant.

The fact that Power may have had the right to abandon the work under the contract did not entitle him to recover the contract price. (Chamberlain v. McCallister, 6 Dana, 352.)

This is in accord with the current of authorities. He did not seek to recover damages in this case, nor did he allege or prove what his profits would have been had he completed the work under the contract.

He alleges the contract price for the work and the amount that had been paid him thereon; he did not allege the value of the work which he did in the performance of the contract, but said that the work could have been completed for $100. He asked judgment for the difference between the amount which had been paid him on the work and the contract price.

The testimony in this case overwhelmingly shows that $100 or anything like that amount would not have completed the work under the contract. He was entitled to recover the value of the work done under the contract, and the contract must furnish the rule for the measurement of the recovery. (Western v. Sharp, 14 B. M., 177.)

Power in his deposition said that he could not give the value of the material or labor which he furnished under the contract. Having failed to establish inferentially the value of the work done by showing the amount necessary to complete it, we are left without any basis upon which to calculate the value of the work performed under the contract, unless we assume that the amount which Walker contracted to pay for the completion of the work was reasonable.

The contract between Walker and Montgomery county has not been made part of the record, and we do not know the prices which Walker was to receive for the work which Power had contracted to perform, nor is it material to know. Power is not entitled to recover the prices which the county agreed to pay Walker, nor upon a quantum meruit. Neither does he seek a recovery to be measured by either of those methods, but, as we have said, seeks a recovery on the covenant.

It is contended, however, that the superintendent of the work for the county estimated the value of the work at over $2,000 in furnishing a basis for a settlement between Walker and the county. This in nowise is competent to show the value of the work Power performed under the contract. There is no pretense that Walker ever agreed to pay Power more than $1,625 for the work. Had he completed it he was only entitled to the contract price, regardless of the amount which Walker was to or did receive for it. When Power abandoned the work he was not entitled to be paid for his work according to Walker's contract with the county, but according to Walker's contract with him.

Assuming the proper way to ascertain the value of Power's work is to take from the contract price the expense Walker incurred to complete the work, we will proceed to state the account.

We think Walker is entitled to the credit for the $25 paid Vogler for Power September 20, 1890, and which is embraced in Walker's account. McKee testifies that he paid the $65 to Vogler. Vogler admits Walker paid him some money. Walker testifies that he paid this $25, and it appears this $25 is not part of the $65, which is the total of the amounts paid Vogler by McKee. Walker claims he has paid Power and furnished material to complete the work Power undertook to perform $983 87

Take from it sheet lead	$33 55
Expressage and cartage on it	6 40
		39 95
Leaves amount		$943 92

With which Power should be charged as payments on the work which he did. Add the amount of $554 which Walker contracted to pay to complete Power's work and it would make $1,498.92 which Walker has paid Power for work and contracted to pay another to complete it.

We think the item for sheet lead is incorrect, because Power's contract did not require him to put up sheet lead. There is some dispute as to $23.40 claimed for extra galvanized iron work. Power's contract required him to put up the galvanized iron work, and, as it is not clear from the evidence that this galvanized iron work, claimed to be extra, is not embraced in the contract, it should be disallowed. Walker was entitled to credit for the valne of the tower belt which he furnished to complete the work, as Power never furnished the one which he said he made and kept in his shop. Of course it was not used in completing the work he had undertaken.

Assuming that Power had the right to abandon the work, he could not be made to pay any damages which resulted to Walker subsequent to the time of the abandonment. Walker asserted a claim for damages to the walls of the building in consequence of Power failing to construct pipes so as to carry off the water from that part of the roof on which he had put slate, and in not putting the slate on a part of the roof completed ready for it, and thus allowed the water to run down on the walls, greatly damaging them. If at all, this damage resulted before Power abandoned the work.

There was considerable testimony offered on this claim, and, while it is not of an entirely satisfactory character as to the exact amount of damages sustained, the judgment of the court below should not be disturbed because the court may have reached the conclusion that the damage Walker so sustained was equal to the difference between the contract price and the amount he paid Power and the amount he contracted to pay to complete the work as heretofore stated.

The court did not give any reason for dismissing the petition, but he necessarily did so for the reason given in the opinion or in this response.

WHITE V. WILSON'S ADM'RS.

(Filed January 9, 1897.)

1. Right to recover money advanced to pay losses at gaming—Where one who has advanced money to another to pay losses at cards after the losses have been incurred was jointly interested with the winners, however small the extent of his interest, he can not recover the money thus advanced.

Where there was a "take-out" in a game of cards which was run continuously at a club, a member of the club who, to some extent at least, managed the game for his own profit, which was to come out of the "take-out," was jointly interested with the winners, and, having advanced to a player money with which to pay his losses, he can not recover the money so advanced, being a joint wrongdoer.

2. The law does not permit corporations to be formed to carry on gaming, and, as soon as a corporation is used for that purpose, the stockholders so using it cease to act as stockholders and act individually and for themselves. Therefore, it is immaterial in this case whether or not the club at which the game was carried on was incorporated or not.

Burnett & Dallam and Samuel S. Blitz for appellant.

Robbins & Thomas for appellees.

Appeal from Graves Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge DuRelle.

This suit was brought by J. T. Wilson's administrator against his heirs and creditors to settle his estate. Among the claims filed with the commissioner was a note in favor of appellant for $138.50, and an account in his favor for $325, aggregating $463.50. They were proven in the usual form, the additional witness to the account being T. H. Glover.

Exceptions were filed to the claims upon two grounds. First, that the claims were all for money borrowed from appellant for the purpose of betting on and playing at a game of cards called "poker," which purpose and use of said sums was known to appellant; or, second, that appellant won said sums from Wilson at poker, and that one or the other of said grounds was true, but appellees did not know which ground was true. The appellees took the deposition of the appellant, and the exceptions were sustained by the court below. From the judgment sustaining the exceptions this appeal is prosecuted.

It appears that the money was lost in the Union Club, of which appellant was a member, on two different occasions, and in games in which he took no part as player. The sole testimony introduced is that of the appellant himself taken by the appellee, and, as was to be expected, he was a most reluctant witness upon many points.

He states that he paid out the money for which the note was given less than three years before, and also the money claimed in the account at the request of Wilson, to different parties to whom Wilson had lost it at cards at the Union Club; that he waited on the gentlemen engaged in the games at various times, but did not manage the game more than other members of the club; that there was a "take-out" in the game played at the club in proportion to the value of the hands held—that is to say so much for "jackpots," so much for "two pairs," so much for "fours," etc., the amount of the "take-out" being taken as the game progressed from the amount won on any hand above a certain value, and out of this "take-out" was defrayed the expense of the meals, drinks and cigars; that it all went into a fund, and went to the credit of the club if there was any surplus; that this taking out was done by any member of the club who happened to be convenient; that sometimes if there was any money left there appellant took charge of it, and sometimes the colored boy, Dave Evans, who waited on the club members and visitors for what they might choose to give him; that he could not say from recollection who were the parties to whom he paid the money at Wilson's request, and did not know that he could name one man to whom he paid money for Wilson.

According to appellant's statement the game was running continuously at that time. There was a dining room for the exclusive use of members and friends invited there by members, and the meals were furnished from the hotel below, charged to the club and paid out of the take-out. Appellant on a number of occasions paid Mr. Seelbach his accounts for room rent, eatables, etc., but declines to give the name of any other member who did so. He states that Dave Evans did so at times, but it is obvious that the payments by the colored steward must have been made under direction. Books were kept at the club showing the indebtedness of those who obtained checks or counters on credit. The book from which the account was taken was kept there but is not produced, and appellant professes ignorance of its whereabouts. When asked if he had any interest whatever in the take-out he says not personally "any more than any other members of the club; I suppose I got my part in eating, drinking and smoking."

The only evidence as to the time of the request by Wilson to pay, and the time the payments were made, is that of appellant, who states that it was in both instances after the losses had been incurred. Appellant takes occasion to state once or twice that the club was incorporated.

We are bound from the evidence to conclude that all the payments were made at Wilson's request and for his benefit after the losses were incurred.

Numerous cases have been cited for appellant to the effect that in cases in which money has been advanced to pay losses at cards after the losses had been incurred the money is recoverable. But we think there is a marked distinction between those cases and the case at bar.

Whether the Union Club was a corporation or not (and there is no competent evidence in this case that it was) the fact remains that appellant was to some extent at least managing it, and for his own profit, which was to came out of the "take-out." This he received either as a partner or as a stockholder, and for the purposes of this opinion it makes no difference, for the law does not permit corporations to be formed to carry on gaming, and as soon as the corporation, if any there was, was used for that purpose, the stockholders so using it ceased to act as stockholders, and acted individually and for themselves. In this view there can be no doubt of appellant's interest in the take-out.

As was well said by Judge Bowden, in Triplett v. Seelbach, 11 KY. LAW REP., 283, "As each winning hand is played the manager is there claiming and taking his share of what is won by that hand. The nominal winner—he who actually plays the hand—has no right to take as his own all that his hand won; there, as it lies, it belongs jointly to him and to the manager; the latter has as much right to his share, called a 'take-out,' as the player has to the residue. Thus he who plays the winning hand wins for himself and the manager. It is the most effective of all joint enterprises; the manager is always the partner of the winner. * * * What is the difference in principle between such a scheme and one in which the manager arranges with one player only for a percentage of his winnings? His right in either case is to the winnings as such; it is in them that he has an interest. Neither in the one case nor in the other can it be material to inquire what induces the player to agree to such a participation in the amount won. If the manager should furnish the money to be used in the game that would be the inducing fact. Why it is not so, if he furnishes gilded parlors, sumptuous meals and sparkling wines? The question is not as to what moves the player to consent that the manager shall be a participant with him in what he wins; the fact of participation is alone important."

In our judgment appellant was a joint wrongdoer with the winners from Wilson, in that he had an interest in the winnings, no matter how small.

Under the principles laid down in the case cited above, and in the same case when decided in this court, if Wilson had paid his losses at the time they were incurred to the various winners, he might have recovered them from White.

Said Judge Bennett in the same case in this court, 91 Ky., 33: "It is not the extent but the community of interest that makes wrongdoers responsible for the whole wrong. If each is to receive a certain amount of the result of the unlawful enterprise this gives them such a community of interest as to render each responsible for the whole amount received."

The judgment of the lower court is, therefore, affirmed.

LOUGHRIDGE, PRESIDENT, &C. V. ALLEN.

(Filed January 19, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Sales of personal property—Right to return given by contract—Where a contract for the sale of fifty mules provided that if at the time the buyers "are ready to ship said mules to market, as contemplated by them, they so elect, they shall have the right to return any ten of said mules," the buyers had the right to make their election to return the ten mules at any time before they had shipped all the mules, and were not obliged to tender them before they had "commenced" shipping the mules.

2. Measure of damages—In this action upon a note executed for the purchase price of the mules, in which the defendants pleaded as a set-off the damages sustained by them by reason of the plaintiff's refusal to accept ten of the mules offered to be returned by them, the court practically excluded from the jury, although it refused to do so in terms, the evidence of the value of the mules in the southern market by directing the jury to fix the damages upon the set-off at the difference between the market value at Lexington, Ky., and the stipulated credit agreed upon per head in the contract. Therefore, the plaintiff was not prejudiced by the admission of the testimony as to the value in the southern market, even if it was incompetent, which it does not seem to have been, as the measure of damages was to be fixed by the value in the southern market if the mules were purchased for that market, and this fact was understood by both parties to the contract.

3. Instructions—Interest upon unliquidated claim—The court properly instructed the jury that if they found for defendant on his set-off "they should allow him amount so found as of the date when the ten mules were offered to be tendered, if they were so offered to be tendered," the instruction not being liable to the objection that it allows interest upon a claim for unliquidated damages.. If defendant was entitled to the credit at the stipulated price at the time the mules were tendered, that tender should stop interest upon plaintiff's claim.

4. The finding by the jury as a part of their verdict "that the ten mules in question were tendered within the spirit of the contract," although not responsive to the instructions, was immaterial, and may be rejected as surplusage.

Bronston & Allen and John T. Shelby for appellants.

Appeal from Fayette Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge DuRelle.

This action was brought by the appellant to recover the balance due on a note for $641.32, which had been executed to him by the appellee. The defendant did not controvert the plaintiff's right of recovery, but pleaded an equitable set-off in his answer and amended answer, which is, in effect, that in October, 1890, the plaintiff, as president of the Lexington Street Railway Company, and on its behalf, contracted with the defendant and his partner, who subsequently assigned his interest in the claim to appellee, for the sale of fifty mules. Upon this contract the main question in the case arises.

The contract, after reciting the money consideration to be paid by appellee and his partner, and that the title to all the mules sold by appellee and his partner should be unincumbered by any claim of the appellant, further provides: "And it is agreed and understood by the parties hereto that if, at the time second parties are ready to ship said mules to market as contemplated by them, they so elect, they shall have the right to return any ten of said mules, provided same have received no damage at hands of second parties to first party, and first party will allow for them the sum of $70 per head, which sum shall be deducted from the amount of the note mentioned herein; but second parties shall receive nothing for the keeping of said mules during the time they may so have them."

The first question made by appellant turns upon the proper construction of this clause of the contract. It appears, from the evidence of appellee himself that he began shipping mules to the southern market on December 31, 1890; that on or about January 25, 1891, when somewhat over half of the mules had been already shipped, and when he was preparing to ship the last carload of the mules bought from the railway company, he brought in ten of them, tendered them to the company, and demanded that he should be allowed the stipulated credit of $70 per head, and that appellant refused to receive them.

Appellant moved for a peremptory instruction to the jury to disallow the set-off, on the ground that the proper construction of the contract should be that the tender provided for must be made when the parties were ready to ship any of the mules purchased to market as contemplated by them.

We are unable to concur in this contention. The contract provided that when the parties were "ready to ship said mules to market, as contemplated by them," they should have the right to return any ten of the lot.

It is conceded in the argument of counsel that the shipment contemplated was to the southern market, and the provision of the contract was not that the tender should be made when the appellee and his partner were ready to commence the shipment of said mules, but when they were "ready to ship said mules." "Said mules," in our opinion, must refer to either forty or fifty of the lot, at the option of the vendees; and we are of the opinion that until the appellee and his partner were ready to ship all the said mules, or all of them with the exception of those which he had the right to tender to appellant in part payment of the note, his option so to do had not expired.

This contract may have been an unfair one, but it appears to us that it was the contract which the parties made. The trial court might, therefore, have instructed the jury, as matter of law, under the evidence produced, that appellee and his partner had made the tender in due time, and there was no error to the prejudice of the substantial rights of the appellant in leaving that question to the jury.

The second objection of appellant is as to the measure of damages to be recovered upon appellee's set-off. It is claimed for him that the measure is the difference between the value of the ten mules, estimated at $70 per head according to the contract, and their value as fixed by the market price at Lexington at the date of the tender if that market price was less, and the third instruction gives this view of the law to the jury.

The jury were instructed, if they found for the defendant on his set-off, to allow such sum, not exceeding $400, as was the difference between $700, the price stipulated in the contract, and the market value at the time in Lexington, Ky., of the ten mules offered to be tendered to the president of the Lexington Street Railway Company. If, however, the mules were purchased for the southern market, and this fact was understood by both parties to the contract, the rule is quite well settled that the measure of damages is fixed by the value in the market for which the property was intended.

Moreover, the court, by instruction No. 3, the substance of which is given above, practically excluded from the jury, although it refused to do so in terms, the evidence of the value of the mules in the southern market by directing them to fix the damages at the difference between the market value at Lexington and the stipulated credit agreed upon per head in the contract. There was, therefore, no error to the prejudice of appellant on this point.

It is further claimed that the claim for damages, being unliquidated, ought not to bear interest, and that the court, in effect, instructed the jury to allow interest in the instruction in which they were told that, if they found for the defendant on his set-off, "they should allow him amount so found as of the date when the ten mules were offered to be tendered, if they were so offered to be tendered."

If appellee and his partner were entitled to the credit at the stipulated price at the time the mules were tendered, that tender should stop interest upon appellant's claim against them, and we see no error in this instruction.

Under the court's instructions the jury rendered a verdict as follows: "We, the jury, whose names are signed below, find that the ten mules in question were tendered within the spirit of the contract, and that the defendant was damaged in the amount of $350 by the refusal of the plaintiff to receive the same, and that the defendant is entitled to a credit of this amount from the 25th day of January, 1891." This verdict was signed by ten of the jury. It is complained that the words "the tender was made in the spirit of the contract" was in the nature of a special finding, and not authorized by the instruction; that, if appellee and his partner "did promptly, after they became so ready to ship said lot of mules, bring said ten mules to some convenient place near to the place of business of said company, and then and there offered to tender them to said company," etc.

It may be true that this finding was not responsive to the instruction, but this court, having reached the conclusion that, as matter of law, the tender was made in due season, the language used by the jury in their verdict as to the spirit of the contract becomes immaterial and may be rejected as surplusage, the inquiry before the jury being as to the amount of damage suffered by appellee and his partner.

Wherefore, the judgment is affirmed.

MOON V. POTTER.

(Filed January 23, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Appellate jurisdiction—This court has no jurisdiction of this appeal from a judgment enjoining appellant from collecting a judgment for an amount less than $100.

Thomas H. Hines and J. B. Fitzpatrick for appellant.

Appeal from Letcher Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge White.

The appellee sued the appellant in the Letcher Circuit Court to rescind and set aside a contract he had executed to appellant to convey to the appellant the mineral and coal on his land in Letcher county, and averring that appellant had failed to comply with his contract of purchase. Appellant answered and claimed he had paid on said contract the sum of $75, and, on the hearing of the cause, the court rendered judgment rescinding the contract and giving appellant judgment for $75, and interest from date of payment, to appellee, and adjudging that appellant have a lien on the land described in the bond. Sometime after this judgment, and before the sale of the land to pay this judgment, appellee filed an amended petition, pleading that he had fully paid said judgment to appellant's assignee, and asking the court to so adjudge. The appellant filed answer, and denied that said judgment had been paid off, or that he had assigned said judgment to anyone; that he was still the owner of the same.

On the hearing the court adjudged that said judgment had been paid, and made orders preventing appellant from proceeding to collect the same, and from this judgment this appeal is prosecuted by appellant.

We are of opinion that this court has no jurisdiction to hear and determine this appeal, as the amount in controvery is less than $100.

Wherefore, this appeal is dismissed.

HEAD V. AUBERRY, &C.

(Filed January 23, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Mortgage—Waiver of exemptions—Under a mortgage of land executed by husband and wife waiving "all rights to said land under the exemption laws of this State," the mortgagors are not entitled to the exemption of a homestead.

W. E. Selecman for appellant.

Appeal from Washington Circuit Court.

Opinion of the Court by Judge Guffy.

The plaintiff below, appellant here, instituted this action in the Washington Circuit Court seeking to recover a judgment on two notes, one executed to him by appellee Auberry for $50 and the other executed to Malby and by Malby assigned to him. He also asserted a lien on one of the tracts of land for the payment of the assigned note, it being for purchase money for the 40 acre tract of land described in the petition, and also claimed a mortgage lien on both tracts by reason of the execution of a mortgage thereon to him by said Auberry and wife.

Defense was made and credits claimed and an offset pleaded. The court rendered judgment for the debt claimed, subject to a credit. The correctness of that judgment is not questioned, hence need not be further noticed. Upon the submission of the cause the appellees, Auberry and wife, were allowed to add the following to their answer on the margin thereof: "The defendants, Ralph Auberry and Francis Auberry say that they have a homestead right and exemption in the 7½ acres of land named and described in the petition, which homestead right and exemption is not waived or relinquished in the mortgage sued on. They ask the protection of the court to said homestead right."

The court below adjudged in appellees' favor as to their homestead right, and to reverse that judgment this appeal is prosecuted. The only question presented for decision is as to whether the mortgage was in law a relinquishment or waiver of the homestead right in said land.

We quote from the mortgage as follows: "This deed of mortgage between Ralph Auberry and Francis Auberry, his wife, of the first part, of Washington county, Ky., and Robert A. Head, of the county of Marion and State aforesaid, of the second, witnesseth, that the said Auberry is justly indebted to the said Head in the sum of fifty dollars borrowed money, evidenced by note of even date herewith. Now, to secure the said Head harmless from all losses, we do by these presents grant mortgage and convey unto the said Head, his heirs and assigns, two certain tracts or parcels, lying and being in the county of Washington, * * * one piece containing 7½ acres, * * * the other containing 40 acres, * * * to which said Auberry warrants unto the said Head, his heirs and assigns forever; but to be void on condition the said Auberry shall pay off said debt, interest and cost; otherwise to remain in full force and effect. The said Auberry and wife waive all rights to said land under the exemption laws of this State."

The mortgage was signed, acknowledged and recorded. We have not been furnished by the judgment nor otherwise any reason for the judgment appealed from. The mortgage expressly waives all right to said land under the exemption laws of this State. The only exemption the appellees had was the homestead exemption, and it seems to us that the language used as clearly and certainly waived the homestead claim as if the word "homestead" had been used.

In Withers, &c. v. Pugh, 91 Ky., 522, the expression in the mortgage was as follows: "And said grantors hereby especially waive and release all right or claim which arises out of or is given by the exemption laws of Kentucky."

The court in that case held that the homestead was waived. The case at bar is quite as clear and explicit as the case supra.

For the reasons given the judgment of the court below appealed from is reversed and cause remanded, with directions to disallow the exemption claimed, and for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

HIGGINS' ADM'R V. LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE R. R. CO.

(Filed January 23, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Bill of exceptions—Instructions—What purport to be copies of instructions referred to in the bill of exceptions as given to the jury, and which are offered as an additional transcript, can not be considered by this court, not being embodied in the bill.

2. Same—Where the bill of exceptions does not contain all the instructions given the court can not reverse for an error in instructing the jury, unless the instructions contained in the record could not, under any circumstances and with any modification or explanation, be the law applicable to the case.

Oscar Turner, jr., E. E. McKay and Thomas F. Hargis for appellant.

John S. Kelley for appellee.

Appeal from Nelson Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge DuRelle.

Appellant brought suit against appellee for damages for the death of his intestate, which occurred on October 5, 1893, after the act of July 3, 1893, passed in pursuance of section 241 of the new Constitution, went into effect. It appears that the deceased was the engineman of the second section of a north-bound freight train on appellee's railroad. The two sections were between two and three hours apart when they left Rowland, but the first section had two disabled engines from a wreck which had occurred a few days before at Hazel Patch, some twenty-eight cars, a number of which were loaded with debris from the wreck, making it a very heavy train, and, on account of the disabled engines, was compelled to run more slowly than the average freight train. Between Chicago and Pottinger's Creek, a little north of New Hope, by reason of the heavy down grade, the first section of the train at that point broke into three parts. The first cut, with the locomotive, was obliged to go ahead to keep out of the way of the middle cut, which consisted of the two dead engines and eighteen cars. There was one brakeman on the middle cut, which, of course, was the most unwieldy part of the train, and he was unable to stop until his cars had run across the bridge at Pottinger's Creek, where he signaled to the engine to return. The rear brakeman, who is called the flagman, stopped his cars just south of the bridge, and went back to flag the second section.

There is conflict of testimony as to what point he reached before meeting the second section, and where he gave the danger signal. There is also some conflict as to the rate of speed at which the second section was going when the signal was given, and appellee introduced evidence upon that point to show contributory negligence on the part of the deceased in running his train at a high and forbidden rate of speed. The deceased did not stop his train until it had run into the rear cut of the first section, and by the collision the bridge was broken and the engine and a number of cars went into the creek, and the deceased was buried beneath the wreckage and killed.

Under the instructions of the trial court the jury returned a verdict in favor of appellant for one cent and costs, upon which a judgment was entered, to reverse which this appeal is prosecuted.

Appellant's first complaint is that there was error in the trial court giving instructions marked "A" and "B." Neither of these instructions is made a part of the record by any order of court, by the bill of exceptions, or shown in the record before this court; nor are the instructions asked by appellee and refused by the court made part of the bill of exceptions or included in the record.

Instructions 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5, offered by appellant and given by the court, are set out in the bill of exceptions, but the recital of the bill as to appellee's instructions is that it offered instructions marked "A," "B," "C," "D," "E" "F" and "G," to the giving of each and all of which the appellant objected, but the court overruled his objections to "A" and "B" and gave same to the jury, to which the appellant at the time excepted, etc., but sustained the objection to "C," "D," "E," "F," "G" and "H."

A motion was made in this court and overruled to file, as an additional transcript, what purported to be copies of instructions "A" and "B" used upon the trial. These instructions we can not, of course, consider in the decision of this case.

In the case of Forest v. Crenshaw, 4 Ky. Law Rep., 596, it was said: "We have made no examination of the testimony in this case, as the instructions are not properly a part of the record. The refusal of the court to give a peremptory instruction is not assigned for error, and, as to the other instructions complained of, they are not embraced by or included in the bill of exceptions signed by the judge. The clerk has copied certain instructions, but whether they were the instructions given or refused we can not know. They were not made part of the record in the court below by any order of court, nor are they identified by being in the bill of evidence. They form no part of it. * * * Instructions should be identified by making them part of the record by an order of court, or they should be embodied in the bill of exceptions signed by the judge. The proper mode is to include them in the bill of exceptions."

In the case of Meaux v. Meaux, 81 Ky., 478, this court, referring to the case of Forest v. Crenshaw, said: "The bill of evidence signed by the judge was not complete, and what instructions were given or refused this court could not know, except from the statement of the clerk. The usual mode of making up bills of exceptions is by the direction, here insert instructions 1, 2, h, or instructions a, b, h, or instructions in the handwriting of the court or counsel, so as the clerk can identify them; and when copied into the bill of evidence, in the usual form, the bill is complete and the instructions a part of the record; or when the court directs the insertion of the instructions without identifying them, and the clerk inserts the instructions, thereby making the bill complete, this court will not grant the writ of subpœna duces tecum that the original bill may be inspected, unless there is an affidavit that the instructions embodied in the bill were not those offered, given or refused by the court on the trial, and so with reference to any exhibit made part of the bill of evidence."

In Davis v. Commonwealth, 4 KY. LAW REP., 719, it was held that "where the bill of exceptions does not contain all the instructions given, the court can not reverse for an error in instructing the jury, unless the instructions contained in the record could not, under any circumstances, and with any modification or explanation, be the law applicable to the case."

Under this state of case, the only instructions in the record being those given on appellant's own motion, it is scarcely necessary to refer to the other errors assigned. It may be stated, however, that one of the errors complained of is that the court permitted appellee to read in evidence what purported to be a bulletin of date December —, 1891, and in allowing oral proof that the same was in force at the date of the accident, without showing that deceased knew of said order, or had reasonable opportunity of knowing of it, etc. The record, however, shows, on page 21, that the witness (Roller) "here produced bulletin issued by the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, of date December —, 1891, and offered to read the same, to which the plaintiff objected; but the court sustained said objection, and refused said paper to be read to the court, to which the defendant excepted and still excepts."

After a careful examination of the testimony in this case, we find that the verdict is not so flagrantly, if at all, contrary to the evidence in the case as to warrant this court in reversing the judgment upon that ground.

Wherefore, the judgment is affirmed.

TOWNSEND V. RHEA, &C.

(Filed January 26, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Continuance—The trial judge did not abuse his discretion in refusing a continuance asked, upon the ground that defendant was not in a physical condition to attend court, as it was not stated in the affidavit for a continuance that defendant expected to testify in the case, or that his presence was necessary to the attainment of justice. Besides, there was no exception to the ruling upon the motion.

2. Attorney's fee—The action being to recover an attorney's fee fixed by contract, the fact that defendant at plaintiff's instance employed counsel to assist plaintiff in the Court of Appeals does not deprive plaintiff of the right to the full amount of the stipulated fee in the absence of an agreement to that effect.

3. New trial—There was no error in refusing a new trial, asked upon the ground of "accident," which consisted in the fact that defendant by reason of sickness was prevented from attending the trial and testifying as a witness in his own behalf, the facts connected with his physical condition having been presented to the court before trial, and the motion for a continuance on that account overruled and no exception taken. Moreover, as the action was pending in equity from its inception until a few days before the trial, a period of almost two years, and defendant had not taken the deposition of himself or other witnesses, he had not used due diligence in preparing for trial.

Little & Little for appellant.

Ben. T. Perkins, jr., for appellees.

Appeal from Logan Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hazelrigg.

The principal ground urged for reversal in this case is that the court erred in refusing a continuance.

The only ground for a continuance, suggested in the affidavits filed in support of the motion therefor, was that the defendant was not in a physical condition to attend court. It was not stated that defendant expected to testify in the case, or that his presence was necessary to the attainment of justice. There had been several postponements of the trial at defendant's instance, and this court can not say that the trial judge abused his discretion in overruling the motion. Besides, there was no exception to the ruling of the court upon the motion.

The action being to recover an attorney's fee fixed by contract, the fact that defendant at plaintiff's instance employed counsel to assist plaintiff in the Court of Appeals does not deprive plaintiff of the right to the full amount of the stipulated fee in the absence of an agreement to that effect. And while the facts might be such as to authorize the court or jury to infer that there was such an understanding, it is manifest in this case that it was not contemplated that there should be any reduction of plaintiff's fee on that account. And especially is this true in the absence of either allegation or proof that plaintiff was to follow the case to any court to which it might be carried.

The instructions conform to these views, and embody the law of the case. On his motion for a new trial the appellant complained of "accident, which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against," and for the first time disclosed by his affidavit that he was a material witness, and his presence at the trial necessary. This "accident," however, was his physical condition, and the facts connected therewith were presented to the court before trial, and the motion for a continuance on that account was overruled and no exception taken. Moreover, it is to be remembered that the case was pending in equity from its inception in July, 1892, until a few days before the trial in February, 1894, and appellant did not prepare his case by taking the depositions of himself or other witnesses. It does not appear that he has used due diligence in preparing for trial.

Judgment affirmed.

ROBINSON V. MORGAN, &C.

(Filed January 27, 1897.)

1. Malicious prosecution—Allegation of petition—If it was the intention of plaintiff to sue for malicious prosecution his petition is defective, because there is no statement contained therein that the charge upon which he was arrested, if upon any, was false and unfounded, or that the arrest was even without probable cause.

2. False imprisonment—If the plaintiff intended to sue for false imprisonment it was necessary for him, after admitting that defendants were respectively marshal and police judge de facto, to further allege, in order to make it appear that they acted unlawfully, that neither of them was duly elected and qualified as such officer, and that they were, therefore, without legal right, and as usurpers holding and exercising functions of the two offices. It was not sufficient to aver that "neither of them was such officer."

A. M. Baker for appellant.

Appeal from Clay Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Lewis.

Appellant's cause of action, as stated in his petition, is that appellees, A. L. Morgan, pretending to be and acting as police judge, John G. White and others, pretending to be and acting as trustees, and Joseph Hacker, pretending to be and acting as marshal of the town of Manchester, when in fact neither of them was such officer, concerted and agreed with each other to do so, and did unlawfully, willfully, without right and maliciously cause appellant to be arrested and brought by said Hacker before said Morgan, who was pretending unlawfully to act as a court, and who unlawfully, wrongfully, maliciously and without right or authority caused him by his order to be taken by Hacker and put in jail, where he was confined four days.

Though not in terms so stated, there is no other meaning to be given to the language of appellant's petition than that he was arrested by Hacker acting as marshal, and was taken to and confined in the jail under an order or judgment of the police court, of which A. L. Morgan was de facto judge, and nothing to the contrary being stated after an examination or trial in due form of law.

If it was intention of appellant to sue for malicious prosecution his petition is defective, because there is no statement contained therein that the charge upon which he was arrested, if upon any, was false or unfounded, or that the arrest was even without probable cause.

If he intended to sue for false imprisonment there was something necessary to be stated besides the general allegation the arrest and order of imprisonment were made unlawfully, maliciously and without right. After admitting, as appellant in his petition does do, that Hacker and Morgan were respectively marshal and police judge de facto, it was necessary for him, in order to make it appear they acted unlawfully, to farther allege they were neither duly elected and qualified as such officers, and were, therefore, without legal right, and as usurpers holding and exercising functions of the two offices. As the petition does not contain a statement of facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, the general demurrer was properly sustained.

Judgment affirmed.

TAYLOR V. WILSON.

(Filed January 28, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Limitation—New promise—In this action upon a new promise to pay a debt barred by limitation, as the proof is conflicting as to the promise, and the finding of the lower court for defendant is not flagrantly against the evidence, the judgment will not be disturbed.

W. E. Selecman for appellant.

Clements & Thurman for appellee.

Appeal from Washington Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hazelrigg.

The note out of which this controversy grew was executed in 1857. The plaintiff, now appellant, alleges in his petition that he recovered judgment against appellee, the maker of the note, in the Washington Quarterly Court in 1858, and an execution was issued thereon and returned in substance "no property found" in November, 1859; that within the last five years before the bringing of this suit appellee had promised to pay the debt, and had in fact paid thereon $5 in 1885, and $2.75 in 1890.

The appellee admits that he paid $5 to the plaintiff's agent some twelve years ago, but testifies that he did so upon an express agreement that such payment was to be in full satisfaction of the alleged debt, and further says that the note was in fact surrendered to him at that time. He denies that he ever made any promise to pay any balance.

The proof is conflicting as to the promise, but the appellee's statement that he had possession of the note is corroborated by other proof.

The court found for the defendant, and we can not say that its finding is flagrantly against the evidence.

Judgment affirmed.

ALLEN V. NEVIN.

(Filed January 30, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Practice in civil cases—Upon the return of this case to the lower court after it was decided by this court, as reported in 15 KY. LAW REP., 836, although it may not have been incumbent on the court to ascertain the amount due or to fix a time in which to pay it, yet the court having entered an order reciting that the case was passed one week in order to ascertain the amount and fix the time in which plaintiff was to pay the same, it was then error to dismiss her petition without ascertaining the amount and fixing a time in which it was to be paid.

Wm. Halbourn and Chas. G. Hulsewede for appellant.

Lane & Burnett for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Law and Equity division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hazelrigg.

Upon the return of this case from this court, where the appellant, then appellee, was denied a homestead as against the claim of Nevin for street improvement (see Nevin v. Allen, 15 KY. LAW. REP., 836), the chancellor, to the end that Mrs. Allen might pay off the assessment for which the property had been sold, entered this order: "And this case is passed one week in order to ascertain amount to be paid, and to fix the time in which plaintiff Allen is to pay the same."

Thereafter, without fixing that amount or fixing the time within which it was to be paid, the court dismissed her petition. We think this was error. It may have been the duty of the appellant to have supported the amounts of her petition by testimony, and to have tendered the amount supposed by her to be due, and it may not have been incumbent on the court to have undertaken to ascertain the amount or to fix a time in which the plaintiff was to be allowed to pay it, but although she failed to take her proof or make such tender the court, in pursuance of the order, should have fixed the sum to be due on the pleadings, and fixed a time within which the plaintiff might pay off the debt and save her homestead. Not to have done so after the order looking to that end must have been misleading. She had the right to rely on the court making such an order, and may have failed on that account to have procured the necessary money.

The original assessment was $64, and that and the costs amounted at the time of sale to $122. For this sum property valued at $1,000 is about to be taken from the owners. On the return of the case appellant ought to be given a reasonable time, after the amount due is fixed by the court, in which to satisfy the appellee's debt, and this whether her husband is alive or not.

The judgment dismissing the petition is reversed for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

YOUNG, &C. V. CONRAD.

(Filed January 14, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Passway—Adverse user—In this action in which the plaintiff claims by adverse user for more than fifteen years the right to a passway through defendant's stable lot, defendant being an infant when the use of the way in question was begun, limitation did not begin to run against him until he reached his majority; and, as fifteen years have not elapsed since that time, the plaintiff has failed to make out her claim.

Dickerson & Willis for appellants.

A. G. DeJarnett for appellee.

Appeal from Grant Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Burnam.

Appellant is a daughter of Isaac Conrad, and inherited the lands owned by her from him. He died in 1889.

Appellee is the son of W. G. Conrad, who died in 1873. Isaac and W. G. Conrad were brothers, and owned two adjacent tracts of land in Grant county, Ky., of about 250 acres each. The lands of W. G. Conrad fronted on one county road and the lands of Isaac Conrad on another parallel county road. For many years a passway existed across these tracts of land from one county road to the other, which was used by the brothers and by the public generally without objection.

There is no evidence that this passway was ever dedicated to the county as a public road, and no evidence that same was ever used under any express agreement by the owners of the lands over which it ran, but as a matter of mutual convenience the brothers had allowed each other and the public generally to pass through each other's lands over said passway.

Before the death of W. G. Conrad he divided his lands between his three sons, T. J., J. C. B. and W. W. Conrad, by metes and bounds.

The passway passed over the lands of appellee until it reached a point about 75 yards from the Mt. Zion pike, at which place it passed off the land of appellee, and from that point on ran over the land of his brother, J. C. B. Conrad, to the public road.

W. G. Conrad made a will, in which he named Isaac Conrad, the father of appellant, as executor. This will required the executor to take possession of the lands devised to his sons, to manage and keep them in repair, and to rent them out, giving his sons the preference as renters until his youngest son became of age on the 20th of September, 1884.

Isaac Conrad took possession of all these lands under this will and managed and controlled them until September, 1884. In 1878 or 1879, at a time when appellee was an infant, the said Isaac Conrad allowed J. C. B. Conrad to fence that part of the passway which passed over his land and to move same over upon the land of this appellee and through the barn lot in question. He also built and put in gates in appellee's fences surrounding his barn lot, so that he could reach the public road without going upon the land of J. C. B. Conrad at all.

After appellee became of age he moved to Kansas and continued a resident of that State until a short time before the institution of this suit. He testifies that he never knew of this change in the passway from the land of his brother to his until a short time before this suit was instituted.

The evidence of Thomas Conrad shows that Isaac Conrad got him to write a letter to his brother, W. W. Conrad, proposing to buy a passway out over this land, upon the idea that if W. W. Conrad should sell said land he might have trouble about his passway with the purchaser. This was refused by appellee.

There is no evidence in this case to show that the ancestor of plaintiff in this action ever claimed any legal right to pass through this barn-lot over the lands of appellee. There is not a particle of evidence to show that appellant or her vendors ever had the permission of appellee to pass through said barn-lot; and whether the change was made in 1878 or 1879 is wholly immaterial, as the statute of limitation would certainly not run against the appellee until he arrived at age in 1884.

It seems to us that appellant has failed to make out any legal claim to the passway through the stable and barn-lot of appellee.

Therefore, the opinion of the lower court in this action is affirmed.

The court delivered the following response to a petition for rehearing February 25, 1897:

The very learned and able counsel for appellant in this case seems to have misconstrued the effect of the opinion rendered herein. We think there can be no reasonable doubt that the passway through the lands of appellant and that of the heirs of W. G. Conrad connecting the two county roads, the Mount Zion Turnpike Road and the road that runs in front of the house of the witness, Osborn, was a right of way to which the appellant and the public generally had a prescriptive right, and there is no intimation in the opinion, as counsel for appellant seems to believe, that this was not a legal and vested right. All that the opinion undertakes to say is that Isaac Conrad, who was the guardian of W. W. Conrad, had no authority in law to change this passway in 1878 or 1879, at a time when appellee was an infant, from the lands of J. C. B. Conrad to the lands of this appellee and through his barn-lot.

The evidence shows that he held a prescriptive right of way on the lands of J. C. B. Conrad, and we do not at all take issue with counsel for appellant in his vigorous contention that "where the owner of lands across which others have a prescriptive right of way for his own convenience closes such way and opens another across other parts of his lands for the use of those having the right, and they assent to the change and use the new way for a period less than twenty years, the owner can not close such new way and prevent its use without first restoring the old one to its former condition." But that is not the question presented by this record. Here a guardian without right changes a passway from the land of one ward, where it has been for many years, and where it was established by the ancestor, to the lands of another. The change was material and necessarily injurious, and we can not conceive that such authority existed in a person who had only temporary possession of the land.

It does not seem to us that the appellant in this case is estopped from requiring the owner of the land across which the old passway ran, and over which she had a prescriptive right of travel, to reopen same, as he does not seem to have held the adverse possession of same for the statutory period of limitation.

Counsel is right in his contention that the opinion rendered in this case erroneously stated that the land of appellant fronted upon the public road. The allegations of the petition and the evidence both clearly show that the land owned by appellant is about 250 yards from the road which runs in front of the house of the witness, Osborne. But this error in the opinion can have no effect upon the legal rights of appellant to pass through the barn-lot of appellee; and, whilst the court sympathizes with the appellant in the annoyance and inconvenience which has resulted to her from the unauthorized act of her ancestor in making this change, we can not, on this account, change the law as we see it.

Wherefore, the petition of appellant for rehearing is overruled.

RIDDELL, &C. V. PARK.

(Filed January 15, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Attachment—As it satisfactorily appears that the debtor's undivided interest in his deceased father's land, which is sought to be subjected by attachment in this case, was sold by him by title bond, even before the debt sued on was created, it was not subject to the attachment.

V. P. Smith for appellant.

Appeal from Estill Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Lewis.

The evidence in this case is entirely satisfactory that R. C. Riddell, for a valuable consideration, purchased, paid for and took the title bond of John W. Riddell for his undivided interest in the land left by their deceased father before even the debt sued on by plaintiff Park was created. Consequently it was not subject to attachment or sale for satisfaction of the latter's claim, and the judgment for sale of it was erroneous and is reversed and cause remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

CROW, &C. V. SHACKLETT, AGENT, &C.

(Filed January 16, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Married women—Contract for "necessaries"—Under a statute providing for the sale of the wife's real estate to pay debts created on account of "necessaries," a sum which she has agreed by contract in writing to pay as rent for a hotel kept by her as a business of profit, and not as a mere means of support, can not be regarded as a debt created for "necessaries," the wife already having sufficient means of support from her rents and the profits from her farm.

2. Appellate jurisdiction—As the judgment appealed from directs the sale of the wife's land to satisfy a judgment rendered in a previous action for the debt and costs, the costs included in that judgment are to be regarded as a part of the amount in controversy upon this appeal, and as that judgment, including the costs of the action in which it was rendered, amounts to more than $100, this court has jurisdiction of the appeal.

R. L. Stith and J. D. Irwin for appellants.

S. H. Bush for appellees.

Appeal from Hardin Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hazelrigg.

The appellant, Drew Crow, wife of her co-appellant, was the owner of two houses and lots in Elizabethtown; and of a residence and small farm in Hardin county, and an interest in some lands in Bullitt county.

Conceiving that she might make some money by renting and managing a hotel, she rented of the appellees the Arbor Hotel in Elizabethtown, and after running a few months discovered that instead of making she was losing money, and quit the business. When she began, she, with her husband, had signed a written contract to pay a certain sum for the rent of the hotel, and, failing to pay this, this suit was brought to subject the wife's real estate to its payment. The proof is clear that she went into the hotel business as a means to make money and accumulate a profit and not as a necessity or means of support for herself and family. She already had sufficient means of support from her rents and the profits from her farm.

In the case of Harris v. Dale & Co., 5 Bush, 61, this court held that supplies used in keeping a hotel as a business of profit and not as a mere means of support could not be regarded as necessaries furnished for the use of a family within the meaning of the statute on that subject.

The statute in force when the rental contract under consideration was made is like the statute construed in the case cited, and provided for a sale of the wife's real estate to pay debts created "on account of necessaries for herself or any member of her family, her husband included, as shall be evidenced by writing, etc."

If supplies for the hotel were not "necessaries" we can not well say that the hotel itself, when run as a means of profit, comes within the meaning of that term.

The judgment below is for the sum of $110.45, and adjudges a sale of the wife's land to satisfy it. This court, therefore, has jurisdiction of the appeal, although a part of the judgment is for costs in another action on the same debt in justices' courts against the husband.

The amount in controversy as to the wife is the sum total of the judgment.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to dismiss the petition.

CITY OF MAYFIELD V. ELMORE.

(Filed January 19, 1897.)

Constitutional law—Amendment of city charters—Between the time of the adoption of the present Constitution and the enactment of general laws for the government of towns and cities, the Legislature had the power to amend existing charters of towns and cities.

An amendment of March 31, 1892, to the charter of Mayfield is valid.

Barbour & Carroll and Robertson & Lee for appellant.

Robbins & Thomas for appellee.

Appeal from Graves Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Lewis.

By section 2 of an act to amend an act to amend and revise the charter of the city of Mayfield, approved April 2, 1890, it was provided the city judge should be allowed by the board of councilmen a reasonable salary; also fees and fee costs as then allowed by the city charter.

But by an act approved March 31, 1892, it was provided that so much of the above recited act as authorized and provided for the payment of salaries to the city judge, city marshal and city attorney should be repealed, provided the right of said officers to receive fees and fee costs, authorized by the act of April 2, 1892, should not be affected but continue.

Appellee, Stephen Elmore, brought this action to recover of appellant, city of Mayfield, the sum of $500 claimed as his salary as city judge for the term of one year, beginning the last Monday in May, 1892, said amount having been fixed by the city council as the annual salary of the city judge in pursuance of the act of April 2, 1890; but as he was not elected city judge until April, 1892, he has no right to the salary sued for or any other compensation besides fees and fee costs if the act of March 31, 1892, was valid, and whether it was depends upon the proper meaning of section 166 of the Constitution as follows: "All acts of incorporation of cities and towns heretofore granted, and all amendments thereto except as provided in section 167, shall continue in force under this Constitution, and all city and police courts established in any city or town shall remain with their present powers and jurisdiction until such time as the general assembly shall provide by general laws for the government of towns and cities, and the officers and courts thereof, but not longer than four years from and after the 1st day of January, 1891, within which time the general assembly shall provide by general laws for the government of towns and cities and the officers and court thereof as provided by the Constitution."

It is not at all certain that according to even the strict letter of that section the Legislature was inhibited from amending existing acts of incorporation of cities and towns during the period of four years from January 1, 1890, or at least during the period from that date up to the enactment of a general law governing cities, and towns as required by section 156 of the Constitution. But looking to the real purpose and reason of section 166 we are satisfied it was not intended to prohibit the enactment during that period of proper and necessary, or what the legislature in its wisdom might deem proper and necessary, amendments to existing acts of incorporation; for such restriction was not necessary to the accomplishment of the purpose in view, which was ultimate substitution of the plan of governing cities and towns by a general and consistent system of laws in place of a series of special and local acts, but on the contrary would have probably embarrassed and done injury to particular cities and towns without any reason or necessity for thus preventing needed legislation.

In our opinion the act of March 31, 1892, was valid and effectual to repeal the act of 1890, and under nugatory ordinance of the city council fixing the salaries of the city judge and other officers of the city of Mayfield, and as a consequence appellee is not entitled to the salary sued for.

Wherefore, the judgment is reversed and cause remanded for the dismissal of his action.

MACKEY, &C. V. GLEASON.

(Filed January 19, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Assessment for street improvements—Correction of estimates—Interest—In this action by certain lot owners to set aside as void the proceedings of the city council, by which their property was assessed to pay the cost of improving an alley, the other lot owners whose property was assessed to pay for the same improvement, and also the contractor, being made defendants, the chancellor upon a cross petition filed by the contractor against his co-defendants and the plaintiff seeking upon the ground of mistake to correct the estimates made by the city engineer fixing the amounts due by the property holders, properly granted the relief sought as against the appellant, one of the defendants, it appearing from the evidence that she had by mistake been required to pay only $41.39, when the amount which should have been assessed against her was $153.76. But as she had promptly paid off the warrant for the smaller amount the additional amount charged against her by the judgment should have been made to bear interest only from the date of the judgment and not from the date of the original estimate.

D. M. Rodman for appellants.

Lane & Burnett for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Law and Equity Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge White.

John A. Michelhauser and others brought this action in the law and equity division of the Jefferson Circuit Court against Michael Gleason, Bridget Mackey, S. M. Bernoid and the city of Louisville seeking to set aside proceedings and estimate made against their property for the improvement of an alley in a square or block in which their lots were situated in the city of Louisville, and claiming that said proceeding by the city council and said estimates were void. The steps taken by the city counsel are fully set out in this record. By these proceedings in the city counsel the property of Bridget Mackey was assessed for her part of said improvements at $41.39, and warrants for this amount were issued to Gleason by the proper authorities, which warrant the appellee, Bridget Mackey, paid off and fully discharged before the institution of this action. This action progressed until the 18th day of January, 1892, when defendant Gleason filed an amended answer and cross petition against all the plaintiffs and his codefendants in this suit, and making all the property holders in said block or square defendants thereto, asking process on said cross petition to bring them before the court on his cross petition, and by said cross petition he sought to correct the estimates as made by the city engineer fixing the amount due from the property holders in said block, averring that the city engineer had made a mistake in his estimates, and charging that there should be assessed against the property of appellant, Bridget Mackey, $153.76 instead of the sum of $41.39 in his assessment, appellee being the owner of a lot abutting on said alley so improved of twenty-five feet, and this was the proper amount that should have been charged against her lot; that appellee was chargeable with the cost of the curbing of said alley abutting her lot, but which had been aportioned against all the property holders when the same was only chargeable against her; but he filed a corrected estimate apportioning the expense of said improvement according to the city charter, and by this corrected estimate Mrs. Mackey should be made to pay $153.76, of which sum she had paid $41.39, leaving due $112.38, and for this sum he asked judgment, and the court on having rendered judgment fixing the amount against the property of appellant, adjudging a lien on appellant's lot for $112.38, with interest from the 12th day of November, 1889, and from this judgment appellant has prosecuted this appeal and asks a reversal.

Appellant contends that the entire proceeding by the city counsel to have said alley improved by the lot owners was void. We see no error in the proceeding by the city council in reference to the improvement of the alley. The proceedings were regular and in accordance to the provision of the city charter, and by the proceeding and improvement of said alley appellant's property was made liable for her proportion of the cost of said improvement, and created a lien on her lot in said block.

We are satisfied that the engineer of the city, whose duty it was to make the estimate and proportion the amount against the lots chargeable with the cost of the improvement of the alley, made a mistake in his estimate of the amount that should be charged as against appellant, and that the chancellor had, on the state of pleading in this case, the jurisdiction to make said correction and ascertain the true amount that should be paid by appellants and rightfully chargeable against her property, and we find no error in the judgment fixing the amount as against appellant at $153.76, and appellant has no cause to complain on the ground that her lot had been assessed too much. It was assessed much less than was its due proportion of the cost of said improvements, but her co-defendants do not complain of this action of the court. On the cross petition of appellants process was issued and duly executed on appellant on the — day of September, 18—, and by which summons she had notice of the proceeding, but we are of the opinion that the court erred to the prejudice of appellant in adjudging that she was liable to the payment of interest from November 12, 1889, the date of the original estimate, for which warrant had been issued and paid off.

The city council had undertaken by and through its proceeding to improve the alley on which appellant abutted, and there was nothing due from appellant until the same was ascertained and amount fixed and certified for payment to appellant, and when the city council fixed the amount she promptly paid it off. Then appellee commenced his proceedings in the circuit court against appellants to correct the estimate made by the city engineer against her property. She did not resist the proceeding to correct the assessment and permitted judgment against her by default. She had no legal notice that any additional demand was being made until she was served with process, which was done on the 18th day of September, 1892. We do not think there was any demand that she was required to pay until the rendition of the judgment correcting said estimates, and we are of opinion that the judgment rendered in this case should only bear interest from the date of its rendition, and for this error alone this cause is reversed and remanded for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

WESTERN DISTRICT WAREHOUSE CO. v. ROBERTSON, &C.

(Filed January 19, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Attachment—In this action the proof failed to sustain the defense that a settlement of the judgment against R. was made with appellant by B. & Co., under an agreement that appellant was not to proceed against the tobacco of R., which had been attached. The proof sustained the grounds of the attachment, and the action of the court dismissing the attachment was erroneous.

Greer & Reed for appellant.

Appeal from Calloway Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Guffy.

The appellant instituted this action in the Calloway Circuit Court seeking a judgment against the appellee, Robertson, for more than $500, and obtained a general attachment, which was levied upon two hogsheads of tobacco and —— pounds of loose tobacco. Appellees, Burnett & Co., executed bond and obtained possession of the tobacco, and were on their motion made parties to the suit. All of the appellees made defense.

The substance of the defense consisted in a denial of the indebtedness and the grounds of the attachment, and further alleged that a settlement was made with plaintiff, in which it was agreed that Burnett & Co. would and did pay plaintiff's claims, and that plaintiff undertook and promised to not molest Robertson's tobacco, purchased in 1892, and that the same was to be shipped to Burnett & Co., Robertson having prior to that time been buying tobacco to be shipped to appellant, and money furnished by appellant to him constituted the debt sued on.

The allegations of the appellees were denied by reply, and upon final hearing the court rendered judgment against Robertson for the debt claimed but dismissed the attachment, and adjudged that Burnett & Co. account to Robertson for the tobacco, and from that judgment this appeal is taken.

It seems to us that the appellees totally failed to prove the agreement alleged, and failed to show a settlement or payment to plaintiff. In fact Robertson finally admitted the justice of the demand sued for. We also think that the proof sustained the grounds of the attachment, and that it should have been sustained.

The judgment appealed from is, therefore, reversed and cause remanded, with directions to sustain the attachment and for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

FREY V. MATHIAS, BY, &C.

(Filed January 20, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Assault and battery—The facts in this action to recover damages for assault and battery are not such as would authorize the court to disturb the verdict of the jury on the ground that the verdict was against the weight of evidence; and the instructions given by the court to the jury state fairly the law of the case, and are not prejudicial to the legal rights of the appellant.

2. Burden of proof—The appellant, upon whom the burden of proof rested, having acquiesced in the ruling of the court that the burden was upon appellee and permitted the appellee, without objection, to first introduce his testimony, appellant waived his right to the concluding argument to the jury.

Jno. P. Norvell and Benj. H. Robinson for appellant.

Hanson Kennedy for appellees.

Appeal from Nicholas Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Burnam.

This action was instituted in the Nicholas Circuit Court by the appellee to recover damages in the sum of $1,000 from the appellant, John H. Frey, for having unlawfully assaulted, beat and bruised by striking him with his fist, choking him with his hand, and kicking him with his feet. A special and general demurrer was filed to the petition of the appellant and overruled, and the appellant filed his answer, in which he denied that he had unlawfully assaulted, beat or bruised appellee as charged in the petition, or that he had damaged him in the sum of $1,000, or any other sum, claiming that at the time and place mentioned in the petition the appellee had assaulted him with his hands, feet and fist, and that in necessary defense he struck the appellee with his open hand, and kicked and barely touched him with his foot, and doing no more damage and using no more force than was necessary in his self-defense to repel the assault made upon him by the appellee. By agreement the allegations of the answer were traversed of record, and a jury was empaneled who heard the evidence deduced by both sides, and returned a verdict in favor of the appellee in the sum of $100. Thereupon the appellant, John H. Frey, moved the court to set aside the verdict of the jury and the judgment of the court and grant him a new trial:

1st. Because the verdict is not sustained by the evidence and contrary to law.

2d. Because the court erred in instructing the jury.

3d. Because the court refused to grant the appellant, upon his motion, his right to conclude the argument to the jury, but permitted the attorney for the appellee to conclude the argument against the objections of appellant.

The facts in this case are not such as would authorize the court to disturb the verdict of the jury on the ground that same was against the weight of evidence.

The instructions given by the court to the jury are as follows: "If the jury believe, from all the evidence, that the defendant unlawfully assaulted, beat and bruised the plaintiff by striking him with his fist, choking him with his hand and kicking him with his feet, or either, if they believe from the evidence that he did strike or choke or kick plaintiff, then they will find for the plaintiff as indicated in instruction No. 2, unless they should find for the defendant as indicated in instruction No. 3."

The second instruction was as follows: "If the jury find for the plaintiff, as indicated in instruction No. 1, the criterion of recovery is such a one as will compensate the plaintiff for his physical and mental sufferings, or either, endured by plaintiff and caused by the assault of the defendant; and the jury may, in addition to this, give exemplary damages, not in all to exceed the sum of $1,000."

To the giving of these instructions the defendant objected, which objections were overruled. The defendant then moved the court to give to the jury this instruction: "The court instructs the jury, if they should believe from all the evidence and circumstances proven in the case that the plaintiff, Joseph Mathias, at the time of the assault complained of in the petition, had first assaulted the defendant with his hands, fist and feet, or either of them, and that in repelling said assault the defendant used such force and only such force as was necessary, or to him reasonably appeared to him to be necessary to be used, he had such right, and the jury should find for the defendant;" to which instruction the plaintiff excepted, which was overruled.

It seems to us that the instructions given by the court to the jury state fairly the law as it is, and are not prejudicial to the legal rights of appellant.

The main ground upon which appellant relies is that under the pleadings the burden of proof was upon him, as his answer was practically a plea of confession and avoidance, and that the court should have sustained his motion to allow him the concluding argument to the jury. The bill of exceptions shows that after a statement of the case by the parties hereto and an examination of the pleadings that the court held that the burden of proof was upon appellee, and to this ruling of the court appellee at the time objected and excepted, but the appellant offered no objection to said ruling, and by his silence presumably acquiesced in same.

In accordance with the ruling of the court the appellee introduced his proof, and the case proceeded in accordance with such ruling. It was held by the Superior Court, in the case of Cooper v. Toebe, 15 KY. LAW REP., 844, that where the party upon whom the burden of proof rests permits the other party, without objection, to first introduce his evidence, he waives his right to the concluding argument to the jury; and it seems to us that this rule of procedure is a salutary one, as it would be very unjust for a court to decide that the burden of proof was upon a litigant and require him to make out his case, and then, after the proof was all in, to change the ruling and give the concluding argument to the other party.

The appellant, by his silence, acquiesced in the justness of the ruling adopted by the court, and he should not thereafter be allowed to take advantage of an error by which he had prospered.

From a careful consideration of all the questions presented in this case, we conclude that the judgment should be affirmed.

BRECKINRIDGE & PINEVILLE SYNDICATE, LIMITED v. MURPHY.

(Filed January 20, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Master and servant—The appellee in this case, who was an experienced miner himself, having, after calling the attention of the foreman of the mine to a dangerous place in the roof, continued to work under the dangerous part, he is not entitled to recover damages for an injury received by the falling of slate from the roof in the absence of an allegation that the foreman promised to make the roof safe, the appellee being as capable of ascertaining the danger as the foreman.

D. B. Logan for appellant.

S. F. Johnson for appellee.

Appeal from Bell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the Court by Judge Hazelrigg.

The appellee was seriously and permanently injured by the fall of slate from the roof of an entry where he was digging coal when in the employ of the appellant, and, in his suit for damages by reason of the alleged negligence of the appellant in failing to inspect and keep the roof in a reasonably safe condition, recovered the sum of $2,000.

The proof conduced to show that the appellee—himself an experienced miner and former "boss" in several coal mines—dug away the coal from under the roof which afterwards fell on him, and discovering the dangerous condition thereof called the attention of the foreman, Hall, thereto, and applied to him to let him (appellee) "shoot down" the roof, and thus make it secure by knocking down the dangerous slate.

Hall thereupon sounded the roof with a pick, and according to the testimony of appellee assured him that it was safe and directed him to go on with his work. Appellee further stated that after so sounding the roof, which he saw and heard Hall do, neither of them could tell whether there was danger or not.

Hall denied these statements, and testified that he told appellee the roof in that mine was a bad one, with "bell tops" in places which he would have to watch. There was other testimony more or less affecting the issues, but this is sufficient to test the correctness of the instructions complained of.

In No. 1 the question of whether or not the duty devolved on appellant to keep the roof in repair was submitted to the jury, and we think properly so, because the appellant had pleaded that under the contract with appellee this duty devolved on him.

In No. 2 the jury were told that they might find for the plaintiff, although he knew the roof was unsafe and dangerous, if the foreman also knew it or had been so notified and had assured plaintiff that the roof was safe and directed him to proceed with the work.

This instruction permits a recovery upon the assurance of the foreman that the roof was safe, when the plaintiff, with the same opportunity and means of information, knew better and knew it was unsafe and dangerous.

This was followed up by instruction No. 4, which told the jury that if under the plaintiff's contract of employment to drive the entry the defendant company was to inspect the roof and keep it reasonably safe, "then it was no part of plaintiff's employment to look after the safety of said roof, and that if he was injured while so employed and at his post of duty by reason of defendant's neglect to inspect and keep same in a reasonably safe condition" they were to find for the plaintiff.

These instructions permit the plaintiff to shut his eyes to the danger about him because not employed to keep them open, and though he knew of the danger he is permitted to rely entirely on the inspection of the foreman and the assurance of one who could know and did know no more than the appellee.

There are cases where the employe is entitled to rely entirely on the assurances of his employer. A workman is not required to test the safety and soundness of the materials or appliances furnished him, but if he knows of their weakness or unfitness and that their use is dangerous, and nevertheless uses them, he does so at his own risk, unless he is induced to continue work upon the promise of the employer to remedy the evil, and then he may continue his work only for a reasonable time pending the repairs.

It is possible that under the proof in this case a promise may be inferred to make the roof safe, but it is not so averred in the pleadings, or relied on as inducing a continuation of the appellant's work in his dangerous position.

Upon the state of the pleadings the request for a peremptory instruction should have prevailed, and the judgment is reversed for proceedings consistent therewith.

RHODES V. RHODES, &C.

(Filed January 20, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Division of lands between children by father—Where the father divided the bulk of his real estate between his four children, intending to make an equal division, and a tract of land belonging to his wife was included in the division although she did not join in the deed, each child received one-fourth of the estimated value of the land of the wife in the division and settlement, and after the death of the parents the child to which the particular tract was conveyed will not be compelled by the court to divide it with the other children.

2. Moreover by a voluntary division by the children of the residue of the lands of their father after the death of their parents the former adjustment was ratified and all chance of re-imbursing him, to whom the tract belonging to the grantor's wife had been conveyed, in the event that tract should be taken from him, was destroyed. Hence, the original distribution will not be disturbed.

3. One of the children, who inherited from the father one-fourth of the land undisposed of by the old deed, can not evict his brother from the tract belonging to the wife of the grantor, and which was included in the division without offering to make good out of the estate which he received the father's warranty of title.

Robt. Crenshaw and W. G. Bullitt for appellant.

Appeal from Trigg Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hazelrigg.

In March, 1871, which was a short time before his death, Ephraim Rhodes made deeds of gift to his four children of several hundred acres of land each. In that to his son, T. W. Rhodes, however, was a tract of eighty acres, which the grantor's wife had inherited from her father in 1867, and of which the husband had taken possession, and had used as he did his own adjoining lands. The wife did not unite in any of these deeds. The children took possession of their several tracts, though, on the home tract, which included the eighty acres named, the grantor and wife reserved the right to reside during their lives. The grantee, T. W. Rhodes, built a small house in the yard, however, and the proceeds of the farm appear to have been divided about equally with his mother. The father died shortly after making the deeds, leaving some seven hundred acres of land not embraced in the deeds to his children. This land was presumably used for the widow's benefit until her death in 1877, when the children divided it into four equal shares, and made to each other deeds of partition. In July, 1893, this suit was brought by two of the children against their brother and the child of a deceased brother for a division of the eighty-acre tract among the four.

The defense is that by the deeds of 1871, by which the father conveyed the bulk of his real estate to his children, the grantor intended to make, and did make, an equal gift or advancement to each, and as the eighty acres went into the whole to be divided, and was treated as part of the lands of the father, the mother consenting, each of the four got more land than he or she would otherwise have gotten, the effect being that each child got its share of the eighty acres, though it was in fact laid off to but one of them; and that, in pursuance of this arrangement and common understanding, each child entered upon his land, and has been in the continuous, adverse possession of it ever since.

Upon the proof the chancellor upheld this defense and dismissed the petition. One of the plaintiffs only appeals.

Manifestly the deed of the father did not invest the son, T. W., with title to the eighty acres, and on the death of the mother, in 1877, it passed to the four children. Upon this state of case a sale of his interest to a bona fide purchaser, by any of the heirs would have passed the title. But this contest is among the heirs, and, all being before the court, the chancellor was authorized to settle the issues upon equitable principles; and this, we think, he has done. It is wellnigh conclusive that the father intended an equal division by the deeds of 1871. If so, no proof was needed of the equal value of the respective parcels conveyed. The father's estimate is conclusive; but the proof, while somewhat conflicting in this particular, conduces to show substantial equality. It is conceded or clearly shown that the eighty acres was taken into the estimate and treated as part of the father's lands, and entered into the division, though no agreement is shown with the mother. It follows that in this division and advancement of lands each child got one-fourth of the estimated value of this eighty acres, and entered upon and has since enjoyed his or her respective share. But, some of them, including appellant, were minors at the time of these deeds, and we will suppose the appellant was not concluded by the acceptance of the lands and participation in the family settlement. Still, when he became of age in about 1878, he can not be allowed to claim the benefit of the division, which gave him in effect a share in the eighty acres, and also the land itself. Moreover, it would seem of the greatest importance to all that when the remaining lands of the father came to be divided and deeds of partition to be made, if the eighty acres were to be taken away from T. W. the fact should have been disclosed while there were lands out of which the equality could still have been preserved. An equal division was voluntarily made, however, and the former adjustment thereby ratified, thus destroying the last chance for re-imbursing T. W. in the event of his losing the eighty acres conveyed to him by the old deed. Appellant, at least, seems to have none of the land of the estate now in his possession.

Moreover, there would seem to be another insuperable obstruction in the way of appellant's recovery. He inherited from his father one-fourth of the 700 acres remaining undisposed of by the old deeds. Can he now evict his father's grantee under the deed of 1871 without at least offering to make good, out of the estate he received, his father's warranty of title? We think not.

The appellee has filed no brief, and we do not know upon which of these grounds the chancellor denied the relief sought. Either we have mentioned is sufficient.

Judgment affirmed.

TRIGG, &C. v BALL, &C.

(Filed January 21, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Preference of creditors—In this action to enforce a mortgage lien, in which various creditors of the mortgagor filed their petition seeking to have the mortgage declared to operate as an assignment under the statute upon the ground that it was executed with the design to prefer the mortgagee to the exclusion of other creditors, the evidence was sufficient to authorize the chancellor's judgment declaring the mortgage to operate as an assignment for the benefit of all creditors whose debts existed prior to its execution.

Harry Kennedy for appellants.

John P. Norvell and Hanson Kennedy for appellees.

Appeal from Nicholas Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Guffy.

It appears from this record that on October 11, 1892, C. S. Ball executed to the appellants his note for $823, due in one day, and to secure the same mortgaged to appellants a stock of goods, and on November 1, 1892, appellants brought suit on the note and for the enforcement of their mortgage lien in the Nicholas Circuit Court.

At the February term, 1893, of the said court various creditors of said C. S. Ball filed their petitions in said action seeking to have said mortgage adjudged to operate as an assignment of all said Ball's property for the benefit of his creditors. The allegations of the petition showing such to be the fact were denied by appellants. Afterwards the appellee, C. S. Smart, administrator of Gertrude Smart, also filed his petition asking the same relief and claiming that the suit or proceedings instituted by the other creditors enured to his benefit, he having a judgment against said C. S. Ball for $5,000, rendered on a suit instituted about eleven days after the execution of the mortgage, but the cause of action had accrued before the mortgage was executed. This pleading was also controverted, at least his right to the benefits of the pleadings of the other creditors.

It further appeared that appellants, prior to the execution of the mortgage, were bound as sureties of C. S. Ball for the amount of the note, and had taken up the notes signed by them as surety for Ball, and given their own note in lieu thereof, and that the note and mortgage in contest was executed to secure them.

The court below adjudged that the said mortgage was made with the design to prefer appellants to the exclusion of other creditors of said Ball, and that it operated as an assignment of his property for the benefit of all his creditors, whose debts existed prior to the execution of the mortgage, and that the claim of G. K. Smart as administrator of Gertrude Smart, was a valid, subsisting claim, and in existence when the mortgage was made. Proper orders were also made for the settlement of the estate, and from that judgment appellants have appealed and superseded the same. We deem it unnecessary to recite the evidence introduced.

Suffice it to say that the testimony abundantly sustains the judgment of the court below, and the judgment appealed from is, therefore, affirmed.

HAMILTON V. WILLIAMS.

PARK V. HAMILTON.

(Filed January 22, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Note—Principal and surety—Where upon the renewal of a note the name of a surety thereon, who was unlearned and could neither read nor write, was signed so as to make him a principal instead of a surety, he had the right in an action on the note to show that the understanding was that he was to be bound only as surety. And if his name was placed on the note by the payee with the fraudulent intention of making him a principal when he only agreed to become a surety, there can be no recovery against him on the note.

2. Appeal—There being no judgment in favor of the appellant surety against his co-surety P., nor any relief asked as against each other in their pleadings, the appeal of the surety P. must be dismissed.

Grant E. Lilly for appellant and appellee Hamilton.

White & Smith for Williams.

Riddell & Riddell for Park.

Appeal from Estill Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

This suit was on a writing as follows, to wit: "One day after date we, Clint Hamilton and Granville Hamilton, promise to pay to W. T. B. Williams two hundred and fifty dollars, borrowed money, bearing eight per cent from date until paid. This, the 18th day of December, 1893.

CLINT HAMILTON,
his
"GRANVILLE X HAMILTON,
mark
"W. W. PARK, Security."

Clint Hamilton, Granville Hamilton and W. W. Park were made defendants. Granville Hamilton filed an answer, and among other things he alleged that the plaintiff, Williams, had a note to which his name was signed as surety by another without any written authority, etc., on which he was not bound, and that the defendant, W. W. Park's, name also appeared as surety thereon; that he agreed to renew this note and sign his name as surety; that Williams and Park, with the fraudulent understanding, intent and purpose to make him responsible for the entire amount of the note prepared—the note in suit—and had it signed in its present form, thus making him appear as a principal instead of a surety thereto; that he is unlearned —can neither read nor write—and that the note was to be signed as surety, together with Park, for Clint Hamilton.

To this answer a demurrer was overruled. Subsequently the court sustained a notice to render judgment on the pleadings and gave judgment against the defendants for the amount of the note and interest.

The court must have reached the conclusion that the answer did not present a good defense. If the facts be as appear in the answer there could be no recovery on the note against Granville Hamilton. In a renewal of the first note he had the right to maintain his status as surety for Clint Hamilton, together with Park. While the note imports that he was principal he had a right to show that the understanding was that he was only to be bound as surety.

If the facts are as alleged in the answer there can be no recovery on the note aganst Granville Hamilton. Park filed an answer in which he alleged he signed the note as surety for both of the Hamiltons, and that if Hamilton was released he was not bound thereon. Clint Hamilton is insolvent. As Hamilton did not recover a judgment against Park, nor did the respective pleadings of Park and Granville Hamilton ask any relief against each other, and, as there is no judgment in favor of Granville Hamilton against Park, the motion to dismiss the appeal of Park against Granville Hamilton must be sustained.

The judgment on the appeal of Granville Hamilton is reversed, and also it is reversed on the appeal of W. W. Park as to Williams.

Further proceeding must conform to this opinion.

The Kentucky Law Reporter.

EDITOR:
WALTER G. CHAPMAN, ... Frankfort, Ky.

VOL. 18. MAY 15, 1897. No. 22

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

SOUTH COVINGTON & CINCINNATI STREET RY. CO. v. ENSLEN.

(Filed January 22, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Contributory negligence—When the driver of a horse and wagon, with knowledge of the approach of a car, attempted to cross the track of a street railway, believing he could do so in safety, he can not complain of the want of a signal; and, as his contributory negligence is to be imputed to the owner of the horse and wagon, the court in this action by the owner to recover of the street railway company for the injury to his property should have been given a peremptory instruction to find for defendant.

Simrall & Galvin for appellant.

E. H. Kilpatrick and E. W. Hawkins, sr., for appellee.

Appeal from Campbell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hazelrigg.

Appellee's meat shop is situated on the north side of Eleventh street, in Newport, between Patterson and Isabella, Eleventh running east and west, and the others north and south. Eleventh is traversed by two tracks of the appellant's electric railway.

On the morning of November 1, 1893, the horse and wagon of the appellee were standing in front of his shop with the head of the horse turned toward the west or Patterson street, that street being 95 feet away.

The regular driver of the team came out of the shop, and, as he took his seat on the wagon, saw coming rapidly from the east and on the track next to him the electric cars of the appellant, but, as he testifies, believing he had time to reach Patterson street and turn south out that street and across the railway track, he started his horse in a trot for that purpose, driving, however, on the right and entirely clear of the track.

From the time he started he did not look back or make any effort as he turned his horse upon the track and drove on it to see the approaching car, though his view was unobstructed, and though by looking, as he admits, he would have seen the car. He had gotten nearly across when the hind wheels of the wagon were struck by the car, the collision damaging both the wagon and the horse. Upon the trial of this action, brought by the owner of the property, for its damage, the verdict was for the plaintiff.

The distance at which the car followed the team from its starting point at the shop to the crossing is estimated by the different witnesses to have been from 30 to 100 feet, according, as we suppose, to the time when the particular witness testifying observed the two moving objects.

As is common in such cases, the proof is conflicting as to whether those operating the car sounded the usual alarm for the crossing, though after the driver turned to the crossing and showed an intention to go on the track there is no proof conducing to show any negligence on the part of the motorman or want of effort to stop the car and avert the collision.

In support of the finding of the jury we shall assume that no signals were given for the crossing. So that, conceding the negligence of those managing the car in this particular, the sole question is, was there such contributory negligence on the part of the driver of the team, which is to be imputed, of course, to the owner, as that but for it the accident would not have happened, and should, on that account, the peremptory instruction asked for by the company, have been given? We are clearly of the opinion that the request ought to have been granted.

The only need for signals in the operation of the railway is to give warning of the approach of the car, and if the driver of a vehicle already knows this he can not complain of the want of a signal; it could tell him nothing of which he was ignorant. Here the driver testifies that knowing of the rapid approach of the car behind him he yet trusted to the belief he started out with that he could make the crossing safely and, therefore, did not use any precaution whatever in driving on to the track. He did not look but drove blindly in front of the moving and dangerous car. Had he from the start been driving on the track it would have been the duty of the motorman to have seen him, and, if necessary in order to avoid the collision, to have checked or even stopped his car. As it was the operator was not required to anticipate that the driver would suddenly quit his place of safety and take up one of danger, nor would a prudent driver have done so. This one, impressed with his original belief, miscalculated the chances, and the speculation miscarried by a few seconds.

Judgment reversed for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

LONG V. BANK OF COMMERCE.

(Filed January 23, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Banks—Credit of collection to wrong person -Where the assignee of a draft inclosed it to a bank with direction to "collect and credit," the bank was guilty of negligence in crediting the proceeds of the draft to the assignors instead of to the assignee, and the assignee is entitled to recover of the bank the amount of the draft. And it was error in this action brought by him, therefore, to credit the bank with the amount of a check drawn by the assignors in plaintiff's favor, and which was paid by the bank.

Grubbs & Moraney for appellant.

Dodd & Dodd for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas division.

Opinion of the court by Judge White.

Long sued the Bank of Commerce in the Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas division, to recover of said bank the amount of a draft of $309.81, which had been drawn by J. L. Cochran & Co. in their own favor on Rodgers & Co. of Peoria, Illinois, at thirty days, which was endorsed by J. L. Cochran & Co. to John S. Long, appellant, who placed the same in said bank for collection. Said bank collected said draft, but failed and refused to pay the same to appellant or place it to his credit in said bank, and for which sum he asks a judgment.

The bank answered the petition and admitted it had collected the draft, but alleged that it had by mistake placed the proceeds of said draft to the credit of J. L. Cochran & Co., and averring that Long was a partner of J. L. Cochran & Co. in the lumber business in the city of Louisville, and had been engaged as such partner for some time, and that said J. L. Cochran & Co. had a deposit account, and had had with said Bank of Commerce for considerable time before the collection of said draft, and that plaintiff Long also had a deposit account with said bank, opened a short time before the collection of said draft, and the bookkeeper of said bank, supposing the draft was that of Cockran & Co., on the collection of said draft placed the same to the credit of J. L. Cochran & Co. After the deposit of the proceeds of said draft to the credit of J. L. Cochran & Co. they drew their check on said bank for $275 in favor of said Long, which the bank paid to Long before the discovery of said mistake, the bank claiming the said draft was the proceeds of lumber sold by said firm, and that the partnership had not been settled, and that the said partners yet owned lumber and effects, and he had received the partnership effects and could not complain. Plaintiff replied to this answer and denied that he was a partner of said Cochran & Co. or that he had any interest in the firm of J. L. Cochran & Co., or that he had ever been a partner of said J. L. Cochran & Co. in said firm.

Upon the issues being formed the parties waived a trial by jury and submitted the law and facts to the court, and the court rendered judgment for defendant as to the claim of $275 and for plaintiff for $34, and adjudged that plaintiff Long should pay the entire cost of the action, and plaintiff's motion for a new trial having been overruled he has appealed to this court and asks a reversal of the judgment.

The facts as shown by the testimony in the case are as follows: J. L. Cochran, desirous to purchase two certain lots of lumber, in the Paul Lumber Yard, and on board of Louisville & Nashville cars for shipment, and not having the money to make the purchase, he applied to plaintiff to borrow it, whereupon Long furnished Cochran the money with which to make the purchase of said lumber, amounting to about $2,300, for which sum Cochran executed to Long his receipt, agreeing that Long should share in the profits made by the sale of the lumber. This contract is in writing and filed in the records in this case. A part of this lumber was sold and a draft was drawn in payment of the same, which draft was endorsed by Cochran & Co. to plaintiff Long and forwarded to him at Chicago, Illinois, who by letter sent the same to the Bank of Commerce for collection, enclosed in the following letter:

"CHICAGO, July 24, 1893.

"Bank of Commerce, Louisville:

"Please find John L. Cochran & Co. check on your bank for $500, which please place to my credit; also J. L. Cochran & Co. draft, 30 days after date, July 5th, on Rodgers & Co., Peoria, Illinois, for $309.81, which please collect and credit.

"Very truly yours,

"JOHN S. LONG."

The court below in its findings seems to put stress on the wording of the letter of Long to the bank in which he sent the draft to the bank for collection as being indefinite, and for that reason says that it can hardly be said that the bank was guilty of negligence in crediting the account of Cochran & Co. with the collection. If the draft had not been assigned to Long by Cochran & Co. then there might be some doubt about the instructions given in Long's letter, the draft having been assigned to Long. When he says please collect and credit clearly meant to credit Long, the assignee of said draft. In reference to Long's letter there is no complaint made by the pleading or evidence that the mistake was caused by the misunderstanding of the bank as to the instructions of Long. The court further says, in his finding, in view of the want of certainty in Long's instructions to the bank as to how the collections should be credited, it is not clear that he can complain at all, and especially is this true when there has been no settlement of the partnership venture between himself and Cochran & Co.; but giving him the benefit of any doubt that may exist in this respect he will be awarded judgment for the difference between $275 which he has received and $309.81, the amount of the draft, viz, $34.81, and it is so ordered.

We can not concur with this reasoning of the judge of the lower court, and upon carefully examining the evidence in the whole case we fail to find sufficient evidence to support the judgment, and are of opinion the court erred in refusing appellant a new trial.

Wherefore, the judgment of the lower court is reversed and remanded, with direction to grant appellant a new trial in conformity with this opinion.

CITY OF LEBANON V. BEVILL.

(Filed January 23, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Municipal taxation—A lot of four acres brought into the limits of a town by an extension of the boundary, and which receives at least a portion of the benefits of the municipal government and is essentially town and not farm property, is subject to taxation for municipal purposes.

H. W. Rives for appellant.

W. J. Lisle for appellee.

Appeal from Marion Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge DuRelle.

By act of the Legislature, approved March 20, 1890 (Acts 1889-90, volume 1, page 738), the limits of the city of Lebanon were extended in every direction from the courthouse from half to three-quarters of a mile. Prior to this legislative extension of the city limits in May, 1888, the town of Lebanon had voted a subscription of $60,000 in aid of a corporation called the Lebanon Water Works Company, the city to take stock of that par value in the company, and pay for it in town bonds as authorized by act of March 6, 1884 (Acts 1885, volume 6, page 54).

The house and land now owned by appellee were not included in the former limits of Lebanon, but were included in the limits as extended in 1890. The appellee did not live within the city limits at the time of the vote for the waterworks bonds, nor at the time the city boundary was extended, and had nothing to do with the voting of the bonds or the extension of the city limits, but purchased the property now owned by him, subsequently to that extension, from one Boldrick, who owned a tract of land adjoining the city limits, and had divided it into town lots for sale as city lots, and had dedicated a street known as Market street (extending from a street called High street within the then city limits), upon which appellee's lot abuts; and, according to appellee's own testimony, this street was referred to in the deed to him from Boldrick, had been extended at the time of his purchase as far as the line of his lot, and has since been extended along the front thereof.

Appellee brought this suit enjoining the collection of municipal taxes by the city of Lebanon assessed against his real estate in said city and the personalty thereon. The trial court perpetuated the injunction, and the city has appealed to this court.

The grounds alleged for the injunction were, in effect, that his lot was used for farming and grazing purposes, and derived no advantage whatever from the remote and inaccessible city government; that it had never been divided into town lots, or in any way devoted to town purposes; that the tax levy upon his property was void; that the greater part of said taxes was to pay interest on the bonds issued in aid of the waterworks, and that the city tax collector was threatening to levy on and sell appellee's property to enforce the collection of the tax.

It appears, from the deposition of appellee himself, that his lot included a little over four acres; that it was part of a lot of some seven acres bought by Boldrick, who divided it into three lots, building houses on the other lots, and selling the four-acre lot to appellee; that there are six houses on the extension of Market street from High street, the nearest being about fifty feet from appellee's house, and that his principal business has been that of a tailor, which he has carried on on Market street, in the city of Lebanon, since his purchase from Boldrick.

Appellee has a garden on his property for family purposes, but the remainder of the four acres of land is not in a condition to be used profitably as a market garden or farm, owing to the poorness of the land.

This case seems to us to come within the rule laid down in Elkton v. Gill, 94 Ky., 138; Cheany v. Hooser, 9 B. M., 330; Matthus v. Shields, 2 Met., 553. In the first-named case this court held: "The general power of the Legislature to extend the limits of a city or town, whereby municipal taxation is imposed upon property hitherto free of it, can not, in view of repeated decisions of this court, be now disputed. And it is only when that power is so exercised as to involve violation of the clause of the Constitution prohibiting taking of private property for public use without just compensation courts will interpose. But the protection afforded to, and advantages received by, the citizens from a municipal government are, in the meaning of the Constitution, just compensation for taxation imposed in order to maintain it. And local taxation authorized by law can not be deemed taking private property without just compensation, unless it is palpable that persons or their property are subjected to such burthen for benefit of others for purposes in which they have no interest, and to which they are, therefore, not justly bound to contribute. Cheany v. Hooser, 9 B. M., 330; Matthus v. Shields, 2 Met., 553. Whether the benefit and advantages derived from a municipal government are, in a given case, adequate compensation for local taxation imposed is not the province of courts to decide, legislative determination of that matter being conclusive. Cheany v. Hooser; Swift v. City of Newport, 9 Bush, 39. For, as said in the first named case, the limit of legislative discretion in regard thereto 'can only consist in the discrimination to be made between what may, with reasonable plausibility, be called a tax, and for which it may be assumed that the objects of the taxation are regarded by the legislature as forming a just compensation, and that which is palpably not a tax, but is under the form of a tax, or in some other form, the taking of private property without just compensation.'"

We think it perfectly apparent that appellee used his property as a town lot; that it received, at least, a portion of the benefits of the municipal government, and that it was essentially town and not farm property, and was so situated as to afford ground for municipal control.

No case has been made out by appellee which can authorize the courts to overrule the legislative discretion in extending the boundary. "Courts are authorized to interfere in such cases only when the burden, though called so, is palpably not a tax, but is under the form of a tax, the taking of private property for use of others, or for the public, without compensation." (Henderson Bridge Co. v. City of Henderson, ante, 417–421.)

And in Briggs v. Town of Russellville (ante, 389), it was held that agricultural and similar lands brought within the corporate limits of a town by the extension of such limits, and receiving the benefits coincident with municipal government, are subject to taxation for municipal purposes, although not strictly urban property, in that the lands are not divided into blocks and lots.

We think it unnecessary to refer to other authorities.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to dismiss the plaintiff's petition.

WATKINS' ADM'R V. AHRENS & OTT MFG. CO.

(Filed January 27, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Continuance—The court erred in refusing a continuance or postponement asked by plaintiff, it appearing that one of her two attorneys was then engaged in the trial of a case in another court, and that it was necessary for the other on that day to argue in the Federal Court a case involving large interests.

R. C. Davis and Matt O'Doherty for appellant.

Randolph H. Blain for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Guffy.

This appeal is prosecuted to reverse a judgment of nonsuit rendered against the appellant in her suit against the appellee.

After there had been several continuances or postponements of the case it was set down for trial for April 17, 1894, but not called until the 18th, at which time it appears that Mr. Davis, one of appellant's attorneys, was engaged in the trial of a cause in the county court, which trial had been commenced some days before that time.

It was also claimed that Mr. O'Doherty, appellant's other attorney, then in court, had to go and attend the trial of a cause in the Federal Court, in which a very large sum of money was involved, and a number of parties in interest litigating, it being an equity suit pending on exceptions to report of commissioner, and to be argued that day. Appellant asked for a continuance of her suit, and the motion was overruled and the judgment aforesaid entered and cause dismissed without prejudice. Several affidavits were filed in support of the motion for a new trial and some in opposition thereto, which motion was overruled.

It is claimed by appellee that O'Doherty first said he would try after the motion for continuance had been overruled, and after reflection refused to try.

It is also claimed by appellee that all the former continuances had been at the instance of appellant, but several of the orders of court do not show that the continuances were at appellant's instance. It is also claimed that O'Doherty did not argue the case in the Federal Court until the 19th.

Appellant's claim that she was ready to try the case on the 17th, but at the request of appellee's attorney she had agreed to let the case go over if it was called the 17th, but that in fact it was not reached for trial.

It seems that the judgment was in effect a final determination of appellant's cause of action, as it was, after dismissal, barred by the statute of limitation. The trial court should be allowed a reasonable if not wide discretion in granting or refusing continuances. But in this case it seems that appellant was not in fault, and the fact that her attorneys could not be present and conduct her case seems to have been a casualty or misfortune that she could not with reasonable diligence have foreseen or guarded against. The cause might have been set down for another day not far distant, and the appellant ruled to the utmost diligence. Taking the record before us it seems to us that the court erred in dismissing the action.

The judgment is, therefore, reversed and cause remanded, with directions to award appellant a new trial and for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

WILSON V. SMITH.

(Filed January 27, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Wrongful suing out of attachment—In this action to recover damages for the wrongful suing out of an attachment, the petition may have been defective in so far as it was sought to recover an attorney's fee in that it was not alleged specifically what attorneys's fee had been paid or agreed to be paid for defending the attachment; but the defect, if any, was cured by the answer and verdict.

2. The court should have confined plaintiff to proof of the attorney's fees paid or agreed to be paid "for the defense of the attachment," and should have so instructed the jury.

3. While the proof may have been hardly sufficient to authorize the amount allowed as an attorney's fee, yet, as it would have authorized a much larger verdict for the attached property, defendant was not prejudiced.

4. The defendant having appealed from the judgment in the attachment suit, which was affirmed, he can not now question the jurisdiction of the special judge who rendered that judgment.

Wilson & Rawlings for appellant.

John T. Hays and J. H. Tinsley for appellee.

Appeal from Knox Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Guffy.

The appellee, Smith, recovered a judgment in the Knox Circuit Court against the appellant for $180, with interest and cost, and, appellant's motion for a new trial having been overruled, he prosecutes this appeal. The suit was to recover damages for the wrongful suing out of an attachment by the appellant.

It is insisted by appellant that the petition was insufficient, and did not authorize the evidence to be admitted that was admitted, nor authorize the court to give the instruction which was given, it being nowhere specifically alleged in the petition what attorney fee had been paid or agreed to be paid for defending the attachment. It may be that the petition as to that claim was defective, but the defect, if any, was cured by the answer, verdict and judgment. The court should have confined the plaintiff to proof of the attorney fees paid or promised for the defense of the attachment, and should have so instructed the jury. It is, however, by no means certain that the instruction given was not intended to restrict appellee's recovery for attorney fees to the amount paid or to be paid for defending the attachment. The evidence conduced to show that the attached property was worth $200, or near that amount. The jury allowed $120, with interest, from August, 1884, and $60 attorney fee.

It may be that the proof was hardly sufficient to authorize the $60 for attorney fee, but it would have authorized a much larger verdict for the attached property. It seems to us that no error to the prejudice of the substantial rights of the appellant occurred on the trial.

The court properly refused to allow the amended answer to be filed. It did not show that any objection was made at the time to the special judge, and appellant prosecuted an appeal from the judgment and the same was affirmed; hence, he could not be heard in this case to impeach or attack the judgment rendered by the special judge in the suit of Wilson v. Smith, etc.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed with damages.

EILKE, &C. v. MCGRATH.

(Filed January 28, 1897.)

Sale of liquor to inebriate—Under the act of March 6, 1878 (General Statutes, page 462), a right of action in favor of the wife of an inebriate, on account of a sale of liquor to her husband, existed only against a "licensed" liquor dealer, and only on account of a sale made after written notice served upon him not to make such sale. Notice served upon his employe was not sufficient to give a right of action against either him or the employe on account of a sale made by the latter.

O'Neal, Phelps, Pryor & Silligman and Phelps & Thum for appellants.

Pirtle & Trabue and A. C. Rucker for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

Section 2, act March 6, 1878 (General Statutes, page 462), provides that it shall not be lawful for any person having a license to sell spirituous, vinous or malt liquors by the drink or otherwise to sell, give or loan any of such liquors or the mixture of either knowingly to any person who is an inebriate or in the habit of becoming intoxicated or drunk by the use of any of such liquors, or to suffer or permit any such person to drink any of such liquors or the mixture of either in his barroom, saloon, or in or upon any tenement or premises in his possession or under his control. The one guilty of such offense is subject to a fine of $50.

Section 3 of same act (General Statutes, page 462), provides that in addition to such fine the person who shall violate any of the provisions of the second section of the act shall, together with his sureties on his bond, be liable to a civil action for damages by the wife, etc., of such inebriate; "provided, however, that the person so selling shall not be liable in civil actions to the wife, father or other relation unless written notice forbidding such sale has been given the person so selling prior to the offense complained of."

This action was brought by the appellee, wife of Thomas McGrath, under section 3 supra, against Wm. C. Eilke, sr., and Wm. C. Eilke, jr. The appellant, Wm. C. Eilke, jr., had a license to retail liquors in South Louisville, and Wm. C. Eilke, sr., father of Wm. C. Eilke, jr., assisted in the sale of the liquors, and some of the testimony tending to prove that he devoted a considerable portion of his time to the business. The testimony offered by the defendants tended to prove that the father only attended to the business during the temporary absence of the son.

There was no evidence tending to show, nor is it claimed that a notice was served by Mrs. McGrath on Wm. C. Eilke, jr., forbidding him to sell or give liquors to Thomas McGrath. The proof establishes the fact that a written notice was served on Wm. C. Eilke, sr., by Mrs. McGrath, forbidding him to sell or give spirituous, vinous or malt liquors to her husband, who was an inebriate, and that after receiving the notice he sold and gave such liquors to the husband of appellee, and that her husband was frequently permitted to drink such liquors at the place in question.

The statute under consideration provides a penalty against a licensed liquor dealer for its violation and a civil remedy in addition thereto for certain relatives of the inebriate.

There is no evidence whatever tending to prove that William C. Eilke, sr., had a license to sell liquors. As there was no written notice served upon William C. Eilke, jr., the question is, was the service of the notice on Eilke, sr., equivolent to serving it on him? We are of the opinion that it is not. Before the cause of action could arise for selling the liquor it was necessary that the person "so selling"—the one licensed—should have received written notice for bidding such sale.

It means that the notice must be served on the one who is authorized to carry on the business; not his agents or employes who may assist in conducting it.

An entirely different question would be presented had the notice been served on William C. Eilke, jr., and afterwards he permitted his father to conduct his business and while doing so sold the liquors in disregard of the notice to McGrath.

The statute is highly penal in nature, and to enable one to maintain an action under it its requirements should be strictly pursued. In so far as the instructions which the court gave the jury are not in accord with the views herein expressed, they are erroneous.

The judgment is reversed, with directions that further proceedings conform to this opinion.

WRAY'S EX'TX, &C. V. CRAIG'S EX'OR.

(Filed January 29, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Interest—Judgment A note executed April 4, 1876, payable twelve months after date, and "bearing interest at 8 per cent.," bore that rate until maturity, and after that 6 per cent. And while it was error to make a judgment upon the note bearing 8 per cent. interest until October 1, 1890, the defendant was not prejudiced, as the judgment, in accordance with the endorsements on the note, was credited by "interest paid" to October 1, 1890. And as the several credits upon the note were merely of "interest paid" to a certain date it can not be inferred, in the absence of the pleading and proof to that effect, that the interest thus paid was at the rate of 8 per cent. Nor does the fact that an endorsement was made October 1, 1890, to the effect that thereafter the note should bear only 6 per cent., authorize the inference that interest had theretofore been paid at the rate of 8 per cent.

J. W. Alcorn and J. B. Paxton for appellants.

H. Helm for appellee.

Appeal from Lincoln Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Guffy.

The appellee instituted this action in the Lincoln Circuit Court against the appellants to recover judgment upon a note executed by appellee Barnes, and to enforce an alleged mortgage lien upon a tract of land. The other appellants were alleged to have some claims or interest in the land which was alleged to be inferior to that of appellee. The note sued on reads as follows:

"Twelve months after date we promise to pay R. G. Craig or order fifteen hundred dollars, bearing eight per cent. interest from date hereof, and this note is secured by a mortgage bearing even date herewith on one dwelling house and lot.

"Signed: GEO. O. BARNES;
"G. O. BARNES,
"Trustee for Jane S. Barnes;
"April 4, 1876. JANE S. BARNES."

The petition sets out the mortgage and says it is filed herewith, but it seems not to have been filed.

It is alleged in the petition that the obligors promised to pay said sum of $1,500 with 8 per cent. interest from date until paid, but it will be seen that the words "until paid" are not in the note. No answer was filed or defense made by any of the appellants. At the June term, 1894, the court below adjudged that appellee recover of appellant Barnes $1,500 with interest at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum from the 4th of April, 1876, until October 1, 1890, and after that date 6 per cent. per annum until paid, subject to numerous credits, which will be noticed hereafter, and also adjudged a sale of the land, it being alleged that it could not be divided without great detriment to its value, and adjudged that appellee's lien was superior to that of all the appellants. The land was sold and sale confirmed. In December, 1894, appellants took an appeal to this court.

The contention of appellants is that the judgment is erroneous because it allows 8 per cent. interest per annum from date of the note until October 1, 1890, when the endorsement was made that thereafter the note should only bear 6 per cent. interest. There is no question as to law governing such contracts. The note would bear 8 per cent. until maturity and after that 6 per cent. But it will be seen from the judgment and credits on the note that all the interest was credited up to October, 1890, besides sundry other credits, and by the terms of the judgment no interest could be counted on the note prior to October 1, 1890, and in addition thereto the various other credits allowed in the judgment prior or at the date of October, 1890, should be and we presume were deducted from the amount of the principal of the note, hence so far as this record shows no 8 per cent. interest nor any interest was in fact collected and could not be legally collected under the judgment.

It may be that 8 per cent. was in fact paid at each payment where the simple endorsement is made: Interest paid to such and such times. If such was the fact appellants should have pleaded that fact in the court below. The endorsement of October, 1890, that 6 per cent. only was to be paid after that date does not show that a greater rate had been paid therefor.

It may be conceded that it was error to render a judgment for 8 per cent. interest, but it is a well-settled rule of law that an erroneous judgment will not be reversed at the instance of a party not injured thereby or whose rights have not been prejudiced thereby.

Judgment affirmed.

DAVIDSON, &C. V. HAYDEN, &C.

(Filed January 30, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Indemnifying bond—The sureties in an indemnifying bond executed by the plaintiff in an execution can not escape liability to the officer to whom the bond was executed upon the ground that the claimants of the property did not claim an exclusive interest therein, but only a joint interest with the defendants in the execution, and that the officer should have returned the execution with the levy endorsed and not have sold the property.

2. The marshal of the town of Salem had the right to levy an execution issued by a justice of the peace upon personal property outside the corporate limits of the town. (Acts 1889-90, page 589.)

James & James and Bush & Worten for appellants.

Jno. K. Hendrick for appellees.

Appeal from Livingston Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

This action is on an indemnifying bond, executed by the appellants as the sureties of Ben. Shoecraft. An execution was issued by a justice of the peace of Livingston county on a judgment in favor of Ben. Shoecraft against J. H. Greenlee and J. A. Brasher. It was placed in the hands of the appellee, Hayden, marshal of the town of Salem, in Livingston county, for collection. He proceeded to levy it on property outside of the corporate limits of Salem, but in Livingston county. The plaintiff in the execution required that the marshal should sell the property under execution, and to indemnify him executed the indemnifying bond in suit. It turned out that the property sold under the execution was not subject to levy and sale under it, and those owning it brought suit against the appellee, and recovered damages for the wrongful seizure and sale of the property.

The return on the execution shows that the marshal levied it, not upon a joint interest or partnership property, but upon 4,000 pounds of tobacco belonging to John Brasher and Henry Greenlee, the defendants in the execution.

The plaintiff demanded a sale of the property, and, the marshal having a doubt whether it was subject to the execution, he required the indemnifying bond in suit. The conclusive presumption in this case is that the plaintiff in the execution denied that any one was the owner of or had any interest in the property levied on except the defendants in the execution; therefore, he gave the indemnifying bond, and required the marshal to sell the property levied upon. While the owners may have claimed a joint interest in it with the defendants in the execution, still the plaintiff denied such claim, and compelled the marshal to sell it by giving the indemnifying bond.

It can not now be said by the sureties on the bond that some one had or claimed a joint interest in the tobacco with the defendants in the execution, and that, therefore, the officer should have returned the execution with the levy indorsed and not have sold the tobacco. The officer could not have done this because the plaintiff in the execution required him to sell it all as the property of his debtors. The appellants enabled the plaintiff in the execution to enforce his demand on the officer by the execution of the bond, and thereby agreeing to "indemnify him against the damages which he may sustain in consequence of the seizure or sale of the property."

This action was brought to compel the appellants to perform their undertaking. The officer was damaged in consequence of the seizure and sale of the property, and the appellants should be required to pay it.

Upon the examination of section 7 of the new charter of the town of Salem (Acts 1889-90, page 589), we are of the opinon that the marshal had the right to collect the execution under which the sale was made and the consequent authority to take the indemnifying bond.

The judgment is affirmed.

WILSON v. DONALDSON.

(Filed January 30, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Surrender of note for forged renewal—Pleading—In an action upon a note which had been surrendered for a renewal note, which turned out to be a forgery as to defendant, the plaintiff having alleged, as it was necessary for him to do, that he believed in good faith when he accepted the new note that defendant had signed it, the defendant having, by a denial, put in issue this allegation, it was not improper to strike from the answer an affirmative allegation to the effect that plaintiff knew, at the time he accepted the new note, that defendant had not signed it.

2. Usury—The fact that the renewal note embraced usurious interest did not affect defendant's liability on the original note.

B. H. Robinson, John P. Norvell and Norvell & Clark for appellant.

Hanson Kennedy for appellee.

Appeal from Nicholas Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

This action was instituted against the appellant, G. W. Wilson, and W. A. Wilson on a note dated August 15, 1893, for $3,558.40, which purported to have been executed by them to appellee. The appellant pleaded non est factum. W. A. Wilson did not answer. Thereupon appellee filed an amended petition, in which he alleged that appellant, G. W. Wilson, and W. A. Wilson, in November, 1891, executed to him their promissory note for $2,726.74, payable twelve months from date, with 10 per cent. interest; that on the 15th day of August, 1893, the note remained unpaid; that on that day he had prepared the note for $3,558.40, except the two signatures thereto; that he sent it to W. A. Wilson with instructions for him and the appellant, G. W. Wilson, to sign and return it to him in renewal of the note for $2,726.74; that in a few days thereafter it was returned by W. A. Wilson by mail to him with the names of G. W. and W. A. Wilson signed thereto; that he accepted the note in renewal of the other note mentioned in ignorance of the fact that G. W. Wilson had not signed his name to it, and that when he so accepted the note he in good faith believed that G. W. Wilson had signed it and, therefore, surrendered the other note. The appellee asked to recover on the note so surrendered.

The appellant filed an answer in which he put in issue the facts alleged as to the manner and circumstances of the preparation, the sending and return of the note. It also denies that the appellee "accepted said note in ignorance of the fact that this defendant had not signed his name thereto or that plaintiff believed in good faith at the time he accepted it that this defendant had signed said alleged note or that the signature of G. W. Wilson to said alleged renewal note was his genuine signature."

These denials put in issue clearly and distinctly the question as to whether the appellee had accepted the note in ignorance of the fact that appellant had not signed his name to it, and also as to whether he had accepted it in good faith, believing that the appellant had signed it.

It was essential that the plaintiff should show these facts to enable him to recover on the original note. (Stratton v. McMakin, 84 Ky., 641; First National Bank of Covington v. Gains, 87 Ky., 597.)

After the appellant, G. W. Wilson, had made the denials in his answer, to which we have just alluded, he proceeded to allege that the appellee knew at the time he accepted the so-called renewal note that he (G. W. Wilson) had not signed it and that his signature thereto was not genuine, etc., and with this knowledge accepted it and surrendered the original note, and that the note contained usurious interest. The court sustained a motion to strike out this part of the answer. These allegations that appellee had knowledge at the time he accepted the renewal note and surrendered the original one were unnecessary, as the facts alleged, except as to the usurious interest, had already been put in issue by the answer.

The fact that the renewal note embraced usurious interest did not affect appellant's liability on the original note nor operate to prevent the appellee from maintaining his action thereon because he had been induced to surrender it by the misconduct of the co-obligor.

The court did not err in sustaining the motion to strike out the parts of the answer indicated. The jury found a verdict for the amount of the original note and legal interest and the court entered a judgment thereon.

There is no bill of exceptions in the record, therefore we can not consider anything except the question of the sufficiency of the pleadings. There is no suggestion made that the pleading are not sufficient to sustain the verdict, except counsel for appellant contend that the court erred in sustaining the motion to strike out the parts of the answer as heretofore stated.

It may well be doubted, where there is no bill of exceptions, in reviewing the question as to whether the pleadings will sustain the judgment, it is proper to review the action of the court on a motion to strike out part of a pleading of the unsuccessful party, but we have done so in this case, as it was the only error suggested, and being of the opinion that the court did not err in sustaining the motion the judgment is affirmed.

ASHCRAFT V. ELLIOTT.

(Filed January 30, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Officers—Liability for trespass—One who assumed to act as town marshal under a void appointment is liable to the owner for the seizure of personal property under an attachment; but, as he sold the property in obedience to a valid judgment of the court, he is liable only for his acts prior to the judgment.

2. Same—It was competent for defendant to show, in mitigation of damages, that plaintiff received the benefit of the sale of his property.

C. T. Atkinson for appellant.

John D. Wickliffe for appellee.

Appeal from Nelson Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hazelrigg.

One Gentry sued Elliott, the appellee, and caused an attachment to be levied on his mules. Appellant Ashcraft, as marshal of the town of New Hope, levied the attachment and took the mules in possession. At the trial of the cause judgment was rendered for Gentry for his debt, the attachment was sustained and the mules adjudged to be sold. The court in its judgment directed the marshal to execute the judgment of sale after the usual advertisement and on the usual credit. The marshal did so and Gentry became the purchaser. Subsequently the appellee prosecuted an appeal from the judgment, and on that trial judgment was rendered for Gentry's debt, but the attachment was discharged. Gentry then offered to surrender the mules, but an execution on his last judgment having come to the hands of the sheriff they were levied on and sold at public outcry to an outsider for the sum of $75.

This suit was then brought by appellee, the defendant in the attachment, against the marshal for the seizure and sale of his mules. He defended on the ground that he was authorized to make the seizure of the mules in virtue of the process coming to his hands as marshal, and that he made the sale at the direction of the court and in pursuance of its judgment. On the trial of the case it developed that the marshal had in fact no valid claim to that office, having been appointed by the trustees of the town in whom there was vested no sort of authority to make such appointment. The court thereupon confirmed the proof to the value of the mules and judgment resulted in plaintiff's favor for $125, which seems to have been their full value.

The proof offered by the defendant showing that the plaintiff had received the benefit of the sale of the mules under the execution against him was rejected. This was error, as it is well settled under such circumstances that "if the property has been sold and the proceeds applied to the payment of the plaintiff's debt, or otherwise to his use, these facts may be shown in mitigation of damages." (15 Am. & Eng. Ency., 688, and cases cited.)

But there is a more radical error in the rulings of the trial court. The appellant had pleaded that he had sold the mules in obedience to the judgment of the court and as appointed and directed to do, and offered to so prove by the judgment itself. This was refused him. It seems clear to us that as the court's commissioner in making the sale he was fully protected by the judgment, which was confessedly regular in all respects, and at that time unreversed or even appealed from.

This ruling of the court on the evidence—and the same view was carried into the instructions to the jury—held the appellant liable, not only for the original seizure, but for the sale in pursuance of a perfectly valid judgment. His liability in any event is limited to the damages, if any, caused the owner by being deprived of the use of his mules from the time they were first taken until they were placed in the hands of the appellant to be sold under the judgment of the court. After the rendition of the judgment the appellant is protected under it in all he did in pursuance of its mandate, and can not be treated as a trespasser, though the plaintiff in such cases may be held liable if it be finally determined that the attachment was wrongfully obtained.

The judgment is reversed for proceedings consistent herewith.

WALLACE V. MASON, &C.

(Filed January 30, 1897.)

1. Husband and wife—Fraudulent conveyance—To the extent that real estate conveyed to the wife of a debtor was paid for by her in work for the vendor, it can not be subjected by the husband's creditors upon the ground that the conveyance was fraudulent as to them.

2. Homestead—To the extent that a homestead was paid for with exempt wages of the debtor, it is exempt even as to debts created prior to its purchase.

Wm. H. Holt and Grant E. Lilly for appellant.

Hathaway & Cardwell for appellees.

Appeal from Clark Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

The appellant is seeking to subject to the payment of a judgment debt against Chas. Mason a house and lot in Winchester. The debt appears to have been contracted before the purchase of the property. It was purchased in 1886, and on the 7th day of March 1887, it was conveyed to Ellen Mason, wife of Chas. Mason, by the vendor, Major Cardwell. While the note for the purchase money, amounting to $250, was executed by Chas. Mason, yet the agreement between the vendor and Ellen Mason was that if she would do certain work for him the property was to be conveyed to her. This arrangement was made with the consent of the husband. The interest and principal when paid amounted to something over $320. Except $50, which was paid by the husband in work for the vendor, the wife washed, cleaned house and did other work for the vendor until she had paid for the property.

She did this work for several years without other compensation than being credited on the purchase money of the place. It is insisted that the husband was entitled to her earnings and, therefore, the property was paid for by him. The cases of Uhrig v. Horstman, 8 Bush, 177, and Penn v. Young, 10 Bush, 628, are cited to sustain that contention.

There has been legislation on the subject of the right of a married woman to her earnings since the opinion in the 8 Bush case and since the transaction out of which the 10 Bush case arose.

Section 1 of an act approved April 11, 1873 (General Statutes, 720), is as follows: "That the wages and compensation of married women for services and labor done and performed by them shall be free from the debts and control of their husbands."

Under the provisions of this act the wife was entitled to her earnings and could use them in the payment of the purchase money of the little home which, by her industry and toil, she was endeavoring to secure to her family.

She paid all the purchase money with her labor except $50, which the husband paid with his labor. He was entitled to this $50 free from the payment of his debts. He was a laborer with a family, and when he appropriated it to aid in paying for the house it did not prejudice the rights of the appellant because he could not subject it to the payment of his debt.

It was held in Thompson v. Hiffner, 11 Bush, 353, that where an exchange of real estate is made, if either of the parties thereto is at the time entitled to a homestead right in the property he parted with, he takes the same right in the property he receives in exchange.

It was said in Lear v. Totten, 14 Bush, 105, "that if the owner sells his homestead and converts it into money, with no purpose of reinvesting the proceeds in property not exempt from execution, the protection of the law afforded him against the claims of creditors is gone."

One can sell his homestead after he has contracted a debt and reinvest its proceeds in another homestead and hold it free from the payment of such debt. This technically is a purchase of a homestead, although with the proceeds of another homestead. If a debtor owns just such personal property as the law exempts from the payment of his debts why should he not be permitted to sell it and invest it in land, occupy it with family and hold it as a homestead exempt from the payment of his debts? Where is the difference in principle between the case where the proceeds of exempt realty and those of exempt personalty are invested in a homestead? The creditor is injured no more in the one than in the other case.

We do not think the fact that the husband paid $50 of wages exempt from the payment of the debt renders the property liable for appellant's debt, or that any part of its proceeds should be subjected to the payment of it. Had the statute of limitation been pleaded it would have been an available defense to the alleged fraudulent act in having the property conveyed to the wife.

The judgment is affirmed.

KIMBALL, &C. V. DOHONEY.

(Filed December 9, 1896—Not to be reported.)

1. Negligence in caring for horse—In this action to recover damages for the negligence of defendant in failing to take proper care of a horse of plaintiff placed in defendant's possession to train, the court properly instructed the jury that defendant was required to take such care of the animal as an ordinarily prudent man would take of his own property.

2. Reversible error—There can be no reversal because of the admission of incompetent testimony, as the error, if any, was not made a ground for new trial.

J. W. Lewis for appellants.

J. W. S. Clements for appellee.

Appeal from Washington Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Pryor.

This action was instituted by the plaintiff to recover damages for the negligence of the defendant in failing to take proper care of a horse of the plaintiff, placed in possession of the defendant to train, etc.

The issue was properly made, and a verdict and judgment for the plaintiff. The testimony for the plaintiff conduced to show that the horse was so badly injured as resulted in its death, and we perceive no reason for disturbing the verdict. The instructions were to the effect that no recovery could be had unless the loss complained of was caused by the neglect of the defendant, and that the latter was required to take such care of the animal as an ordinarily prudent man would take of his own property. The admission, if any, of incompetent testimony was not made a ground for a new trial.

Judgment affirmed.

MT. STERLING & HOWARD MILL TURNPIKE CO. V. BARRY, &C.

(Filed January 19, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Damages for breach of contract to grant passway—Where the owner of land over which there was a public highway agreed with a turnpike road company and certain individuals to close the highway in consideration of their granting to him a passway over the lands of one of them, there was no breach of the agreement to grant the passway until it was demanded, and as the landowner to whom the passway was promised died without having made the demand, and his widow and heirs have since demanded the passway, which was refused, they, and not the administrator, were the proper persons to sue for a breach of the contract.

2. Same. The court properly sustained a demurrer to a paragraph of the answer of defendants setting up an agreement with the decedent and one of his sons to convey to the son the tract of land over which the passway was to be granted, by which agreement the son was to allow the father to have the passway, there being no written memorandum of the agreement. And while defendants amended their answer by alleging the actual conveyance of the land as agreed, the evidence fails to show that it was a part of the contract with the son that the father was to have the passway or that the conveyance to the son was in satisfaction of the original agreement to grant the passway.

3. A judgment for $110 as damages for breach of the contract to grant the passway is not excessive.

B. F. Day and Tyler & Apperson for appellant.

H. B. Kinsolving for appellees.

Appeal from Montgomery Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge White.

The appellees, Sarah J. Barry, John F. Barry, J. P. Barry and George Barry, sued the appellants, Mt. Sterling & Howard Mill Turnpike Co., W. T. Fitzpatrick, E. C. Owings, R. Q. Drake, N. C. Baily and Wm. Durham. The appellees sued as the widow and children and heirs of J. P. Barry, deceased, and Sarah J. Barry also sued as the administratrix of her husband, J. P. Barry. Appellees state that J. P. Barry, at the time of his death, was the owner of a tract of land in Montgomery county containing one hundred and thirty acres; that he had owned and possessed this land for many years before his death; that defendants had instituted proceedings in the Montgomery County Court to annul a public highway that was on said land, and had been established as such highway by the Montgomery County Court; that their ancestor filed objections to the discontinuance of said public highway because it would deprive said decedent of any way of ingress and egress to and from his land; that on the 17th day of June, 1889, the defendants, now appellants, being anxious to close up said dirt road, and have the same annulled by the orders of said county court, made, executed and agreed to and with said Barry, deceased, by written contract, which is in substance as follows:

"Whereas, as this agreement, made and entered into this 17th day of June, 1889, by and between the Mt. Sterling & Howard's Mill Turnpike Road Co. and Taylor Fitzpatrick, N. G. Baily, Ed. Owings, R. Q. Drake and Wm. A. Durham, individually, parties of the first part, and J. P. Barry, of the second part, all of Montgomery county, Ky.

"Whereas said parties of the first part, are desirous of closing that part of the old dirt road known as the Howard's Mill & Mt. Sterling dirt road, commencing at the point on the turnpike road where the said dirt road intersects it * * * (describing the portion of road they desired to close), and J. P. Barry is opposing the closing of said road, and in order to compromise said controversy, it is agreed that Wallace Dehaven as surveyor shall go on the lands of said Barry at a point where they connect and adjoin the lands of said Baily, near the turnpike road, and survey and ascertain by said survey whether or not it is practicable to construct a passway that can be hauled over, leading from said turnpike road through the lands of said Baily, and then through the lands of said Barry to a point on the hill in said Barry's land, and said survey shall include a road or passway twenty feet wide, giving metes and bounds, courses and distances, and probable cost thereof, and all facts connected therewith that he may deem necessary to report, said Dehaven to go on land and make report as soon as practicable; * * * and if said Dehaven shall make report that the passway as indicated herein is practicable, and can be built at a reasonable cost, then, in that event, said parties of the first part hereby agree and bind themselves to convey to said J. P. Barry said land, twenty feet wide, where it passes through said Baily, in fee, but said Barry will have to, * * * and in consideration thereof said Barry agrees to withdraw all objection to the closing of said road aforesaid, and permit the same to be closed by the county court so far as he is concerned."

This contract was signed by all the parties thereto, and dated June 17, 1889. Appellees aver that said Dehaven did make said survey, and reported the same, giving metes and bounds and courses and distances, and that said report was approved and agreed to, and the same was filed on the 25th of June, 1889, in the Montgomery County Court, and thereupon the said J. P. Barry withdrew his exception to the discontinuance of said dirt road; that defendants have failed to make to said Barry during his life a deed to said roadway or to appellees, his widow and children and only heirs-at-law, though they have been requested to convey and carry out said contract by appellees. The appellees say that, by reason of the closing of said dirt road, the land was deprived of any outlet unless they passed over land of private individuals, their neighbors. By reason of the failure to have passway, the land was greatly damaged in value. They ask that defendants be required to make said conveyance, and carry out their contract; and if this can not be done, they ask judgment for $2,000 damages, etc.

To this petition defendants demurred, and the court overruled the demurrer, and appellants excepted.

We are of opinion that the petition stated a cause of action, and the demurrer was properly overruled.

Appellants then moved the court to compel plaintiffs to elect whether they will prosecute this action in the name of Sarah J. Barry as administratrix of J. P. Barry, or in the name of the widow and heirs of J. P. Barry. To this plaintiffs objected, and the court overruled the objection and compelled plaintiffs to elect in whose name they would prosecute this action, and plaintiff, under protest, elected to prosecute the same in the name of the widow and heirs of J. P. Barry. In view of the opinion in this case, it will not be necessary to decide this objection. Plaintiffs then filed an amended petition, making more specific in some of their statements.

Defendants answered, denied that they had broken the contract set up in the petition of June 17, 1889, by failing to convey to J. P. Barry said land or otherwise; deny any breach of said contract; denies that said farm has been damaged in the sum of $2,000 or any other sum.

Appellants charge that, after the 17th day of June, 1889, and during the life of J. P. Barry, and after the said Wallace Dehaven had filed his report named in the petition, about the 26th of June, 1889, it was expressly agreed, understood and contracted between J. P. Barry and J. F. Barry, and defendants Fitzpatrick and N. G. Baily, that for and in consideration of full settlement and in satisfaction and compromise of the contract of June 17, 1889, and other considerations since paid by plaintiff, John F. Barry, if the said Fitzpatrick and Baily would convey to John F. Barry, a son of J. P. Barry, two certain tracts of land in Montgomery county, adjoining J. P. Barry's farm, and including the land and road contemplated on June 17, 1889, and located by Dehaven, as in the petition named, and by which last contract and agreement said Barry was to have a road and passway for himself and family and servants or employes in the land conveyed to plaintiff, J. F. Barry; that, in pursuance of said settlement and compromise of said agreement of June 17, 1889, and before this suit was brought, did convey said land as they agreed to do to plaintiff, J. F. Barry.

A demurrer was sustained to the second paragraph of the answer that set up this contract with J. F. Barry as a defense, and we think properly so, as there was no written memorandum of this contract signed by Barry.

Defendants amended their answer, and say that, by the contract of June 26, 1889, J. P. Barry was to have a road and passway over the land conveyed to J. F. Barry for himself and family, etc.; and, for amendment to the second paragraph of their answer, that they conveyed the two tracts of land to J. F. Barry at the instance and request of J. P. Barry, and at the time J. P. Barry and J. F. Barry contracted between themselves, etc., and it was expressly understood that, in the purchase of the land by J. F. Barry, at a reduced price, was to take the land, and that J. P. Barry was to use the road as contemplated by the contract of June 17, 1889; and it was expressly agreed that the sale was in full satisfaction and settlement of contract of June 17, 1889; that they carried out said contract by putting said J. F. Barry in possession, etc.

Plaintiffs demurred to this answer, and their demur was overruled, and exceptions taken. Plaintiffs filed reply, putting in issue all the statements of defendants, and, the issues having been formed, a trial was had and resulted in a judgment against appellants for $110 damages, and from this judgment they have appealed, and appellees have prayed a cross appeal, and each asks a reversal of the judgment.

Appellants insist that appellees can not maintain this action as the widow and heirs of the decedent, J. P. Barry; that, if there was a breach of said contract of June 17, 1889, it must have occurred before the death of J. P. Barry, and, if it did so occur, his administrator alone had the right to sue for the breach of the contract. This position is correct if the breach of the contract was during the lifetime of J. P. Barry. The proof shows that J. P. Barry died in April, 1890, and there is no proof that he ever demanded a compliance by appellants with the contract; and we hold that there could not be a breach of contract until a demand was made of appellants to convey. The appellees, as proven, made demand of appellants after the death of J. P. Barry, and they refused to make conveyance of this road and actually conveyed the same to J. F. Barry in fee, thus putting it out of their power to comply with the contract of the 17th of June, 1889, and that appellees, as the widow and heirs of J. P. Barry, were the proper parties to sue in this action.

Appellants failed to establish their defense, unless we consider their own testimony, which was excepted to as incompetent under what is known as the testimony bill. This testimony was incompetent, and we suppose that the circuit judge did not consider it in making up his judgment.

A considerable amount of proof was taken as to the damages resulting to the land of appellees by reason of the closing of the old dirt road, and the failure to convey the passway over the Baily land; and, from the evidence, it is shown that appellees' farm was entirely cut off from any passway to or from it to the county seat or any public place, many of the witnesses fixing the damages at $2,000, and many of appellants witnesses proving it was but little damaged, and that other passways of equal convenience could be had for a trifling sum.

From all the evidence, facts and circumstances proven in this case as to damages sustained by appellees on account of the breach of said contract to convey, we are of opinion that the amount fixed by the judgment of the circuit court is a fair estimate of the damages to appellee's land, and that it is not excessive, as claimed by appellants.

Wherefore, the judgment of the circuit court on the original appeal is affirmed with damages, and also affirmed on the cross appeal.

EVANS V. STEWART, &C.

(Filed January 19, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Divorce—Liability of husband for wife's attorney's fees—To exempt the husband from liability for the wife's attorney's fees in a suit brought by her for divorce it must not only appear that the wife has ample estate to pay her costs, but also that she was in fault. And in this case, in which the wife's suit for divorce and alimony was dismissed upon a compromise, the court, upon motion of the wife's attorneys, properly rendered judgment in their favor against the husband for a reasonable fee, which was fixed at $100. And the husband can not complain that execution was awarded therefor, for as the chancellor could have compelled the payment by rule and attachment, but instead selected the milder means of making the collection, the defendant was not prejudiced.

Alexander Lackey for appellant.

Stewart & Stewart for appellees.

Appeal from Lawrence Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge White.

Elizabeth Evans sued her husband, Wm. F. Evans, in the Lawrence Circuit Court for a divorce and alimony, in which she charged her husband with cruelty and many outrageous perpetrations on her that are unnecessary to mention in this opinion. She also sued out an attachment and had the same levied on $10,000 or $12,000 worth of real estate, consisting of houses and lots and two farms in Lawrence county.

To bring and prosecute this suit she employed Sullivan, an attorney at law, and the law firm of Stewart & Stewart, who brought her suit and attended to it as her attorneys, but before the appearance term of the court the husband and wife concluded to settle their differences and did so, and by agreement said litigation was compromised and suit to be dismissed. The appellees gave the appellant, who was husband and defendant in said action, a written notice that appellees would move the court to make to them an allowance in said case a reasonable attorney's fee for their services as attorney for appellant's wife, and on said motion appellant appeared and resisted the motion, and after hearing the evidence offered by the parties the court adjudged that appellees, Stewart & Stewart, were entitled to a reasonable fee for their services as attorneys in said case for Mrs. Evans, and fixed the amount at $100, and awarded an execution on said allowance in their favor, and said sum to be taxed as cost against the appellant.

The court refusing to allow a fee to but one attorney, appellant has appealed to this court and contends that this judgment is erroneous because his wife, who was the plaintiff in the divorce proceedings, had ample property out of which the appellees could make their fees, and, therefore, he was not liable, and they should look to her for the payment of their fees.

By the statute, section 900, it is provided that the husband shall pay the cost of each party unless it shall be made to appear in the action that the wife is in fault and has ample estate to pay the same.

There is no evidence in this case that shows the wife was in fault. It is shown that she owns some property in her own right in the State of Ohio, consisting of a farm that appellant had given her, and that she owned some small amount of personal property of small value, but before the husband can avoid the payment of the expense of the litigation instituted by his wife for divorce he must show she was in fault and owned ample estate to pay the same.

Having failed, as we think, to show that she was in fault, the judgment of the court making the allowance to appellees is proper and reasonable. But appellant complains that it was error in the court to award an execution on said judgment of allowance. We have no doubt but what the chancellor had the authority to award an execution in favor of appellees and cause the collection to be made by that means, as he could compel the payment by rule and attachment, and, having selected the milder mode of making the collection, appellant can not complain.

The judgment is affirmed with damages.

WHITTINGTON V. PENCE, &C.

(Filed January 22, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Levy upon exempt personal property -In this action against a sheriff to recover damages for the levy and sale of plaintiff's horse under execution, plaintiff claiming the horse as exempt from levy and sale, a verdict for defendant was flagrantly against the evidence, the plaintiff having the right, as he did, to select the horse in question as the one exempt from execution; and it was a clear violation of his legal rights for the sheriff, after such selection, to levy upon and sell the horse.

Geo. S. Fulton and C. T. Atkinson for appellant.

Jno. S. Kelley and J. D. Wickliffe for appellees.

Appeal from Nelson Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Burnam.

This action was instituted by the appellant, Whittington, in the Nelson Circuit Court against appellee, Pence, sheriff of Nelson county, to recover damages for the levy and sale of a horse under execution, which appellant claims was exempt from such levy and sale.

The facts show that appellant was a physician at the time of the levy and sale complained of, and was a housekeeper with a family of six persons residing with him, consisting of his wife and five children. The execution was levied upon a bay horse, five years old, named "Bonnie," which was chiefly used by appellant in his practice as a physician, being a combined horse, and was necessary for his use.

Appellant claims that this horse was specifically exempt, and he also claims that as he had no provisions or breadstuff or animal food to sustain his family for one year; nor did he have sufficient property of any kind to make up the deficiency in said provision; that all the property which he had was exempt from execution, claiming same in lieu of the aforesaid deficiency in breadstuff and provisions.

The answer filed by appellees in this case admits the levy and sale of the horse, but denies specifically all the affirmative allegations of plaintiff's petition.

The issues being made up, the case came on for trial. Upon the trial appellant testified and proved all the material allegations of his petition; that he owned the combined horse seized by the sheriff; that he used him in his practice; that he had one old horse about sixteen years old worth about $20, a filly worth not over $30, a cow and heifer worth $40, a cart worth $8, a buggy worth $10, a wagon, and certain household furniture that was specially exempt. He proves that this was all the personal property he owned; that he had no provisions on hand that would have furnished supplies for his family for longer than one week; that he had no provender for his live stock except a half load of hay, a part of a two-bushel sack of oats and a few shocks of fodder, that would not have lasted his live stock for more than a week. He proves that his entire accounts were not worth over $125, and that he had no money. His testimony shows that on the 8th day of January, 1895, Bishop, the deputy sheriff, came to his house, notified him that he had come to levy the execution in his hands, asked him to go to the stable and notified appellant that he had come to levy the execution on the horse "Bonnie." Appellant told him that the horse was exempt, and that he claimed him as exempt property. The deputy sheriff, in response, said that the horse was the best thing appellant had for producing money, and that he intended to levy upon him. Appellant then told him that he did not think he had any property subject to execution, but that if he was determined to levy he asked him to levy on the old horse, wagon and cart, as he could not do without this horse "Bonnie." The deputy sheriff, in response, said that they would not bring the debt, and refused to do so, but proceeded to levy on the horse "Bonnie."

Appellant proves that several times after the levy, and before the sale, he forbade the sheriff to sell the horse, claiming him as exempt under the law. This horse sold for $70, $19.75 in excess of the execution. He also gave to the sheriff a written notice not to sell said horse, claiming him and the other property as exempt to him under the law.

The testimony of the appellant in this case is strongly supported by the testimony of Ernest Whittington; and William Grant testifies that he heard appellant tell Bishop, the deputy sheriff, that he claimed the horse as exempt, and notified him that if he sold him he would sue him.

At the close of the plaintiff's testimony the defendant placed the deputy sheriff, Bishop, on the stand. He proved that he went to the house of Whittington on the 8th day of January, 1895, and out to the stable; that appellant claimed both horses as exempt; that Bishop told appellant that he was only entitled to one, and that he intended to levy on the horse "Bonnie," which was the first one he came to; that appellant objected and told him (Bishop) to levy on the wagon, buggy and cart, but that Bishop responded that they would not pay the debt. He says that appellant then asked him to levy on the old horse and leave "Bonnie," and demanded a written statement of his levy. He also files the notice served on him by Whittington, notifying him that he claimed the horse, wagon and buggy under the exemption laws of the State, in lieu of other property, etc.

At the close of the testimony the appellant offered a number of instructions, all of which were refused by the court, one of which was in substance a peremptory instruction to find for the plaintiff the value of the horse in controversy. The court then, upon its own motion, gave to the jury several instructions. The first told the jury the articles which were exempt to a practicing physician who was a bona fide housekeeper with a family. The second was as follows: "Although the jury may believe that the horse sold by the defendant was subject to execution; that the plaintiff had the right, before the levy, to elect which of his horses he would retain; and if the jury believe, from the preponderance of the evidence, that he did elect to keep the horse sold, and so informed the deputy sheriff, who made the levy before the levy was made, that the law was for the plaintiff, and the jury will find for him the value of said horse; and if they further believe, from the preponderance of the evidence, that the levy and sale were made in an oppressive, reckless, vexatious and high-handed manner, they may find for the plaintiff further damages, not exceeding the amount claimed in the petition." By the third instruction the jury were told that if they believed from the evidence that the plaintiff's property was all exempt from execution, as set out in instruction No. 2, they should find for plaintiff as set out in instruction No. 1.

The court then, at the instance of the appellee, gave to the jury this instruction: "Plaintiff is entitled under the exemption laws to one horse, but not to a wagon, cart, dray or buggy specifically; nor is he entitled to other property in lieu of property not on hand; that he is entitled to a year's provision and provender, and if not on hand, then to other property or money, not to exceed $40 for each member of his family, and not to exceed $70 for provender; and if the jury believe from the evidence that the plaintiff had other property not exempt, including notes and accounts, sufficient to supply the deficiency in provision and provender, they will find for the defendant, unless they believe from the evidence that before the levy plaintiff elected to claim the horse in controversy as specifically exempt, or afterwards surrendered in writing other property in lieu of said horse."

On the law and facts in this case the jury found for the defendant, and judgment was entered accordingly. At the same term of the court appellant made a motion for a new trial, and filed numerous grounds in support thereof; among others, that the court erred to the prejudice of the appellant in refusing and failing to give to the jury certain instructions asked by him referred to; that the court erred to his prejudice in giving instruction No. 4 at the instance of the defendant, and that the verdict was not sustained by sufficient evidence, and was contrary to law.

It seems to us, from the consideration of this case, that the verdict of the jury was flagrantly against the weight of the evidence. The testimony, both of the appellant and the deputy sheriff, Bishop, leave no room for doubt that appellant claimed the horse levied upon and sold as property exempt to him as a housekeeper with a family, both before the levy and repeatedly thereafter and before the day of sale. He had the right under the law to select the said horse as the one exempt from execution, and it was a clear violation of his legal rights for the sheriff, after such selection, to have levied upon and sold said horse. The sheriff seems to have grossly disregarded his duty as an officer to have entirely ignored the legal rights of this appellant in this matter, and it is difficult to see upon what evidence the jury based the verdict returned in this action. It seems to us that the evidence in the case would have justified a peremptory instruction to find in favor of the appellant, so far as the value of the horse was concerned; and the weight of the evidence tends to establish the contention of the appellant herein that he was entitled to the other property levied on in lieu of the exempted provisions and provender which he did not have on hand. The defendant in an execution about to be levied is entitled to select any work beast owned by him which does not exceed in value $150.

It is not necessary to discuss the proposition that if the appellant had failed to make his election before the levy, that he cannot do so afterward, unless he tendered to the sheriff other property of equal value or sufficient to produce the debt in lieu thereof, if he desired to have such release, and upon which the fourth instruction was based.

There is no evidence in this case which justified the giving of such instruction, as before stated, the evidence being positive and clear, both from the deputy sheriff and appellant, that he claimed this horse before it was levied on at all.

For the reasons indicated in this opinion this cause is reversed, and same is remanded for proceedings consistent with the same.

WOODRAM, BY., &C. V. CINCINNATI & KENTUCKY SOUTHERN R. R. CO.

(Filed January 22, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Suit in name of next friend Amendment of petition—In this action in the name of a next friend for the benefit of an infant the court, after properly sustaining a demurrer to the petition because the suit was brought in the name of the next friend for the infant and not in the name of the infant by the next friend, should have permitted the plaintiff to file an amended petition offered by him, which, in effect, so changed the caption of the petition as to make it appear that the suit was instituted by the infant by his next friend.

J. D. Belden for appellants.

Stone & Stone for appellee.

Appeal from Casey Circuit Court.

Opinion of the Court by Judge Burnam.

This action was instituted in the Casey Circuit Court in the name of Milton Woodram, as next friend of Samuel Woodram, against the Cincinnati & Kentucky Southern Railroad Co. for damages for mental and physical suffering, caused by an injury inflicted by the willful negligence of the agents and employes of the defendant by running one of its cars against said Samuel Woodram, by which he was seriously injured internally and by injuring one of his legs, it being further alleged that said Samuel Woodram is an infant under twenty-one years of age, and without statutory guardian, curator or committee, and other necessary allegations.

The defendant filed a demurrer to this petition upon the ground that it was a suit in the name of Milton Woodram and not in the name of Samuel Woodram. This demurrer was properly sustained by the court below. Thereupon the plaintiff produced an amended petition in open court and asked leave of the court to have same filed, which amendment in effect changed the caption of the petition so as to make it appear that the suit was instituted by Samuel Woodram, by Milton Woodram as his next friend, and the court, being advised, overruled the motion of the plaintiff to file said amended petition, to which ruling of the court plaintiff objected at the time, and plaintiff failing to plead further his petition was dismissed, with a judgment for defendant's costs, to which ruling of the court the plaintiff excepted at the time and now excepts and prays an appeal to this court and asks a reversal.

The allegations of this petition clearly show that it was a suit instituted for the benefit of the infant, Samuel Woodram, for an injury done to him, and the facts as recited set out a cause of action in his favor. The prayer of the petition asks judgment for $5,000 for the benefit and in favor of the said Samuel Woodram.

It seems to us that this amendment did not change substantially the claim of the petition, and was an amendment in furtherance of justice and of the substantial rights of the plaintiff, and one in nowise to the prejudice of the defendant, and in our opinion the judge of the lawer court erred to plaintiff's prejudice in its refusal to allow said amendment to be filed.

Wherefore, said judgment is reversed, with instructions to allow the plaintiff to file said amendment, and with directions that this cause proceed in accordance with the rights of the parties.

STAHL V. LOWE, &C.

(Filed January 23, 1897—Not to be reported.

Verbal agreement to mortgage exempt property—The buyer of tobacco which was exempt from execution in the seller's hands, acquired a perfect title thereto as against one to whom the seller had verbally agreed before the crop was planted to execute a mortgage thereon to secure the payment of an existing debt, although he had full notice of the agreement, as a verbal agreement to mortgage personal property exempt from execution, unaccompanied by delivery of possession, does not deprive the debtor of his right to hold or dispose of the property, whether it be or not in existence at time of such agreement.

Robbins & Thomas for appellant.

Moorman & Hesper for appellees.

Appeal from Graves Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Lewis.

This is an action by appellees, J. R. Lowe & Son, a firm of merchants, to enforce an equitable lien, based upon a verbal promise made by J. R. Lowe, before a crop of tobacco was planted, to execute a mortgage thereon to secure the payment of an existing debt, and another for goods, groceries, etc., created while the crop was cultivated.

In an amended pleading it was stated and not denied that appellant Stahl had purchased the crop of tobacco with notice of the alleged lien of appellees and during the pendency of this action.

Whatever lien appellees acquired was purely equitable, and the agreement to execute the mortgage was not in writing, but verbal. It is, therefore, manifest J. R. Lowe did not pass legal title or waive the right to claim or use the tobacco as property exempt from execution or other process of his creditors to subject to the payment of their demands; for no verbal agreement to mortgage or otherwise convey personal property exempt from execution, unaccompanied by delivery of possession, can have the effect to deprive the debtor of his right to hold, use or dispose of such property, whether it be or not in existence at the time of such agreement.

Lowe in his answer stated that he was a housekeeper with a family, consisting of a wife and five children, and that it would have required the proceeds of the tobacco sold at its full value to supply provisions necessary to sustain his family and provender suitable for his live stock.

That allegation not being controverted, it must be taken as true, and being so the tobacco in question was not subject to either an execution or enforced lien of appellee or any other creditor, but Lowe, the debtor, had the right to dispose of it to whomever or in whatever manner he might choose, and appellant Stahl, having purchased it, acquired title thereto, although such purchase was made with full notice of appellee's alleged lien.

It was, therefore, error of the lower court to render judgment for the value of the tobacco against appellant Stahl, and it is, therefore, reversed for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

ARNOLD V. HUBBLE, CITY ATTORNEY, &C.

(Filed January 26, 1897.—Not to be reported.)

Damages for wrongful prosecution by city attorney. In this action against a city attorney to recover damages for the wrongful prosecution and conviction of plaintiff for an alleged violation of the city laws, the petition is not good, for the reason that it fails to state facts which show that the police judge before whom the trial was had was not acting within the scope of his authority, or that defendant, who advised the course pursued by the judge, was actuated by malice or corrupt motives.

H. Mort Rothwell for appellant.

Wm. Herndon and L. T. Hubble for appellees.

Appeal from Garrard Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

The petition failed to state facts which show that the police judge of Lancaster was not acting within the scope of his authority in the trial of the case against appellant.

It is alleged that the appellee, as city attorney, advised the course pursued by the judge, but there is a failure to allege that he was acting by malicious or corrupt motives. (Revel, &c. v. Pettit, 3 Met., 315.)

The judgment is affirmed.

UNITED STATES SCHOOL FURNITURE CO. v. BOARD OF EDUCATION OF CITY OF OWENSBORO.

(Filed January 26, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Sales of personal property—Limitations upon agent's authority as to prices—When the prices at which the agent of a corporation bound his principal to sell and deliver goods were not so low as to indicate that there was collusion or deception, or that the agent had violated the orders of his employer, the other can not excuse its violation of the contract, upon the ground that the agent sold the goods at lower prices than he was authorized to do, unless the buyer had notice of the limit on the agent's authority. And a printed notice in the contract that agents had no authority to bind the corporation in anything except to sell goods at "proper prices" was not sufficient to put the buyer on inquiry.

Weir & Weir and Little & Little for appellant.

Sweeney, Ellis & Sweeney for appellee.

Appeal from Daviess Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Lewis.

This action was brought by appellee, Board of Education of the City of Owensboro, made by statute a corporation, to recover of appellant, United States School Furniture Co. of Chicago, Illinois, also a corporation, $217.50 damages for failure to furnish certain school furniture in compliance with a written contract entered into between the parties. Defense to the action is based upon the alleged fact that the agent of appellant, who sold and agreed to deliver the various articles at prices stipulated, exceeded his authority and violated, with knowledge of appellee, the following reservation or condition printed and made part of the contract signed by the parties:

"N. B.—Agents have no authority to bind us in anything, except sell our goods at proper prices."

We can conceive of the case of an agent by collusion with the purchaser selling and agreeing to deliver goods at prices so far below the real value as to plainly show fraud, whereby the contract would be rendered unenforcible.

There might also be the case of an unenforcible contract when an agent sold goods below the price which his principal had in the warrant of authority, or on the face of the written contract signed had expressly and certainly prescribed and fixed, and of which the purchaser had notice.

But it seems to us the phrase "proper prices," printed in a blank contract to be thereafter made and entered into between the general agent of the seller and a chance purchaser, is too flexible and indefinite to bind or even put upon inquiry the latter.

There is no collusion between agent of the seller and the purchaser in this case alleged or proved; nor are the prices at which the agent bound his principal to sell and deliver the goods so low as to indicate to the court or jury there was collusion or deception, or that the agent had betrayed or violated orders of his employer. The hypothesis upon which the jury was authorized to find for appellant is stated in the following instruction of the lower court: "If the jury believe from the evidence that defendants had instructed Slavens as to the lowest price he might sell the furniture in question, and plaintiff at the time of the contract had knowledge or notice of the limit on the said agent's authority, and knew that said agent was exceeding his authority in selling said goods at lower prices than he was authorized to do, then such contract is not binding on defendant, and the jury should find for defendant." And certainly that instruction was quite as favorable, if not more so, than appellant was entitled to, for there is no evidence directly showing, or from which a fair inference can be drawn, that either Slavens, the agent, had been instructed as to the lowest price he might sell the furniture, or that appellee had notice of any such instruction, except as indicated by the meaningless words, "proper prices." As appellee sued for damages, amount of which was difference between what appellant had contracted to sell and deliver the furniture at and amount appellee was compelled, by reason of violation of that contract, to pay for same kind and quantity purchased elsewhere; and the jury, under proper instructions, and upon the evidence before them, found appellant liable, and fixed the sum of recovery, this court has no right to do otherwise than affirm the judgment, which is now done.

MAST, CROWELL & KIRKPATRICK v. LEHMAN.

(Filed January 26, 1897.)

1. Pleading—A petition to recover the price of goods sold upon the faith of a letter of credit executed by defendant was fatally defective in failing to allege any notice by plaintiffs to defendant of their acceptance of or reliance upon his letter of credit, or any promise or agreement by defendant to pay for the goods sold, or any breach of such agreement.

2. Judgment notwithstanding the verdict—While defendant, because of these defects, was entitled to judgment upon the pleadings, yet, having made a motion for a peremptory instruction, which was improperly overruled, he was thereby precluded, upon the return of a verdict for plaintiff, from moving for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, as plaintiff's attention would have been called to the defects in his pleading, and he would have had an opportunity to amend if the court had sustained the motion for a peremptory instruction, as it should have done.

3. Reversible error- Practice—Even if defendant's motion was properly sustained, it was error to give judgment for all the costs of defendant against plaintiffs, there being no demurrer to the petition.

L. L. Parks for appellants.

Samuel S. Blitz and J. M. Chatterson for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Law and Equity division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Burnam.

This suit was instituted by the plaintiffs against defendant upon a letter of credit executed by defendant to the plaintiffs in favor of one Francis Holloway, which is, in words, as follows: "I request that if Mr. Francis Holloway order books or merchandise from you at any time within twelve months from the date of this letter of credit, you ship same to his order, and I hereby obligate myself to see that same are paid for within thirty days from date of shipment, provided he should fail to make settlement in that time, and the amount should not exceed $1,000. I further waive notice to me of shipment made to the said Francis Holloway on the faith of this letter of credit, or failures to meet payments when due by him.

"Signed: SIMON LEHMAN."

Plaintiffs alleging that upon the faith of said letter of credit they sold and delivered to the said Holloway books and merchandise to the amount of $735.43, on which he had paid the sum of $140, leaving a balance of $595.43, which balance was due and unpaid, and had remained due and unpaid for more than thirty days from the date of shipment of said books and merchandise.

Plaintiffs further alleged that by reason of said letter of credit their sale and shipment to said Holloway of said books and merchandise, and said Holloway's failure to pay said balance of $595.43 when due, that defendant had become indebted to plaintiffs in the aforesaid sum, and that said debt was due and unpaid, and that although requested he had failed to pay any part of it, and they prayed for a judgment.

The defendant filed a demurrer to the petition. On the 10th day of February, 1894, notified plaintiffs' counsel that he would move the court to permit him to withdraw from the records his demurrer to the petition, which motion was sustained by the court, and said demurrer was withdrawn. On the 16th day of February defendant filed his answer, which was substantially a traverse of all the affirmative allegations of plaintiffs' petition. Afterwards, on the 11th day of May, 1894, the issues being made, a jury was selected and sworn to try the case. All the evidence being heard, the defendant moved the court to peremptorily instruct the jury to find for the defendant, to which motion the plaintiffs objected, and the court, being advised, overruled said motion, to which defendant objected.

The court instructed the jury in behalf of plaintiffs, and the cause was given to the jury, who returned a verdict in favor of plaintiffs for $595.43, with interest from the 23d day of December, 1893; and a judgment was thereupon entered in favor of plaintiffs against defendant for said sum, and their costs expended. The defendant then moved the court to enter a judgment for the defendant, notwithstanding the verdict for the plaintiffs, and the court sustained said motion and dismissed plaintiffs' petition, with judgment for defendant's cost.

The motion of defendant was under section 386, Civil Code, which says: "Judgment shall be given for the party whom the pleadings entitle thereto, though there may have been a verdict against him." The grounds upon which said motion were based were:

1st. That plaintiffs had wholly failed to allege or prove any notice by the plaintiffs to the defendant of their acceptance of or reliance upon his letter of credit, upon which this case was based.

2d. That said petition wholly failed to allege any promise or agreement of defendant to pay for the goods sold Holloway under such letter of credit, or any breach of such agreement.

These objections were well taken, and are supported by frequent adjudications of this court. The petition was fatally defective upon demurrer.

As the petition is certainly wanting in all these usual and necessary allegations, and evinces great carelessness or lack of skill on the part of the pleader, which probably suggested to defendant the cul de sac into which plaintiffs finally landed. The defendant, with admirable skill, concealed both from the court and the plaintiffs the real defense upon which he relied; but, in our judgment, the defendant at the close of the case committed an error which was fatal to his defense, and lost him all the advantage which he had gained by his finesse.

At the conclusion of the trial the defendant moved the court to peremptorily instruct the jury to find for the defendant. This motion of defendant should have been sustained by the court, and would have been sustained if the court had been aware of the true condition of the pleadings. It is true the plaintiffs objected to the instruction; but, in our opinion, such objection did not relieve the court of its obligation to properly instruct the jury as to the law of the case, based upon the pleadings and the proof. If the court had sustained this motion, as it was clearly his duty to do, it would necessarily have brought to the attention of the plaintiffs the defense which had been so carefully concealed from the very beginning of the case; and, before the submission of the case to the jury, he would have had an opportunity to have offered an amendment curing the defects in his petition, which, in furtherance of justice, it would have been the duty of the court to have allowed to be filed.

The objects of courts are primarily to enforce rights and to prevent wrongs. These ends were defeated in this case; a claim apparently just is defeated, and the defendant released from liability without any trial, upon the real merits of the case, by an error of the court in refusing to give a proper instruction when asked to do so.

We also think it was error to give judgment for all the costs of the defendant against plaintiffs, even if his motion had been properly sustained, as paragraph 2 of section 93, Civil Code, requires a party to demur before he files other pleadings than demurrer, or to be liable for all costs which would result from such failure.

For the reasons indicated the judgment is reversed and the cause is remanded, with instructions to allow plaintiffs to file the amended petition offered by him, and other proceedings consistent with this opinion.

LEE V. RUSSELL, &C.

(Filed January 28, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Set-off—While a demand due by a plaintiff in his individual capacity can not be set off by a defendant against a demand due to the plaintiff in a representative character, yet if the plaintiff has become the real owner of the debt sued on, and that fact is alleged in the answer and proved, a defendant may set-off against it a debt due to him from the plaintiff individually.

2. Same. Practice—While a debt due to the defendant and another jointly can not be set off against a demand due by the defendant alone, yet such a ground of objection shown to exist by a pleading is waived unless distinctly specified by a demurrer thereto. And the right of plaintiff to demur to such items of set-off in this case was waived by filing a reply, which joined issue on the merits. While plaintiff could have filed a general demurrer at any time, this objection could be reached only by special demurrer.

J. P. Thompson for appellant.

Wm. H. Holt for appellees.

Appeal from Marion Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Burnam.

This suit was instituted in the Marion Circuit Court by the plaintiff as executor of J. S. Caldwell against the defendants, Russell & Avritt, upon a promissory note dated November 7, 1885, due three years after date, and bearing interest from date, which was executed to the plaintiff by the defendants. Said note was for $1,169.92, and was the last payment upon a tract of land sold defendants. Russell & Avritt were the security on same. The petition sought a personal judgment against the defendant, and for an enforcement of the lien retained in the deed to secure the payment of said note.

The defendant filed an answer, set-off and counterclaim, resisting judgment on said note, alleging that same was the individual property of the executor; that he had settled his accounts as executor, paid the devisees under the will, and all the debts of the deceased; that he had been charged with the note, and that neither the heirs nor the creditors of said Caldwell had any interest whatever in same. He further alleges that plaintiff was largely indebted to him by way of accounts, and that said plaintiff had agreed that said indebtedness should be credited on the note sued on, and plead, by way of set-off and counterclaim, a great many items of indebtedness due to him (S. A. Russell) by the said Lee, amounting to $———. He also claimed to be the owner of a number of debts due by the plaintiff to the firm of Avritt & Russell, which was composed of the defendant, Russell, and Avritt, amounting to $———. He also claimed to be the owner of a debt due by plaintiff to W. E. and S. A. Russell for rent of office, amounting to $———, which he claimed belonged to him, and which he had a right to set-off.

This answer, set-off and cross petition was filed on the 25th of November, 1891. In March, 1892, the plaintiff filed a reply, in which he substantially denied his indebtedness to Russell individually, or to the firm of Avritt & Russell. He also denied that he was indebted to the defendants, W. E. and S. A. Russell, or either of them, for office rent, claiming that he had occupied the office of said W. E. and S. A. Russell during his term as sheriff of Marion county for the years 1881, 1882, 1883 and 1884 under an express agreement with W. E. Russell, who owned same, that no charges were to be made against him for said occupancy. He denied that the charges for services by S. A. Russell or by Avritt & Russell were reasonable or customary; and he further plead that most of said claims had accrued more than five years before the filing of the answer, and that same were barred by the lapse of time and the statute of limitation, which he plead and relied on.

The defendant in his rejoinder controverted nearly all the allegations of plaintiff's reply, and alleged that plaintiff had, within one year before the filing of the petition, and frequently theretofore within five years, agreed and promised to pay to the defendant the said items of indebtedness set out in the answer. This was filed in November, 1892. In February, 1893, the plaintiff, for the first time, filed a general demurrer to the answer and counterclaim of the defendant, which the court properly overruled, and he at the same time filed a special demurrer to so much of the defendant's answer, set-off and counterclaim as plead the accounts of Avritt & Russell and the office rent, because same were not properly a defense to the claim of the plaintiff. This special demurrer was overruled by the court, presumably because same had come too late.

At the April term, 1893, the defendant, by leave of court, filed an amended answer, set-off and counterclaim, in which he alleged specifically that the claims of Avritt & Russell, and the rent due Russell & Russell belonged to him, and were to be used as credits, and making some other allegations. No demurrer was filed to this amended answer and cross petition, but at the same term of the court the plaintiff filed his reply thereto.

Upon the issues so made up, both parties took proof, mainly as to the value of the services of the defendant, Russell, and the value of the services of Avritt & Russell, and as to the contract for the rent of office.

At the May term, 1893, the case being submitted to the chancellor upon the pleadings and proof, the court adjudged that the plaintiff was the owner individually of the note sued on, gave judgment for same, and directed a sale of the land to pay said note subject to credits allowed defendant, viz: The sum of $———, to be credited on said note at the date thereof; the sum of $150, to be credited September 27, 1886; the further sum of $——— being the fees due the firm of Avritt & Russell, and the further credit of $424, the rent of office, of which $400 was directed to be set off against the claim of plaintiff for items of indebtedness due to him by the defendant outside of the obligation sued on.

From this judgment plaintiff appeals and asks a reversal.

The first ground relied on is the overruling of the general demurrer, based upon the idea that the defendant could not plead an individual liability as a set-off to the note due plaintiff as executor. It is a well-recognized rule of pleading that a demand due by a plaintiff in his individual capacity can not be set off by a defendant against a demand due to the plaintiff in a representative character; but if the plaintiff has become the real owner of the debt sued on, and that fact is alleged in the answer and proved, a defendant may set off against it a debt due to him from the plaintiff individually. (Stone v. McConnell, 1 Duvall, 54; Smith's ex'or v. Field, 6 Dana, 363; Morrison v. Page, 9 Dana, 428.)

The reply does not really controvert this allegation of plaintiff's answer on this point, and the evidence of the plaintiff shows conclusively that he is the real owner of the note. We, therefore, conclude that this contention of plaintiff is not well taken, and that the defendant had a right to set off his debts against the obligation sued on.

The second ground relied on for a reversal is that the debts due to the firm of Avritt & Russell, and the rent due to W. E. and S. A. Russell, can not be relied on by the defendant as a set-off, as they are not mutual demands, and that there is no allegation of a written assignment of same, and that said Avritt and W. E. Russell were necessary parties. As a question of pleading, "the original cause of action sued on and a set-off must be mutual demands between the same persons and in the same right. A joint debt can not be set off against a separate demand, nor a separate demand against a joint one." Stone v. McConnell, 1 Duvall, 54.)

But the Code of Practice (section 92, subsection 4), provides that "such a ground of objection, shown to exist by a pleading, is waived unless distinctly specified by a demurrer thereto."

In this case no demurrer was filed until long after the reply had joined issue on the merits of defendant's answer. This waived the right of plaintiff to demur to these items or set-off. Of course the plaintiff could at any time have filed a general demurrer, but this only goes to the jurisdiction of a court, and the cause of action stated; and certainly a general demurrer could never have been sustained to this answer.

The defendant very earnestly insists that his plea of limitation in this case should have been sustained, but the answer of defendant pleads and relies upon a recognition and promise to pay their demands by the plaintiff within five years before the institution of the suit, and this plea is supported, not only by the sworn testimony of the defendant, but it is also corroborated by the fact that there had been mutual outstanding claims between these parties for many years, and by the further fact that the appellant in his reply admits some of defendant's claims. We think that under the pleadings and proof that it was a question of fact to be determined by the court, and that the evidence supports the conclusion reached by the trial judge.

The fourth ground upon which he relies for a reversal was error in allowing defendant anything on the set-off, because the weight of evidence showed that he was not entitled to as much as defendant admitted plaintiff paid for him or held against him, viz, the sum of $424. Upon these questions of fact a large amount of proof was taken by both parties, and same was very conflicting, it being largely made up of opinion as to the value of services. The lower court, who knew the witnesses and understood the surroundings of the case, has fixed the amount of these set-offs from all the evidence in the case, and has largely abated the amount claimed by defendant in his pleadings.

Under the circumstauces, we do not think that we would be justified in reversing this case on these questions of fact.

Wherefore, the judgment is affirmed.

McQUEEN, &C. v. McDANIEL, &C.

(Filed January 28, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Purchase of decedent's land by widow at decretal sale—Collusion—Where a part of a tract of land, which had been purchased by a decedent by executory contract, was sold to satisfy the unpaid purchase money, and was purchased by the widow at the commissioner's sale, she afterwards induced the vendor to convey to her the whole tract, claiming that part not sold under decree, upon the ground that the money paid by her husband upon the purchase price belonged to her. In this action by the heirs to set aside that deed, the chancellor properly granted the relief sought, as the widow fails to establish her claim as to that part of the land not sold under decree; and, as to that part purchased by her at the decretal sale, the evidence shows that she, the administrator and the vendor, acted collusively to enable her to buy it for less than its salable value.

Thomas H. Hines for appellants.

Jas. M. Sebastian and W. H. & M. J. Holt for appellees.

Appeal from Jackson Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Burnam.

Elijah McDaniel died a citizen of Jackson county, Ky., in November, 1882. He left a small personal estate amounting to about $400, which came to the hands of his administrator, W. G. Johnson. At the time of his death he was in the possession of a boundary of about sixty-eight acres of land on the waters of Pond creek, in Jackson county, purchased of one John R. Hurst, and which the said Hurst and his father, James M. Hurst, purchased from F. P. Powell. At the date of the purchase Hurst owed Powell a balance on said land of about $180, which was in contest. McDaniel paid to Powell on the purchase about $520, and held up the residue of the purchase money to await the determination of the suit of Powell against Hurst. During this delay McDaniel died, leaving a widow, Mahala McDaniel (who subsequently to his death married the defendant, McQueen), a mother and four half brothers. George W. Johnson, a brother-in-law of the widow, qualified as administrator.

At the September term of the Jackson Circuit Court, 1883, Powell recovered a judgment against J. M. and John R. Hurst for $180, balance due on the purchase price by them of the tract of land sold to McDaniel, and the commissioner was directed to sell said land to pay said debt of unpaid purchase money; and said land was so sold by the commissioner on the 3d day of December, 1883, and at this sale the widow became the purchaser of thirty-three acres of said land, in discharge of the aforesaid debt, laid off on the southern side of the tract.

Subsequent to this sale the widow induced James M. Hurst to convey to her the title to the whole of said tract of land. The evidence in the case does not disclose any consideration whatever for this conveyance from the said Hurst to Mahala, but it is contended by her that the $520 paid on said land by her husband in his lifetime arose from the proceeds of a tract of land owned by the said Mahala in Breathitt county, which she had inherited from her father.

This suit was instituted in the Jackson Circuit Court to vacate the deed made to Mahala by Hurst, and to set aside the commissioner's deed for the thirty-three acres, upon the ground that the administrator and the widow had fraudulently conspired together to let said land be sold in order to divert the title from the heirs at law to the widow, and further alleging that the administrator had ample assets in his hands to pay off the judgment for the unpaid purchase money, and also seeking a settlement of the accounts of the administrator.

These allegations of plaintiffs' petition were denied in toto by the defendants, Johnson and the widow, she claiming that no written contract was ever entered into between James M. Hurst and her husband, and that Hurst himself had no title to the land until after the sale, under the judgment of the court to pay purchase money due by him to Powell, and alleging that she bought same at public outcry to the highest bidder with her own money, and also claiming the residue of the sixty-eight acres of land under the deed made from Hurst on the ground that same had been paid for by her out of the proceeds of her land in Breathitt county, and in equity belonged to her.

The case dragged along for several years, a good deal of proof being taken upon the issues raised by the pleadings until finally, at the November term, 1887, it was submitted to R. L. Ewell, a special judge, who held that said case was not ready for final hearing, and referred same to the commissioner, first, to state and settle the accounts of the administrator, and then to ascertain certain other facts which he deemed essential to the proper adjudication of said cause, chief of which was to ascertain whether said thirty-three acres of land had actually been paid for with money which had been derived from the estate of Elijah McDaniel, deceased. No report was ever made by the master commissioner under this judgment, and the facts which the judgment directed him to ascertain were never officially ascertained; but at the March term, 1891, the parties to this record filed an agreed order (see page 128 of record), in which, in consideration of the payment to plaintiffs of $86 in the hands of J. M. Sebastian, which had been collected from W. H. Blanton in favor of Johnson as administrator of McDaniel, and the agreement by said Johnson to pay off the outstanding claims against the said McDaniel's estate, that the said Johnson was to be relieved from any further claim by the heirs at law for personalty which came into his hands as such administrator.

At the October term, 1891, B. H. Dalton and M. F. Goodwin were made parties to this action, alleging that they had purchased of the widow of McDaniel all of the aforesaid tract of land, and that they were the real owners of it, and were necessary parties to the suit, which facts were controverted by the plaintiffs, and the case was continued on the docket, no further steps being taken until the May term, 1894, when the case was submitted by agreement of all parties to H. C. Eversole, special judge, for judgment, who adjudged that the plaintiffs recover of the defendant, Mahala McQueen (late McDaniel), all of the aforesaid tract of land, and directing a cancellation of the deed from James M. Hurst to Mahala McDaniel, holding that the said Mahala held said property in trust for the heirs of Elijah McDaniel, subject to her rights of dower and homestead, and also subject to a lien for the $190.57 which had been advanced by her to pay off and discharge the judgment in favor of Powell against Hurst, the vendor of Elijah McDaniel. The court also gave Elizabeth McDaniel the right to discharge the $190.57, with accumulated interest, at any time within six months, and if she did not pay said debt, then directing a sale of the land by the commissioner of the Jackson Circuit Court at public outcry to pay said purchase money and the cost. The court also adjudged that A. P. Settle, the attorney of Mahala McDaniel (now McQueen), be allowed $50 as his fee, and that same be a lien upon the judgment for $190; and also allowed Clark, Culdom & Sebastian a fee of $75 for their services in behalf of the plaintiff, Elizabeth McDaniel, and giving them a lien upon the land, subject to the lien, however, of the defendant, Mahala, for the $190.57 advanced by her to pay off the lien for purchase money and her homestead rights.

From this judgment the said defendant has appealed to this court, and asks for a reversal.

It seems to us that the evidence entirely fails to establish the claim of defendant, Mahala, that the $520 paid on this land by her husband in his lifetime was paid with her money and as the proceeds of the property inherited from her father. The evidence shows that the title to the land in Breathitt county was in her husband and not in her at all, and that he had paid all the money to Hurst from his own means, and we, therefore, conclude that she had no right in law or equity to have had the title to that portion of the sixty-eight acres of land which was not sold under the decree of the Jackson Circuit Court to pay the purchase money due Powell conveyed to her, as said property belonged at the death of intestate to his heirs at law.

The evidence in this case also, we think, conduces to show that the defendant, Mahala McQueen, the administrator, and the vendor, Powell, all acted collusively to enable the defendant to buy this tract of land at the commissioner's sale for less than its salable value. That the administrator and the widow had such an agreement is expressly proven by the testimony of the administrator's brother, and the administrator, in order to have the sale made and to prevent a payment of the balance of such purchase money by the appellee, Arthur McDaniel, agreed to pay all the costs of such sale; and we feel assured that if he had desired provision could have been made to prevent the sacrifice of this land at the commissioner's sale, and could have secured same to the estate.

The judgment of the lower court very fully protects appellant, Mahala McQueen, by giving her a lien on said land for the full amount of the purchase money so paid by her, and also securing to her, as widow, a homestead in same during her life, and we do not think any substantial error has been committed to her prejudice.

Wherefore, the judgment is affirmed with damages.

PITTBURGH, CINCINNATI, CHICAGO & ST. LOUIS RY. CO. V. LEWIS.

(Filed December 16, 1896—Not to be reported.)

1. Contributory negligence—Question for jury—The court ought not to take the question of negligence or contributory negligence from the jury where different findings might reasonably or even possibly be made by men of average intelligence.

2. Same—Railroad crossing—The failure to stop and look and listen before passing over a railroad at a public crossing in a crowded city is not per se contributory negligence.

3. Railroads—Duty of servants in charge of engine—After the plaintiff was in peril from the engine, which afterward struck him, it was the duty of those in charge of the engine to see him, the crossing being a public one, and the company is not exonerated if they did not actually see him; therefore, the court properly instructed the jury that, although they might believe plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, yet he could recover if after he "was in peril from the engine those in charge of it could have seen his danger and have prevented his injury by the exercise of ordinary care."

4. Trial of case—As the court, upon objection being made, told the jury to disregard improper statements made by counsel for plaintiff in his opening statement, this was all the court was required to do, as the court can not discharge the jury upon every improper remark of counsel.

5. Witnesses—A witness for defendant having made a statement upon the witness stand inconsistent with a previous written statement made by him, the defendant can not complain that the court refused to permit the witness to read his written statement for the purpose of refreshing his recollection, as the witness, even after his attention had been called by the proposed question to the fact that he had signed a written statement, and had been notified by counsel what it contained, still did not remember on oath what the writing had made him say while not on oath.

6. It is immaterial whether or not the switch-tender called to plaintiff at the time of the accident "to look out," as such a call would serve rather to confuse the plaintiff than to apprise him of his danger.

Petition for rehearing overruled March 26, 1897.

Charles H. Gibson for appellant.

O'Neal & Pryor, Alfred Selligman and Phelps & Thum for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hazelrigg.

While walking southwardly and obliquely over the tracks of the appellant, and when on a public crossing, the appellee, a negro man, some thirty-seven years of age, was struck by a locomotive coming from his right and at his rear and his leg so injured as to require amputation. For this injury he brought this action for damages, and recovered judgment for $5,920. Contrary to the general rule at this crossing, the proof conduces to show that no signal bell was ringing, and the car was moving with but little noise. It had been on the track on Fourteenth street, but at a point something over 100 feet from the accident had been switched off toward Maple street, and over this crossing by a lever operated at the tower house some 200 feet away. By stopping or listening or looking to his rear the appellee would have discovered the train and so escaped injury. He claims, however, that the usual train out had already passed, and hearing no bell ringing he was not apprised of its approach until too late to escape.

If the appellee when hurt was in fact relying on the signal bell which it was the duty of the appellant to ring upon approaching the crossing, and which it was its custom to ring, and for this reason gave no heed to what was going on behind him, we can not say as a matter of law that he was guilty of such contributory negligence as would prevent his recovery. This is a question of fact for the jury under the proof and all the circumstances attending the injury. In such cases we ought not to take the question of negligence or contributory negligence from the jury where different findings might reasonably or even possibly be made by men of average intelligence. (Passamaneck's adm'r v. Louisville Ry., 17 KY. LAW REP., 767; Sherman & Redfield on Negligence, section 114; Beach on contributory Negligence, section 163.)

This court has not adopted the rule that the people of a crowded city are to stop, look and listen before passing over a railroad at a public crossing. On the contrary we have said that to prescribe such a rule would be unreasonable. (Ramsey v. L., C. & L. Ry. Co., 89 Ky., 103, and Wright v. Cincinnati, &c., 94 Ky., 114.)

It follows that appellant's motion for a peremptory instruction was properly overruled. Serious complaint is urged against an instruction which, while it denied the plaintiff the right to recover if his own negligence so contributed to the injury as that but for it the injury would not have been inflicted, yet added the qualification "unless the jury further believes from the evidence that after plaintiff was in peril from the engine those in charge of it could have seen his danger and have prevented his injury by the exercise or ordinary care."

We think this qualification embraces the well-settled law in such cases. Here was a public crossing—a sidewalk in fact in a large city—and it was the duty of those in charge of the train to keep a constant lookout for those on or about the crossing. After the appellee "was in peril from the engine" it was surely their duty to see him, and the appellant is not exonerated if they did not actually see him. (L. & N. v. Krey, 16 KY. LAW REP., 797; L. & N. v. Hackman, 17 KY. LAW REP., 81.)

In the opening statement of counsel for the appellee it was said that the place where the accident occurred was a dangerous one; that others had been injured there, and after the accident watchmen had been placed there, etc. Upon an objection to these statements being made the court told the jury to disregard them, and this, it seems to us, is all the court should have done.

If the jury is to be discharged of the case upon every improper remark of counsel, few trials could be finished. Ordinarily the good sense and sound discretion of the jury can be relied on to prevent injustice by reason of the incompetent statements of counsel, especially where the court directs that such statements are to be disregarded. (L. & N. v. Coyne, 17 KY. LAW REP., 285; State v. Rivers, 90 N. C., 738.)

It is also urged that appellant's witness, Montgomery, ought to have been permitted to examine a paper signed by him a few days after the accident in order to refresh his memory, his testimony on the stand being to the effect that he did not hear the switch tender, Mulloy, call out to the appellee "to lookout" at the time of the accident, when the avowal is that by showing the witness the paper he would have remembered that he did hear Mulloy so call out. It developed that the witness did not write the statement or have it written, but the paper was made out from verbal statements made by him to some of the officials of the appellant a few days after the transaction, and it is there made to appear that the witness did hear Mulloy so call out to the appellee.

The witness testified to a number of facts favorable to the appellant without hesitation or confusion, and gave no evidence of lack of recollection as to any fact connected with the transaction. He answered at least three times most positively that he heard no one call out to the appellee. Counsel for appellant then said to the witness that for the purpose of refreshing his recollection he would ask him if he didn't sign a written statement of what he saw on the day of the accident.

The witness answered that he did a few days after the trouble. Counsel then said: "I am going to show you that statement and ask you to read it, and with your recollection refreshed I am going to ask you the question whether or not you heard anybody halloo 'lookout!'"

The court sustained an objection to the question, but counsel again —the fourth time—asked witness if his recollection was that he heard such a call and he answered, "No, sir; I don't think I did."

So it appears that even after the attention of the witness had been called to the fact that he had signed a written statement, and had been notified by counsel what it contained, he still did not remember on oath what the writing had made him say while not on oath. We think the process of refreshing the recollection of the witness was fairly tried by the course of the examination and the witness given every opportunity to remember the alleged fact in dispute. Moreover, the call of Mulloy, if made, would serve rather to confuse the appellee than to apprise him of his danger.

Judgment affirmed.

BUCKLER V. REESE & BRO.

(Filed January 6, 1897.)

Sale of lunatic's property under execution—Where one has been adjudged of unsound mind, and a committee is in charge of his person and his estate, a sale of his land under execution, issued upon a judgment rendered against him while he was sane, is a nullity and passes no title; and, therefore, no action lies to recover damages against the plaintiff in the execution or the purchaser on account of the sale. If, however, he has been damaged by the wrongful seizure of his land or its use and occupancy, he may have an action on that account against the plaintiff in the execution and the purchaser as co-trespassers, provided he has not, after restoration to his proper mind, confirmed the sale for a valuable consideration.

Winfield Buckler, Thomas H. Hines and Hanson Kennedy for appellant.

E. L. Worthington and L. W. Robertson for appellees.

Appeal from Mason Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hazelrigg.

This was a suit by the appellant against the appellees for damages growing out of an alleged wrongful issual of certain executions against the appellant, under which his lands were sold. The issual is alleged to have been wrongful because the appellant was not given credit on the bonds on which the executions were issued for certain sums claimed to have been paid by him to the appellees, who were the obligees in the bonds and the plaintiffs in the executions. We are of opinion that the appellant has not shown himself entitled to these alleged credits. Doubtless the arrangement by which he was to get the benefit of them would have been carried out but for the death of his father. When the administratrix of the latter, however, repudiated the arrangement, the appellees were relieved of their agreement to enter the credits. Moreover, the appellant was not divested of title by the attempted sale. He had been adjudged of unsound mind, and a committee was in charge of his person and his estate at the time the executions were issued and the sale made. At the common law this might have been done and the purchaser given a good title. Such were the conclusions reached by this court before our statutes were enacted empowering courts of chancery to sell the lands of such persons for debt, and to provide for their maintenance. (Allison v. Taylor, &c., 6 Dana, 87; Berry v. Rogers, 2 B. M., 308; Shirley v. Taylor's heirs, 5 B. M., 99.)

But in McNees, &c. v. Thompson, &c., 5 Bush, 686, where the defendant in the execution, sane at the time the judgment was rendered, became insane afterwards and before an execution issued, it was held that an action to revive against the committee was proper because the creditor, though entitled to have his debt satisfied, could not have it done by the issual of an execution against the debtor alone, the statutes then in force on the subject being cited. (Section 2, chapter 481, Stanton's Revised Statutes.)

It is true, as contended, that in that case no execution in fact was issued; but it is clear, if such a remedy had been held to be open to the creditor, he would have been forced to adopt it. His resort to an action against the committee was upheld because he had no remedy by execution.

Our present statutes are similar to the provisions of the Revised Statutes on the subject in question. (Section 2150, Kentucky Statutes; section 489, Civil Code.)

The issual of these executions is, therefore, to be held as a nullity and the sale as void. These acts were consequently harmless in themselves to the appellant; and while he might have been damaged by the wrongful seizure of his land or its use and occupancy, and could have instituted an action on this account against the plaintiffs in the executions and the purchasers as co-trespassers, he has not done so, but proceeds on the erroneous thereory that he was divested of title to his land by this sale. He probably did not institute a different suit because, after a restoration to his proper mind, he confirmed the sale to the purchaser, the co-trespasser with appellees, for a valuable consideration, and can assert no further claim for the damages indicated.

The judgment dismissing his action must be affirmed.

The court delivered the following response to a petition for rehearing March 27, 1897:

According to no decision ever rendered by this court can the value of a widow's own distinct tract or parcel of land be estimated in determining the quantity of land left by her deceased husband to be set apart to her as a homestead. Appellee in this case is entitled to such quantity of land of her deceased husband as is of the value of $1,000, without reference to the tract she owned as of her own right.

Petition for rehearing overruled.

MITCHELL V. KERBY, &C.

(Filed January 12, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Suit to vacate judgment—Judgment having been rendered in favor of plaintiff in an action upon a promissory note held by him as collateral security, the payee in the note from whom plaintiff received it being made a defendant, in an action to vacate the judgment upon the ground that the payee in the note had promised the payor no steps would be taken against him at that term of court and advised him not to employ a lawyer, as they would meet after the term and settle the matter, the allegation of these facts, together with facts showing payments made to the payee upon the note before any notice to the payor of its transfer, and for which credit had not been given, were sufficient to entitle the defendant in the judgment to relief as against the payee in the note, and the court erred in dismissing the petition upon demurrer filed by him. As the plaintiff in the judgment, who held the note as collateral security, was not served with process in this action to vacate the judgment, it would be premature to pass upon the sufficiency of the petition as to him, but the facts alleged show the judgment in his favor to be unusually unjust and oppressive.

R. H. Tomlinson for appellant.

Wm. Herndon for appellees.

Appeal from Garrard Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Lewis.

June 13, 1891, W. J. Kinnard instituted an action against John Mitchell, making W. M. Kerby also party defendant, asking judgment for $585.96 and interest, being amount of a promissory note executed March 10, 1879, by Mitchell to Kerby; also for enforcement of a lien on certain real property secured by mortgage of the same date.

In his petition the plaintiff stated the note was, March 24, 1884, sold and delivered to him, though not in writing, as collateral security for a debt evidenced by note then executed by Kerby to him for $500.

August 20, 1891, personal judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff against Mitchell for the full sum of $585.96 and interest from March 10, 1879, subject, as recited in the judgment, to a credit of $100 paid to W. M. Kerby May 28, 1891, and for sale of the mortgaged property to satisfy it, which was sold by the commissioner December 28, 1891, for the sum of $378.

The present action was brought by John Mitchell against Wm. Kerby and W. J. Kinnard January 16, 1892, asking that the judgment rendered in the action referred to in favor of Kinnard against him, and the sale made under it, be vacated and set aside, and that said mortgage and note be canceled.

The facts constituting the cause of this action, as stated in plaintiff's petition, are, in substance, as follows: That Wm. Kerby, to whom said note and mortgage were executed, met him on the first day of that term of court, to which the action by Kinnard was brought, and promised and assured him no judgment or steps would be taken against him in the action at that term of court; at the same time told him he need not employ a lawyer or incur any expense, as they would, after court, meet and settle the matter; and that relying upon those statements he (plaintiff) did go home, and did not know the judgment had been rendered until after adjournment of court for that term; that afterwards, but before sale of the mortgaged property, they again agreed to make a settlement, Kerby then assuring plaintiff no action would be taken under the judgment, which promise was likewise violated.

He further states that if said note was transferred to Kinnard as collateral security he (plaintiff) was never notified or had knowledge of the fact; but that Kerby continued to receive payments, and promised to enter credit therefor upon the note up to May, 1891, when the sum of $100 was paid; that said payments, a list of which is set out in the petition, are sufficient to satisfy and pay off the note, and he would have pleaded them as set-off against the note if not misled and deceived by Kerby, and in this action pleads and relies upon them.

The record does not show a summons was ever served on Kinnard in this action, but Kerby filed a general demurrer, and this is an appeal from the judgment sustaining that demurrer and dismissing the action.

As to Kerby the facts stated in the petition, which, for the present, must be taken as true, entitle plaintiff to have the judgment in question vacated, not only upon the ground of casualty and misfortune preventing him from appearing and making defense to the action, but also upon the ground of fraud; and it was manifestly erroneous to sustain the demurrer and dismiss the action at his instance. But whether the facts stated, if true, are sufficient to entitle plaintiff to the relief against Kinnard, it would probably be premature to now determine, as he has not been summoned. It is, however, not improper to say the judgment in his favor is unusually unjust and oppressive.

In the first place, although he was entitled to recover of Mitchell in his own name and for his own use only, the sum of $500 and interest from March 4, 1884, being the amount of the note Kerby executed to him, he actually obtained personal judgment in that action against Mitchell for $585.96 and interest from March 10, 1879, and judgment for sale of the mortgaged property to satisfy it; and, so far as this record shows, may still pursue Mitchell for the residue unpaid despite him or Kerby.

Second—Notwithstanding, according to his own allegation, he held the note on Mitchell as collateral security for more than seven years, he permitted him to remain ignorant of the fact, and without his objection to make payments from time to time to Kerby, now almost if not quite sufficient in amount to extinguish the debt, none of which, if that judgment stands, he can now get benefit of, except that for $100 made in May, 1891, because they are all barred by limitation.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the lower court to overrule the demurrer of Kerby, and for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

TRIMBLE V. SCOTT, &C.

(Filed January 15, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Modification of judgment—Deficiency of land sold—Where a tract of land held by a married woman for life, remainder to her brothers and sisters, was sold by the husband, and the proceeds reinvested in a tract of land belonging to him, which he conveyed to his wife upon the same conditions and limitations upon which she had held the other tract, and in a suit by the remaindermen to recover of the husband the proceeds of the tract sold, judgment was rendered denying the relief sought upon the ground that the husband had properly reinvested the proceeds. In this action to vacate and modify that judgment, the court properly so modified it as to allow plaintiffs to recover of the husband compensation for a deficiency in the tract sold and conveyed by him to the wife, they having been misled by the recitals of his deed to the wife, and thus prevented from sooner discovering the mistake.

2. Limitation—As no cause of action accrued to plaintiffs, the remaindermen, until the death of the life tenant, limitation did not begin to run against them until then.

J. J. Cornelison, W. H. Holt and H. C. McKee for appellant.

Tyler & Apperson for appellees.

Appeal from Montgomery Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Lewis.

It appears there was in 1891 instituted an action by Wm. Lindsay and others to recover of W. C. Trimble $3,984.40 and interest, proceeds of a tract of land in Montgomery county containing fifty-six acres and thirty-five poles, which had in 1870 been conveyed by Wm. Scott, now deceased, to Mary Belle Trimble, wife of W. C. Trimble, for life, remainder to her brothers and sisters.

It was alleged by plaintiffs in that action that the tract of land was sold for the sum mentioned, which was in 1871 reinvested in a tract in Bourbon county belonging to W. C. Trimble, and by him conveyed upon the same conditions and limitations to his wife, Mary Belle, and was stipulated in the deed to contain the same area as did the first named tract. But judgment in that action was rendered in favor of defendant, Trimble, upon the ground that his wife, then dead, had the right to sell and re-invest in the Bourbon county land, which was of value equal to the tract in Montgomery county. The present action was, in 1893, brought by the same plaintiffs to vacate and modify the judgment rendered in the former action, so that they may have judgment for $407.22 and interest, which is the sum to which they are entitled by reason of deficiency in the quantity of the Bourbon county tract, estimating it at $70 per acre, which was the price the Montgomery tract was actually sold for.

Neither party has filed record of the former action; but the pleadings of this sufficiently show plaintiffs in that were denied relief upon the ground that Trimble, as agent or trustee of his wife, had re-invested proceeds of the Montgomery county land in a tract in Bourbon county of equal quantity and value, and they were, therefore, not injured. But if it be true, as now appears, that judgment was rendered upon a basis that was incorrect, and about which the lower court was misinformed or deceived, it was proper for the court, as it did do in the judgment appealed from, to modify it. For it is alleged and shown plaintiffs in that action were misled by recitals in the deed from W. C. Trimble to his wife, Mary Belle Trimble, as to quantity of land in the Bourbon tract, and did not nor could, by exercise of reasonable diligence, have sooner than was done by actual survey discovered the mistake.

There is no question raised as to actual value of either tract at the time Mary Bell Trimble died in 1889, and the criterion of value of the deficit and consequent recovery was properly adopted by the lower court as $70 per acre.

No cause of action accrued to plaintiffs in this action, who had only an interest in remainder until death of the life-tenant, and, therefore, limitation does not bar them.

Judgment affirmed.

WINCHESTER & LEXINGTON TURNPIKE CO. V. WICKLIFFE'S ADM'R.

(Filed January 27, 1897.)

1. Corporations—Dividends—Limitation—Limitation against an action by a stockholder to recover a dividend declared by a turnpike road company begins to run when the dividend is declared, although the stockholder must make a demand before he can sue.

2. Same—The fifteen years' statute, and not the five years' statute, applies to such an action, the declaration of the dividend being evidenced by the records of the company, signed by the proper officer.

Breckinridge & Shelby for appellant.

Samuel M. Wilson and Morton & Darnall for appellee.

Appeal from Fayette Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Guffy.

This action was instituted by the administrator of Robert Wickliffe against the appellant to recover $232.50, dividends due from the appellant upon the shares of stock owned and held by the decedent in the Lexington & Winchester Turnpike Co., which dividends accrued and were declared upon the shares so held, commencing with the year 1877 and ending in 1889. The appellant pleaded and relied on the statute of limitations as its only defense, relying on the five years and also on the ten-years statute of limitations, and alleging that the dividends had been appropriated by the appellant to its own use more than five years as to part, and more than ten years as to the residue. This suit was filed October 16, 1894. The court below sustained a demurrer to the answer, and, appellant declining to amend, judgment was rendered in favor of appellee for the amount claimed; and from that judgment appellant prosecutes this appeal.

The only question presented for decision is whether or not the claim, or any part of it, was barred by limitation.

Appellant insists that the case of Mercer County Court v. Springfield, Maxville & Harrodsburg Turnpike Co., 10 Bush, 254, is decisive of this case, and determines that the five-years statute bars a claim for the dividends declared. It is true that the court held that the dividends in that case were barred by the five-year statute, but that case is unlike the case at bar. It will be seen, upon examination of the opinion in that case, that the company denied the right of the county to the shares of stock, and of course it had never declared any dividends as due to the county court; but in the case at bar it is admitted, in effect, that the dividends had been declared in appellee's favor, and that if he had applied in time would have been entitled to the payment thereof.

Appellee's contention is that no right of action accrued to appellee until a demand for payment was made by him of the appellant; and, as no demand had been made until a few days before suit, the statute had not commenced to run prior thereto; also that the appellant held the dividends as trustee for appellee, and, therefore, the statute constituted no bar to a recovery, and cites Bank of Louisville v. Gray, 84 Ky., 575, in which the court said: "A bank is a trustee for its stockholder," and further announced the doctrine that the bank should not be regarded as holding the dividends of its stockholders adversely until after a demand is made. Appellant insists that so much of the opinion as is relied on by appellee was not necessary to a decision of that case, hence is only obiter dicta and not authority; but it is not necessary to pass upon that question, for the reason that in no event can that decision be decisive of this case.

A bank is in many respects different from a turnpike company, and the reasons for holding it to be a trustee for its stockholders might be much stronger than any reason for so holding in regard to a turnpike company. It is part of the business of a bank to receive and hold the money of its patrons payable on demand.

It is said in Beach on Private Corporations, volume 2, page 953, section 599: "A dividend declared operates as a specific appropriation of a part of the property of the company to its payment, and the claim of the shareholders as creditors develops into an absolute title to the property so appropriated."

"Accordingly, after the declaration of the dividend, the profits are considered as separated from the corporate property, and payable on demand to the individual stockholders as a debt due absolutely to them."

It is said, in Thompson on Corporations, volume 2, section 2232, that unless there is a statute dispensing with a demand, in actions for the recovery of money, a stockholder must prove a demand before he can maintain an action for a dividend. The same author says, in section 2229, that "dividends declared on the capital stock of a corporation, and payable on demand, are not subject to the running of prescription or limitation until there has been a demand and refusal;" and refers to 6 Md., 28 Pa. State, —, and other decisions.

The first-named case does not fully sustain the learned author, but the latter case seems to do so. It may, however, be conceded that a demand for payment of dividends declared in favor of stockholders must be made before suit can be maintained to recover them. The diversity of the statutes of limitation in the various States results sometimes in an apparent conflict of decisions of different courts of last resort. The question presented in this case must be governed by the statute of limitation of this State. Section 2514 of the Kentucky Statutes (which is but a re-enactment of former statutes) provides: "That civil actions, other than those for real property, shall be commenced within the following periods after the cause of action has accrued." * * * "An action or suit upon a recognizance, bond or written contract," * * * "or upon a bond or obligation for the payment of money or property, or for the performance of any undertaking, shall be commenced within fifteen years after the cause of action first accrued."

It seems clear to us that appellee's cause of action accrued when each dividend was declared. It is true that before he could maintain a suit he must make a demand. Our statutes require that the creditor of a decedent must make a demand of the administrator, accompanied with a proper affidavit, before he can maintain suit. Yet I presume that it would not be contended that the creditor could, by neglecting to make the demand, extend the time allowed by law in which to sue the debtor, if alive, or the administrator. It often happens that a party dies leaving notes not then due, and upon which no right to sue has accrued. Would it be contended that the creditor could neglect to make the proper demand of the administrator, and thus extend the time in which he might sue beyond the time mentioned in the statute as to limitation of actions? The statute of limitation begins to run from the time that the debtor is subject to be sued, or from the time that the creditor can, by his own act or of his own volition, become entitled to maintain an action. It is clear that the statute does not begin to run until the cause of action accrues; but the meaning of that is that whenever it is in the power of the creditor to enforce the payment of his demand, his cause of action has accrued, although he may be by law required to make a demand before he involves the debtor in a bill of costs. It may be said that the statute of limitation is a statute of repose, and should be so construed and enforced as to accomplish that object. It will be seen from the statute that an action upon a contract or obligation in writing is not barred until fifteen years from the time the cause of action accrued. The contract or obligation in this case was in writing, being part of the records of the company, signed by the proper officer—at least should have been so entered and signed; in fact, it is in law bound to be, and is so admitted in the pleading, not being denied. The appellee was, therefore, entitled to judgment for all the dividends that had been declared within fifteen years before the 16th of October, 1894 (the time of the institution of the suit).

It results from the foregoing that the court below erred in sustaining the demurrer to the entire answer. It should have been overruled as to the claim for dividends declared in 1877 and 1878, and sustained as to the residue of the answer.

The judgment is, therefore, reversed and cause remanded for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

HANCOCK V. COOPER.

(Filed January 30, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Guardian and ward—Where a guardian brought suit for the sale of land and a division of the proceeds, alleging that his ward had an interest in the remainder under her grandfather's will, but omitting to file the will as an exhibit, the land having been sold and the proceeds divided according to the construction indicated in the petition, the ward can not hold the guardian liable upon the ground that under the will she was entitled to a present joint interest with her father, the proper construction of the will being a matter about which skilled lawyers might differ.

P. B. Cheaney and Wm. R. Marrs for appellant.

W. P. Cooper and Montgomery Merritt for appellee.

Appeal from Henderson Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hazelrigg.

Milan Hancock in his will provided as follows: "I do also leave in trust to my friend and brother-in-law, H. U. Grigsby, for the benefit of my son, Milan Hancock, jr., and his children, two hundred and thirty-six acres of land. Said land, at the death of my son, Milan Hancock, jr., I wish equally divided between his children, and in case of the death of any of his children, they leaving children, said children are to receive a father's or mother's part."

There is abundant authoritative construction of language similar to that employed here to the effect that the son, Milan, took an estate for life and the children the remainder. Another clause of the will, however, may render this construction somewhat doubtful, and that is as follows: "It is also my wish that said farm be cultivated annually, and that my friend and brother-in-law, H. U. Grigsby, shall see that the proceeds are judiciously appropriated for the support of my son, Milan Hancock, and his family, and in educating his children."

What effect this provision should have on the construction heretofore suggested need not be determined, as the proper interpretation of the will is not now immediately involved, our only purpose in quoting it being to show that the true meaning is somewhat involved in doubt, and is a matter about which intelligent lawyers might well differ; a fact pertinent to the question before us, as we shall presently see.

Ella Hancock, the present appellant, was a daughter of Milan Hancock, jr., and the appellee at the instance of her father qualified as her guardian when she was nineteen years of age. In obedience to what seemed to be the best interests of all the parties interested in this land the appellee as guardian brought suit in the Henderson Circuit Court to sell it and invest or divide the proceeds. Accordingly he employed a firm of attorneys to bring the action, one of whom had been a circuit judge for some eighteen years, and the other a practicing attorney for some twenty-five years, and both of whom were of high standing professionally and otherwise.

The averments of the petition seem to the effect that Milan Hancock, jr., took an estate for life in the entire tract, with remainder to the children, Ella among the number. The will was referred to and made part of the petition, but seems not to have been in fact filed. The land was sold and the proceeds, in pursuance to the judgment of the chancellor, divided according to the construction indicated in the petition. Ella reached her majority in June, 1890, and in April, 1893, she filed the present action against her former guardian, the appellee, for the difference between what she ought to have received on a true construction of the will, namely, one giving her a present joint interest in the whole estate and limiting the interest of her father to a joint estate with his children but for his life only, and what she in fact did receive of the estate through the negligence and inattention, as she avers, of her guardian. Upon this state of case the chancellor dismissed her petition, and we think properly so. It does appear that subsequently to the distribution of the proceeds among the children of Milan Hancock, jr., of whom there were five, and his creditors, the children filed their separate petitions in the suit, charging that their father had only a life estate in one-sixth part of the land, and the court reversed its former ruling and adopted the construction for which the petitioners contended. Some of the children were, therefore, allowed to recover from the creditors the overpayment made them under the first construction. The appellant was not among those held entitled to recover, perhaps because she was estopped by limitation, though the reason does not appear.

We can not see upon what principle the guardian can be held liable for the loss occasioned by the court not construing the will in the first instance as it did in its last judgment. If the pleadings were unskillfully drafted or an important exhibit omitted, the appellee had at least done all a prudent man could do and all he would be expected to do in the conduct of his own business. He was not one learned in the law, and must have depended on his attorneys to properly prepare the pleadings and present the necessary exhibits showing the title of his ward. Moreover, just what interest his ward took was a matter about which, as we have seen, there was room for difference of opinion. A majority of this court is inclined to the opinion that the last construction of the chancellor was right, and yet it is a matter of extreme doubt. Why should the grandfather cut off his son--the head of a growing family—to a pittance, a fractional part of his share of the estate, and limit that to his life, leaving such share, as well as that of every child, uncertain and dependant on the number of children born and to be born. Perhaps a more reasonable construction would have been to deny the creditors of Milan Hancock, jr., any part of the estate as long at least as it was necessary for the support of his family or the education of his children. Under these circumstances what could the guardian do except to leave the questions involved to those skilled in the law? (Harris, &c. v. Berry, 82 Ky., 137.)

The judgment must be affirmed.

HOLLON V. LILLY.

(Filed January 30, 1897.)

1. Liability of judge for imprisonment of witness—The judge of a circuit court can not be required to respond in damages for committing a person to jail for refusing to testify before the grand jury unless he acted either maliciously or corruptly.

2. Same—Evidence—In an action against a judge to recover damages for false imprisonment it was not competent for plaintiff to prove that the defendant had a jug of whisky in his room, and had taken two or three drinks on the morning he committed plaintiff to jail.

B. F. Day for appellant.

Hathaway & Cardwell and Beckner & Jouett for appellee.

Appeal from Clark Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Burnam.

This suit was instituted by the plaintiff, Hollon, against the defendant, Lilly, alleging that defendant was the presiding judge of the Wolfe Circuit Court; that at the July term of said court, in 1892, whilst the grand jury was in session, he was called on to testify; that, after answering other questions, the foreman of the grand jury asked him if he had had carnal intercourse with any woman in Wolfe county within the past twelve months, and that upon his refusal to answer the said foreman of the grand jury carried him before the defendant, who ruled that he must answer said question; that upon his refusal to do so he willfully, maliciously and corruptly directed the jailer of Wolfe county to confine him in jail until he should answer; that said jailer, in conformity to said order, did keep him in jail for about eight hours, and that by the aforesaid malicious and corrupt conduct he had been humiliated and disgraced, and sought damages.

Defendant admitted that he was the circuit judge of the Wolfe Circuit Court; admits that the plaintiff was brought before him by the foreman of the grand jury, but denies that the foreman of the grand jury asked plaintiff if he had had carnal intercourse with any woman in Wolfe county within twelve months before that time; says, on the contrary, that the question propounded by the foreman of the grand jury was: "Do you know of any person committing the offense of adultery in Wolfe county within the past year?" and that plaintiff refused to answer this question, and notified the court that he could send him to jail if he wanted to, and that he would not answer; and after admonishing the foreman of the grand jury not to ask plaintiff any question that would incriminate himself, he notified the plaintiff that it was his duty to answer the question of the foreman of the grand jury, and upon his refusal to do so he committed him to jail for contempt. He claims that he was perfectly friendly to the plaintiff; that he had no ill-will, and that he was compelled, in the discharge of his official duty and the proper administration of justice, to force an answer to the question propounded by the foreman of the grand jury.

These allegations of the answer were all traversed of record, and, a jury being empaneled who were sworn to try the issue, the plaintiff was introduced as a witness. He testified, in substance, as follows: "Brown, the foreman of the grand jury, took me into the presence of the defendant, and announced that I had refused to answer a question before the grand jury. The defendant then asked the foreman to state the question, whereupon the foreman said: 'One of the questions was: 'Do you know anyone in Wolfe county being guilty of adultery within the past twelve months?'" I then spoke up and said: "Judge, I have answered that question in the negative, and my answer is true." The foreman, Brown, then said to the court that I had been asked, "Do you know of anyone guilty of the offense of fornication in Wolfe county during the last year?" I spoke up and said: "Judge, I have also answered that question in the negative, and my answer is true." The foreman then said to the court that I had been asked, "Have you had carnal sexual intercourse with any woman in Wolfe county within the last twelve months?" I then spoke up and said: "Judge, I decline to answer this question." The defendant then said to the foreman: "You can not make a witness criminate himself or testify against himself." He then turned and said to me: "You must answer the question, or I will have to send you to jail until you do." I responded that "I would never answer the question, and if I must go to jail for not answering the question, it had as well be done now as any time." Defendant then ordered me to jail. I was not confined in a cell, but in one of the rooms of the jail for about eight hours. The defendant and myself had always been friendly, and he was my attorney in one law suit before he was elected judge," etc. The testimony of the plaintiff was corroborated by several witnesses. He then introduced Brown, the foreman of the grand jury, who said: "I brought the plaintiff, Hollon, into court, and said to defendant that Mr. Hollon had refused to answer a question. I said: "We asked him if he knew of any person being guilty of adultery." Mr. Hollon said: "Judge, I have answered that question in the negative." I

Previous to this time, in October, 1891, being heavily involved in debt, the said McElroy and his wife conveyed to W. E. Selecman a deed to another tract of land in Washington county, Kentucky, containing 335 acres, on which his residence was situated, and the said Selecman immediately reconveyed same to his wife, Mary B. McElroy, in consideration of the surrender of her inchoate right of dower in all his other lands, and her agreement to unite with him in the conveyance of same.

Subsequent to the assignment aforesaid the assignee brought his suit in the Washington Circuit Court for a settlement of his trust, and for a sale of all the aforesaid real estate; and in said action the debts of the said McElroy were ascertained and his real estate was sold. The two tracts of land, known as the Cooper and Palmer places, were sold to pay the mortgage debt to the Mechanics' Trust Company, and brought about $2,200 more than the amount of said debt. The other unincumbered real estate was also sold.

Among the indebtedness of the said R. A. McElroy was a judgment recovered in the Franklin Circuit Court by the State National Bank of Kentucky on an obligation for $1,500 executed by the said McElroy to one McKay, and sold by McKay to W. J. Hendrick, and which was endorsed and discounted by said Hendrick to said bank. Upon the maturity of this obligation of McElroy the said bank brought suit and recovered judgment against R. A. McElroy, E. E. McKay and W. J. Hendrick. Upon this judgment executions were issued to Washington county, the home of R. A. McElroy, and to Nelson county, the home of E. E. McKay, which were returned "no property found" by the sheriffs of the respective counties. Suit had already been instituted in the Washington Circuit Court in the name of the Merchants National Bank, which was filed February 17, 1893, J. B. Wathen & Bro., and also by Isaac Curry, to subject the 335-acre tract of land, which had been conveyed to Mrs. Mary B. McElroy, to the payment of debts due to the said parties by R. A. McElroy.

After the return of no property found aforesaid the State National Bank also instituted a suit and sued out an attachment, and had it levied upon the same 335-acre tract of land, and sought to subject same to the payment of their debt upon the ground that the conveyance of said property to the said Mary B. McElroy was without sufficient consideration at a time said McElroy was insolvent and when he did not have the legal right to make such disposition of his property. These suits were prosecuted to judgment, and the conveyance to Mrs. McElroy was set aside by a judgment of the Washington Circuit Court, the court holding that the value of Mrs. McElroy's inchoate right of dower in all her husband's real estate was only worth the sum of $2,442.69, whilst the value of the tract of land conveyed to her by the deed aforesaid was fixed at $7,705; the court holding also that the conveyance of said land, to the extent that the value of said tract exceeded the inchoate right of dower to said Mrs. McElroy, was illegal. It further fixed the value of this land at $23 an acre, and held that the residue of said 335-acre tract was liable, first, to pay the debt of the Merchants National Bank, then the debt of Wathen & Bro., and lastly, was liable for the debt due the State National Bank, and that all these attaching creditors had acquired liens on same by reason of the institution of the suits aforesaid.

The judgment of the State National Bank v. McElroy had, in the meantime, been discharged by W. J. Hendrick, and this debt was assigned by the State National Bank to said Hendrick, and also all the rights acquired by them by reason of the institution of the suit aforesaid. In the judgment of the Washington Circuit Court they held that the defendant, McElroy, was entitled to his homestead, and that the defendant, Mary B. McElroy, was entitled to her inchoate right of dower in all the lands of her husband, including those mortgaged to the Mechanics Trust Company, but, of course, same was subject to the mortgage which she had signed. There were some exceptions raised by the creditors to the homestead allotment, on the ground that same was worth more than the sum of $1.000. These exceptions were overruled, however, and the defendant, Hendrick, excepted and prayed an appeal to this court from said allotment of homestead.

As the proof on this point is contradictory, we do not feel authorized to disturb the homestead allotment. The said W. J. Hendrick also excepted to the action of the court in assigning to Mrs. Mary B. McElroy 106.2 acres of land out of the 335-acre tract which had been conveyed to her under the deed of Selecman as the value of her inchoate right of dower in all the landed estate of her husband. The defendant excepted to this action of the court in making this allotment entirely out of the 335-acre tract on which he had acquired a lien by reason of the institution by the State National Bank of said suit and the suing out of their attachment, and it is insisted by him that the value of her inchoate right of dower should have been ascertained in each tract of land, and the purchase money of each of said tracts should have been made to contribute its proportion to the fund due M. B. McElroy for her inchoate right of dower in same found to be due to her.

It is evident that this is entirely practicable, as the two tracts which were covered by the mortgages of the Mechanics Trust Company and the tract upon which Evans held a lien sold for more than enough to pay said lien, and to have contributed their pro rata to discharge the lien of the appellant.

The record shows that the court has under its control and in the hands of its officer sufficient funds arising from the sale of said land to make up to appellant the value of that portion of the home tract which was taken in the allotment of contingent dower to Mary B. McElroy.

By the action of the court in charging the whole of this sum so found to be due to Mrs. McElroy to the 335-acre tract of land, the lien which had been acquired by reason of the vigilance and activity of the State National Bank and Hendrick, as their assignee, was rendered nugatory, as said land failed to more than pay the lien debts which preceded his. In our opinion, this was an error on the part of the court below. The value of the inchoate right of dower of Mrs. McElroy should have been ascertained in each tract of land upon the basis that all of said tracts should pay to her the $2,442, which was found to be the value of same.

No exceptions seem to have been taken to the valuation placed by the court upon the 106 acres of land allotted to her, and that allotment is not disturbed; but the court is of the opinion that there should have been paid over to the defendant, Hendrick, from the purchase money arising from the sale of each of the other tracts the pro rata which would have been due to said Mary B. McElroy for her inchoate right of dower in the purchase price of same upon the basis that said interest in the whole of said lands was worth $2,442, to indemnify him against the allotment of this entire sum out of the land on which he held a lien.

And for this reason the judgment of the lower court in this case is reversed and this cause is remanded for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

The court delivered the following modification and extension of opinion March 19, 1897:

As the entire sum allowed to the appellee, Mary McElroy, wife of R. A. McElroy, as the value of her contingent right of dower in the real estate of her husband, which was fixed at twenty-four hundred and forty-two dollars and sixteen cents ($2,442.16), was alloted to her out of the tract of land on which appellant, Hendrick, had acquired his lien, we think that appellant is entitled to have his judgment paid out of any funds which arose from the sale of such real property which is in the hands of the assignee of McElroy or the court, not, however, exceeding the amount fixed as the value of such dower.

BROWN, &C. V. ILLINOIS CENTRAL R. R. CO., &C.

(Filed January 27, 1897.)

1. Carriers—Contract limiting common-law liability—A stipulation in a contract with a railroad company for the shipment of live stock, to the effect that no claim for loss or damage shall be valid against the company unless it shall be made in writing, verified by affidavit, and delivered to a particular agent of the company within ten days of the removal of the stock from the cars, is in violation of section 196 of the Constitution, which provides that no common carrier shall be permitted to contract for relief from its common-law liability.

2. Alternative pleading—An allegation that a loss occurred by the negligence of one or the other of two defendants, and that plaintiff does not know which, is not good as to either of the defendants. Subsection 4 of section 113 of the Civil Code does not authorize such pleading, there being no effort to allege alternative facts, the alternative allegation being as to the party of whom the facts are alleged.

Jno. W. Ray for appellant.

Z. W. Bugg & Son and J. M. Nichols for appellee.

Appeal from Carlisle Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge DuRelle.

The appellant brought suit against appellee, the Illinois Central R. R. Co. and the Baltimore, Ohio & Southwestern R. R. Co., the petition setting out in three paragraphs damages claimed to have resulted from alleged negligence in transporting three cars of hogs from Bardwell, Ky., to Cincinnati, Ohio. The negligence was averred to have consisted in the delivery of another carload of hogs of inferior size and quality to those shipped by appellant in place of one carload of appellant's hogs, and unnecessary delay in the transportation of the other two cars to Cincinnati, by reason of which the animals deteriorated in weight and quality.

It is unnecessary to consider the motions to quash the return of service of process, or the demurrer to the jurisdiction interposed by the Baltimore, Ohio & Southwestern R. R. Co.

After these motions and demurrer had been overruled and the petition twice amended, a general demurrer to the petition as amended was sustained by the trial court, apparently upon the theory that appellant had not sufficiently alleged compliance with paragraph 5 of the contract of shipment, as follows: "It is further agreed by the shipper no claim for loss or damage to stock shall be valid against said railroad company unless it shall be made in writing, verified by affidavit, and delivered to the general freight agent of the railroad company, or to the agent of the company at the station from which the stock is shipped, or to the agent of the company at the point of destination, within ten days of the time said stock is removed from said cars."

It is unnecessary to consider this question, as this court has decided, in the case of the Ohio & Mississippi R. R. Co. v. Tabor (17 KY. LAW REP., 1411), that such a stipulation is in violation of section 196 of the Constitution, which provides that no common carrier shall be permitted to contract for relief from its common law liability.

But there is another ground of objection to the petition. In each paragraph it is alleged in substantially the same language that the loss and damage occurred "by reason of the negligence of one or the other of defendants, or of both defendants, and as to which plaintiffs are unable to say as to whether the one or the other, or both, but one of these alternatives is true."

It is to be supposed that this alternative pleading was intended to be drawn under subsection 4 of section 113 of the Code of Practice, which provides: "But a party may allege, alternatively, the existence of one or another fact, if he state that one of them is true, and that he does not know which of them is true." But we do not think that such pleading is authorized by the Code provision. The Code provides for averment of alternative facts. The facts thus averred in the alternative must be alleged of and concerning a definite party or parties. There is no effort in this pleading to allege alternative facts. The facts are definitely averred, but the party of whom they are alleged to be true is alleged in the alternative. Under the rule that a pleading is to be taken most strongly against the pleader, this averment of the petition is insufficient as against either of the appellees.

Wherefore, the judgment is affirmed.

DAVIS, &C. V. CALVERT.

(Filed January 30, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Deed set aside on account of grantor's mental incapacity--A conveyance of land, in consideration of grantee's undertaking to support the grantor, should have been set aside in this action by the grantee against the widow and heirs of the grantor to have the deed reformed on account of a misdescription of the land, it appearing that the grantor did not have sufficient capacity to make a contract.

2. Dower—It appearing that the widow of the grantor had separated from him, and at the time of his death was living in adultery with another man, she is not entitled to dower and homestead as against the grantee's claim to have compensation for the support of the grantor secured to him out of the land.

Wm. H. Yost for appellants.

Jonson & Wickliffe for appellee.

Appeal from Muhlenburg Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Burnam.

This suit was instituted by the plaintiff against the defendants, Mary E. Calvert, Annie L. Davis and Cordelia Shields, as widow and heirs at law of Joe Calvert, deceased, plaintiff claiming that during the lifetime of J. Washington Calvert the said J. W. Calvert had owned a tract of 100 acres of land in Muhlenburg county; that he had entered into a contract with the plaintiff to support, clothe, lodge and feed him during his lifetime, and that in consideration of said services he agreed to convey to plaintiff said land, and that pursuant to said agreement he took said Calvert into his family, fed, lodged and nursed him until his death on the 29th day of July, 1893, about four months thereafter; that said J. W. Calvert had put plaintiff in possession of the land, and that he has held possession ever since.

He says that said Calvert, in pursuance to said agreement, acknowledged a deed whereby he attempted to complete his contract and to convey to the plaintiff the land in question, but that in making said deed, by inadvertance of the draftsman, there was inserted a misdescription of the land, and instead of describing the land which he had purchased and which said J. W. Calvert sold him he put in the boundary to another tract of land of 100 acres which adjoins the one intended to be conveyed, and he brought this suit asking that the deed be reformed and corrected, and that a new deed be made to him in accordance with his contract.

The defendants, Mary E. Calvert, Annie L. Davis and Cordelia Shields are respectively the wife and daughters of the decedent, J. W. Calvert.

It is alleged that Mary E. Calvert had lived apart from her husband since 1872; that she had lived in adultery with defendant, Thomas Nelson, and that the other defendants had never made any provision for their father. The defendant, Davis, and others, for answer to the plaintiff's petition, admit that Washington Calvert owned the land mentioned in the petition; admit that he was old and feeble and had been living apart from their mother and themselves without any intercouse from the year 1871 to the latter part of March, 1893, but they deny that said J. W. Calvert ever proposed to the plaintiff to convey him the land in question in consideration of the agreement of plaintiff to take care of him, or that plaintiff ever accepted said proposal in good faith, or that Calvert ever surrendered the possession of said land to the plaintiff; deny that said Calvert made or acknowledged the deed on the 23d day of April, 1893, which is relied on, and charge that the alleged deed from J. W. Calvert to plaintiff was made and acknowledged only a short time before his death and at a time when he was confined to his bed in a low state of health, and when said Calvert did not have mind, or capacity to understand what he was doing, or to understand the purpose or object of said deed. They charge that at the death of said J. W. Calvert the plaintiff took forcible possession of said land. They claim that they are respectively the wife and children of the deceased, and that the deceased had never made any provision for them, and had driven them from his home and would never permit them to return, even though requested to do so. They charge that said J. W. Calvert, for many months before his death and at the time of his removal to the house of the plaintiff, did not have capacity to contract or convey or to understand the purport or conditions of any legal or other written contract; that he was in such a feeble condition that he had no mind, or not enough to understand what he was doing, and that he was incapable mentally of executing any valid contract or binding obligation on him, and they ask that said conveyance from decedent to plaintiff be canceled; that the contract be declared void and the land owned by decedent be adjudged to them as the only heirs at law of said decedent; that plaintiff's petition be dismissed, etc.

The affirmative allegations of this answer were all traversed of record, and upon it considerable proof was taken. A good many witnesses testified for the plaintiff in substance that they thought the mind of the decedent, about the time of the making of the deed, was as good as it had ever been, and some witnesses testified that they thought he had capacity to execute such a paper, but it seems to us that all the evidence in this case conclusively shows that for several years before the death of decedent he had been unbalanced and unsound in mind, sometimes acting rationally and sometimes "flighty," as the witnesses put it.

Something more than two years before plaintiff took him to live with him he went to reside with one Walston and wife, who took care of him for the use of his hundred acres of land. Finally Walston and wife, upon their own statement, suggested to the decedent that he should execute to them a deed to the said hundred acres of land in consideration of their taking care of him and providing for him during his life. Their testimony shows that decedent for a long time refused to do this, but that ultimately, under apprehension that he might be turned out of doors, agreed to execute the deed; that thereupon the said Walston went to town and had an attorney prepare the deed in question, but that after he took it out home and thought about the matter he came to the conclusion that Calvert did not have sufficient mind to execute a binding contract and he, therefore, declined to go on with its execution. He then sent the decedent in a buggy to the house of plaintiff and suggested to the plaintiff that he make such a contract with the decedent, and after the old man had been at his house for some time he brought out the clerk and some witnesses and changed the name of the grantee in the deed which Walston had prepared, and he had him execute the same deed which had been prepared to be executed to Walston.

The clerk testifies that decedent was lying in bed at that time with a dreadful case of chronic diarrhoea; also suffering from dropsy and in a very miserable condition.

The testimony of Dr. Townes is to the effect that he had known Calvert since his youth; that he was a man of weak and unsound mind; that he could not understand the purport of a contract, and that he was not capable of transacting business of any kind. This evidence of Dr. Townes was strongly supported by the testimony of Dr. J. L. Taylor, the two Walstons, J. W. Maple, S. T. Love, C. M. Morehead, and perhaps others, and the fact that decedent executed the deed which is sought to be corrected in this action without knowing that the description in said deed did not conform to that of his own land clearly establishes to our minds, taken in connection with the evidence, the contention of the defendants that he was incapable of executing said conveyance, and that he did not have capacity at the time of its execution sufficient to contract; and the court is of the opinion that no title passed to J. L. Calvert under the deed executed to him by said J. W. Calvert, dated April 23, 1893, and that same should be canceled and the real estate owned by said J. W. Calvert at his death descend and belong to his heirs at law. But, in view of the fact that the said J. L. Calvert provided for and took care of the decedent during his last illness, we are of the opinion that he is entitled to proper compensation for such services.

There being strong evidence that the widow has been living in adultery with another man since her separation from her husband, we are of opinion that she is not entitled to dower and homestead in said property as against the right of said J. L. Calvert to have such compensation secured to him out of the land in contest.

For the reasons indicated this cause is reversed and the same is remanded for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

KING, &C. v. TILFORD, &C.

(Filed February 2, 1897.)

Modification of injunction pending appeal—In granting an appeal from a judgment granting, modifying, perpetuating or dissolving an injunction the lower court may, in its discretion, make an order suspending, modifying or continuing the injunction during pendency of the appeal. But such order is subject to revision by this court or by a judge thereof in vacation. And this power to revise applies as well when a perpetual injunction is the relief sought as when the injunction is merely ancillary or temporary; and also applies to an order overruling as well as to one sustaining a motion to suspend, modify or continue the injunction. But the court is of opinion in this case that the ends of justice do not require this court to modify the injunction pending the appeal, the lower court having refused to do so.

Stone & Sudduth for appellants.

Pirtle & Trabue for appellees.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Law and Equity division.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Lewis.

August 24, 1896, there was granted in the action instituted by appellees, members of the board of public safety, an injunction restraining appellants, members of the board of aldermen of the city of Louisville, from proceeding to try them upon certain charges and specifications and from removing, or attempting to remove, them from their offices as members of such board of public safety, or in any manner interfering with the exercise of the duties thereof. That injunction was, by the law and equity division of the Jefferson Circuit Court, where the action was pending, dissolved, but subsequently reinstated by order of a judge of this court, then in vacation.

Upon final hearing the injunction was perpetuated, and an appeal from the judgment so rendered was taken to the Court of Appeals; but, subsequent to rendition of that judgment, a motion was made under section 747, Civil Code, in the lower court for a modification of the injunction, which was overruled. And now this is a motion, made in the Court of Appeals pending appeal from the judgment of the lower court to modify the injunction in the manner to be mentioned.

In our opinion section 747 was, as language used shows, intended to make supersedeas on appeals thereafter inapplicable to judgments granting, modifying, perpetuating or dissolving injunctions, and instead to give the court rendering such judgment discretion at the time an appeal is taken to make an order suspending, modifying or continuing the injunction during the pendency of the appeal. Though whatever order the lower court may make in respect to the injunction is, as in terms provided, subject to revision and final determination by the Court of Appeals; or, if in vacation, by any judge thereof, how far the injunction shall be suspended, modified or continued pending the appeal; and we think this power to revise pending an appeal applies as well where a perpetual injunction is the sum of relief sought in an action as where it is merely ancillary or temporary; and also as well to an order of the lower court overruling as to one sustaining a motion to suspend, modify or continue the injunction.

The motion then, being properly before and subject to present consideration by this court, must be determined as the ends of justice require.

The particular feature of the judgment appealed from, to which objection is made, and the nature and extent of the modification moved for by appellants is that the perpetual injunction applies to and restrains, pending the appeal, any and every trial of members of the board of public safety by the board of aldermen, whereas it should, and the motion is, that it, by this court, be limited in its operation to further proceedings upon the charges and specifications described and set forth in the petition of appellees.

Assuming without question the injunction adjudged by the lower court does in fact restrain appellants, the board of aldermen, pending the appeal, from proceeding to try and displace members of the board of public safety upon other and additional charges and specifications, it does not necessarily follow we should now, to prejudice of other cases having precedence, take up and pass upon this motion, when proper determination of it practically requires consideration of the whole case.

Appellants, composing the board of aldermen, and claiming jurisdiction to try appellees upon charges involving removal from office, may properly and decently insist upon conservation of all their rightful authority. But it does not seem to us they should know or seek to know there were new and additional charges ready to be made against appellants, or that a suggestion of that fact by them is deserving of consideration by this court. In this connection it is not improper to refer to the finding of the lower court that the charge made by appellees in their petition that the trial of them was in pursuance of a conspiracy by appellants to unlawfully displace them had been made out by proof. For, in view of that finding, this court should not dispose of the present motion until ready to determine on its merits the whole case.

The motion is, therefore, for the present, overruled.

DOWING V. CARR'S ADM'R.

(Filed Feburary 3, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Administrators—An administrator may, in course of settlement and distribution of the estate of his intestate, acquire by assignment a promissory note, and as such maintain an action thereon without specifically alleging the obvious fact that such note is an asset of the estate.

2. Pleading—A denial in the reply that the note sued on was obtained by fraud, misrepresentation "and" covin was good.

L. J. Moore for appellant.

Geo. C. Webb for appellee.

Appeal from Fayette Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Lewis.

An administrator may, in course of settlement and distribution of the estate of decedent, acquire, by transfer and assignment a promissory note, and of course as such, maintain an action thereon without specifically alleging the obvious fact that such note is an asset of the estate.

In the answer was a statement that execution of the note was obtained by fraud, misrepresentation and covin; and it is argued that the reply was defective because it contained simply a denial that said note was obtained by fraud, misrepresentation and covin.

Fraud means and comprehends deceit in all the modes in which it may be practiced; and, therefore, it is inaccurate to say a party was in a particular transaction guilty of fraud or misrepresentation, or fraud or covin; because, if guilty of either of the two last, he was necessarily guilty of the former. So, according to a fair interpretation of the language used in the reply, it may and should be held and considered as equivalent to a denial that execution of the note was procured by fraud committed by misrepresentation or covin, the two last being nearly, if not quite, synonomous terms.

The evidence on the trial of the case was sufficient to authorize the jury, under proper instructions given, to find that the note was based upon a valuable consideration, and executed by appellant voluntarily, and without fraud of any kind being practiced upon him.

Judgment affirmed.

LEWIS V. HAYDEN, &C.

(Filed February 3, 1897—Not to be reported.)

School trustees—Damages for breach of promise to employ teacher—Plaintiff is not entitled to recover damages on account of the refusal of defendants to reduce to writing and sign an agreement which she alleges they, as trustees of a common school district, made to employ her as teacher, it appearing that the promise was made by only two of the three defendants, and that one of them was not at the time of the promise a trustee, and that the other was willing to complete the contract.

H. P. Cooper for appellant.

H. W. Rives and Finley Shuck for appellees.

Appeal from Marion Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Burnam.

The appellant instituted this suit in the Marion Circuit Court against the three defendants, Hayden, Burdett and Wade, for damages for breach of contract in refusing to reduce to writing and sign the agreement, which she alleges they made, by which they promised her that she should teach the common school in District No. 14, in Marion county, for the year 1894, and in wrongfully and illegally compelling her to abandon the schoolhouse against her will and in violation of her rights.

The facts in this case, as stated by the appellant, are that she met Hayden in Lebanon and asked him to vote for her for the school; that he replied that so far as he was concerned he had no objection, but that he would see the other trustees and let her know; that on July 11, 1894, she went to the house of Burdett and there met Wade and Burdett, and that they talked over the matter; that Wade and Burdett agreed that she should have the school, and fixed the time at which the school should begin, viz, on the 20th day of July, 1894. No written contract was entered into, and Hayden did not know of the meeting and was not there. A few days after this conversation with Burdett and Wade she received a letter from Wade, in which he notified her that he could not comply with his promise.

The facts show that at the time of this meeting Wade had never qualified as trustee, and that Hayden was not present at the meeting referred to, and knew nothing about it.

Section 4445 of the Kentucky Statutes says: "The trustees in their corporate capacity, at a meeting called for that purpose, shall employ a qualified teacher; * * * no teacher shall be empoyed until after the election and qualification of the new board of trustees. It (the contract between the teacher and trustees) must expressly prescribe that its terms are subject to the provisions of the common school law, and shall be in writing, signed by the teacher and at least two of the trustees." It is evident that appellant never had any contract with the defendants in their official capacity as required by the above statute.

In this case Burdett admits that he promised her the school, and said that he was willing for her to have it. The evidence shows that Hayden never promised her the school at any time, and was not present at the meeting, whilst Wade admits that he promised her that she should have it, but says that said promise was made before he was qualified as trustee, and was wholly without consideration; that in a day or two he notified appellant that he could not comply with the promise, and that the agreement made by Burdett and himself with appellant was never reduced to writing or signed by anybody.

We do not think that any legal obligation rested on Wade to execute the mere promise made by him to appellant, and it is apparent from the evidence of appellant herself that she was not in any way prevented from making any other contracts by said promise, or that she was in any way subjected to loss by failure to find other employment by reason of same. We think she has wholly failed to make out a cause of action, and the judgment of the lower court is, therefore, affirmed.

CABEL, RECEIVER v. BINGHAM.

(Filed February 4, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Subscription—Peremptory instruction—In this action by the receiver of a bank to recover a subscription alleged to have been made by defendant to the capital stock of the bank, there was no testimony tending to show that the alleged subscription was made, and a peremptory instruction to find for defendant was proper.

Chapman & Sampson and J. W. Alcorn for appellant.

Tinsley & Faulkner for appellee.

Appeal from Bell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Lewis.

Upon the issue whether appellee Bingham subscribed the sum of $2,000 to the capital stock of the Peoples Bank, we think appellant Cabell, receiver, failed to prove any fact from which can be drawn a reasonable inference that he did.

The subscription list is not produced with his name upon it, nor is there exhibited any books or papers of the bank showing that he made the subscription. Indeed the witness, Colston, who was the prominent and active person in soliciting subscription of stock necessary to establish the bank, and the subscription list fails to state that appellee's name ever was by himself or by his authority put upon it. It is admitted by appellee that he took stock to the amount of $1,000, which he transferred to his wife, and that appellant in his petition concedes was fully paid. But except what purports to be an account, taken from the books of the bank, there is nothing to show that he was a stockholder or entitled to any benefits as such, and even that account does not show, as counsel argues is so, that any dividend was ever declared or paid to him on stock amounting to the sum of $2,000. Indeed for that matter there is no proof he ever received any dividends at all.

In our opinion the lower court was bound to instruct the jury peremptorily to find for appellee.

Judgment affirmed.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO. V. JOHNSON.

(Filed February 4, 1897.)

Appeals—Failure to file transcript in time—An order extending time to file bill of exceptions does not operate to extend the time for filing transcript in this court. If it becomes necessary to have an extension of time for that purpose, it must be granted by this court.

Wright & McElroy for appellant.

W. E. Garth for appellee.

Appeal from Warren Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Lewis.

As provided by section 734, Civil Code, "the mode of bringing the judgment of an inferior court to the Court of Appeals, for reversal or modification, shall be by appeal, which shall be granted as matter of right to a party or privy against a party or parties by the court rendering the judgment, on motion made during the term at which it is rendered or thereafter by the clerk of the Court of Appeals, on application of either party or his privy upon filing in the office of said clerk a copy of the judgment from which he appeals."

But section 738 provides that where an appeal has been granted by the court rendering the judgment "the appellant shall file the transcript in the office of the clerk of the Court of Appeals at least twenty days before the first day of the second term of said court next after the granting of the appeal, unless the court extend the time, as, for cause shown, the court may do."

And section 740 provides that "if he fails to file the transcript within the time allowed by section 738, or by the court pursuant thereto, his appeal shall be dismissed."

The appeal granted in this case by the court rendering the judgment was, December 18, 1896, on motion of appellees, dismissed because the transcript was not filed within the time prescribed by section 738. And now the present motion is to set aside that order of dismissal upon the ground that at the time, which was during the June term, 1896, the judgment was rendered, and an appeal to the Court of Appeals granted, leave was given to appellant until the fifth day of the next term of the inferior court in which to present and file its bill of exceptions therein.

Section 334 does authorize the court rendering a judgment to give to the party objecting time to procure a bill of exceptions, not beyond a day in the succeeding term to be fixed by the court, but the time within which the appellant is required by section 738 to file the transcript can not be computed from the date of filing the bill of exceptions; but, as therein expressly provided, from the date of the order granting the appeal which, as prescribed by section 734, must be made, if at all, during the term at which the judgment is rendered. This court, therefore, had, according to the explicit requirement of section 740, no discretion but to sustain the motion to dismiss the appeal made December 18, 1896.

Whatever surviving hardship there may be in enforcing these rules of practice can be avoided by the appellant applying to the Court of Appeals for an extension of the time of filing the transcript, which, for cause shown, may, as provided by section 738, be done.

The motion to set aside the order of January 18, 1896, is overruled.

POWERS, LITTLE & MCCORMICK V. SMITH.

(Filed February 6, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Injunction—Evidence of payment—The evidence in this case is sufficient to sustain a judgment perpetuating an injunction restraining the levy of an execution issued upon a replevin bond upon the ground that the bond had been paid.

Howard & Clay for appellants.

Holt & Holt for appellee.

Appeal from Harlan Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge DuRelle.

The appellee, Smith, brought suit to enjoin the levy of an execution issued on a replevin bond executed in favor of appellants for $338, alleging that he had paid and satisfied the bond by payment made to J. C. McKnight, attorney for appellants, at the law office of W. F. Hall at Harlan Courthouse, and had taken a receipt in full of said amount, but that the receipt had been lost and could not be produced. The petition alleged that the settlement had been made in the presence of McKnight, A. L. Coldiron, the then sheriff, and W. F. Hall, who was appellee's attorney.

Plaintiff's testimony was to the effect that he paid the amount to Coldiron, as sheriff, and that Coldiron immediately, and in his presence, paid it to McKnight as attorney for appellants.

It is urged, on behalf of appellants, that this was a fatal variance between the allegation and the proof. This does not, however, appear to us to be material, as the evidence showed the money to have been paid to McKnight for appellee by the sheriff. It has been held that there is no material variance between the averment of a contract as made between A and B, and proof of such a contract made by an agent for and on behalf of A with B (Newman's Pleading and Practice, page 734). Moreover, the appellants in their answer denied that appellee had ever paid to them, or to any person for them, any amount on the debt aforesaid, except $36.

The lower court perpetuated the injunction, and the sole question remaining is whether the evidence sustains the judgment. The evidence is most unsatisfactory on both sides. The deposition of McKnight, who had removed to Oklahoma, was taken, but it was lost, and supplied on a reference to the master. In that supplied deposition he denies the receipt of any sum upon this debt except $36. He states that he received a considerable sum from Hall in payment of various claims which he held as attorney for appellants and other parties, amounting to some $900. He does not, however, undertake to give any exact data as to the amounts of the various debts, or what amount was paid upon any one of them.

On the other hand, the appellee, while stating that Hall paid debts amounting to somewhat over $900 on his behalf, gives no exact statement in regard to any of them; nor does Hall profess to be able to state the debts he settled for Smith, or that this debt of $338 was one of those which he settled. He states in general terms that he paid between $1,000 and $1,600 on behalf of appellee out of purchase money due by him to appellee for property purchased.

In view of all the testimony, we are unable to say that the chancellor, who may be supposed to have personal knowledge of the witnesses, erred in his conclusion of fact.

The judgment is affirmed.

The Kentucky Law Reporter.

EDITOR:
WALTER G. CHAPMAN, ... Frankfort, Ky.

VOL. 18. JUNE 1, 1897. No. 23

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

MERCER v. PARK CITY MINERAL WATER CO.

(Filed January 15, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Corporations—Individual liability of stockholders—Where a corporation which purchased land upon which there was a vendor's lien undertook with its vendor as a part of the consideration to discharge that lien, the corporation becoming insolvent and the land failing to sell for enough to satisfy the lien, the stockholders are not personally liable to the holder of the lien, the chancellor's finding that they owe nothing upon their stock being sustained by the evidence, from which it appears that by agreement of the parties at the time of the organization of the corporation no stock was to be issued except paid-up stock, and that the land was received by the corporation in full payment of its entire capital stock, which was an adequate consideration, to which agreement the immediate vendor of the corporation was a party.

2. Substitution—The original vendor has no rights against the corporation or its stockholders except by way of substitution to the rights of his vendee, who sold and conveyed to the corporation.

Geo. H. Galloway for appellant.

Edward W. Hines, Mitchell & DuBose and Wright & McElroy for appellee.

Appeal from Warren Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge White.

This is an appeal from a judgment of the Warren Circuit Court dismissing appellant's action.

On the 10th day of October, 1891, the appellant, D. E. Mercer, sold and conveyed to L. C. Johnson a small tract of land, on which was located a well of mineral water, which was said to be of great value for medicinal purposes. The price paid and to be paid was $5,000, one-third of which was at the time paid in money, and the remainder to be paid in two equal payments in one and two years thereafter, and appellant, upon the payment and execution of the notes, conveyed said land to Johnson, reserving a lien to secure the deferred payments.

The money to pay the cash payment on said land was furnished by appellees, J. W. Starks and I. B. Wilford, on the same day. The corporation known as Park City Mineral Water Co. was formed and articles of incorporation drawn up, signed and duly acknowledged, and said corporation fully organized by the election of J. W. Starks, president; I. B. Wilford, vice-president; L. C. Johnson, secretary, and T. S. McGinis, treasurer. These officers and F. G. Wooten composed all the stockholders of said company. The capital stock was $10,000, divided into shares of $100 each, upon the organization of said corporation. L. C. Johnson conveyed to said corporation the land bought of appellant in consideration of its entire capital stock, and said corporation assuming to pay the balance of the purchase money when due to Mercer, which was a lien on the land so conveyed. Thereupon the stock was issued and distributed, giving to J. W. Starks thirty-three shares, I. B. Wilford thirty-three shares and to Wooten, McGinis and Johnson eleven shares each, and the remaining share was given to Mitchell & DuBose for services rendered in the preparation of articles of incorporation. Appellee Stephens bought stock in the corporation after its organization. The notes of Johnson having fallen due and not being paid, Mercer, the appellant, sued Johnson and the Park City Water Co. and obtained judgment and the enforcement of his lien on the land. The land being sold brought the sum of $3,002. This amount was credited on the judgment, leaving something over $800 due and unpaid. An execution was issued on said judgment for the balance due Mercer against Johnson and Park City Water Co. and was returned by the sheriff of Warren county no property found, whereupon appellant brought this action in equity and made the original stockholders of said corporation parties defendant, charging that they still owed on their stock and had not paid to said corporation more than twenty-five per cent. of the par value of their stock, and averring that large sums were due from each of said stockholders to said corporation, and ask that the defendants be required to pay on their stock a sufficient amount to pay the balance of appellant's judgment and cost. The stockholders filed answer and deny that they owe to said corporation any amount on the capital stock of said corporation; that the stock issued to them was fully paid-up stock at par value, and that when said corporation was organized it contracted with Johnson to buy from him the land he (Johnson) had purchased from Mercer, the appellant, and agreed to give said Johnson $10,000 and pay the remainder of the purchase money to Mercer, averring that at the time of said trade said land was worth $10,000 or more; that the medicinal qualities of the water of said well was of great value.

Defendant also averred that at the time of the organization of said corporation it was agreed that Johnson should convey the land to said corporation for its entire capital stock, to be issued as paid-up stock; to be shared in by the stockholders in the proportion as set out—that is, Starks was to have thirty-three shares, I. B. Wilford thirty-three shares and the other appellees eleven shares each—all of which was to be issued as paid-up stock. The proof shows that the land and well, at the time of the conveyance to the company, was worth at least $10,000, and some of the witnesses estimate the value of it at from $30,000 to $100,000, considering the profits on the sale of water, which seems to have been enormous. No fraud is charged or intimated in the pleadings or proof in the case. Therefore, the main question of inquiry is whether appellees still owe anything on the shares of stock issued to them or transferred to them by Johnson at the time of the organization of said corporation.

The judge of the circuit court who tried the case determined the issue in favor of the appellees, it being a question of what weight should be given to the finding of the circuit judge. The testimony, however, shows that by agreement of the parties at the time of the organization of said corporation no stock was to be issued except paid-up stock, and that the land was received by said corporation in full payment of its entire capital stock, and which was agreed to by Johnson and the purchaser of the stock. Therefore, Johnson could not claim anything from the stockholders on account of non-paid-up stock, and Mercer's right as against the corporation and its stockholders arises solely out of his right of substitution to the rights of Johnson. All that Mercer had was a lien on the land, as he made no contract with the corporation and created his debt before the corporation had an existence.

We concur in the judgment of the circuit court and, therefore, affirm the judgment.

McKEE'S ADM'R V. WARD & DICKSON.

(Filed January 20, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Attorney's fee for defending one adjudged a lunatic—While, in a proceeding to have one adjudged of unsound mind, such one is entitled to have the services of an attorney, and his estate is liable for a reasonable compensation for such services as were necessarily rendered in the conduct of the defense, the court can not presume that because the services were rendered at the instance of the defendant they were necessary, the defendant having no power to bind himself or his estate.

2. Same—Therefore, in this case, in the absence of an allegation that the services rendered were necessary, the appellees are not entitled to recover against the estate of the person of unsound mind a fee for defending him, they having been employed at his instance by counsel who were already representing him.

G. C. Lockhart and Hanson Kennedy for appellant.

J. Q. Ward for appellees.

Appeal from Bourbon Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

The appellees, Ward & Dickson, were partners in the practice of law, and bring this action on an account for services rendered Dinwiddie McKee in a proceeding in the name of the Commonwealth for the appointment of a trustee and committee for him.

They file as part of their petition a writing as follows, to wit:

"MILLERSBURG, KY., February 18, 1892.

"Purnell & Brent:

"DEAR SIRS:—You had better see Ward & Dickson and get them to help in the next suit. D. McKEE."

It is alleged that they were employed by Purnell & Brent, acting at the instance and on behalf of McKee; that they rendered services in that proceeding of the fair and reasonable value of $200, and which McKee had agreed to pay them.

It is alleged in the answer that at the time the services were rendered McKee was non compos mentis, and had not sufficient mind to understand or to make or enter into the alleged contract or any contract, or to authorize the employment of plaintiffs to assist in the proceeding.

A demurrer was sustained to the answer.

There was no denial in the answer that McKee executed the writing purporting to authorize Purnell & Brent to employ Ward & Dickson, or that the services were rendered, or that the amount charged was reasonable.

If McKee's condition was as described in the answer, he was incapable of making a contract for any certain amount for the services of attorneys to defend the proceedings to have him declared of unsound mind, nor could he bind himself or estate for any sum for such purpose, unless they were needed or were necessary to properly conduct his resistance of the proceedings.

It would not do to say that where proceedings are instituted to have one adjudged non compos mentis that he can not be made liable for the services of attorney reasonably necessary to defend the proceeding. If that were the case wherever such proceedings were instituted, he would be deprived of means necessary to properly try the question involved. If he is adjudged of unsound mind or to be a lunatic, it means that the management of his estate is taken from him, and perhaps the control of his person will be given to another. It is just and lawful that he should have the privilege of every reasonably available means to resist such proceeding, and this he will not have if he cannot bind himself or estate for reasonable attorney fees to a necessary number of lawyers. Although he may be in such proceedings adjudged of unsound mind, and have been so at the time they were instituted, still it would not follow that reasonable compensation should not be paid attorneys reasonably necessary to conduct his defense.

If he were of unsound mind he could not bind himself or estate for the services of attorneys, regardless of number and necessity for their services. If he have attorneys representing him, and desires others to assist, then those whom he so desires to assist can not render services and compel his estate to pay them, unless such services were reasonably necessary in the conduct of the defense.

While the court knows that, in proceedings to have one adjudged of unsound mind, he is entitled to have the services of an attorney, for the reasonable compensation of which his estate is liable, still it can not presume that because they were rendered at the instance of the person of unsound mind they were necessary.

Nayler v. Nayler, 4 Dana, 346, was a proceeding in chancery to have one adjudged of unsound mind, and the court held that pending the proceedings it was proper to allow a "competence for his support, and also allow him the means to defend and traverse the inquisition."

To sustain this conclusion the court cited In re Holmes, 3 Cond. Eng. Reports, 626, where the question arose as to what should be done with the estate pending the commission of lunacy, and the Lord Chancellor said: "It is absolutely necessary that the friends of Mr. Holmes should have the pecuniary means of resisting the commission."

The proceedings in question were of a more summary character than those in chancery, still the same necessity existed for legal services.

The demurrer to the answer should have been overruled. Instead of the court being required to presume the services which the plaintiffs rendered were necessary, they should have alleged that fact.

A case might arise where an unnecessary number of attorneys began their work at the same time and under like circumstances, when it would be proper to make an allowance of a proper amount to cover a reasonable expense of attorneys for defending an inquisition, and apportion it among the attorneys rendering the services.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to overrule the demurrer to the answer, and for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

BANNON V. MURPHY.

(Filed January 29, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Obstruction of alley—Measure of damages—The owner of land abutting upon a street or alley, one end of which is obstructed so that he can not have egress from his property to other streets "in that direction" has suffered an injury peculiar to himself by reason of the public nuisance, and is entitled to nominal damages upon that fact alone being made evident to the jury.

2. Same—The measure of damages for such an obstruction is the value of the use during the time the obstruction was continued; and while as to that part of plaintiff's property which was rented, it may be that the measure of recovery was limited to the diminution in rental value caused by the obstruction, the defendant can not complain that the jury was not specifically so instructed, no such instruction being asked, and the instruction given not authorizing the jury to go beyond compensation for loss in rental value by reason of the nuisance.

3. Same—As to property which the plaintiff permitted her son and his family to occupy free of rent, the measure of recovery was not limited to the diminution in rental value, plaintiff being entitled to recover for any diminution in the value of the use of the property as a home for her son.

Lane & Burnett for appellant.

Phelps & Thum for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas division.

Opinion of the court by Judge DuRelle.

This litigation grows out of an alleged obstruction to the use of the alley system in the city square in Louisville, bounded on the north by Maple street, on the east by Thirteenth, on the south by Lexington, and on the west by Fourteenth street. A 20-foot alley, 160 feet south of Maple street, connects Thirteenth and Fourteenth; a 40-foot alley, called Cotton street, 160 feet north of Lexington, also connects those two streets, and a third alley, 20 feet wide, runs north and south midway between Thirteenth and Fourteenth streets, connecting the two alleys first mentioned.

The appellant owns a lot fronting 95 feet on Thirteenth street, and extending west 200 feet to the connecting alley, and another lot fronting 180 feet on Fourteenth street, and extending east to the same alley, both lots being bounded on the south by the 40-foot alley called Cotton street.

Appellee owned a lot fronting 42½ feet on the west side of Thirteenth street, north of and adjoining appellant's first-named lot. Appellant had erected a building across the southern end of the 20-foot alley dividing his two lots, at its intersection with Cotton street, and appellee brought this suit for damages alleged to have been caused her by denying ingress and egress to and from the rear of her premises through the 20-foot alley to Cotton street, and by reason of the impediment of the surface drainage from her lot through that alley, caused by the obstruction of the southern end.

The petition specifically negatives the idea that the suit is brought for any permanent injury to the land, and limits the recovery sought to damages to the use of said property during a period of about five years prior to the bringing of the suit.

The evidence having been heard and the jury instructed, a verdict for $300 was rendered in favor of appellee. The only questions presented for decision upon this appeal are: Whether the court properly instructed the jury; and if so, whether the verdict was excessive.

There were two cottages on appellee's lot, in one of which she permitted her son and his family to reside, rent free, and the other of which was in his charge as her agent to collect the rents, she allowing him the rents to aid in the support of his family.

No question is made by appellant that his obstruction of the alley was without right, and that question has been decided by this court (Bannon v. Rohmeiser, 90 Ky., 48). But it is contended that, inasmuch as appellee has an outlet from the rear of her property northward by way of the connecting alley and the 20-foot alley running between Thirteenth and Fourteenth streets; and, further, as the appellee did not live on the property, and suffered no personal inconvenience from the obstruction to the alley, the court should have instructed the jury that the measure of damages, if any had been suffered, was the diminution of the rental value during the period of the obstruction. It is further objected that the petition sets forth no specific damage which resulted to appellee, but in the case of Gargan v. L., N. A. & C. Ry. Co. (11 KY. LAW REP., 492), it was held that the stopping up of one end of a street or alley gave to the owner of property bordering thereon a right of action for damages, greater or less, according to the circumstances of the case.

We are of opinion that the owner of land abutting upon a street or alley, one end of which is obstructed so that he can not have egress from his property to other streets in that direction, has suffered an injury peculiar to himself by reason of the public nuisance, and is entitled to nominal damages upon that fact alone being made evident to the jury.

This very point was decided in the case of Bracken v. Min. & St. P. Ry. Co. (39 Min., 41), cited by appellant, where the court said: "The owner of lots abutting upon a public street has such special interest in the street different from that of the general public as to entitle him to maintain a private suit for damages against the party who wrongfully obstructs the street in front of or near his property, but not upon his soil, so as to practically cut off all public access to it."

So, in the case of Grogan v. L., N. A. & C. Ry. Co. (11 KY. LAW REP., 490), Judge Pryor delivering the opinion of this court, said: "While many of the witnesses say that the appellants ought not to complain, because they are not injured, the fact exists that the ingress and egress to and from their homes to Fourteenth street is closed if that ordinance of the city is enforced; and, as a result, when they wish to travel east on foot or in a vehicle, they must first go west, leaving Fourteenth street behind, and travel to Fifteenth street. That this works an inconvenience and injury to the lot owners who had, in the first place, but the two modes of ingress and egress, is too plain a proposition to be controverted, and, besides the fact of the injury is established upon testimony not in effect disputed as to the great inconvenience that must necessarily result to the owners of lots bordering on this street and lying between Fourteenth and Fifteenth streets." (Gleason v. Schneider, 7 KY. LAW REP., 834.)

So in Wood on Nuisances, section 866: "In an action for a nuisance, the recovery is limited to the actual damage sustained. But, even though no actual damage is shown, if a nuisance is established, the law imports damage for an injury to the right, and at least nominal damages may be recovered to protect the right."

Upon appellant's motion the court gave to the jury instructions marked Nos. 1 and 2, as follows:

"1. The jury are directed not to take into consideration the injury or damage, if any, the plaintiff has sustained in consequence of the smoke from or heat of or proximity of the kilns to her premises.

"2. The jury can not take into consideration or allow the plaintiff any amount for depreciation in the value of her lots of land and improvements in consequence of the obstructions complained of by her."

And on the court's own motion two other instructions, numbered 1 and 2, were given, as follows:

"1. The court instructs the jury that the alley, twenty feet wide, in the rear of plaintiff's lot and Cotton street, or the alley, forty feet wide, mentioned in the pleadings and the evidence, are both public highways in the city of Louisville, and the defendant has no right to obstruct either of them in such a manner as to interfere with the plaintiff's reasonable use thereof as a means of ingress and egress through them to said lot; and if the jury shall believe from the evidence that the use of said highways has been so obstructed by the defendant, and that plaintiff has sustained injury thereby, then the law is for the plaintiff, and the jury should award her such a sum as they may believe from the evidence will fairly and reasonably compensate her for being deprived of the reasonable use of said highways during five years next before the institution of this action, not exceeding the sum claimed in the petition.

"2. During the five years next before the bringing of this action the plaintiff had the right to use the said highways, and it is no defense to plaintiff's right to recover whatever damages she may have sustained during that time, if any, by reason of the obstruction of the use thereof by the defendant that the said alleys could not be used (if that be the fact) prior to the erection of said obstruction."

Appellant did not ask an instruction limiting the measure of recovery to the diminution in rental value caused by the obstruction; but much stress is laid by counsel upon the fact that appellee herself did not occupy any part of the premises as a home, and that, therefore, the limit of recovery was the diminution in rental value caused by the nuisance. It might have been proper for the court to have included in its instructions a statement that the measure of damages as to the rented cottage was the diminution of rental value. Not so, however, we think, as to the cottage occupied by her son and his family. While from month to month she gave her son the use of the premises occupied by him free of rent, she was entitled to have the use of the property go to him without diminution in its value by reason of the wrongful acts of appellant. We think, however, that the instruction did not authorize the jury to go beyond compensation for loss in rental value by reason of the nuisance; and, in the absence of any motion by appellant to instruct the jury specifically upon that point, the verdict will not be disturbed, especially as it is evident, taking all the testimony together, that the jury based their verdict upon the diminution in rental value.

As said in Bannon v. Rohmeiser, (17 KY. LAW REP., 1378), "the measure of damages in this case is the diminution of the value of the use during the time the nuisance was continued (see Woodin v. Wentworth, 57 Mich., 278), and the instruction given by the lower court properly presented that question to the jury." (Randolph v. Bloomfield, 77 Iowa, 50; Baltimore & Potomac R. R. v. Fifth Baptist Church, 108 U. S., 318.)

In the case last mentioned Mr. Justice Field, delivering the opinion of the court, said: "Plaintiff was entitled to recover because of the inconvenience and discomfort caused to the congregation assembled, thus necessarily tending to destroy the use of the building for the purpose for which it was erected and dedicated. The property might not be depreciated in its salable or market value, if the building had been entirely closed for those purposes by the noise, smoke and odors of the defendant's shops. It might, then, perhaps, have brought in the market as great a price to be used for some other purpose. But, as the court below very properly said to the jury, the congregation had the same right to the comfortable enjoyment of its house for church purposes that a private gentleman has to the comfortable enjoyment of his own house, and it is the discomfort and annoyance in its use for those purposes which is the primary consideration in allowing damages. As with a blow on the face, there may be no arithmetical rule for the estimate of damages. There is, however, an injury, the extent of which the jury may measure."

And in Wood on Nuisances, section 866, it is said: "In cases where the injury is of a visible, tangible character, the damage may at times be susceptible of exact measurement; but, in a majority of instances, the subject of damages will rest largely in the discretion of the jury. In the case of an action for an injury to the comfortable enjoyment of property by a person in possession no precise rule for ascertaining the damage can be given, as in the very nature of things the subject-matter affected is not susceptible of exact measurement; therefore, the jury are left to say what, in their judgment, the plaintiff ought to have in money, and what the defendant ought to pay, in view of the discomfort or annoyance to which the plaintiff and his family have been subjected by the nuisance; and whether the verdict is large or small, if, in view of the evidence, it has any reasonable foundation, it will not be disturbed because it is too small on the one hand, or too large on the other. But, in the case of an action by the reversioner for an injury to the estate, the damages are usually the subject of easy computation. Thus, if the injury complained of is the loss of a tenant, the actual rental value of the premises during the period that the premises have remained unoccupied is the limit of recovery."

In this case the appellee's use of one of the cottages as a home for her son, and diminution in the value of that use was an injury for which she was entitled to recover.

The second instruction given suo motu by the court is objected to by appellant; but it appears to us to be merely an instruction in strict accordance with the doctrines laid down in this opinion that, as matter of law, plaintiff was entitled to recover something for an obstruction to one end of an alley upon which her property abutted.

For the reasons given the judgment is affirmed.

BANNON V. KING.

(Filed January 29, 1897—Not to be reported.)

The judgment in this case is affirmed for the reasons given in Bannon v. Murphy, supra.

Lane & Burnett for appellant.

Phelps & Thum for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas division.

Opinion of the court by Judge DuRelle.

The pleadings and evidence in this case are practically the same as in the case of Bannon v. Murphy, this day decided, except that appellee's lot was the third lot on Thirteenth street, north of the 95-foot lot of appellant, and that appellee occupied the house on his lot as a home. The trial court refused to give the instructions offered by both plaintiff and defendant, but on its own motion gave instructions Nos. 1 and 2 as follows:

"1st. It is admitted of record by the defendant that Cotton street, or the 40-foot alley and the 20-foot alley mentioned in the pleadings and testimony, were public highways at the time of building defendant's brick building across the 20-foot alley. The court instructs the jury that the plaintiff, during the five years next before the filing of his petition in this action as the owner of the property of plaintiff mentioned in the testimony, had the right to the free and uninterrupted use of said 20-foot alley and Cotton street, and that defendant had no right to obstruct either said Cotton street in the manner stated by the defendant in his testimony, or to build the building across the 20-foot alley in the manner shown by the defendant in his testimony, and the court instructs the jury that the law is for the plaintiff, and the jury should find for the plaintiff such sum as the jury believes from the evidence will fairly and reasonably compensate the plaintiff for the injury sustained by the plaintiff by such obstructions during the five years next before the filing of the petition in this action.

"2d. During the five years next before the beginning of this action the plaintiff had the right to use the said highways, and it is no defense to plaintiff's right to recover whatever damages he may have sustained during that time, if any, by reason of the obstruction of the same thereof by the defendant that the said alleys could not be used, if that be the fact, prior to the erection of said obstructions."

The jury returned a verdict for $200.

These instructions are in full accord with the principles laid down in the Murphy case, as well as with the case of Bannon v. Rohmeiser, 17 KY. LAW REP., 1379–80.

The judgment is, therefore, affirmed.

FORTH V. LIGHTFOOT.

(Filed February 3, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Homestead—When the purchaser of land at execution sale, with a sheriff's deed, set apart to the execution defendant or his wife a part of the land without making a deed therefor, in an action by a creditor of the execution defendant, brought almost twenty years after his death, and after the death of his widow, seeking to subject this land in the hands of their adult children upon the ground that it had been allotted as a homestead, the evidence failed to establish the claim that it was set apart for that purpose, or that the right to the exemption, if it existed, was ever asserted, the defense being that it was set apart to the wife for a consideration moving from her.

Mitchell & DuBoise and Walter G. Chapman for appellant.

John M. Galloway for appellee.

Appeal from Warren Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hazelrigg.

The appellee was the owner of a judgment rendered in the Allen Circuit Court in 1879 in favor of A. L. Richey against W. C. Forth, and brought this action against the appellant and others—children of W. C. Forth and all adults—to subject to the payment of his debt a tract of 40 acres of land alleged to have been set apart to their father, W. C., as a homestead, and which after his death had been occupied by his widow and children until her death in 1893. By the testimony of Potter and Hendrick the plaintiff proves that in March, 1877, these witnesses did lay off this land to Forth as a homestead, but whether they acted under an order of court or merely at the instance of the parties interested they did not remember, but thought they were selected by the parties and under an order. No report of such action, however, could be produced or any return of the sheriff or other officer showing the laying off of such homestead.

The defense is that this tract was never set apart to W. C. Forth as a homestead exemption, but that in 1874 it was sold under execution in favor of one Warden, in a tract of some 200 acres, and bought by one H. R. Hagerman; that the 200 acres sold for less than two-thirds of its appraised value, and upon the expiration of the time for redemption notice was given for writ of possession, and upon trial in the Warren Court of Common Pleas the writ issued and the sheriff put Hagerman in possession in accordance with the directions of the writ and under the sheriff's deed made in pursuance of the sale some two years theretofore; that Hagerman thus obtained the legal title and the actual possession of the entire tract, and was, therefore, its rightful owner. But that he held a mortgage on other lands belonging to Forth which he had sold under foreclosure proceedings, and which mortgages the wife had not signed, and, therefore, in consideration of her release of potential right of dower in those lands the tract of 40 acres was subsequently laid off to her as a home.

No mortgage to Hagerman of other lands, or the wife's release of her interest in it, or any agreement to set apart the 40 acres, are shown in support of this defense, but the levy of the execution in Warden's favor on the 200 acres, including this home tract, was shown, as well as the sale of the land thereunder to Hagerman; also the notice and proceedings by which Hagerman obtained a judgment for the possession of the land, and the return of the sheriff showing he put the purchaser in the actual possession of it. The sheriff's deed was also produced and filed. Thus is established a perfect title in Hagerman, accompanied with actual possession, and that, too, by the very papers which ought to have shown any setting apart of the lands under the homestead exemption act.

To meet this the appellee says it was still not too late, even after the possession was awarded the creditor, for the debtor or his wife to demand the homestead exemption. And this is true, but before we may thus impeach the title of Hagerman as shown by the record it ought to appear clearly that the debtor not only was entitled to the exemption as against the Hagerman debt, but that in some appropriate way he or his wife or children asserted such right and were in fact given the homestead.

So far as these facts appearing clearly the presumptions are strongly the other way. If the debtor was entitled to this exemption the sheriff must have violated his plain duty and the very demands of the statute in not laying it off to him. The court also, on the notice and proceedings for possession, must have been flagrantly derelict in its judgment ousting the homesteader of his plain statutory right. And, besides, where was the debtor when he was then being robbed? He seems to have surrendered without a protest, and it is admitted he left the lands when ousted, and in 1877 went to an adjoining county, where he lived probably until his death, or he may have moved back to this tract and died there, the proof not being clear on this. In spite of this failure of the debtor to set up any claim to a homestead, we are asked to set it for him nearly twenty years after his death. It is readily seen that the transaction detailed by Potter and Hendrick is as consistent with the defendant's theory as with the plaintiff's. Hagerman was a party to that transaction, and these men were perhaps called on by him and by Forth and wife to lay off 40 acres, including the house, as a home for the wife. They do not remember to have been sworn as commissioners, and while they might not recollect this they would hardly have forgotten it if they had made a report of their action to the court, especially Hendrick, who was a surveyer, and must have made the report had one been made.

We are constrained to hold that under the proceedings in the Warren Court of Common Pleas Hagerman became the owner and was put in the actual possession of the entire tract, including the 40 acres in contest, and that the debtor, Forth, either because he was not entitled to the exemption as against this debt or for some reason not appearing in the record, was not given the tract as a homestead. This would seem to end the plaintiff's case, as his subjection of the land to his debt depends on the alleged fact that it was set apart as a homestead and occupied as such by the widow of his debtor. Certainly if it is Hagerman's land he can not take it any more than if it be the heirs of the mother who claim it as such by adverse holding for the statutory period against Hagerman and all others.

Judgment reversed, with directions to dismiss the petition and for proceedings consistent herewith.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO. V. EUBANK & RUSSELL.

(Filed February 4, 1897.)

1. Liability of telegraph company for mistake and delay in transmission of messages--A provision in a contract with a telegraph company for the transmission of a message that the company shall not be liable for mistakes, unless the message is repeated, does not relieve the company from liability for mistakes caused by its negligence.

2. Same—A provision in such a contract that the company is not liable for damages in any case where the claim is not presented in writing within sixty days is against public policy, and also violative of section 196 of the Constitution, which provides that no common carrier shall be permitted to contract for relief from its common-law liability.

3. Interstate commerce—Section 196 of the Constitution is not a regulation of interstate commerce.

4. Same—The liability of a telegraph company for negligence in the transmission or delivery of a message from a point in another State to a point in this State is governed by the law of this State, which is the place of performance.

Richards, Baskin & Ronald, A. S. Walker, Geo. C. Harris and Geo. H. Fearons for appellant.

Goodnight & Roark and Sims & Covington for appellees.

Appeal from Simpson Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Guffy.

It is substantially alleged in the petition in this action that appellees were partners in the live stock business, and that appellant was a common carrier of messages and telegrams; that on the 21st of December, 1893, plaintiff's agent, H. P. Russell, at Atlanta, Ga., delivered to defendant, to be transmitted to plaintiff at Franklin, Ky., the following telegram or message, viz:

"ATLANTA, GA., December 21, 1893.

"J. W. Russell, Franklin, Ky.:

"Ship to-day eighty-five dollar load; will make money; feeling good. H. P. RUSSELL."

For which message defendant received pay, and undertook and agreed to transmit same to plaintiff at Franklin, Ky.; that the same was received by defendant at Atlanta in ample time to be transmitted to plaintiff; in ample time for them to have shipped the carload of mules on that day to Atlanta, but said message or telegram was not delivered to plaintiff until too late to ship said mules; that it was not delivered to plaintiff until after dark, about 7 o'clock, when it could have been delivered early in the morning on said day, and it could easily have been delivered in time for plaintiff to have shipped said carload of mules on that day; but defendant, through the negligence and incompetency of its agents, employes and operators then in its employment and in charge of and operating its line and business, failed to deliver said message until about 7 o'clock and after dark of said day; that said failure to deliver the message in time was caused alone by the negligence and incompetency of defendant's agents and employes; that if they had received said telegram at the time it should have been delivered they could and would have shipped said carload of mules, twenty-five in number, to Atlanta, Ga., and said mules would have arrived in Atlanta, Ga., at a time when the market was high and good; that they could and would have sold said carload of mules if same had been shipped on day telegraphed for for $250 more than they could and did sell them for when shipped later; that if said mules had been shipped on December 21st, they would have arrived in Atlanta on December 23, 1893, when the market was good, and when they could and would have sold said mules for a good price; but, by the negligence of defendant's agents and employes, they were thus prevented from shipping, and said mules did not get to Atlanta till the following Tuesday, when the market had declined; that they have been damaged by defendant's negligence in the sum of $250, for which sum judgment was prayed.

The first paragraph of the answer may be taken as a denial of all the averments contained in the petition, including a denial of the charge that appellant was a common carrier, but does not deny that it is a corporation engaged in transmitting messages, and that it can sue and be sued.

It is averred in the second paragraph that appellant received of H. P. Russell individually, not as agent for plaintiff, at 1 o'clock and 15 minutes, December 21, 1893, the message heretofore copied, except the word "the," before eighty, and files the original message marked "A." It is further averred that in receiving and transmitting messages, with the best of operators and under the most favorable circumstances, there is always some liability and probability of mistake, and especially as in this case when the message had to be transmitted several hundred miles and through relay offices; that mistakes and delays are inseparable from the nature of the business; that H. P. Russell, when he delivered the said message to defendant to be sent as aforesaid, requested defendant to send said message subject to the terms on the back thereof, which he then agreed to, and he was directed on the face of said message to "read the notice and agreement on the back," which notice and agreement, solemnly signed and made by him, is in the following words, viz:

"All messages taken by this company are subject to the following terms:

"To guard against mistakes or delays, the sender of a message should order it repeated—that is, telegraphed back to the originating officer for comparison. For this, one-half the regular rate is charged in addition. It is agreed between the sender of the following message and this company that said company shall not be liable for mistakes or delays in the transmission or delivery, or for non-delivery of any unrepeated message, beyond the amount received for sending the same; nor for any mistake or delay in the transmission or delivery, or for non-delivery of any repeated message, beyond fifty times the sum received for sending the same, unless specially insured, nor in any case for delays arising from unavoidable interruptions in the working of its lines, or for errors in cipher or obscure messages; and this company is hereby made the agent of the sender without liability to forward any message over the lines of any other company when necessary to reach its destination. Correctness in the transmission of a message to any point on the lines of this company can be insured by contract in writing, stating agreed amount of risk, and payment of premium thereon, at the following rate, in addition to the usual charge for repeated messages, viz: one per cent. for any distance not exceeding 1,000 miles, and two per cent. for any greater distance. No employe of the company is authorized to vary the foregoing."

"No responsibility regarding messages attaches to this company until the same are presented and accepted at one of its transmitting offices; and if a message is sent to such office by one of the company's messengers, he acts for that purpose as the agent of the sender.

"Messages will be delivered free within the established free delivery limits of the territorial office. For delivery at a greater distance a special charge will be made to cover the cost of such delivery.

"The company will not be liable for damages or statutory penalties in any case where the claim is not presented in writing within sixty days after the message is filed with the company for transmission."

It is alleged that all the foregoing was legible and plain, and, so far as it could apply to the sending of the message, was agreed to by H. P. Russell, and that he did not request that the message be repeated, but assumed the risk of mistake and delay, and paid only 58 cents for the transmission, which was the usual charge for such messages not repeated.

It is further alleged that no claim in writing has ever been presented to defendant for damages, unless this suit be so considered. This suit was filed more than sixty days after the filing of the message; that the message, by some mistake, was received at the Franklin office as to J. A. Russell at 2:05 P. M., and was immediately sent out by the messenger boy to be delivered to J. A. Russell, but he could not be found, and about 6 P. M., on the suggestion of some one acquainted with the people of Franklin, the message was delivered to J. W. Russell. It is also alleged that when J. W. Russell received the message he received notice of the contract, as before set out, and all the foregoing facts are pleaded in bar of plaintiff's claims; but appellant admits that plaintiff, or at least J. W. Russell, is entitled to fifty-eight cents; that getting the word J. A., instead of J. W. Russell, caused the delay in the delivery of the message.

In appellant's amended answer it alleged that if the message had been promptly delivered appellees could not have shipped the mules on that day; that they had no mules in or near Franklin on that day, but did get the message in time to have shipped the mules on the next day.

Appellees' reply may be considered a denial of all the averments in the answer and amended answer, and it is also alleged that appellant had at Franklin an incompetent agent on that day; that he was merely a "cub," and unacquainted with the exact business of appellant. Appellees also denied that H. P. Russell ever agreed to the stipulation on the back of the message, and also alleged that the same was null and void and against public policy. The reply was traversed by appellant.

Appellees were permitted to amend their reply, and in the reply a waiver of the sixty days' notice was pleaded, and the said plea was traversed by appellant.

A trial resulted in a verdict and judgment in appellees' favor for $125. Appellant's motion for a new trial having been denied, it prosecutes this appeal.

The first and second grounds for new trial need not be noticed. The third ground is that the verdict is not sustained by sufficient evidence, and is contrary to law. There was proof introduced by appellees conducing to show that they had a load of mules at the time which they could and would have shipped to Atlanta the 21st of December, 1893, if the message had been delivered to J. W. Russell within a reasonable time after it reached Franklin, and that they sustained a loss by reason of not shipping the mules on that day to the amount of more than $125; hence the jury were authorized to find the amount named. This case is unlike the case of Smith against this appellant, 83 Ky., 104. The damage in this case at bar was not remote or speculative in a legal sense.

Instructions Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4, given by the court, were as favorable to appellant as it was entitled to, and if this be true then the instructions asked by appellant were properly refused by the court. It is very ably argued by appellant's counsel that the printed terms on the back of the paper on which the message was sent was assented to by the sender and, therefore, became part of the contract and binding upon the sender and receiver, and it is especially insisted that the stipulation as to repeating the message is a complete bar to a recovery of more than 58 cents, the amount paid for the sending ing of the message, and we are referred to various decisions of courts of last resort in support of that contention.

It is true that in Camp against this appellant, 1 Metcalfe, 164, the same or a similar stipulation as the one in question as to the repetition of messages, was held to be valid, but that case was decided in 1858 and before the adoption of the present Constitution, and it will also be seen that there was no allegation by plaintiff that the mistake was the result of negligence or want of competency or skill on the part of the employes of the company; hence that case is wholly unlike the case at bar.

The decision of the Supreme Court in Primrose v. Western Union Telegraph, 154 U. S., 1, is also relied on by appellant. It is true that that decision upheld the stipulation in question as well as the stipulation in regard to cipher messages and obscure messages, but it is also true that Chief Justice Fuller and Mr. Justice Harlan dissented and Mr. Justice White took no part in the decision. It will also be seen from the opinion that many courts of last resort had decided otherwise as to such stipulation. We quote as follows from the opinion in the cases supra: "There are cases indeed in which such regulations have been considered wholly void. It will be sufficient to refer to those specially relied on by the learned counsel for the plaintiff, many of which, however, upon examination, appear to have been influenced by considerations which have no application to the case at bar. Some of them were actions brought by the receiver of the message, who had no notice of the printed conditions until after he received it, and could not, therefore, have agreed to them in advance. Such were New York & Washington Tel. Co. v. Drury, 35 Penn. St., 298; 25 La., 383; 9 Phila., 88."

It would seem from the foregoing that if the suit had been by the receiver, as in the case at bar, the court would probably have held the stipulation in question invalid.

In Smith against appellant, 83 Ky., 112, decided before the adoption of the present Constitution, this court, in discussing the obligations of the telegraph company, said: "It is, however, a public agent; it exercises a quasi public employment; carefulness and fidelity are essentials to its character as a public servant, and public policy forbids that it should abdicate as to the public by contract with the individual; he is but one of millions; his business will perhaps not admit of delay or contest in the courts, and he is ex necessitate compelled to submit to any terms which the company might see fit to impose, but the law should not uphold a contract under which a public agent seeks to shelter itself from the consequences of its own wrong and neglect; its liability for neglect is not founded purely upon contract; it is chartered for public purposes; extraordinary powers are, therefore, conferred upon it; it has the power of eminent domain; if it did not serve the public it could not constitutionally lay a wire over a man's land without his consent; and by reason of the gift of these privileges it is required to receive and transmit messages, and is liable for neglect, independent of any express contract; the public are compelled to rely absolutely upon the care and diligence of the company in the transaction of this business, so wonderful in its growth, so necessary to the life of commerce and useful beyond estimate; and if it relies upon a notice or contract to restrict its liability it must be one not in violation of public policy; and, in view of the vast interests committed to a telegraph company, the extraordinary powers given it and the virtual monopoly it almost necessarily enjoys, the court should compel it nolens volens to perform the corresponding duties of diligence and good faith to the public thereby created. Any other rule would defeat the very purposes for which these companies are chartered, to wit—the safe and speedy transmission of messages for the public—and, while they may reasonably restrict their liability, yet they can not do so as against their own negligence. They undertake to exercise a public employment, which in many respects is analogous to that of a common carrier, and they must, therefore, bring to it that degree of skill and care which a prudent man would under the circumstances exercise in his own affairs, and any stipulation by which they undertake to relieve themselves from this duty or to restrict their liability for its non-use is forbidden by the demands of a sound public policy. To hold otherwise would arm them with a very dangerous power and leave the public comparatively remediless. (W. U. T. Co. v. Fontaine, 58 Ga., 433; Wolf v. Western, &c., 62 Pa., 83; Sweetland v. Illinois, &c., 27 Iowa, 432; Breese v. U. S., &c., 48 N. Y., 132; H. S. T. Co. v. Gildersleeve, 29 Md., 232; West. Union v. Buchanan, 35 Ind., 429; Hibbard v. Western Union, 33 Wis., 558; Telegraph Co. v. Griswold, 37 Ohio, 301; Tyler v. West. Union, &c., 60 Ill., 421; Ellis v. The American T. Co., 13 Allen, 234.)"

It is often of the utmost importance to the sender or receiver of messages that the same should be in cipher or obscure, because if sent in plain language the contents would often become known and the object in view defeated, hence public policy forbids that appellant should by any contract exempt itself from the damage resulting from its negligence in transmitting such messages. It is the province of the law-making power to prescribe the limit in which an action may be brought, hence the limitation of sixty days, if not an attempt to vary the statute of limitation, would, if enforced, have that effect, and in this case the requirement that the demand should be in writing or as before stated is clearly unreasonable and contrary to public policy, and is in violation of section 196 of the Constitution. A contract that notice or demand of a claim for damages should be given in a reasonable time, and if not given that fact to be taken as prima facie evidence of the invalidity of the claim, might be upheld.

The real question in this case is as to the negligence of the appellant, and if the injury was caused by the negligence of appellant no contract or agreement can bar a recovery.

Appellant contends that section 199 of the State Constitution could not make telegraph companies common carriers. It is not necessary to discuss the question of fact as to whether said section did in fact cause such companies to become common carriers, for it is evident that by the provisions of said section they are to be treated as such carriers and, therefore, come within and are bound by the provisions of section 196, which provides that no common carrier shall be permitted to contract for relief from its common law liability. Nor is that section of the Constitution in conflict with the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution. A fuller discussion of the section supra may be found in O. & M. Ry. Co. v. Tabor, 17 KY LAW REP., 1411. The general rule is that the law of the place where the contract is to be performed governs, subject of course to the rule that a contract which is void by the law of the place where made is void everywhere. (Story's Conflict of Laws, section 243; Lawson's Remedies and Proceedings, seventh edition, section 3878.)

The proof in this case as to negligence was sufficient to sustain the verdict, and no error of law to the prejudice of appellant's substantial rights having occurred on the trial, the judgment of the court below is affirmed.

RUSSELL, &C. V. RUSSELL'S ASS'EE, &C.

(Filed February 5, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Presumptions on appeal—In a suit for the settlement of an assigned estate, the deed of assignment being made a part of the record below and not copied into the transcript, it will be presumed that it was sufficient to sustain the action of the court in denying to the debtor the right to a homestead.

2. The reservation by the assignor in a deed of assignment of a "homestead exemption" reserves only such right as the law gave him, and does not create the right to a homestead where none existed under the statute.

E. E. McKay for appellants.

Geo. S. Fulton for appellees.

Appeal from Nelson Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

The appellant made a deed of assignment for the benefit of his creditors. The assignee instituted this action to settle the trust estate. The appellant filed an answer, in which he substantially alleged that he was entitled to a homestead out of the assigned estate, and that he was willing to have it sold and its value adjudged him out of the proceeds.

We deem it unnecessary to state the character of the various claims against the trust estate, or the facts with reference to the real estate assigned and its occupancy by the assignor, and the date the debts were contracted and the land purchased. It is sufficient to say that the appellant seems to have abandoned his claim to a homestead because he was entitled to it under the statute. This conclusion is reached from the amended answer which he offered to file and the argument of his counsel in his behalf. It is sufficient to say that such abandonment of his claim to a homestead under the statute was proper, as he was not entitled to it. His claim to a homestead exemption as asserted in the amended answer offered, and as contended by counsel, is based upon what is the alleged agreement between the assignor and assignee, and to its alleged ratification by the creditors.

The deed of assignment is not copied in the record, hence we can not know its exact provision as to the reservation of a homestead out of the estate. The language of the deed may have been such as would alone have justified the court in refusing to allow the amended answer to be filed. It was made part of the record below and not copied in the transcript, hence we should presume it sustained the action of the court.

It was alleged in the amended answer offered that the assignor reserved "a homestead exemption, such as a bona fide housekeeper with a family would take under the statute laws of Kentucky."

An assignor can assign for the benefit of creditors such part of his estate as he may choose, and reserve such other part as he may desire. It is only the part he assigns which the assignee can administer for the benefit of creditors.

Accepting the allegation of the amended answer as true, did the assignor reserve anything except such interest in the land as the land gave him? He reserved a "homestead exemption," which was simply such right of exemption as was afforded him by law. He was not entitled to such right as against his creditors, hence he retained no interest in the land assigned.

The judgment is affirmed.

HOWE & JOHNSON V. COMBS, &C.

(Filed February 5, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Sales of personal property—Rescission—Where goods were purchased by one who represented that they were for a mercantile firm, of which he claimed to be a member, and he, claiming and exercising ownership over the goods, sold them to another, it turning out that the person whom the buyer represented to be his partner was the sole proprietor, and that he was merely an employe, the sellers are entitled to a rescission unless the person to whom the goods were subsequently sold was a bona fide purchaser, the circumstances being sufficient to show a fraudulent combination to cheat the sellers out of their goods.

2. If the goods are not restored, or their proceeds, when sold under attachment, which should have been sustained, are not sufficient to discharge the purchase price, then personal judgment should be rendered against the proprietor of the store, whom the buyer represented to be his partner, he having admitted in his answer that he was sole owner of the goods, and claimed them as exempt.

John D. Atkinson for appellants.

C. B. Hancock for appellees.

Appeal from Powell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Lewis.

The evidence shows that when the goods were sold by appellants, Howe & Johnson, the representation was made by Bradley, who made the purchase, and relied upon by them. They were purchased for appellants, R. B. Combs and L. Bradley, doing business as a firm. But it turned out that Combs alone was the proprietor, Bradley being merely his employe, and, claiming and exercising ownership, actually sold or pretended to sell them to one Elkins, who executed a note for the purchase price thereof to the wife of Combs.

Upon filing their petition appellants obtained an attachment, which was levied upon the goods in question, but upon final hearing the attachment was discharged and personal judgment rendered against Bradley alone, the action, without, as we think, reason, being dismissed as to Combs; for he admitted in his answer he was the sole owner of the goods, and claimed, as a housekeeper with a family, exemption from paying anything for them.

It seems to us the circumstances of this case show a fraudulent combination and purpose to cheat appellants out of their goods, and they would be entitled to rescission of the contract unless the rights of Elkin as bona fide purchaser, if he be one, have intervened to prevent it. He has, however, set up no claim to the goods, though in possession of them when attached.

Upon the return of the case appellants should be permitted to amend by making Elkin a party, and unless he shows a superior title to the goods they will be entitled to a rescission of the contract of sale, or to the proceeds of the goods attached, which attachment was improperly discharged. It was also error to dismiss the action as to Combs, against whom there ought to be a personal judgment, in case the goods are not restored, nor proceeds sufficient to discharge the purchase paid to appellants.

For the errors mentioned the judgment is reversed and case remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

HENDERSON V. WORTHINGTON'S ADM'R.

(Filed February 5, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Judicial sale of notes and accounts—Title of purchaser—Where a commissioner, pursuant to judgment of court rendered in a suit for the settlement of a decedent's estate, offered for sale all notes and accounts that had been reported by appraisers of the estate to be worthless claims, the purchaser acquired title to a note included in the list, which, without his knowledge or knowledge of the commissioner, had been withdrawn by the administrator before the date of the judgment and the date of sale, and is entitled to judgment for the amount thereof against the administrator, who has collected it from the payor.

Bugg & Wickliffe for appellant.

Nichols & Worden for appellee.

Appeal from Ballard Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Lewis.

It is admitted or proved in this case:

1st. That pending an action instituted by the administrators to settle and distribute the estate of G. A. Worthington, deceased, a judgment was rendered directing the master commissioner to sell in a lump to the highest bidder, for cash down, all notes and accounts that had been reported by the appraisers of the estate to be worthless claims.

2d. That said notes and accounts, in a bundle, together with a list thereof, which included the note in controversy on Frank Payton, were therein and subject to order of court.

3d. That the commissioner did offer for sale and sell publicly said notes and accounts, making announcement at the time he was selling the identical notes and accounts directed to be sold when they were knocked off to appellant as the highest bidder, and thereafter the report of sale was confirmed by the court.

4th. That the commissioner did not at the time of the sale read a list of notes and accounts offered for sale, or announce to the bidders that the note on Frank Payton or any other of the claims had been taken from the bundle and reserved from the sale; nor did he even know that there was then offered for sale less or other than the entire list directed by judgment to be sold.

5th. Appellant purchased at a chance bargain the entire lot as described in and directed by the judgment to be sold without knowledge or notice that the Frank Payton note was not included in the list sold.

6th. That note was, between the time the judgment was rendered and the day of the sale, taken by appellee from the bundle without authority of court and without notice to the commissioner or to the bidders at the sale that it had been done.

Under these circumstances good faith and the preservation of public confidence in the fairness of judicial sales requires that the court affirm the title of appellant, duly and legally acquired to the note in controversy, and, therefore, the lower court ought to have rendered judgment in his favor for the amount of that note, which it appears the administrator, subsequent to the sale, sued for and recovered from Payton, and the judgment appealed from is reversed and case remanded for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

FAULKNER, &C. v. DAVIS, &C.

(Filed February 6, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Assault and battery—Evidence—In an action to recover damages for an assault upon a married woman, evidence tending to show that as a result of the kicking and beating plaintiff had a miscarriage was not incompetent.

2. Same—The beating complained of being done by a married woman in the presence of her husband, who was sued jointly with her, the error, if any, in requiring the husband to state upon cross-examination whether his wife had as a witness on the previous criminal trial of herself for the assault and battery stated that she had tied him down and several times whipped him, and that he knew not to interfere, to which he answered in the affirmative, was not prejudicial, as it was otherwise satisfactorily proved that the beating was without reason or excuse.

Tye & Sharp for appellants.

R. D. Hill and K. D. Perkins for appellees.

Appeal from Whitley Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Lewis.

The evidence in this case shows that appellant, Lucinda Faulkner, in the presence of and without interference by appellant, Daniel W. Faulkner, her husband, unlawfully and outrageously kicked and with a barrel stave beat appellee, Julia Davis. The verdict of $400 in damages, considering the indignity and injury suffered, was not, therefore, so excessive as to induce the belief that it was found by the jury under the influence of passion and prejudice; nor was evidence tending to show that as a result of the kicking and beating Mrs. Davis, in addition to other injuries and suffering, had a miscarriage.

Daniel W. Faulkner, having introduced himself as a witness and testified, was on cross examination asked if his wife (Julia) had not as a witness on the previous criminal trial of herself for the assault and battery, stated she had tied him (Daniel) down and several times whipped him, and that he knew not to interfere, and it is objected the court permitted him to answer that question in the affirmative; but it is not necessary to decide whether that evidence was competent, for even if it was not so the substantial rights of either appellant were not prejudiced, because it was otherwise fully and satisfactorily proved that Mrs. Faulkner, who was a large woman, without reason or excuse so severely kicked and beat Mrs. Davis, a small and weakly woman, having at the time a baby in her arms and appealing to Daniel Faulkner in vain for protection, and that she was disabled for three months.

Judgment affirmed.

GALOT, BY GUARDIAN V. PEARCE, &C.

(Filed February 2, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Jurisdiction of justices of the peace—The provision of section 882 of Myers' Code (as amended) declaring that judgments rendered by a justice of the peace against defendants not residing in his district should be void was in contravention of the Constitution then in force, which provided that "the jurisdiction of justices of the peace shall be co-extensive with the county."

2. Void execution—A justice of the peace being both judge and clerk, an execution issued from his court within ten days after the rendition of judgment was not premature, as it must have been ordered by the court.

3. Same—Even if the execution was prematurely issued, it was not void.

4. Validity of levy—Description of land—The failure of the sheriff in his levy upon an execution to properly describe the land levied on does not affect the title of the purchaser at the execution sale.

5. A levy upon the right, title and interest of an execution defendant in land without specifying the interest is sufficient to pass to the purchaser such interest as the defendant had subject to execution.

6. A levy signed by the deputy sheriff for the sheriff, instead of in the name of the sheriff by the deputy, is not void.

7. Appraisement—A failure to have appraisers sworn will not affect the title of the purchaser at the execution sale unless the purchaser participates in the irregularity.

8. Same—Where a whole body of land was valued by appraisers, and also the life-tenant's estate therein, this was a sufficient valuation of the execution defendant's one-fifth interest in remainder.

Woolfolk & Klein for appellants.

Grubbs & Morancy and Charles M. Lindsay for appellees.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas division.

Opinion of the court by Judge DuRelle.

Joseph Galot, by will probated in January, 1871, devised his estate to his wife, Generouse Galot, for life, with remainder to his five children. His wife died in 1888, and his estate, which at his death had consisted of eighty acres of land in Jefferson county, went to his children. One of his children, Joseph F., died in 1884, leaving a widow, Teresa, and two children, Mary and Bertha, in whose behalf this suit is prosecuted.

It is conceded that the four-fifths interest in the property belonging to the other children of Joseph Galot was duly conveyed to the defendants, and they have title thereto. On March 9, 1874, before the death of either Generouse or Joseph F. Galot, a judgment by default was rendered against them in favor of Anton Kutzleb, in the court of J. Speed Peay, a justice of the peace for Jefferson county, but whose magisterial district did not include the residence of the defendants. An execution was issued on said judgment on March 17, 1874, and returned "no property found." Thereafter a certified copy of the judgment, execution and return was filed in the office of the clerk of the Jefferson Court of Common Pleas, and on November 17, 1874, an execution was issued by the clerk of that court, which was levied December 11, 1874, "on reversionary interest of Joseph Galot and the life interest of Mrs. Generouse Galot in eighty acres of land in Jefferson county on Mann's Lick road, near the Burnt Knob, being the same property in which the said Generouse Galot now resides, which was advertised according to law, and was offered at public outcry on the 4th day of January, 1875, at the courthouse door, to the highest bidder, and was bought by the plaintiff, Kutzleb, for $1 for the reversionary interest and twenty-five cents for the life interest, and as the plaintiff was the buyer no bond was required. A. G. ANDERSON, D. S.,
"January 4, 1875. For THOS. SHANKS, S. J. C."

As alleged in the answer, an appraisement was made in writing by two disinterested housekeepers of Jefferson county before said sale, the eighty acres being appraised at $2,000, and the life interest of Generouse Galot at $600. In January, 1875, a second execution was levied upon "the equity of redemption of Joseph Galot in interest in remainder eighty acres of land on Mann's Lick road, near Burnt Knob, being the same property on which Mrs. Generouse Galot now lives, this interest is the one-fifth in the above property in remainder," etc., etc. The equity of redemption was sold to Kutzleb for his debt, interest and costs, which was $105.97. The return of this execution was also signed by A. G. Anderson, D. S., for Thos. Shanks, S. J. C. Kutzleb conveyed whatever interest he acquired by said purchases to the defendants. The facts are fully set forth in the answer of the defendants. The petition prayed a division and partition of the eighty acres, and that one-fifth thereof should be allotted to the plaintiffs. A demurrer to the answer was overruled by the trial court, and from that judgment this appeal is taken.

It is claimed for appellants that the execution sales at which Kutzleb purchased were void, first, because the judgment was void. This claim is based upon section 832 of Myers' Code, as amended, requiring the officer who serves process to return it to the justice of the peace in the district wherein the defendant resides; and further providing that "all judgments which may be hereafter rendered by a justice of the peace against defendants who do not reside in the district of such justice of the peace when judgment may be rendered, or did not reside in such district when process was served, shall be null and void." This provision, however (which was applicable only to the city of Louisville), appears to be in direct contravention of section 34 of article 4 of the Constitution in force at that time, which provided that "the jurisdiction of justices of the peace shall be co-extensive with the county."

It is well settled that "the territory marked out for the justice by the Constitution of the State over which he is to exercise his jurisdiction can not be reduced or changed by legislative enactments." (12 Am. & Eng. Enc., 404.)

In our opinion, the jurisdiction co-extensive with the county is not a mere power to issue process in actions, but the power to hear and determine causes (U. S. v. Arrendo, 6 Peters, 691), the proper remedy for the defendant in such a case being by motion to transfer to the court of the justice of the peace in the district of the defendant's residence.

The second objection is that the execution from Esquire Peay's court was issued less than ten days after the judgment. Section 4, article 1, chapter 38 of the General Statutes provides: "No execution shall issue on any judgment, unless ordered by the court, until after the expiration of ten days from the rendition thereof." The justice of the peace was both judge and clerk, and the execution, therefore, must have been ordered by the court. Nor can we admit that even if prematurely issued it would have been void, such premature issuance being merely an irregularity, the remedy for which would be by motion to quash in the proceeding in which the execution was issued. (Freeman on Executions, section 25.)

The third objection is that the returns on the executions did not sufficiently describe the land levied on and the interest of the execution defendants therein. The return of the first execution issued out of the common pleas court seems to us sufficiently to describe the property to enable it to be identified. It was held in Reid v. Heasley, 9 Dana, 324, and approved in Bell v. Weatherford, 12 Bush, 508, that failure of the sheriff to properly describe the land in his levy, or to have it valued after his execution sale, could not affect the purchaser, for "these are directory duties inculcated by the statute upon the officer; but their omission can not be construed to retroact upon the sale, so as to affect the rights of the purchaser. His right rests upon his purchase under a valid execution issuing upon a valid judgment; and, being fairly made, can not be defeated by the subsequent omissions or delinquencies of the officer. The officer might unquestionably be made responsible to the debtor for any injury he sustained by reason of his delinquency; but to permit his subsequent omissions or derelictions of duty to invalidate the sale, without fault on the part of the purchaser, would be to establish a doctrine that would expose titles derived under execution to an uncertainty and insecurity that would drive from the arena of bidders all prudent and cautious persons, diminish competition in bidding, and tend to produce a sacrifice, to the injury of debtor and creditor. We can not sanction such doctrine." (And see Freeman on Executions, section 281.)

The objection that the return did not specify the quantity of Joseph F. Galot's remainder interest has been passed upon by this court in Brown v. Smith, 7 B. M., 362, in which case the levy was made upon the right, title and interest of the execution defendant in the land, and not upon the land itself. The court there said: "The distinction is but nominal, and has been too generally disregarded in making levies and sales for it to be now questioned whether a levy and sale in either mode is not sufficient with the sheriff's deed to pass to the purchaser such title as the defendant had subject to execution."

And in Humphreys' ex'or v. Wade, 84 Ky., 400, the court says: "The right, title and interest of the defendant may be levied on and sold without specifying the particular interest. Such a levy is certainly not void."

The fourth objection is that the levies were void because the returns were signed by the deputy sheriff, for the sheriff, and not in the name of the sheriff, by the deputy. This court has expressly decided the contrary of this contention in Humphreys' ex'or v. Wade, 84 Ky., 400.

The fifth objection is to the appraisement, and is that it bears no date, and that there is no proof that it was made before the sale as required by the statute. As to this, it need only be said that this case comes up upon demurrer to the answer, and the answer specifically avers that the land was appraised before the sale. This averment, upon demurrer, must be taken as true. A further objection to the appraisement is that the deputy sheriff had no authority to administer the oath to the appraisers. There was at that time no direct authority given to the officer to administer this oath, but it was held in Sayres v. Hahn, 5 KY. LAW REP., 320, that "a failure to have the appraisers sworn will not affect the title of the purchaser unless the purchaser participates in the irregularity." A further objection to the appraisement is that it does not describe the land nor designate the quantity of Joseph F. Galot's interest therein. The appraisement shows that the land valued was the same property levied on by the sheriff of Jefferson county to satisfy execution No. 12,030. The description is practically the same. The whole body of land was valued at $2,000, and the life-tenant's estate therein was valued at $600. In our opinion, this was a sufficient valuation of Joseph F. Galot's one-fifth interest in the remainder, the entire remainder interest being thereby shown to be worth $1,400.

The same objections are made to the appraisement of the equity of redemption. As no appraisement was necessary, these objections need not be considered. The appraisement was made for the benefit of the debtor to secure him the legal right to redeem in case the estate should not sell for two-thirds of its value. Had there been no appraisement, or had the appraisement which was made been absolutely void, it is possible that the execution defendant might in equity be allowed to redeem if in reasonable time he made the offer; but in this case the execution defendant does not offer to redeem.

For the reasons given the judgment of the trial court must be affirmed.

BRUNER & BLOOM V. CLAY CITY.

(Filed February 3, 1897.)

Liquor License—Excessive charge—Voluntary payment—Where parties having obtained State license to retail liquor and rented premises in which to conduct their business upon the assurance of the city authorities that city license would be granted when the State license had been secured were charged against their protest for the city license a sum far in excess of what the law had fixed as the maximum rate, the payment of such amount was not a voluntary payment, and they are entitled to recover the excess over the legal rate.

A. T. Wood & Son for appellants.

J. A. Wilburn and C. B. Hancock for appellee.

Appeal from Powell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

On the 5th day of January, 1893, the board of council of Clay City refused to grant to the appellants a license to sell liquors unless they would pay the sum of $750 therefor. They knew at the time this sum was demanded and paid that under the charter of the town the board of council could only require the payment of $300 for such license if the board saw proper to grant it. In view of this fact they protested against paying any sum exceeding $300. The city refunded $200 of the amount which they paid. This action was brought to recover $250, the amount which appears to have been illegally demanded.

The appellants allege that, before they made an application to the county court of Powell county therefor and obtained a State license to retail liquors in Clay City, they applied to the authorities of the city who had the authority to grant a license to retail liquor, and were informed that if they obtained a State license that the council would grant them a license to retail liquors; that in view of that fact they obtained a State license, rented a house, and got ready to do business.

These facts appear in the petition as amended, to which the court sustained a demurrer.

There is no statement of facts which indicated that the board of council had, in its organized capacity, made any order to this effect. If it had done so it could have reconsidered its action and refused to grant the license; hence, we are of the opinion that the statements as to the alleged promise of the authorities is immaterial as to the question involved. The question is, was the payment a voluntary one. The peculiar facts of each case must determine whether the payment is involuntary or voluntary. If the facts be as alleged, and we must assume them to be true on demurrer, the appellants had incurred the expense of having obtained a license from the State, the expense of renting a building in which to do business, and in getting ready to do business. Notwithstanding these facts, they could not have compelled the council to grant them a license to retail liquors.

We assume the council regarded them as suitable persons to engage in the business of retailing liquors, or it would not have made the order to grant the license. Having reached the conclusion to grant the license, it was wrong and illegal for them to demand a larger fee than $300, as the law-making branch of the government had declared that to be the maximum amount to be demanded. When the demand was made for $750, the appellants were confronted with a condition which compelled them to sustain a loss. If they refused to take the license on the condition imposed, then the expenses of the State license, the rent of the premises, and the expense of getting ready to do business was a total loss to them. If they paid $450 in excess of the amount which the council had the right to demand, then their apparent loss was an amount equal to the sum illegally demanded.

Presumably in the exercise of their judgment as to the best way to extricate themselves from a bad situation, forced upon them by the illegal conduct of the council, they determined to protest and pay.

We believe the facts of this case remove it from that class of cases where a recovery is denied because the payments were voluntary.

The conduct of the council in demanding the illegal sum was such oppression that, in our opinion, it can not be said that the payment of the excess of $300 was voluntarily made.

If the facts of this case were substantially the same as those in Tyler v. Smith, 18 B. M., 799, we would hold the payment was voluntary, and that the action could not be maintained.

In reaching the conclusions we have in this case, we have not failed to consider the adjudged cases of this court wherein questions of voluntary payments were involved.

The judgment is reversed, with directions that the demurrer to the petition be overruled, and that further proceedings conform to this opinion.

WARE, &C. V. FRANK'S ADM'R, &C.

(Filed February 3, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Purchase of remainder by life tenant—No such trust relation exists between a life tenant and the remainderman as to prevent the life tenant from purchasing the remainder, and as the evidence in this case fails to show actual fraud the chancellor properly refused to set aside a deed from the remainderman to the life tenant.

R. K. Smith for appellants.

J. B. Clarke and Cochran & Son for appellees.

Appeal from Bracken Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

Henry Frank, sr., died in 1880. By the provisions of his will his widow, Avarilla Frank, was to "have, hold and enjoy" his personal and real estate during her life. At the death of the widow, the life-tenant, it was to go to his five children. One of them died without issue before the testator, hence the estate in remainder went to the four children who survived him. The estate consisted of real estate, which, after the death of the widow, sold for $6,250, and the personal estate was so well managed by the widow that it amounted at the time of her death to about $7,500. She died in December, 1889, testate, and by the terms of the will she disposed of her estate to various persons who, together with the executors of her will, and the administrator, with the will annexed, of the estate of Henry Frank, sr., deceased, were made defendants to this action, which was brought by the appellant, Susan Ware, and her husband, Lewis Ware. Susan Ware is the daughter of Henry Frank, sr., and to whom her father's will gave one-fourth of his estate in remainder.

In March, 1889, in consideration of $1,400, Susan Ware—her husband joining her—by deed conveyed to Avarilla Frank her undivided one-fourth of the real and personal estate left by her father.

The evidence tends to prove that the consideration was paid by Avarilla Frank out of her own means. At any rate, there is nothing in the record tending to show that it was paid out of any of the assets of Henry Frank, sr.'s, estate.

This action was brought by Susan Ware to set aside the deed which she made to Avarilla Frank, insofar as it embraced the personal estate, and to be adjudged one-fourth of the estate left by her father.

It is contended, first, that the widow obtained the deed by fraud; second, that as she had the use of the estate during her life, she was a quasi trustee; therefore, she was precluded from obtaining a valid conveyance from a remainderman.

It is insisted that Avarilla Frank represented to the agent of Susan Ware that there was none of the personal estate of Henry Frank, sr., left for his heirs.

There is a conflict in the testimony of W. O. Ware, who was acting for his mother in negotiating the sale for her and a servant girl, who appears to have been present when the terms of sale were agreed upon. This agent was fully advised by a kinsman and the administrator of Henry Frank, sr.'s, estate as to the proximate amount thereof which was held by the widow. Mrs. Ware's son says that he gave her the information imparted to him by the kinsman and the administrator. The deed which the mother executed embraces the personalty as well as the real estate. The check, which was given her by the widow in payment of the consideration for the deed, recites it is given in full consideration of her interest in the real and personal estate of her late father, Henry Frank, sr. The attorney, who represented Mrs. Frank in the execution of the deed, says that he fully explained to Mrs. Ware the effect of the deed. The question is suggested, if Mrs. Frank represented there was no personal estate to be conveyed, why did the deed and check describe the property as consisting of both personal and real estate? There is no evidence as to the age of the widow and the condition of her health at the time the deed was made, hence no data is given from which the court can have an opinion as to whether the consideration paid was inadequate. Of course it would not follow merely because the consideration was inadequate the deed should be set aside. The plaintiff wholly failed to establish the charge that the deed was obtained by fraud. The fact that the widow died shortly after the deed was made does not affect the question of the value of the remainder interest at the time it was conveyed, as the probable prolongation of life as determined by life tables would fix the value of the life estate, consequently the value of the estate in remainder.

We know of no principle of law or rule in equity which prevents a life tenant from purchasing the interest of a remainderman. Certainly no such fiduciary relations exist between them which would make applicable to their transactions the rules of equity which govern the trustees and cestui que trust. The life tenant has no right to destroy or waste the estate in remainder, but this obligation to preserve the estate in remainder does not preclude the life-tenant from acquiring it by gift or purchase. We can see no good reason why one who has the lesser may not acquire the greater estate.

The judgment is affirmed.

PHILLIPS V. OFFUTT, &C.

(Filed February 3, 1897—Not to be reported.

Building contract—Acceptance of order drawn by contractor—Set-off—Where one who had employed a contractor to build a house accepted an order drawn by the contractor in favor of a material man, to be paid when the house should be completed in full, in an action upon that order, it appearing that the contractor afterward substantially abandoned the job, and that defendant completed the house chiefly by the employment of hands who had been working for the contractor, the plaintiff was entitled to recover the amount due the contractor after deducting from the contract price the money expended by defendant in the completion of the house, defendant not being entitled to deduct the rental value of the house for the time the contractor was in default in construction, or the value of his services, the date of the order being after the date fixed in the contract for the completion of the house, and there being nothing to show that plaintiff knew of the conditions of the contract as to the time for its completion.

Jno. W. Lewis for appellant.

W. J. Lisle for appellees.

Appeal from Marion Circuit Court.

Opinion of the Court by Judge Burnam.

The appellant, J. G. Phillips, entered into a written contract with appellee, E. B. Smith, in which Smith agreed and contracted to build a residence for Phillips in the town of Lebanon, Ky., on the lot of Phillips, according to plans and specifications, for the sum of $3,000, to be paid, one-fourth when the foundation was completed and all the framing material on the ground; one-fourth when the building was under roof; one-fourth when the plastering was completed; and the remainder when the house was completed; and it was further stipulated that the house was to be completed and ready for occupancy by the 1st day of October, 1891.

The evidence in this case shows that this house was not completed and ready for occupancy until the 28th day of May, 1892, nearly eight months after the time provided for in the contract. The contractor, Smith, in order to comply with his contract, purchased of A. Offutt—who owned a planing mill and furnished building supplies—material to the amount of more than $800, which was used in the construction of this dwelling. In November, 1891, Smith, the contractor, gave this order to Offutt:

"Mr. J. G. Phillips: You will please pay to A. Offutt the sum of $750 when your house is completed by E. B. Smith. The above sum is for material furnished and to be furnished; an order made by J. G. Phillips for sash, doors and stairs. (Signed) E. B. SMITH."

This order was accepted by endorsement on the same in these words:

"I agree to pay the within order when my house is completed in full by E. B. Smith. (Signed) J. G. PHILLIPS."

Subsequent to the execution of this order the contractor, Smith, substantially abandoned the job, and appellant completed it himself, chiefly by the employment of the same hands who had been working for the contractor previous to the time when appellant took charge of it, about the only difference being that instead of paying the contractor or his assignee for the work he paid the hands himself directly, and for necessary material.

This suit was instituted by the plaintiff at the September term, 1893, of the Marion Circuit Court, upon the aforesaid order against both Smith and Phillips. Recovery was controverted by the appellant, Phillips, on the ground that the house was not completed by Smith, the contractor, on the 1st day of October, 1891, as he had agreed to do; that he was entitled to the reasonable rental value of the house—which was alleged to be $25 per month—from the time it should have been completed until the time it was completed as a set-off, the allegation being that Smith was insolvent; and by the further claim that Smith, having abandoned the job of completing the house, and that appellant had been forced to do so in person, and he had been compelled to pay out of the balance of the funds which would have been due Smith the sum of $694.83; that he had also been compelled to give a great deal of his time to the work, and that his services were worth $50.

Upon the trial of the case the court below allowed the appellant, for moneys necessarily expended in the completion of the house according to plans and for extras, the sum of $717.25, and it also allowed appellant the further credit of $2,237.25 for the money which had been paid by the appellant, Phillips, to Smith previous to the acceptance of said order, the court charging Phillips with the sum of $34 for extra work contracted for after the date of the contract, making the total contract price of the house due Smith amount, under the contracts aforesaid, to the sum of $3,034; and, deducting the total credits from this sum, left a balance of $79.50, for which sum the court gave judgment against Phillips in favor of appellee Offutt. Appellant excepted to this judgment because the court failed to credit him with the reasonable rental value of the house from the time the contract with Smith stipulated it should be completed until the time it was actually completed, and also because the court failed to allow him anything for his services, and brings his appeal to this court.

There can be no doubt that Phillips was entitled to recover from the contractor, Smith, the reasonable rental value of the house for the time Smith was in default in the construction; but we do not think that this was a just or proper set-off against the claim of the appellee herein.

There was nothing said in the order from Smith to appellant in favor of the appellee, Offutt, for the $750 about the time said house was to be completed, and appellant made no such condition in his acceptance of said order. The date of the order was after the date fixed in the contract for the completion of the house. There is no evidence to show that Offutt knew of the conditions as to the time for completing the house. Offutt testifies that he notified appellant that if he did not accept the order that he would file a lien against the property for the material which he had furnished to build the house, and would furnish no more material.

It seems evident that appellant received and appropriated materials furnished by the appellee under this order after the date of its acceptance in the completion of said house, and, the court having allowed him as deductions from the contract price with Smith every dollar of the money expended by him in such completion, all the substantial conditions upon which said order was accepted by appellant had been complied with. The house was undoubtedly completed with the money which was due Smith, and completed largely by the hands which he had employed.

We concur in the opinion of the lower court that the appellant was not entitled to have the reasonable rental value of the house, or the value of his services set off against the money due appellee on the order.

Therefore, the case is affirmed, with damages.

DRESSMAN V. FARMERS & TRADERS NATIONAL BANK, &C.

(Filed February 3, 1897.)

Assessments for street improvements—Lien superior to mortgage—The lien upon abutting property given by a city charter to secure assessments for street improvements is superior to a mortgage lien existing when the improvement was made, although the charter does not expressly so declare.

D. A. Glenn for appellant.

James W. Bryan for appellee.

Appeal from Kenton Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Burnam.

This case involves a question of law growing out of these facts: The city of Covington, through its contractor, the appellant, improved Linden avenue by grading and paving, and, by an ordinance properly passed, assessed and levied a lien upon a couple of lots located in Morton's subdivision and fronting said Linden avenue, where the work was done, to pay their proportionate part of the expense of the improvement. This ordinance was passed and lien imposed August 2, 1892, upon the property which was owned by H. T. Morton, who, previous to his death in December, 1889, had given a mortgage on this property to the appellee, the Farmers & Traders National Bank.

There is no question raised as to the regularity of the proceedings of the council, or as to the validity of the mortgage to appellee. The sole question is, which lien has priority. The court below held that appellee was entitled to be paid first, and ordered a sale of the property to satisfy both liens. Upon the sale of said property, it brought less than the amount of appellee's claims, and appellant was left without relief, and brought his case to this court and asks a reversal of the judgment of the lower court.

The legislature of Kentucky, by its act of March, 1850, amending and reducing into one the various provisions concerning the city of Covington, in article 2, section 7, gave the council full power and authority to cause and procure all streets to be graded and paved, and apportion the costs and expenses thereof equally on the fronting and abutting property and the owners thereof, according to the front feet, and gave a lien on the property for its proportion of the expenses in this language: "A lien is hereby given on the lots or parts of lots for same, which cost and expenses may be listed and collected as other taxes are by the city collector, or any special collector who shall have authority to sell and convey the lots or parts of lots, according to such by-laws and regulations as shall be adopted by the council." The legislature also provided by subsequent legislation that such lien might be enforced in a court of equity, "wherein all the lien-holders could come and have their liens adjusted."

The mortgage of appellee was acquired December 11, 1889, a date subsequent to the city charter, but prior in time to the date of the ordinance requiring the improvement to be made. "The appellee contends that an assessment made for constructing a street by the city council does not partake of the character of a tax levy, and that in the absence of a charter provision making it a first lien upon the property abutting the improvement it takes its place in line with the existing lien claims against said property," and can only be paid after all prior lien encumbrances have been discharged in full.

It is manifest that this contest for priority is really between the city of Covington, on the one hand, and the mortgagee on the other. It is admitted by appellant that the sections of the city charter quoted above do not, by express provision, give the city a first lien for local assessment for street improvement, but it is insisted that such was the intention of the "law-making" power.

The attention of the court has not been directed to an adjudicated case where the precise question involved in this appeal has been passed upon. The distinction between taxes, pure and simple, and assessments for local purposes, has been frequently pointed out in opinions of this court, and it has been held that an assessment for a supposed benefit was not a tax within the meaning of the law exempting property from taxation. (Zabel v. Louisville Baptist Orphans' Home, 92 Ky., 89; Johnson v. Louisville, 11 Bush, 527; Sheehan v. Good Samaritan Hospital, 50 Mo., 155.)

A pure tax is a burden imposed by the sovereign power on all property and persons alike, and is compensated for by the equal protection which all receive from such power; and, whilst the property is resorted to for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of the tax, it is the individual and not the property, who pays the tax. Whilst in the case of a local assessment for local improvement it is the property which is primarily liable and not the individual, as it is supposed to be compensated for by local benefits which come from such improvements enhancing the value of the property assessed to the extent of the assessment laid upon it. This is the real distinction between them.

But it is not apparent why this difference in the character of these taxes should be so confidently invoked to defeat the claims of the appellant for a priority. Both are levied under the sovereign power of the State, and both are levied under the theory that they are for the general good; and the same general powers for enforcing their collection are given. It is true that in the case of a local assessment the city is limited to the property specially benefited in the steps it may take for collection of the assessment; but it seems to us that this is a greater reason why this claim against such property should be paramount to all others. The legislature certainly has the power to create such a lien, and to give it priority over all private rights and interests. "One who acquires an interest in land takes it subject to the right to lay general taxes upon it, and to impose upon it the burden of paying the expenses of necessary public improvements which confer upon the land a special benefit. * * * Statutes giving a lien are remedial, and, therefore, to be liberally construed, and so construed as to accomplish the legislative purpose. In creating liens for improvement assessments, the legislature makes secure compensation for what is, in truth, an industrial annexation of the land, for the street improved is, in a sense, an appurtenance of the land which increases its value, and whoever holds an interest in the land profits by the appurtenance, and ought, in justice, to be subjected to the lien which secures the assessment. It is, for these reasons, often proper to deduce from the general language of a statute giving a lien the conclusion that it gives a paramount lien to which mortgage estates or judgment liens must yield." (Ellison on Roads and Streets, page 334.)

By section 7, article 2, of the charter of the city of Covington, the city council of Covington are given absolute power in their discretion to cause all streets to be graded and paved, and to apportion the costs and expenses thereof equally on the abutting lot-holders, according to the front feet, and a lien is given upon the lots for cost and expenses of such improvements, and they are authorized to direct a sale of these lots in accordance with the by-laws and regulations to be adopted by the city council by their city collector. Whilst this language does not expressly say that such liens shall be prior in rank to other liens on said property, it seems to us that it does this by necessary implication. This power the city can exercise against the owner of the property, and certainly a mortgagee can have no higher equity or claim in the property than the mortgagor gave to him. His interest and title in same are conditional and less than that of the mortgagor, and his rights in the property are entitled to no greater consideration than those under whom he claims. He, with the owner, has profited by the enhanced value given the property by the improvements which the assessment is made to pay for.

In Nevin v. Allen, 15 KY. LAW REP., 836, this court held that a homestead set apart to a widow and children, and which was by law exempt from liability for the owner's debts, might be subjected to pay an assessment for street improvement for which it was liable.

We are of the opinion that the lien provided for in the section of the charter quoted supra existed from the date when such charter became operative against all the real property within the limits of the city. It was simply a suspended power which the council could enforce whenever, in their discretion, the public interests required it, and all persons dealing in such real property were bound to take notice. Any other construction gives to the land-holder the power to so encumber his land as to render nugatory the power vested in the common council for the benefit of the whole community to improve streets at the expense of the abutting property holders.

We hold in this case that appellee took the mortgage on the lots in question subject to the power of the city to require said lots to bear their proportion of the expense of constructing the streets on which they fronted, and that appellant was entitled to have his claim for such construction paid first out of the proceeds of the sale of such lots.

For these reasons the judgment of the lower court is reversed and the case is remanded for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE R. R. CO. v. COX.

(Filed February 5, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Railroads—Injury to passengers—Instructions—In this action against a railroad company to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been sustained by plaintiff in a wreck caused by a collision between two of defendant's trains, upon one of which plaintiff was a passenger, defendant not denying that the collision was caused by the gross negligence of its agents, the instructions to the jury, which are set out in the opinion in full, contain no substantial error.

2. Same—The cause and extent of plaintiff's injuries were questions of fact for the jury, and their finding for plaintiff is not flagrantly against the evidence.

3. Excessive verdict—A verdict for $500 is not excessive if plaintiff was injured to the extent stated by his witnesses, as the jury, as they had a right to do, must have believed.

J. W. Alcorn and Boyd & Craft for appellant.

Appeal from Laurel Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Burnam.

This action was instituted by the plaintiff against the defendant in the Laurel Circuit Court to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been sustained by him in a wreck caused by a collision between two of defendant's trains, upon one of which he was a passenger, which collision was alleged to have been caused by the willful negligence and careless acts of defendant's agents and employes. The injury occurred from the plaintiff being thrown out of his seat against the wall of the coach and on the seat, floor and side of said coach with great force at the time of and by reason of the collision, inflicting injuries upon the body of plaintiff, his back, kidneys, bowels, breast, ankle, etc.

The defendant does not deny the collision of its trains, or that the same was the result of the gross or careless negligence of its agents, but does deny that plaintiff was injured in such collision, or that he is entitled to damages.

The case came on for trial, and being submitted to the jury, they returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $500 damages, and in a motion for a new trial defendant relies, first, that the court erred in instructing the jury, in that the instructions are erroneous and misleading; and second, that the verdict is not sustained by sufficient evidence; and third, that the damages are excessive, and appear to have been given under the influence of prejudice. The instructions are as follows:

"1. The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that the defendant, the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co., by its agents, servants or employes, caused or produced a collision of a freight and passenger train on its road near Hazel Patch, in Laurel county, Kentucky, on the 28th day of September, 1893, and that E. J. Cox was at the time a passenger on said passenger train, and that said Cox sustained injuries from said collision upon the back, side, and internal injuries in the kidneys or bowels, caused by the collision of defendant's trains on its said railroad at the said time; if the jury believe from the evidence he received injuries, they will find for the plaintiff such damages as they believe from the evidence he has sustained, not exceeding $5,000, the amount claimed in plaintiff's petition, although they may believe from the evidence that the collision was not brought about by the willful neglect of the defendant's agents, servants or employes.

"2. The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that the defendant, the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, by its agents, servants or employes, caused or produced a collision, near Hazel Patch, of a freight train and a passenger train, and that the plaintiff, E. J. Cox, was at the time a passenger on said passenger train, and that said collision was brought about by the willful, negligent and careless acts of said agents, servants or employes, and that the plaintiff, E. J. Cox, by reason thereof, was injured upon the back, side, or sustained internal injuries in the kidneys or bowels, they will find for the plaintiff such damages as they may believe from the evidence he has sustained therefrom, not exceeding $5,000, the amount claimed in the petition. The finding of the jury under instructions 1 and 2, or upon the entire case, shall not exceed $5,000."

We do not think these instructions contain any substantial error, or are prejudicial to the defendant; and whilst the evidence in behalf of the defendant, upon the question of the injuries sustained by plaintiff, is very strong and reflects very gravely upon the character of the plaintiff, yet, as the injuries complained of and their extent were questions of fact, and as the plaintiff introduced a good deal of evidence conducing to establish his contentions, both as to the cause and extent of said injuries, we can not say that the verdict is flagrantly against the weight of evidence, or is not sustained by the evidence; nor do we feel warranted in saying that the damages were excessive if the jury credited the statements of plaintiff's witnesses.

Wherefore, the case is affirmed, with damages.

REYNOLDS V. WRIGHT.

(Filed January 23, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Attachment—In this action to enforce a mortgage lien upon personal property, in which an attachment was sued out and levied upon the property, judgment for the debt and for the sale of the property under the mortgage was proper, as was also the judgment sustaining the attachment, the grounds of the attachment therefor being insufficiently controverted.

D. D. Fields and John L. Scott & Son for appellant.

W. H. Holt for appellee.

Appeal from Letcher Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge White.

This is an appeal from the Letcher Circuit Court. The appellee, Wright, sued the appellant on a claim for $145, secured by mortgage on four mules. At the commencement of the action the appellee filed an affidavit and sued out an attachment and had said attachment levied on three of the mortgaged mules. Appellant executed bond and retained the possession of the mules. A demurrer was filed to the plaintiff's petition and was overruled, and defendant excepted to the rulings of the court. Defendant filed an answer, to which plaintiff demurred, and the court sustained the demurrer and defendant excepted.

The court did not err in overruling defendant's demurrer to plaintiff's petition. The petition stated a cause of action, and was prosecuted in the name of the proper party. The court properly sustained the demurrer to the answer of defendant, so far as the same attempted to set up a defense to the action. The defendant failing to plead further, the court rendered judgment against him for the amount of the debt sued on, and adjudged the sale of the mortgaged property to satisfy said judgment and sustaining plaintiff's attachment, and from this judgment appellant has appealed.

Appellant in his answer denied the ground of attachment upon which appellee procured the issual of the attachment, and, therefore, made an issue. The burden of proof was on the appellee. The court, so far as is shown in this record, sustained the attachment without hearing any proof, and this was error to the prejudice of appellant.

We are of opinion that the judgment on the debt and order to sell the mortgaged property is correct, and is approved by this court; but for the error of the court in sustaining the attachment, and this error alone, the cause is reversed and remanded for proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

The court delivered the following response correcting the opinion and sustaining petition for rehearing to that extent March 4, 1897:

Appellee Wright having filed petition herein asking a rehearing of this case so far as the judgment of this court reversed the judgment of the lower court in sustaining the attachment, and having called the attention of the court to the failure of the appellant to deny that the property was about to be concealed, the defective denial of the grounds of attachment having escaped the attention of the court, a rehearing is granted appellee, and the court is of the opinion that the denial of the grounds of the attachment were insufficient, and the circuit court did not err in its judgment sustaining the attachment.

The judgment of the circuit court is affirmed with damages.

GLOVER & DURRETT V. SUTER, &C.

(Filed January 27, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Husband and wife—Fraud as to creditors—In this action by creditors seeking to subject to the payment of their debts property claimed by the wife of the debtor, the evidence sustains the wife's claim, and the charge of fraud is not established, it appearing that the money with which the property was purchased was the result of fortunate investments made by the wife, and not of the husband's skill and industry.

2. Evidence—It was competent for the wife to waive her right to testify and introduce her husband as a witness.

Geo. C. Drane and Frank Chinn for appellants.

John W. Rodman, John B. Lindsey and James A. Violett for appellees.

Appeal from Franklin Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Guffy.

This appeal is prosecuted by Glover & Durrett from a judgment rendered by the Franklin Circuit Court in the two consolidated actions of Glover & Durrett against B. F. Suter, &c.

One of the suits was brought to enforce the collection of a judgment in appellant's favor against B. F. Suter for more than $5,000, and the other suit was to recover on a note for about the same amount. Attachments were obtained and levied on a large amount of tobacco, a tract of land, some sheep, and White, Dunkerson & Co. were also summoned as garnishees.

Julia Suter, wife of B. F. Suter, claimed the property levied on. White, Dunkerson & Co. claimed liens on the tobacco under contract with Julia Suter.

The pleadings, proof and exhibits are voluminous, and it would be unprofitable to discuss at length the various issues raised or attempted to be raised, or to recite at length the evidence introduced. The real question to be decided is as to the title to the property levied on, or, in other words, was it the property of B. F. Suter? The contention of appellant being in substance that all the claim or claims of Julia Suter to the property in contest was fraudulent as to them, as was also her obtention of the judgment of the Franklin Circuit Court giving her the rights and powers of a feme sole.

The evidence seems to show that B. F. Suter had been from 1884 buying tobacco for appellants or soliciting shipments of tobacco to them, and part of the time buying tobacco for himself and consigning the same to appellants for sale, they being warehousemen in Louisville, Ky., and that although for a time he seemed to make money he finally became largely indebted to appellants as well as indebted to other parties, and in 1889 made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors to J. C. Noel. Afterwards an arrangement was made between appellants, B. F. Suter and his other creditors, by which the appellants were to have delivered up to them most of the assigned property and a secured note for $1,000, and Suter to execute the two notes, the amounts of which are involved in this suit, appellants agreeing that a payment of $1,500 made by Suter to his wife might remain unassailed, and also leaving some tobacco in Suter's hands. This agreement seems to have been fully executed. Afterwards Julia Suter obtained judgment aforesaid, empowering her to trade and do business as a feme sole.

It also appears that B. F. Suter had mortgaged his home farm for about $1,200 to Noel, &c., who proceeded in 1890 to sue and enforce their lien on the same, and Hockinsmith bought the farm. It is claimed Hockinsmith bought same with some kind of an agreement that B. F. Suter should have the right to redeem the same, which claim is not only denied by appellees but disputed. Some time after the judgment granting feme sole rights to Mrs. Suter she rented the farm of her brother (Hockinsmith) for a year and raised or had raised a crop on same, and that she bought of B. F. Suter the tobacco turned over to him under the agreement aforesaid, and did other trading, and made an arrangement with White, Dunkerson & Co. to buy tobacco for them, and that for a time she made money in so doing, and purchased of her brother the farm aforesaid at the price of $13,000 and paid $7,000 cash, executing three notes for $2,000 each for the residue of the purchase money, and paid off one of these, but afterwards gave a mortgage on the farm for $2,000.

The court upon final trial adjudged that the property attached was not subject to the attachment and dismissed appellant's petition in so far as it sought to subject said property, and adjudged that White, Dunkerson & Co. had a lien on the tobacco attached and adjudged the proceeds to them, it having by agreement been sold by them, and also rendered judgment in their favor on their cross petition against Mrs. Suter for more than $500. It is not necessary to determine whether they had a valid lien on the tobacco, inasmuch as it was not liable to the attachment, and no appeal has been taken by Julia Suter from that judgment.

It is urged by appellants that the tobacco was shipped in the name of B. F. Suter and sold in his name and claimed by him, but if it was really Mrs. Suter's property such action could not divest her of title. If she had consented to all this, and B. F. Suter had obtained credit by reason thereof, a different question from the one under consideration might arise. It is also claimed, and truly so, that B. F. Suter acted as agent for his wife, and transacted most, if not all, of the trades as her agent. It is also claimed that it was his credit that enabled her to obtain the advances from White, Dunkerson & Co., and his skill, etc., that caused the profits that were made.

It does not clearly appear that he devoted much time to the farming or other business ventures, and it may be remarked that, inasmuch as in a few years he had become largely in debt over and above the value of his property, his credit or capacity would not be likely to be very valuable. It is true that fraud must be generally proven, if proven at all, by circumstances. It can rarely be expressly proven, yet the party alleging fraud must in some way prove the charge or fail in the suit. It is true, as often held by this court, that the creditor has a right to look to the skill and industry of the husband for the payment of his debts, and the right to subject so much thereof as may be left after the support of the family dependent on him is met to the payment of his debt can not be denied, yet in this case it seems to us that the money made by Mrs. Suter by her own industry and the capital of about $2,000 was more the result of fortunate investments or luck than through or by the skill of her husband or herself either.

Various exceptions were filed to depositions, but we perceive no error to the prejudice of appellants in the rulings of the court below on the exceptions. B. F. Suter was a competent witness under the provisions of the Code of Practice, as has been heretofore held by this court. If the wife in such a case chooses to waive her right to testify and introduce her husband she can do so. The testimony in many cases might be of more weight than that of her husband, but that fact can not deprive her of the right to so use the testimony of the husband.

We deem it unnecessary to notice further the many questions raised and ably argued by counsel on both sides.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

SWEENEY V. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed February 5, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Criminal law—Increased punishment on account of former conviction—Where the minimum punishment fixed by the statute for a felony charged in an indictment is confinement in the penitentiary for a term of years, which is twice the length of the term for which the defendant was sentenced upon a former conviction for another felony, it is not proper to allege in the indictment the facts as to the former conviction as the punishment, if there be a verdict of guilty, must in any event be for a term twice the length of the former term. But the defendant in this case was not prejudiced by such allegations, and, as there was no objection to the evidence offered to sustain these allegations, there can be no reversal on account of its admission.

2. Indictment—Election—The indictment charged but one offense, and it was not error to overrule a motion to require the Commonwealth to elect.

3. Same—Where a former conviction of another felony is charged in an indictment for the purpose of increasing the punishment, that charge may be considered upon the trial of the offense under investigation, and it is not necessary that it should be considered separately after the return of a verdict as to the offense charged in the indictment.

Walter Darby for appellant.

W. S. Taylor for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Criminal division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

The indictment charges the defendant, first, with burglary; second, that he had been previously convicted of grand larceny and sentenced to the penitentiary for one year.

On a trial of this case the jury returned a verdict as follows, to wit: "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of burglary as charged in the indictment and fix his punishment at eight (8) years in the penitentiary."

The indictment sufficiently alleged the facts constituting the crime of burglary, and the court did not err in overruling the demurrer thereto, nor did it err in overruling the motion to compel the Commonwealth to elect which count it would prosecute, as but one offense was charged in the indictment.

It was said in the Chenowith case, 11 KY. LAW REP., 562, wherein this court was construing the statute (now section 1130, Kentucky Statutes), "if, therefore, the punishment awarded for the second offense be equal to or exceed double the time of the former one, judgment is to be rendered only for the punishment fixed in the present offense."

So when one has been convicted of a felony and is the second time convicted of one, the punishment, of which is confinement in the penitentiary, shall be confined in the penitentiary not less than double the time of first conviction.

The minimum punishment for burglary is confinement in the penitentiary for two years. If the defendant was found guilty of burglary the jury was compelled to fix his punishment at confinement in the penitentiary at two years, which would make his punishment not less than double his punishment for the first conviction, which was one year in the penitentiary.

It would, therefore, seem to follow that in such case it would be unnecessary to allege in the indictment the facts with relation to his first conviction, as on the second conviction his punishment could not be added to because of the first, as the statute is necessarily complied with by the court rendering a judgment on the verdict of the jury, even for the minimum punishment. The allegations in the indictment as to the first conviction could not have been prejudicial to the defendant, except that evidence was offered to sustain them. There was evidence offered for this purpose, but no objection made to its admission, hence we can not reverse the action of the court as to this error.

It is insisted that the facts as to the former conviction should be withheld from the jury until after the verdict upon the charge on which the defendant is being tried. This is upon the idea that proof that the defendant has been convicted of felony is calculated to produce a prejudice in the minds of the jury against him.

The statute provides that the "judgment in such cases shall not be given for the increased penalty unless the jury shall find from the record and other competent evidence the fact of former convictions for felony committed by the prisoner in or out of the State."

While the statute does not say in terms that the jury shall on the trial of the charge under investigation pass upon the charge of former conviction, yet it contemplates that it shall do so on such trial. If the law-making power had intended that the practice should be to submit the question of former conviction after the verdict of guilty on the charge under investigation it would have said so. This it failed to do; besides, the language of the statute indicates the contrary to have been its purpose. This court has also, by sustaining judgments on verdicts returned on evidence introduced on the trial of the accused, sustained the practice complained of by counsel for appellant.

The judgment is affirmed.

GLENN V. MILLER.

(Filed February 5, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Sale of timber - Construction of contract—Under a contract for the sale of timber to be paid for in installments in advance of the cutting of the timber, each succeeding installment payable when all the timber theretofore paid for had been cut, the buyer being given one year from the date of the contract "in which to cut said timber," the seller's right of action upon the contract was not postponed for one year, but all the timber paid for having been cut the next installment then became due, and the seller was entitled to sue therefor, or for so much thereof as the value of the uncut timber amounted to. But he can not recover both the contract price and damages for breach of contract set up in an amended petition filed after the expiration of one year from the date of the contract, and may, therefore, be required to elect.

Jonson & Wickliffe for appellant.

Charles Eaves for appellee.

Appeal from Muhlenburg Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Lewis.

November 1, 1892, the following written contract was made between John Glenn, of Muhlenburg county, and H. E. Miller, of Owensboro: "Said Glenn doth sell and convey to said Miller all the gum timber upon the tract of land whereon he resides. Said timber shall be 18 inches and upward, and be cut a reasonable height from the ground. Said Miller agrees to pay 65 cents per foot across the stump, and to pay $150 cash before cutting any of the timber, and then to cut until the $150 shall be expended at the price across the herein stated, at which time another payment shall be made, based upon an average of the number of trees standing by a like number cut, and when all are cut the number of trees included in the last payment shall be measured, and if it is found that it has been overpaid said Glenn agrees to refund that amount, and if there has not been enough paid at the rate per foot as herein stated said Miller agrees to pay the same. Said Miller is given one year from the date of this article in which to cut said timber."

June 12, 1893, Glenn brought this action to recover $148.85, amount alleged to be then due under said contract. In his petition he states that Miller paid the first installment as agreed and cut timber to that value, and again paid an installment of $155 and cut timber to that value and more; and again paid $27.60, and has cut timber to the value of more than the amount so paid of at least $26.95. He further states there are trees yet standing upon the land, and included in the contract, of the value when measured, as prescribed in the contract, including that already cut and not paid for, of the value of more than $135.85, in addition to the excess of $26.95, before mentioned. He also sues for $13 balance unpaid upon an order drawn in his favor by one McKinney and accepted by Miller.

To the petition a demurrer for want of jurisdiction by the court of the amount sued for, and also a general demurrer, was, January 22, 1894, filed, the former being sustained and the latter overruled. Thereupon the plaintiff moved to file an amended petition, but the motion was overruled and the action dismissed.

In the amended petition, which, as will be seen, was filed after the expiration of one year from the date of the contract, it is charged that Miller has refused to cut or pay for a large number of trees on said land of the description and dimensions mentioned in the contract, and has put it out of his power to perform it; that the trees he has cut were the most valuable portion of the timber and most accessible to a railroad near the land, and he, therefore, asks judgment for $75 in damages.

As the amount claimed in the original petition is much more than the sum necessary to give it jurisdiction, we suppose the lower court sustained the special demurrer upon the idea that an action could not then nor until after the end of one year from the date of the contract be maintained for the value of the uncut timber.

In our opinion the only meaning that can be properly given to the contract is that Glenn sold and Miller purchased at an ascertainable price per tree all the timber of the described kind and dimensions on said tract of land, and that each parcel or lot of the estimated value of $150 was to be paid for in advance, and when cut another lot was to be likewise paid for in advance, and so on until all was paid for and cut; and that such was the intended meaning and effect of the contract is shown by the provision that when all the trees were cut the number included in the last payment were to be measured, and Glenn to refund any excess received by him, and Miller to pay any deficiency there should be. Besides, the fact that Miller paid and Glenn received in advance of the cutting two installments of $150 and $155 shows the parties so interpreted the contract.

Plainly it was not intended that payment for any part of the timber should be postponed to the end of the contract period, because Miller was, by the terms of the contract, given one year from the date of it, and no more, in which to cut the timber. The object of that provision was simply to leave him without restriction as to the time within which to cut any particular lot already paid for, but require him to cut it all within the prescribed period. When the action was commenced all, and, according to the allegation of the petition, even more timber had been cut than was paid for, and as we construe the contract Miller was bound to pay and Glenn entitled to recover $150, or whatever may have been the amount in value, less than that sum, of all the uncut timber sold and purchased; and as it is alleged there were trees standing on the land and included in the contract of the value, when measured as prescribed, of more than $135.85, we think there was not only a cause of action stated in the petition, but the court had jurisdiction, and it was error to sustain the demurrer. But there can not for the cause stated in the amended petition be a recovery of damages in addition to what the plaintiff may be entitled to under the contract, and, therefore, he may be required to elect according to which pleading he will prosecute the action.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to overrule the demurrer and for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

OSTERMEYER, &C. V. OSTERMEYER, &C.

(Filed February 6, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Collection of rents by one of several joint tenants—Right to credit for disbursements—In a suit for the sale and division of proceeds of a tract of land descended to plaintiffs and defendant jointly, in which plaintiffs alleged in their petition that defendant had for many years collected and retained rents from the property, amounting to more than the value of his interest, and asked a reference to a commissioner to ascertain the amount he had received, and there was a reference to a commissioner without the filing of an answer, under what was in effect a consent order, it was proper for the commissioner to hear proof of all disbursements; and, it appearing that defendant had paid out money to reimburse his uncle for money advanced to defendant's mother to pay off a mortgage upon the land, defendant is entitled to credit for the amount thus paid by him; and plaintiffs can not defeat the credit upon the ground that defendant and his mother and uncle were volunteers.

Geo. Washington for appellants.

Thomas Healey for appellees.

Appeal from Campbell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Guffy.

This appeal is prosecuted from a judgment of the Campbell Circuit Court rendered in the action of appellants against the appellees, etc.

It is alleged in the petition that the plaintiffs and appellees, John Ostermeyer and his sister, were the joint owners of three lots of land in the Licking addition to the city of Newport, and that the same could not be divided without detriment to its value.

It was also alleged that the said appellee had for many years past collected and retained rents from said property amounting in the aggregate to very much more than the value in money of the said appellees' one-fourth interest in the property. Precisely how much he has so collected and retained plaintiffs are unable to state or to ascertain with certainty, unless upon a reference to the master.

A sale of the property and division of the proceeds was prayed for, and a reference to the master was also asked to ascertain and report what rents had been collected from said property by the said appellee, for which he was properly chargeable. Without answer or further pleading the case was referred to the master, who proceeded to take proof and made his report to court, which was excepted to by appellants, which exceptions were sustained as to appellee's claim for commission for collecting the rents, and overruled as to the residue of the report, and judgment entered allowing a claim of $550 to appellee, which item is the only matter now in dispute. It is claimed by appellee that there was a $900 mortgage on the land or lots mentioned, and to save the property that many years ago his uncle in some way paid for his (appellee's) mother or furnished her the money to pay off the mortgage so held by Miller, and that the mother repaid $300 thereof, and that afterwards the appellee paid the $550, which his uncle accepted in full of the balance due. The appellants insist that the claim was barred by the statute; that it was not a lien on the realty; that both the uncle and appellees were volunteers and acquired no claim against appellants nor lien on the lots by reason of the payment; that appellee did not plead the claim, hence no proof or consideration could be legally given to the claim, but the court below, as before stated, adjudged in favor of appellee as to the claim.

We quote as follows from the opinion and judgment of the learned chancellor: "It appears by the petition, the only pleading filed in the case, that Joseph Ostermeyer died in 1876, in this county, intestate, leaving four children, the plaintiffs and defendants, as his heirs at law. It charged that the defendant, John Ostermeyer, had collected the rent, etc. No answer was filed or required of John Ostermeyer, but an order of reference in the handwriffs of plaintiffs' attorney was made. While this is not expressly a consent order of reference, it was in fact so, and by it instead of requiring an issue to be made by the pleadings the master was to report what rents John Ostermeyer had collected 'for which he had failed to account.' Under this the court is satisfied he could hear proof of all disbursements and report thereon. It appears in the proof that Joseph Ostermeyer left a widow; that the real estate he left and which is sought to be divided was encumbered by a mortgage to one Miller. An uncle advanced the money to pay this off, and John Ostermeyer and his mother paid him back, John Ostermeyer paying $550 and reimbursed himself out of the rents. The master allowed him the credit, and plaintiff excepted to it, not because it was not an honest transaction or that there is the least doubt that he did pay it, but because he and his uncle were mere volunteers, because when he paid it he was an infant and the money he had belonged to his mother, as he could have none not her's, and because of the statute of limitations. The mother of John Ostermeyer had such an interest in preserving the property as entitled them to pay and be subrogated, and the uncle, while not having an interest in the property, and owing no duty to preserve it for his deceased brother's family, was not a stranger but very near of blood to them, and John Ostermeyer having reimbursed himself during the twelve years he collected rents without question, and by his brothers and sisters, for it can not be presumed that they allowed him to retain the rent during those years except for some such purpose. The court will not make him pay back the money and thus lose it."

It seems to us that the judgment of the court below ought to be and it is hereby affirmed.

BROOKS' ASS'EE, &C. V. SUMMERS.

SUMMERS V. BROOKS' ASS'EE.

KNIGHT V. BATES' ADM'R, &C.

(Filed February 6, 1897.)

1. Dower—Estoppel—In a suit by an assignee for creditors for the settlement of his trust, the prayer of the petition for the sale of the debtor's land free of dower, the consent of his wife to accept the value of her right of dower in money, followed by a judgment of sale, and an order directing the value in money of her potential right of dower to be ascertained, constituted a contract of record which ensued to the benefit of her estate after her death, although the value of her dower had not been ascertained at the time of her death.

2. Advancements—When a father conveyed land to his daughter, stating in the deed that a certain part of the recited consideration was the amount due from the grantor to the grantee on account of a sale of her land, in a proceeding brought by the grantor as guardian for her and her sister, in which he described himself and his two infant daughters as owners of the land, he being tenant by the courtesy, and further stating in the deed that the balance of the consideration was an advancement to the grantee, the acceptance of that deed by the grantee and her husband was a settlement of the amount due from the father on account of the sale of his daughter's land; and she can not in any event complain that a judgment in her favor for a balance found to be due her on that account was rendered subject to the value of her father's life estate, as he has not waived his right to have the value of his courtesy out of the proceeds of the land.

3. The advancement operated to cancel the remainder of the father's indebtedness to his daughter, even if that indebtedness was not adjusted by the agreement carried out by the execution of the deed, as an advancement to a child, unlike a legacy, operates to satisfy a debt due the child if the advancement be in amount equal to or greater than the debt.

Fairleigh & Straus for Brooks' assignee.

J. F. Combs for Knight and Summers.

Appeal from Bullitt Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge DuRelle.

Upon this record three appeals are presented for consideration. W. B. M. Brooks made an assignment to W. T. Morrow for the benefit of his creditors in October, 1892. In November, 1892, the assignee brought suit for the settlement of his trust, praying instructions by the court for a sale of the lands owned by his assignor, and for an adjudication as to the priorities of the creditors. Brooks, the assignor, and his wife, Bettie C. Brooks, were made parties defendant to this suit, and the petition prayed that the value of the dower should be fixed in money and the homestead assigned, in order that the lands might be sold free of lien, dower and homestead. To this petition Bettie C. Brooks filed an answer consenting to the sale of all the land mentioned in the petition, free from her potential right of dower, and agreeing to take the value of her said right of dower in said lands to be determined by the life-tables, and prayed that that value be ascertained. This answer was acknowledged before the clerk, after a separate examination of defendant, Bettie C. Brooks.

At the November term, 1892, the case was submitted for the advice of the chancellor, and a judgment rendered directing a sale of the lands belonging to the assignor. In that judgment it was provided as follows: "All questions as to the value of the defendant, Bettie C. Brooks' potential right of dower, and the priorities of the lien-holders in the funds arising from the sale of said lands, are reserved for further judgment of this court."

At the September term, 1893, the commissioner was, by an order of court, directed to take proof as to the age and condition of health of W. B. M. Brooks and his wife, Bettie C. Brooks, and report upon the value of the potential right of dower of Bettie C. Brooks. At the December term, 1893, the report was filed, showing the commissioner's estimate of the value of Mrs. Brooks' potential right of dower. Mrs. Brooks died the day after the report was filed.

In March, 1894, the administrator of Mrs. Brooks filed an answer claiming the value of the potential right of dower, praying the court to fix the same, and for its recovery by him as her administrator. It is claimed, on behalf of one of the creditors, that the death of the wife before any judgment fixing the value of her potential right of dower defeated her claim and that of her estate to be compensated for its value. In other words, the claim is that it was a mere possibility, and no right could pass to her estate until after a judgment establishing the right and fixing the value of dower had been entered. We are unable to agree with this contention. In our view, the prayer of the petition for sale, free of dower, the consent of Mrs. Brooks to accept the value of her right of dower in money, followed by a judgment of sale and an order directing the value in money of her potential right of dower to be ascertained, constituted a contract of record which enured to the benefit of her estate after her death. Had she lived, she would have been estopped from claiming dower in any of the lands sold, and, therefore, she parted with something of value as a consideration for the record contract which was thus entered into. The title obtained by the purchasers was free from her right of dower, and the purchase price was necessarily enhanced by that fact. When this was done her right to receive the value, to be thereafter ascertained, out of the proceeds became fixed and determined and passed to her legal representative.

The questions raised upon the two other appeals will next be considered. By his first wife Brooks had three daughters. Upon her death he was entitled to the possession, as tenant by curtesy, of certain land owned by her. In 1868 a suit was instituted in the Bullitt Circuit Court by Brooks, as statutory guardian, praying a sale of the land, upon the ground that a sale thereof would redound to the benefit of the infants. It is stated in the petition that the infants, "in conjunction with their said guardian," are the owners of the land. Commissioners were appointed to report the value of the infants' real and personal estate, the annual profits thereof, and whether their interests required a sale to be made. Judgment was rendered for a sale of the land, and bond was executed by Brooks in accordance with chapter 86 of the Revised Statutes. A sale was had, the purchase price being $5,511.82, and the purchase money was duly paid over to Brooks. One of his daughters died in infancy, her share passing to her sisters. One of the surviving daughters, Anna M. Brooks, married the defendant, Wilson Summers.

In March, 1884, Brooks and wife sold and conveyed to Summers a hundred acres of land at $30 per acre, and by the same deed conveyed to Anna M. Summers ninety-eight acres of land adjoining the hundred acre tract, the consideration for the ninety-eight acres being recited as follows: "The $2,830 mentioned as the consideration of the said ninety-eight acres is paid in this way, to wit: $1,830 of same was due from said W. B. M. Brooks to the said Annie May Summers on account of money realized by him out of the sale of a certain tract of land which the said Annie May and her sister inherited from their deceased mother, Mary Jane Brooks (whose maiden name was Mary Jane Pendleton).

"Said land was sold by the said W. B. M. Brooks as guardian of the said Annie May under and by virtue of a decree of the Bullitt Circuit Court, rendered in the suit of W. B. M. Brooks, guardian, on petition for sale of land, No. 331, and $1,000, the balance of the $2,830 hereby given to the said Annie May Summers as an advancement, for which she is to account in the final settlement of the estate of the said W. B. M. Brooks."

Mrs. Summers appears, by the testimony, to have been between twenty-five and thirty years of age at the date of the execution of this deed. The deed was duly accepted, and the $3,000, stipulated as the price of the hundred acres, was paid by Summers. Mrs. Summers and her husband, in their original pleadings in this suit, admitted that Brooks was entitled to a life estate in the proceeds of the sale of the land as tenant by curtesy. In a subsequent pleading this admission was specifically retracted, and the claim, as made finally by the pleadings and in the briefs, is that she was entitled to $2,755.91, as heir of her mother and sister, out of the proceeds of the sale; and it was claimed in the pleadings that she was entitled to interest thereon. The trial court gave judgment in her favor for $925, subject to the value of the life estate of her father, W. B. M. Brooks.

It is contended also that Mr. Brooks' estate by the curtesy was not sold by the judgment, and did not pass to the purchaser under the sale, and that, therefore, he should be required to look to the property sold for his curtesy, and has no interest whatever in the proceeds of sale; but Mr. Brooks in that suit correctly described himself and the infant daughters as the owners of the land in question. Having so described himself in the petition, he would undoubtedly after the sale be estopped from setting up any claim as tenant by the curtesy.

Much stress is laid by counsel for Mrs. Summers upon the phraseology used in the deed and in Mr. Brooks' deposition, viz, the recital in the deed that the money "was due" from Brooks to Mrs. Summers, and the statement in the deposition that it was what he "owed her," as showing that he had waived his estate by curtesy. But we are of opinion that these recitals did not estop him from claiming his life estate by the curtesy up to that date in the sum of money which he then described as due, even if the language used was intended to amount to any thing more than a mere expression of the fact that so much money was to come to Mrs. Summers from him.

Upon the other hand, it is claimed by counsel for the assignee that the acceptance of the deed, with full knowledge of its recitals, and the retention of the land by Summers and wife without protest, indicate that the value of Brooks' life interest had been deducted from the amount which he paid over to Mrs. Summers by the conveyance of the land. In this contention we are inclined to agree. It is true, however, that it is not definitely shown that at the time of the conveyance Mr. Brooks made any full statement of the amount received by him from the sale of the land which descended from his wife, and it is claimed with much earnestness that that fact prevents Summers and wife being estopped by their acceptance of the deed. But in the same deed was made an advancement of $1,000, and from the testimony there can be no doubt that the intention of the grantor, Brooks, was to fully pay his daughter the share which would ultimately come to her out of estate of her mother, and to give her the surplus, whatever it might be, by way of an advancement, to be accounted for out of her share in his estate. Such being the manifest intention of the grantor, we can not hesitate in the conclusion that the advancement operated to cancel the remainder of his indebtedness to his daughter, even if that indebtedness was not adjusted and settled by agreement carried out by the execution of the deed.

The weight of authority seems to be clear that an advancement to a child operates to satisfy a debt due the child if the advancement be in amount equal to or greater than the debt. The rule as to advancements appears to be directly opposite, in this respect, to that followed in the case of legacies, though the reason for the difference, as said by Mr. Pomeroy, "is certainly difficult to perceive." (Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence, section 540; 1 Am. & Eng. Enc., second edition, page 771; Kelly v. Kelly's ex'ors, 18 Am. Decisions, 710.)

For the reasons given the judgment is reversed upon the appeal of Morrow v. Summers, and affirmed upon appeals of Anna M. Summers v. Morrow, assignee, and Knight v. Bates' adm'r.

BEARD V. SHARP.

(Filed February 5, 1897.)

1. Life insurance—Under the charter of the United Order of the Golden Cross, a co-operative life insurance company, a member must designate as a beneficiary either one of the members of his family or one dependent upon him.

2. Insurable interest—Even if the law of the order were so construed as to allow a member to name a stranger as beneficiary, the benefit certificate would be void as to the stranger for want of an insurable interest, as insurance can not be taken out upon the life of a person for the benefit of one who has no insurable interest therein.

3. Same—Where a son, who had for a number of years kept up a benefit certificate upon his mother's life for his own benefit, consented, in order to raise money to pay the premiums, to accept a stranger as a joint beneficiary with him, and a new certificate was issued for that purpose, that certificate was void as to the stranger, and one-half of the insurance having been paid to him, the son is entitled to recover it from him, less the amount paid by him in premiums, for, although both were parties to an illegal transaction, the plaintiff was not equally in fault with the defendant.

T. T. Forman and C. F. Elkins for appellant.

H. Marshall Buford for appellee.

Appeal from Fayette Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Burnam.

The plaintiff, Beard, alleged that in 1881 he procured his mother, Julia Beard, to apply to the Supreme Commandery of the United Order of the Golden Cross for insurance upon her life for his sole benefit; that on the 8th day of February, 1881, there was issued upon said application a benefit certificate upon the life of said Julia Beard, payable upon her death to the plaintiff out of the benefit fund of said association, alleging further that the United Order of the Golden Cross was a regularly-incorporated insurance company under the laws of the State of Tennessee, having for its purpose co-operative life insurance, and by assessment upon its members to create a benefit fund, and with authority to pay out the same upon the death of a member, to the family of such deceased member, the amount of said benefit certificate.

Plaintiff files a copy of the charter of said company. Law 2, section 2 of said charter provides that applicants shall enter upon the medical examiner's blank the names of the members of his family or those dependent upon him to whom they desire their benefit certificate paid, and the name shall be entered in the benefit certificate.

The plaintiff alleges that he paid all the dues and assessments upon the benefit certificate above mentioned from the time it was issued to him to the 9th of December, 1893; that he had paid out in the aggregate to keep said benefit certificate alive the sum of $923.70; that about this time, owing to financial distress, he was unable to pay the assessments and applied to the defendant, Sharp, for assistance, and offered to assign him a fourth interest in the benefit certificate if he would pay the dues and assessments upon the policy from that time on as long as Julia Beard might live. The defendant declined this, but said he would take it on the terms proposed if the plaintiff would agree to give him one-half of said benefit certificate. He alleges that at the instance of defendant he surrendered his certificate, issued in 1881, and the defendant induced the mother of the plaintiff in 1893 to ask for a cancellation of the benefit certificate of 1881, and for the issuance of another, wherein the plaintiff and the defendant were both named as beneficiaries, one-half each. In accordance with said application the company issued another benefit certificate on December 9, 1893, on the life of said Julia Beard, wherein J. B. Beard, the plaintiff and son of Julia Beard, and S. G. Sharp, the defendant, named as friend, were to have one-half each of said benefit certificate, and the old certificate was surrendered up to the company by defendant, and the provisions of the latter were accepted by the deceased in writing on the face thereof. The new certificate was delivered to and held by the defendant until the death of Julia Beard, which occurred on the 16th day of January, 1894.

Defendant, pursuant to his agreement, paid all the dues and assessments chargeable against said certificate from December 9, 1893, up to February, 1894, amounting to $37.80. Due proof of the death of Julia Beard being made and the benefit certificate of December 9, 1893, having been surrendered, the company issued its draft for $2,000, the amount of the certificate, payable to the order of both plaintiff and defendant, which money was collected by the defendant, the latter retaining $1,000 of said sum and paying over to the plaintiff the other $1,000.

It is further alleged that defendant Sharp was not of kin to Julia Beard nor a creditor of hers nor in any manner interested in the continuance of her life, and that he assumed the payment of the assessments on the certificate from the 9th day of December, 1893, as a mere speculation with the hope of realizing a large profit by the early death of Julia Beard.

Plaintiff claims that the agreement made with Sharp by which he became a beneficiary under the certificate, was contrary to public policy and void; that the withholding by Sharp of the $1,000 realized from said certificate was illegal, and that same properly belonged to plaintiff, less the sum of $37.80, with interest thereon, the money paid out by Sharp. He further alleges that at the time the benefit certificate was collected it was managed by the defendant, and that he did not know his legal rights at the time he accepted the $1,000 from said Sharp as his part of said benefit certificate.

The defendant filed a general demurrer to plaintiff's petition, which was sustained by the court below, and, plaintiff declining to plead further, the court dismissed his bill. Plaintiff at the time excepted, and brings his appeal to this court and asks a reversal.

It has often been held by this court that a party who has no insurable interest in the life of another can not sue for or recover on a policy of insurance which has been issued to him, and that he can only collect and hold the insurance money to the extent that the deceased may be indebted to him.

This court, in the case of Caudell v. Woodward, 96 Ky., 646, has passed upon the rights of parties under circumstances almost identical with the case at bar. In that case Matilda Woodward was a member of the United Order of the Golden Cross, and the benefit certificate of Mrs. Woodward was payable to her son, James Woodward, one-half, and one-half to her friend, Katherin Caudell. In the contest over the fund the court below adjudged the whole of it to the son. That opinion construed the provisions of the charter of the company under facts similar to those in this case, and held that the beneficiary of a certificate identical with this must be one of the members of the family or one dependent upon him, holding further that any other construction would open the flood-gates of speculative insurance and frustrate the humane and generous purposes of the order. The member might direct the beneficiary of the certificate, but himself must do so within the restrictions contemplated by the organic law of the society, and confine his choice to some member or members of his family, or some one or more of those dependent upon him. We construe the organic law of the order, therefore, as limiting the choice or direction of the applicant as provided in the Constitution, and requiring him to name a member of his family or some one dependent upon him as the beneficiary of the benefit certificate; holding, moreover, that if the law of the order were so construed as to allow a member to name a stranger the certificate would be void as to the stranger, for nothing is better settled in this State than that one obtaining a policy of insurance on the life of another must have an insurable interest in the life of that other, and that the stranger does not obtain the insurance but the assured voluntarily does do for the other's benefit was held to embody the dangerous principle of allowing speculative insurance.

The court further held in that case that the contract of insurance was not invalidated by the designation of a person prohibited by the law to be a beneficiary, but that the member of the family named jointly with the stranger was entitled to the whole fund. (Cook on Life Insurance and Benefit Societies, page 106, and the case of Weigelman v. Bronger, 96 Ky., 132.)

The only difference between that case and the case at bar is that there the money had not actually been paid over by the insurance company, and the contest was as to whom the fund belonged, whilst in this case the money has been actually paid and divided, and the appellee seeks to defeat responsibility on the plea that the arrangement under which the appellant and the appellee, Sharp, became joint beneficiaries under the benefit certificate of 1893 was against public policy and void, but that as the contract had been executed and that both appellant and appellee were parties to said contract they were in pari delicto and, therefore, equity would not relieve either party against the other, but would leave both parties exactly where it found them, because both were equally at fault. The maxim, in pari delicto portior est defendentis, had been supported by the uniform current of decisions of this court and of the courts of nearly every State in the union, but the question involved is whether that doctrine should be applied in this case.

The appellate court, in the case of Ford's adm'r v. Lewis, 10 B. M., 127, where Lewis, for the purpose of hiding his property from his creditors, conveyed same to Ford, held that no trust resulted, as the grantor acted fraudulently and without consideration, and that, therefore, it left the parties in statu quo.

Another case was that of Laughlin v. Dean, 1 Duvall, 20. In that case it was held that the public policy forbid the courts to aid either party in a contract for the sale of Confederate money.

In another case, that of Creekmore v. Chitwood, 7 Bush, 318, the court held that a contract for moonshine brandy, made and sold in violation of the revenue laws, was void, and declined to interfere.

In the case of Radcliffe v. Smith, 13 Bush, 173, the court held that a contract between the principal and his surety on a bail bond, whereby the principal conveyed lands to the surety in consideration of the surety's agreement that the principal might leave the State and fail to answer the charge against him, was unlawful and against public policy, and that the parties were in pari delicto, and, therefore, the petition of the principal to have the deeds declared mortgages ought to have been dismissed by the court.

It has been pointed out that in all these cases there was an element of moral turpitude which involved the nullification of the laws of the State. Now, does the case at bar come within the class of these adjudicated cases? The law holds that the contract of insurance by which the defendant became a beneficiary under the benefit certificate on the life of Julia Beard, a stranger in blood and not as debtor, was against public policy because it was a wagering contract; but, while such a contract might lead to crime, it was not necessarily criminal as in all other cases cited above, in which this principle of law has been invoked and sustained by this court. In all the above cases the party complaining was equally at fault with the defendant, but is that so in the case at bar? He had an insurable interest in the life of his mother, and had carried this insurance for thirteen years at heavy expense to himself. His necessities compelled him to borrow money on some terms to prevent the loss of the whole policy to keep up the assessments. There was nothing criminal in this. The appellant was a necessary party to the making of the contract by which the second certificate was issued; its terms and conditions were all suggested and executed by the appellee. The latter's only motive in entering into the arrangement was gain, whilst the appellant sought to save what he had already invested in carrying the said benefit certificate from 1881 to 1893, and only acceded to the terms of appellee under the pressure of poverty and dire necessity.

In the case of Carmack v. Lewis (15 Wallace, 643), the court used this language: "John E. Lewis, the husband of complainant, who sues as administratrix, being indebted to Carmack in the sum of $70, and being in bad health, procured at Carmack's suggestion the insurance of his life in the New Jersey Mutual Life Insurance Company for $3,000. Carmack paid the premium for the first year, and took an assignment of the policy from Lewis to himself. He also took from Lewis a note for $3,000, which he admits was without consideration, and he had Lewis' note for $70, the indebtedness really due. Lewis died before the expiration of the first year, and Carmack collected from the insurance company the $3,000 and paid over one-third of that sum, less the amount of the premium paid by him, to the widow of the deceased, and this suit was brought to recover the balance of the $3,000." Carmack alleged that the policy was taken out under an agreement between Lewis and himself that he should pay the premium for the seven years the policy was to run, and in consideration of those payments and what Lewis owed him that he should, in the event of Lewis' death during the life of the policy, receive two-thirds of the amount of the policy, and pay over the other third to his wife and heirs. The court held that under these circumstances Carmack could, in equity and good conscience, only hold the policy as security for what Lewis owed him when it was assigned, and such advances as he might afterwards make on account of it, and that the assignment of the policy was valid only to that extent, and decreed that he should pay over the balance after deducting this sum. The court further held that they did not see such evidences on the part of decedent of a corrupt transaction as to forbid the court from doing justice between the administratrix and Carmack after the amount secured by the policy had been paid by the company to the latter; and it further held that "the receipt of the one-third of the insurance money by the complainant does not, we think, under all the circumstances of the case, conclude her as a settlement of the matter in dispute. It is obvious that she was ignorant of the full extent of her rights."

The case of Warnock v. Davis (104 U. S., 924), was a case where decedent applied to the Protection Life Insurance Company for a $5,000 policy on his life, and on the same day agreed with Scioto Trust Association that if the latter would pay all dues and assessments on said policy that he would assign nine-tenths of said policy to said trust association, the other one-tenth to be paid to Crosser's widow, and such assignment was made. Crosser died, and said trust association collected the $5,000, and paid one-tenth ($500) to the widow, and Warnock, as administrator of Crosser, sued the association for the balance after deducting the $500 and dues and assessments paid by said association. The Supreme Court, in deciding this case, held that the policy executed on the life of the deceased was a valid contract, and as such was assignable by the assured to the trust association as security for money lent to him or advanced for premiums and assessments upon it, but that it was not assignable to the association for any other purpose. The association had no insurable interest in the life of the deceased, and could not take out a policy in its own name, as it would be a mere speculative contract on the life of the assured; and, although the agreement between the trust association and the insured was invalid, is, so far as it provides for an absolute transfer of nine-tenths of the proceeds of the policy upon the conditions named, it was not of that fraudulent kind with respect to which the courts regard the parties as alike culpable, and refuse to interfere with the results of their action. No fraud or deception upon anyone was designed by the agreement, nor did its execution involve any moral turpitude. It was one which must be treated as creating no legal right to the proceeds of the policy beyond the sums advanced upon its security; and the courts will, therefore, hold the recipients of the money beyond those sums to account to the representative of the deceased." The court further held in that case that "it was lawful for the association to advance to the assured the sums payable to the insurance company on the policy as they became due, and it was also lawful for the assured to assign the policy as security for their payment. The assignment was only invalid as a transfer of the proceeds of the policy beyond what was required to refund those sums, with interest. To hold it valid for the whole proceeds would be to sanction speculative risks on human life and encourage the evils for which wager policies are condemned." The court directed a judgment for plaintiff for the amount collected from the insurance company, with interest, after deducting the sums already paid to the widow and the sums advanced by the defendant.

In the case of Martin v. Richardson, 94 Ky., 183, Martin had sold to Richardson a lottery ticket. After the drawing he noticed that same had drawn a prize. He then went to Richardson and, concealing from him this fact, induced the said Richardson, by artifice and subterfuge, to exchange this ticket with him for another ticket in another lottery. The facts coming to the attention of Richardson, he brought suit to recover the amount of the prize drawn on said ticket. In passing upon this question, the court held that dealing in lottery tickets was a violation of law, and that if the action had been on the ticket for the prize no relief would have been granted; but the money, having been collected and in the hands of Martin by reason of frauds practiced on Richardson, the latter was allowed to recover, the court, in passing on the case, using this language: "Not all contracts in which both parties are at fault are to be held to be so equally, but the court will, in certain cases, even when both appear to be at fault, inquire as to where the greater blame rests, and grant relief to the one less in fault."

In the case at bar the appellee holds $1,000 of the money collected on the aforesaid benefit certificate under a contract which he could not have enforced against the company in his own name, except to the extent he had in good faith advanced money to pay the accrued assessment; but, as the court held in the case of Caudell v. Woodward, supra, the contract of insurance was not invalidated by the designation of appellee as one of the beneficiaries under same, he being a person prohibited by law to be a beneficiary. The appellant in this case could have maintained an action against the insurance company to recover on the certificate, and he would have been entitled to a judgment for said fund. It seems to us that the appellee in this case could have legally held the benefit certificate for no other purpose than as security to indemnify him for moneys advanced to pay the premium and to be so advanced, and to this extent his claim to said policy was just; but all overplus of said fund he holds as trustee for the benefit of the appellant in this action, and under an implied obligation to pay over same.

For the reasons indicated herein, it seems to us that the petition of plaintiff in this case states a good cause of action if the facts are as alleged, and that the lower court erred in sustaining the demurrer to same.

Wherefore, this cause is remanded for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

PHŒNIX INSURANCE CO. OF BROOKLYN V. ANGEL, &C.

(Filed February 2, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Fire insurance—Void condition—A provision in a policy of fire insurance, declaring that the failure of the insured to keep his books and inventory in a fire-proof safe shall work a forfeiture of the policy, is without consideration, and, therefore, void.

B. F. Buckner for appellant.

P. B. and Upton W. Muir and Richards, Weissinger & Baskin for appellees..

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Law and Equity division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Guffy.

This appeal is prosecuted by the appellants, the Standard Fire Insurance Co. of Kansas City, Missouri, and the Phœnix Insurance Co. of Brooklyn, New York, from a judgment of the Jefferson Circuit Court, Law and Equity division, rendered in the consolidated actions of S. Lehman & Son and Curry, Tunis & Norwood v. Angel & Vanderpool, &c. The above-named appellees held debts due them from the appellees, Angel & Vanderpool, and instituted suit thereon and caused appellants to be summoned as guarnishees, and alleged that appellants were indebted to Angel & Vanderpool in the sum of $750. The indebtedness was alleged to exist by reason of a policy of insurance issued by the first-named appellant, payable to appellee Angel for $750, $300 being on the store, $150 on the furniture and fixtures, and $300 on the stock of goods. The entire property was destroyed by fire in October, 1891. The appellants resisted a recovery upon several grounds, viz: that $130 of the claim had been assigned to C. W. Howe; that the building and personal property insured were not at the time the property of D. B. Angel, but were the joint property of the firm of Angel & Vanderpool. The policy only requires the company to pay three-fourths of the value of the property lost; that the assured shall at least once a year take an itemized inventory of the stock and keep books of accounts showing the purchases and sales of said stock, and shall, during the hours that said store is closed from business, keep such books and inventory securely locked in a fire-proof safe or other secure place from fire, and that a failure to observe the above condition shall work a forfeiture of the policy. Angel & Vanderpool made no defense to the suits of their creditors, hence the contest was between the company and the appellees. The proof clearly showed that Angel owned the land, had paid for it at the time of the insurance, but had no deed to the same, but that the agent of the company was advised of the state of the title, and that part of the defense is not insisted on now. The Phœnix Insurance Co. had reinsured the risk, and for that reason was made a party and held bound with the other appellant.

It seems that appellants moved for a rule on plaintiffs to compel them to make Howe a party, which motion was properly overruled. If appellant had made its answer a cross petition against Howe and had sufficiently shown that he was a necessary party, doubtless the court would have permitted him to have been made a party. It is admitted that Vanderpool was the owner of half the stock of goods at the time of the insurance, but there is proof conducing to show that the agent of appellant was aware of the fact, and included the goods in the same policy to Angel to save the trouble of issuing two policies, Angel being the sole owner of the other property. The taking of the inventory and account of purchases and sales seem to have been complied with, hence the effect of noncompliance need not be decided.

It is, however, admitted that the inventory and books were not kept in a fire-proof safe nor in any fire-proof place or apartment, but it is claimed that the agent at the time knew that the assured had no fire-proof safe or anything of the kind, and waived that part of the policy, and if that be true then the failure of the assured in that regard can not defeat a recovery in this case.

But we are of the opinion that a failure to comply with such a provision, although in the policy, would not work a forfeiture thereof. It is without consideration. It does not decrease the risk, and at most would only tend to the better preservation of the evidence to show the amount of the loss sustained in case of fire. It does not seem to us that it is competent to contract with the assured for the preservation of testimony in behalf of either party.

It is also contended by appellant that the evidence did not authorize the judgment, and especially as to the furniture and fixtures. The evidence as to the value of the entire property shows it to be worth $1,400 or $1,500.

It seems to us that the evidence introduced sufficiently sustains the judgment of the court below, and that judgment is affirmed with damages.

SOUTH COVINGTON & CINCINNATI STREET RY. CO. V. MCCLEAVE.

(Filed February 3, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Carrier—Duty to warn passenger of danger—It was the duty of the conductor of an electric street car, when he saw a passenger in danger from having his arm partly outside the car window, to warn him of his peril, and contributory negligence of the passenger is not a legal excuse for non-performance of that duty.

2. Witnesses—That the conductor had been in the courtroom during the trial, and heard some of the other witnesses testify before he was called, was not sufficient reason for depriving defendant of his testimony.

3. Same—The plaintiff's wife was not a competent witness for him, and the court, when informed by the attorney for defendant that he inadvertently, while suffering from a severe headache, consented for her to be sworn, should, on his motion, have excluded her testimony.

Simrall & Galvin for appellant.

Wright & Anderson for appellee.

Appeal from Campbell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Lewis.

The cause of this action as stated by the appellee in his original petition is that while occupying as passenger a seat in an electric street car belonging to appellant that was going over the bridge from Cincinnati, Ohio, to Newport, Ky., his right elbow, which protruded through the window slightly outside the car, came in contact with an iron girder of the bridge and his arm was broken in two places; that said injury resulted from the negligence of appellant in failing to provide a screen or guard on the sides of the car so as to prevent passengers putting their arms or other parts of the body outside the windows, and in failing to put on the inside of the car the printed notice or warning of the danger to passengers thus exposing their persons.

To the petition a general demurrer was sustained, and thereupon appellee filed an amended petition, in which he stated that the conductor having charge of the car in which the injury occurred saw the peril of appellee in time to have warned him of his danger, so that he could have withdrawn his arm and avoided the injury.

To the petition thus amended appellant filed an answer, in the first paragraph of which is contained a denial that said conductor saw appellee's peril in time to warn him of it, and in the second is the statement that appellee voluntarily and negligently put his arm through and beyond the window frame of the car in which he was riding when injured, and but for that carelessness and negligence the injury would not have occurred.

But to the second paragraph of the answer a general demurrer was sustained, thus leaving for trial the single issue stated in the following and only instruction given: "If the jury believe from the evidence that the conductor in charge of defendant's car saw the plaintiff with his arm out of the car window so as to be in danger of being struck by any part of the bridge in time to have warned him of his peril before the accident occurred, and failed to warn him, they will find for the plaintiff and will fix his damages at an amount which will reasonably compensate him for any pain he endured, for any expense he incurred for the attendance of a physician or for medicine, for any loss of time from the pursuit of his avocation and for any impairment of his capacity to earn money, the direct result of said accident in their discretion governed by the proof; not, however, in all to exceed five thousand dollars."

Appellant requested the court to instruct the jury to find for it upon the hypothesis that appellee would not have been injured but for his own negligence in putting his arm so far outside the car as that it came in contact with the bridge. But the court refused to so instruct, and we think did not err in that particular, for no degree of contributory negligence on the part of even a trespasser will release a person in charge of a train or single car, whether operated by steam or electricity, from the legal obligation to use reasonable effort to avoid injuring him if his peril is discovered in time to do so, and we do not see why the conductor of an electric or steam car should not be held to the duty of giving warning to one of his passengers when he actually sees him in a position or place on the car of peril to life or limb, and contributory negligence of such passenger is not a legal excuse for the nonperformance of that duty; and that a passenger on one of appellant's cars passing over that bridge is in peril when his arm or head protrudes two or three inches is plainly shown by the evidence.

But in our opinion the lower court erred to the prejudice of appellant in refusing to permit the conductor in charge of that car to testify, and also in permitting the testimony of appellee's wife to go to the jury.

That the conductor had been in the courtroom during the trial, and heard some of the other witnesses testify before he was called, was, under the circumstances, not sufficient reason for depriving appellant of the benefit of his testimony; for on the single issue submitted to the jury whether he did in fact see the position in which appellee had his arm he could probably better than any other person know and state.

Appellee's wife was not a competent witness, and, when informed by the attorney of appellant that he inadvertently and while suffering from a severe headache consented for her to be sworn, the lower court ought, it seems to us, to have on his motion excluded her testimony.

For the errors indicated the judgment is reversed and case remanded for a new trial consistent with this opinion.

GAULT, &C. V. EQUITABLE TRUST CO. OF NEW LONDON, CONNECTICUT.

(Filed February 3, 1897.)

1. Mortgages—Plea of limitation by junior mortgagee—A junior mortgagee who was not made a party to an action to enforce a prior mortgage, can not after the lapse of nearly ten years after judgment in favor of the prior mortgagee on his debt and a sale of the land, at which sale the junior mortgagee was present, institute his action to recover on his mortgage, and set up the statute of limitation to annul the former decree of the court.

2. The only right of a junior mortgagee, who has not been made a party to the foreclosure of a prior mortgage, is to redeem the property from that mortgage.

3. Interest—The bonds in question having been dated at Louisville, Kentucky, and delivered there, and the amount received on same having been paid there, the contract was with reference to the Kentucky laws, there being nothing in the transaction to make it a New York contract, except the bonds being made payable in that State; hence, the provision for the payment of interest at the rate of ten per cent., which was then lawful in this State, should govern the computation of interest.

4. The appellee having become the owner of all the interest of the mortgagor in the land by having all that interest sold and conveyed to itself, the latter can not be forced to account for the rents from the property.

W. O. Harris, Lane & Burnett and R. W. Woolley for appellants.

Bullitt & Shield for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Law and Equity division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

In 1874 Joshua J. Hair, the owner of certain property in Louisville, gave the Equitable Trust Co. of New London, Conn., a mortgage on it to secure the sum of $5,000, evidenced by five bonds for $1,000 each, payable five years after date.

In 1875 Hair gave appellants, Joseph Gault & Sons, a mortgage on the same property to secure a debt which he owed them.

Hair failed to pay the sums due the Equitable Trust Co. and certain taxes on the property. In 1879 it brought suit in the Federal Court to enforce its mortgage lien on the property. To this suit it failed to make Joseph Gault & Sons parties. A judgment was rendered in that court enforcing its mortgage lien.

By the provisions of the mortgage the trust company had a lien for taxes and insurance premiums paid on the property, and such as were thus paid, together with the debt, interest and costs, amounted to something like $6,500 when the property was sold. The Equitable Trust Co. became the purchaser of the property under the judgment at $5,000. The sale was confirmed, deed was made to it, and it was regularly placed in the possession of the property. The appellant, Joseph Gault, was present at the sale. Appellee took possession of the property in 1880, and held it until this suit was brought. It has endeavored to sell it, but has never been offered more than $6,000 for it.

Nearly ten years after the appellee took possession of the property this action was brought by the appellants, setting up its junior mortgage, and, among other things, they plead that the bonds executed by Hair were bills of exchange, and their recovery barred by statute of limitations. They do not plead that the statute barred them at the time the suit was filed by the appellee against Hair to recover judgment thereon and enforce the mortgage lien. Counsel for appellants insist that, although appellee obtained judgment on its debt, and had the mortgagor's equity of redemption sold to pay it, still the appellants can plead the statute of limitations against the mortgage debt which was merged in the judgment debt, and all of the mortgagor's interest in the property sold to pay it. Some cases are cited which counsel claims supports his contention. We have examined the cases, and are of the opinion that none of them sustain this view. If any court had delivered such an opinion we would not follow it because, in our opinion, to do so would be to follow a rule which had for its foundation neither reason nor justice.

In Sauger v. Nightingale, 122 U. S., 185, the statute of limitations was pleaded on a state of facts substantially the same as in this case, and the court said: "It is difficult to see from what standpoint he, in this suit, in which he is complainant, seeking to foreclose his own mortgage, can set up the statute of limitations, not as a defense, for he is not sued, and nobody is troubling him about his claim, but as a positive weapon to set aside and annul in this collateral proceeding the decree of a court of competent jurisdiction, with proper parties before it, which foreclosed a mortgage prior in time and equal in equity to his, under which the property was sold and passed into other hands. Certainly the court which rendered that decree had jurisdiction of the property and of Nightingale, the defendant, who was in possession, and who had the legal title. It is equally as certain that whether Nightingale ought to have pleaded the statute or not he did not do so, and it is now too late to set it up as a defense to that suit. In this case there is no pretense that the statute had barred the right to recover before appellant filed its suit in the Federal Court."

In Jones on Mortgages, volume 11, section 1431, it is said: "The only right of a junior mortgagee, who has not been made a party to the foreclosure of a prior mortgage, is to redeem the property from that mortgage."

The case of the Bank of U. S. v. Carrolls, 4 B. M., 4, involved the question as to the rights of a holder of a junior deed of trust when the holder of a prior deed of trust, in an action to which the beneficiary of the junior deed had not been made a party, had obtained a decree therefor, and had sold thereunder the grantor's equity of redemption. The court said that "the deed of trust for the benefit of the Carrolls being valid, and prior in time to that of the complainants, their specific prayer can not be granted. But they, according to well established precedents, could be entitled to relief only upon the terms of paying the money to the Carrolls received by their prior deed, and redeeming their prior lien."

At the time the money was borrowed the laws of Kentucky allowed ten per cent. interest, while under the laws of New York seven per cent. interest was allowed, and if a greater interest was charged the contract as to principal and interest was rendered void; besides the party contracting for a rate above seven per cent. was guilty of a misdemeanor.

The contract was for ten per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually, the bonds to bear seven per cent., and the loan to be discounted so as to net to the lender ten per cent. This was the terms of the contract as to interest until the debt matured; then it was to draw ten per cent. per annum.

The bonds were dated at Louisville, Kentucky; they were delivered there, and the amount which was received by Hair was paid to him there by draft.

There is nothing in the transaction which would make it a New York contract, except the bonds were made payable in New York.

The entire transaction shows that the parties were contracting with reference to the interest laws of Kentucky. In view of that fact, we are of the opinion that the rate of interest contracted for being allowed by the laws of this State, the debt should be computed at ten per cent. interest.

It was said, in Cromwell v. County of Soc., 96 U. S., 62, "the position of counsel that, because the rate of interest in New York, where the bonds were payable, is only seven per cent., the bonds can only draw that rate after maturity, is not tenable. When the rate of interest at the place of contract differs from the rate at the place of payment, the parties may contract for either rate, and the contract will govern. Miller v. Tiffany, 1 Wall., 298; Depau v. Humphreys, 8 Mart (La.), 1; Chapman v. Robinson, 6 Paigs (N. Y.), 627, 634; Peck v. Mayo, 14 Vt., 33; Butters v. Olds, &c., 11 Iowa, 1.

The bonds were made with reference to the law of Iowa as to interest, and not to that of New York, where interest above seven per cent. is deemed usurious, and avoids the whole contract."

In Balme v. Wonbrough, 38 Barbour, 362, the court said: "The usual rule of law is that contracts are to be construed and adjudged by the law of the place where they are made, except when they are to be performed in another State or country, and in such cases their validity is to be decided by the law of the place of performance. It appears, however, that cases involving the rate of interest, where it is stipulated in the contract at the place where the loan is made, in conformity with the law of the place, at a higher rate than is permitted by the law of the place where the payment is to be made, are not within the exception, but the specified rate of interest at the place of the contract has been allowed."

Many cases could be cited in support of this doctrine. The appellee entered upon the premises in question, not as a mortgagee, but as the owner of the property. It had become the owner by having all the interest which the mortgagor had in it sold, and that interest conveyed to it.

The mortgagor had no interest remaining, and under no circumstances could he have compelled the appellee to have accounted to him for rents of the property. The person holding mortgage did not have any interest in the rents, and consequently no right to recover them against the purchaser of the equity of redemption.

There is a well-defined and marked distinction between a mortgagee in possession and the purchaser of the mortgagor's equity of redemption.

Until the mortgagor has lost his equity of redemption, or his right to redeem from a sale, he is entitled to the rents and profits of the mortgaged property. When the fee has vested in another by purchase or decree of court, then his rights to rents and profits cease.

Jones on Mortgages, section 1118, says: "The purchaser, standing in the place of the mortgagor or owner of the premises, is not liable to account for rents and profits."

In Gaskell v. Veguesney, 122 Ind., 244, it was said: "The junior mortgagee has no right, therefore, to compel an accounting when the mortgagor has no such right, for it is through the mortgagor and the equity existing between him and the senior mortgagee that he is enabled to compel an application of the rents and profits to the satisfaction of the senior mortgagee. For these reasons, it is well settled that in order to charge a mortgagee with rents and profits it must be shown that he has occupied the mortgaged premises under his mortgage. If the title of the mortgagor has been divested, and the mortgagee has been in possession under a title derived from the mortgagor, he is not chargeable with rents and profits of the mortgaged premises."

Authority for this conclusion is abundant. If there was an error, the matter of taxes and repairs in fixing the amount due appellee, more than $2,000, was remitted of record and credited on that amount.

In view of the fact that appellants have never offered to or alleged a willingness or ability to redeem the property from appellee, and in view of the fact that the property is not worth but little more than one-half the amount due appellee, it is not at all clear that a reversal should be granted for a slight error in fixing the amount due appellee, one that could not affect the rights of appellants, because it is perfectly clear from the evidence in this record that appellants never will nor could they afford to redeem the property for two-thirds, much less the whole of the debt due appellee. The value of the property would not justify them in doing so. Fifteen years ago it sold for $5,000, at which sale Joseph Gault was present, and, notwithstanding appellee has improved it somewhat since then, it is of but little more than that value now.

The judgment is affirmed.

HALE V. HOWARD'S ADM'R, &C.

(Filed February 3, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Settlement of partnership.—In this action against an administrator upon a promissory note executed by his intestate to the plaintiff for the balance due upon the purchase price of an interest in a stock of goods owned by plaintiff, whereby they became partners, as it appeared that the plaintiff, upon the death of his partner, retained the stock of goods without accounting therefor, and the evidence as to the state of the partnership accounts was so unsatisfactory that no settlement could be based thereon, the chancellor properly dismissed the petition, thus leaving the partnership to stand settled, and the note sued on to stand satisfied.

Howes & Patrick and Wm. H. Holt for appellant.

D. D. Sublett and John L. Scott & Son for appellees.

Appeal from Magoffin Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hazelrigg.

The appellant, Benjamin Hale, sued the appellee, who was the administrator of Vincent Hale, the brother of the plaintiff, on the following memorandum: "Vincent Hale, remainder debt, $224.48, to Benjamin Hale. December 22 day, 1889."

He alleged that the memorandum was written by Vincent and delivered as his promissory note for the sum named in it, and was so accepted by the plaintiff.

In an amended petition he averred that a short time before the date of the writing he sold his brother a half interest in a store at Goodloe, Floyd county, Ky., and for which his brother paid him all the purchase price except $224.48, and the writing was executed for that balance.

The administrator denied the execution of the paper by his intestate, or that it was executed or delivered as his promissory note or was so intended He further alleged that Benjamin and Vincent Hale were full partners in the store at the date of Vincent's death, and that there was on hand at that time a large stock of merchandise belonging to the firm, of which there had been no invoice taken or account rendered by the surviving partner, but that he had continued the business on this stock and ignored the interests of his brother's estate; that the partnership had been a profitable one, and as administrator he was entitled to one-half the profits accruing before and after his intestate's death. He asked that the cause be referred to the court's commissioner, to settle the partnership and the estate of his intestate. His motion subsequently made to transfer the case to equity was sustained without an exception to the order of transfer, and without objecting either to the form or substance of the answer the plaintiff replied admitting the previous existence of the partnership, and that it had been a profitable one, but averred that some time before the death of his brother he had bought him out and had made a complete settlement with him, and was the owner of the entire stock.

The proof on these issues is very indefinite. The chancellor found it so unsatisfactory that he twice referred the cause to his commissioner for additional testimony, but which, when taken, was of the same indefinite character. He finally dismissed the petition, and we are not disposed to disturb his finding.

The proof conduces to show that in the spring of 1889 Vincent bought a half interest in his brother's store. What he was to pay nowhere appears, though appellant says he only paid $100 down. We think that the memorandum was intended to represent Vincent's note to Benjamin for the amount sued for, and was received by the latter. It was the balance due on the interest Vincent bought in the firm, and gave him a share in the body of the partnership. The appellant admits the business was a profitable one, and as Vincent drew out less than he put in—about $70—according to a witness who summed up the accounts, his estate ought not to pay the balance due for his share if appellant is to keep the entire stock. The fact that the invoice of the goods a short time before Vincent's death amounted to some $1,700, and the debts which have been paid by the appellant amount to some $1,900 proves nothing, as admittedly there are debts due the firm; and while appellant has testified twice without objection he does not disclose the amount so due or produce any of the firm books. While ample opportunity has been offered him to show up the whole transaction, he has failed to do so, and on this state of case, resulting, we doubt not, rather from a want of information as to his duties toward his deceased brother's estate than from any intentional concealment of the facts, he is in no condition to ask judgment on this peculiar writing, especially so as there is proof to the effect that after Vincent's death appellant informed the administrator that he had no claim against the estate, and further that he presented a claim of some $34 to the widow, who paid it.

It is said the case ought at least to go back for further proof, and a settlement of the partnership affairs, but in view of the chancellor's effort and failure to ascertain the facts, we can see no reason for further effort in that direction.

On the facts as they appear in the record the old partnership stands settled, and the writing sued on stands satisfied by the appellant's retention of the stock for which it was executed.

Judgment affirmed.

CRAIG, &C. V. PYLES.

(Filed February 13, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Slander—A statement made of a married woman, that "she is a dirty bitch; that she has no character and is no account," is not actionable, and the innuendo, as averred by plaintiffs, can not change the meaning of the words from their common acceptation.

Gaunt & Downs for appellants.

Appeal from Carroll Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hazelrigg.

The words spoken by appellee of and concerning the appellant, Katie A. Craig, wife of her co-appellant, namely, "She is a dirty bitch; she has no character, and is no account," are not actionable words, in themselves importing, as averred in the petition, that appellant was "a whore, common prostitute, or was guilty of fornication and adultery."

In Schurick v. Collman, &c., 50 Ind., 336, the words spoken of the wife were that she was a d—n b—h, meaning to charge, as is averred, a want of chastity and virtue.

The court held that the words did not amount to a charge of either incest, fornication, adultery or whoredom, saying further that "the word b—h, although a very coarse and ruffianly expression when applied to a woman, does not in its common acceptation import whoredom in any of its forms," citing K— v. H—, 20 Wis., 252. The latter case is to the same effect. The innuendo, as averred by the plaintiffs, can not change the meaning of the words from their common acceptation. "It is a well-settled rule," said this court in Watson v. Hampton, 2 Bibb., 319, "that an innuendo can not extend the meaning of words beyond their natural import. It is only explanatory of some matter already expressed; it may show the application, but can not add to or enlarge or change the sense of the words." We think that the other words relied on are in themselves indefinite and meaningless, or at least wholly fail to import the crime of fornication or adultery without a colloquiem to show the connection in which they were used.

The judgment sustaining the demurrer and dismissing the petition is affirmed.

BRADFORD, &C. V. CLAYTON.

SAME V. SAME.

(Filed February 16, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Assignment for creditors—Purchase by assignee—Where an assignee for creditors purchased the bid of one who had, prior to the assignment, bought the land of the debtor at execution sale, he must be regarded as having redeemed the property for the benefit of the debtor, although he did not intend to do so. But he is entitled to be repaid, with interest, the amount which he paid. He is not entitled, however, to compensation for his improvements, as he has, by the use of the land, been compensated therefor to the extent they have increased the vendible value of the land.

2. Same—Settlement—The debtor having executed to the assignee a receipt reciting the settlement of all matters pertaining to the assignment and releasing the assignee from liability, and that settlement having been acquiesced in for years by all parties, the debtor is concluded by it, the proof failing to satisfactorily show that there was either fraud or mistake in the settlement, or in procuring the receipt.

H. C. Weaver and J. B. Clark for appellants.

J. R. Minor, George Doniphan and B. K. Smith for appellee.

Appeal from Bracken Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Guffy.

The above-named cases were heard together in this court, and it appears were heard together in the court below.

The first named was a suit instituted in the Bracken Circuit Court by appellee, P. H. Clayton, against appellant, S. W. Bradford, which suit was filed March 28, 1889.

It was alleged in the petition that plaintiff was the owner of one-third of a lot in Brooksville, in said county, known as the carding machine property, and that the other two-thirds was owned by said Bradford, and that the lot was indivisible without great detriment to its value. A sale of the lot and division of the proceeds was prayed for. Bradford, in his answer, denied that the appellee (plaintiff below) had any title or interest in said lot, and pleaded title and possession of the same under a conveyance from appellee and wife to the appellant and to Poage & Day. The reply of appellee alleged in substance that the deed referred to by appellant, Bradford, was in fact a deed of trust to the vendees, given for the purpose of effecting a settlement of appellee's indebtedness, he having taken the benefit of the bankrupt law, and having made or expected to make a composition settlement with his creditors, who had proved up their claims, and also to pay some other creditors in full, and that the said vendees had executed to him a separate writing evidencing such facts. He also made Poage & Day parties; appellee also filed an amended petition. The answer of Poage and the next answer of Bradford claimed that the one-third interest in the lot in controversy had been levied on and sold under execution against said Clayton before the execution of the conveyance to them and Day, and that they never took possession under said conveyance, and, upon consultation, decided that although the lot could be redeemed it was not worth it, and that they had no funds of Clayton to redeem with, but on the 21st of January, 1879, Bradford paid to Hackett, the purchaser, $108.90 for the lot or for his bid, the bid being $99, Hackett's purchase having been made January 21, 1878.

Appellee also set up the fact that the trustees had sold machinery, etc., off the joint property of him and the other owners of the lot, for which he sought to recover.

Appellant Bradford claimed that he had expended $2,000 or more in improving the property. Day died pending the suit, and the appellant, Mrs. Day, was made a party as executrix of H. A. Day.

The court below adjudged a sale of the lot in contest, and adjudged one-third of the proceeds to appellee, and the residue to appellant Bradford, the costs to be paid in proportion to the interest of the parties, except the cost as to contest of law and fact, which Bradford must pay, and from that judgment appellants have appealed.

We deem it unnecessary to recite the evidence introduced. It is worthy of notice, however, that Bradford did not procure a sheriff's deed to the interest in dispute, nor even take a transfer from Hackett of his purchase; nor do we think that the settlement of September, 1888, passed the title of the lot to Bradford. It must, therefore, be held that appellee Clayton was in equity the owner of the property claimed. If in fact Bradford did not intend to redeem the property as trustee, yet his actions and proceedings have been such as to require that he should be held to have done so. It is, however, contended that Bradford has greatly improved the property, and that it is not equitable that Clayton should have the benefit of the improvement. It is true that Bradford had the right to improve the property to the extent of making such repairs as were necessary to prevent the property from going to waste, and charge the proper proportion thereof to the appellee, and in a case like this might be allowed pay for permanent improvements, to the extent that the same increased the vendible value of the land, especially where, as in this case, appellee stood by and saw the improvements made, and did not object. The proof fails to show to what extent the improvements increase the vendible value of the lot in question. It is in evidence that some of the machinery belonging to the property was sold after it went into Bradford's hands, and one-third of the same was paid to him before he purchased the other two-thirds interest in the lot and machinery. He has also had the use of the property during all the time since his purchase.

We are, therefore, of the opinion that the benefits aforesaid are sufficient compensation for the improvements. But appellant should be repaid the $108.90 paid by him to Hackett, with 6 per cent. per annum interest from the 10th of September, 1888, out of the one-third of the proceeds of sale, the adjudged interest of appellee. The judgment aforesaid appealed from is reversed and cause remanded, with directions to enter a judgment as hereinbefore indicated, and for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

On the 10th of September, 1891, the appellee, Clayton, instituted the second-named suit against these appellants for settlement of the trust aforesaid, alleging that the trustees had received by virtue of said deed more than $3,600, and had only paid out less than $1,800, and seeking judgment against Bradford for the difference between the two sums. He also alleged that by fraud and promises he was induced to sign a receipt or paper, which reads as follows:

"Whereas, P. H. Clayton made an assignment to S. W. Bradford, H. A. Day and George B. Poage of certain property for the benefit of his creditors, and the matters of assignment having been settled between them, and the conveyance of property having been made, and a release of homestead of the said P. H. Clayton, now the said S. W. Bradford, H. A. Day and George B. Poage are released and exonerated from all the liabilities of said assignment as aforesaid.

"Given under my hand this the 10th day of September, 1888.

"(Signed) P. H. CLAYTON.

"except the carding factory."

The appellants (defendants below) answered and denied all the allegations of appellees showing any right to recover against them, as well pleading and relying on the receipt and settlement. It was also claimed by appellants that the addition of, except the carding factory, was added by appellee after the settlement was made and after the appellants had released their mortgage lien on appellee's homestead.

After the taking of much testimony the court referred the case to the master commissioner for report and settlement, who reported $524.77, with interest, in biennial rests—that is, compounding interest every two years from September 11, 1888, to September 11, 1894—and defendant's exceptions to the report were overruled and judgment rendered in accordance with the report, and from that judgment appellants have also appealed.

The proof taken is, to some extent, conflicting. It, however, appears that appellee is now a deputy clerk, and was once sheriff of the county, and the fact that he was careful to add an addition to his signature to protect what he deemed to be his rights and interest tend to show that he was quite capable of taking care of his interests, and not likely to be deceived or overreached; and, besides, the proof fails to satisfactorily show that there was either fraud or mistake in the settlement or in procuring the receipt, and, inasmuch as the settlement as made was accepted and acted on for years, all parties should be held to abide by it.

It results from the foregoing that the court below erred in referring the cause to the master commissioner, and also in confirming his report and rendering judgment against the appellants. The judgment is, therefore, reversed and cause remanded, with directions to dismiss the petition of plaintiff, P. H. Clayton, filed in 1891, at his cost.

COYNE, &C. V. FOLEY, &C.

(Filed February 17, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Weight given court's findings of fact—Where the law and facts in an ordinary action are submitted to the court, the court's findings of fact are entitled upon appeal to the weight that attaches to the verdict of a well-instructed jury.

D. B. Logan for appellants.

Wm. Low for appellees.

Appeal from Bell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Burnam.

The appellees instituted their suit in the Bell Circuit Court, claiming that they were regular physicians and surgeons; that Joseph Coyne & Co. was a firm composed of Joseph Coyne and L. T. Bradford, and that their business was to construct railroads and do work of like character; that during the months of September and October, 1893, they were employed by the appellants, who were at that time engaged in constructing the Log Mountain branch of the Louisville & Nashville railroad, to attend as physicians one Willie Nelson, who was in the employ of appellants and who had been seriously injured by being run over by a train, and that whilst so employed by the appellants they rendered medical services in visiting the said Willie Nelson, and in amputating the left leg of said Nelson, and that their services were reasonably worth $166.

The appellants denied that the $166 charged was reasonable, and they denied that they employed the appellees to render the services sued for. They claim that they had employed a large number of men to construct the Log Mountain branch of the Louisville & Nashville railroad, and had in their regular employ one Dr. Hodges to attend on any of the men who might need a doctor, for which services the men paid a certain specified sum of money per man, which was retained out of the wages of the employes and paid over to said doctor monthly; that this Dr. Hodges was absent from the county and could not render the services required for said Nelson; that appellees were employed by him to render any services they might be called upon to render while he was absent, and that under said arrangement appellees rendered the services set up in their petition; that said Hodges had received, in the final settlement with these appellants under their said arrangement, the pay for such services, and that same had been paid in full. And they also claimed that Willie Nelson was not in their employ at the time he was hurt, and that the services were not rendered at their instance; that they had never promised to pay for said services, and that they had received no consideration for same.

All these allegations were denied by appellees' reply. The appellant, Bradford, filed a separate answer, in which he denied that there was any partnership between Joseph Coyne and himself; denied that Nelson was employed by Coyne & Co., or that he was injured while in their employ; but he says that on September 27, 1893, whilst riding up Clark creek along the line of the Log Mountain branch of the Louisville & Nashville railroad, which was then in process of construction, he found that Willie Nelson had been struck by a train; that he rode back to Pineville with the intention of getting Dr. Hodges to give attention to the person injured; that he found Hodges absent, and that he called on appellees and told them about the injury, and that two doctors would be needed; that appellees visited said Nelson and rendered the services sued for in this action; that he did not mention the name of Coyne in connection with said call, and did not agree or promise that Joseph Coyne & Co. would pay appellees therefor, and that he had no authority to promise or agree with appellees, or either of them, that Joseph Coyne & Co. would pay for the services rendered said Nelson.

Coyne also filed his separate answer, in which he denied that Bradford was a member of the firm of Joseph Coyne & Co., or that Nelson was in the employ of the company at the time he was injured, or that the appellees ever performed the medical or surgical services at his request or by his authority, or that the claim was reasonable.

By agreement of parties the law and facts in the case were submitted to the judge of the Bell Circuit Court, and he was required to make a finding, both of facts and conclusions of law, separately. A number of witnesses were introduced on the trial of the case, and at the close of the trial the court found as the facts of the case that Joseph Coyne & Co. was the name under which Joseph Coyne did business; that said defendant, during the months of September and October, 1893, was engaged in building a railroad known as the Log Mountain branch; that he had many men engaged in said work; that he had an arrangement with the men so employed whereby he deducted from the men's wages a stated sum per month with which he was to employ a physician to give medical attention to any of the men in need of it during the progress of the work; that under this arrangement he did employ Dr. Hodges to render such services as the men required; that the contract with Hodges was made by defendant Bradford for defendant Coyne, and that he approved and recognized the contract; that Bradford was the bookkeeper and paymaster of the defendant, Coyne; that on the 27th day of September, 1893, Willie Nelson, while in the employ of the defendant on the railroad, was struck by an engine, his leg crushed, and that the said Bradford went to the town of Pineville, called on appellees and asked them if they attended to Hodges' business when he was absent; that plaintiffs answered that they did so, and that

Bradford then said, "We need both of you; a man is badly hurt;" that the plaintiffs thereupon went to the camp of the defendant, where they amputated the leg of Nelson and afterwards paid him eleven visits at said camp, about five miles from their office; that plaintiffs made out their account for services rendered, but did not put on it the name of any person as the debtor; that they presented the account to Bradford and asked him who to charge it to; that he told them Dr. Hodges should pay it, but put in the blank space left for the name of the person to be charged thereby the name of the defendants, Joseph Coyne & Co.; that the services were reasonably worth $155, and that no part of it had been paid; and the court also found that Bradford, as agent for Coyne & Co., had contracted with the plaintiffs to render the services performed by them for Nelson, and thereupon entered up judgment for the amount found due.

The appellant filed his motion and grounds for a new trial, and prayed an appeal to this court, asking a reversal because, first, the court erred in refusing to find for the defendant; second, because the findings of fact by the court were not supported by sufficient evidence and were contrary to law; third because the court erred in its conclusions of law, and because the court erred in refusing to make more specific its conclusions of law and the finding of the facts.

This court has frequently held that where the law and facts are submitted to a common-law court, and is required to make a finding both of law and facts, its finding of facts has all the weight that attaches to the verdict of a well-instructed jury.

In this case there was undoubted evidence to support the findings of the court; nor do we see any substantial error to the prejudice of appellant in his conclusions as to the law.

Wherefore the case is affirmed.

The Kentucky Law Reporter.

EDITOR:
WALTER G. CHAPMAN, ... Frankfort, Ky.

VOL. 18. JUNE 15, 1897. No. 24

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

COLLINS V. WILSON, BY, &C.

(Filed February 17, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Excessive verdict—In this suit by a girl by her father as next friend to recover damages for an assault, a verdict in favor of plaintiff for $1,000 is not excessive upon the facts shown by her.

2. Evidence—It was competent for the father and mother of the girl to testify that she told them of the occurrence an hour or so after it happened.

3. Same—Although the father as next friend was liable for the costs of the action his wife was a competent witness; for, besides the fact that he was only a nominal party in interest, the provision of the Civil Code that as against a wrongdoer either husband or wife or both may testify refers not only to wrongs against the husband or wife, but to wrongs against the infant members of the family.

4. It was competent for plaintiff to prove the admission of defendant, voluntarily made in the presence of the grand jurors when they were not in session, that he was at the girl's house on the evening of the alleged wrong.

L. C. Willis for appellant.

P. J. Foree and Peak & Shindler for appellees.

Appeal from Spencer Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hazelrigg.

The facts found by the jury to have been established in this case are that on or about March 25, 1893, the appellant went to the home of Mattie Wilson, a girl some seventeen years of age, and finding her parents away solicited her to have sexual intercourse with him, accompanying his request with the forcible seizure of the girl about the waist and other improper conduct not necessary to mention.

At the suit of the girl by her father as next friend a verdict of $1,000 was awarded her. On the appeal of Collins it is now insisted that the verdict is against the evidence, it being his contention that the proof clearly establishes the falsity of the charges. It may be admitted that the proof is not entirely satisfactory. Evidence is introduced by the appellant which makes it impossible for him to have been at the girl's house at the time she alleges. It is a case, however, where there might have been a finding either way with no authority in this court to disturb it.

There is clearly sufficient evidence to support the verdict, and it is not flagrantly against the evidence. Nor is it excessive upon the facts shown by the plaintiff.

It is urged that the proof of the father and mother of the girl to the effect that an hour or so later on she told them of the occurrence was incompetent. It appears that when the father reached home on the evening of the occurrence he first learned of it from his wife in the presence of the girl, the girl having first told her mother. The witnesses were not allowed to repeat what the girl told them, but testified simply that they were informed of the occurrence. Certainly if the girl had not made complaint of her treatment at the first opportunity, or had failed to prove she had, the circumstance would have afforded strong reason for doubting her story. It is said, however, that the husband being a party in interest as the next friend of the girl and liable for cost, the wife was not a competent witness, as under the guise of testifying for the girl she was in fact testifying for the husband. But in fact the father was only a nominal party in interest, the girl's husband having been made a party plaintiff, she having married pending the action.

It is contended further that the admission of appellant in the presence of the grand jurors that he was at the girl's house on the evening of the alleged wrong was incompetent. We think otherwise. He was not sent for as a witness and the grand jury was not in session. He went into their room when drinking and voluntarily made a statement, though cautioned that it might be used against him. He protested that the charge was trumped up as a blackmailing scheme, and this statement he got the benefit of, along with the admission supposed now to be injurious.

We see nothing to take these statements from the class of voluntary statements always held to be competent against the party making them when against his interest.

The instructions are free from any error prejudicial to the substantial rights of the appellant.

Judgment affirmed.

BANNON V. ST. BERNARD COAL CO.

(Filed February 23, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Sales—Acceptance of goods after opportunity to discover defects—Where the buyer of coal of a certain kind and quality accepted and used the coal delivered by the seller after having an opportunity to discover its quality, he could not then claim a deduction from the contract price upon the ground that the coal was not of the required grade.

Lane & Burnett for appellant.

Gibson & Marshall for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Law and Equity division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

On October 1, 1891, the appellee, St. Bernard Coal Co., proposed to the appellant, Pat Bannon, that if he would use its coal exclusively it would furnish him lump coal in carload lots for one year from that date, delivered at a place named, at 5¼ cents per bushel. The coal was to be same as sample cars furnished in September. Bannon accepted the proposition. Under this contract the appellee furnished Bannon coal in October, November and December, 1891, and in January, 1892, and for the coal furnished in October and November he paid. This action is for coal furnished in December and January, amounting at the contract price to $951.47. The appellant filed an answer in which he denied that the coal delivered was of the character and grade which the contract required it to furnish, and that the material referred to in the petitition as coal was any other than slack and dirt.

It is alleged in the answer that appeliant is and was a manufacturer of terra cotta, tile goods, vitrified brick, etc.; that he used large quantities of coal; that he required the best quality of coal; that he employed many men; that appellee failed to "supply him with coal of the kind and quality as said sample, or in quantities as required by his said business, and in consequence thereof the business of the defendant was delayed and arrested and became irregular, and in consequence of which plaintiff suffered and sustained loss in the sum of $5,000; * * * that his average daily expense in operating his business from the 1st day of October, 1891, to February 1, 1892, was from $125 to $150 per day; * * * that in consequence of the failure of the plaintiff to furnish and deliver to him coal of the kind and quality agreed the operations of his business * * * was suspended for at least forty days, during which time he was under an average expense of $125 per day." He pleaded his alleged damages of $5,000 as a counterclaim. In January, 1892, Bannon declined to take any more coal from the appellee.

The foregoing language of the answer and counterclaim constitutes appellant's allegations as to the damages sustained. He does not allege or prove that he could not have procured coal of the kind which appellee agreed to furnish him at the price named in the contract. He could not suspend his business because appellee failed to furnish coal under the contract and recover from the appellee the average daily cost of running his plant. He offered evidence to show that the quality of the coal was such that it required more time and men to produce his goods, and that they were of an inferior quality, and that he made a contract with another for coal at 6 cents per bushel, but he failed to show that he had bought any at that price during the period the contract was to run except 3,360 bushels. This evidence was on an issue not raised by the answer and counterclaim.

It is insisted that the instructions are erroneous and in conflict with each other, and, therefore, the case should be reversed. At the instance of the defendant the court in an instruction told the jury that if they believed the plaintff failed to deliver the defendant coal of the kind, grade and quality called for and required by the contract, and in consequence of such failure the defendant sustained a loss in the qualities of the wares produced by him, and was put to additional expense and was delayed in the production of his wares, and was compelled to pay a higher price for coal of the kind required by the contract, then the jury should allow defendant an amount to compensate him for the losses thus occasioned.

The court on plaintiff's motion told the jury that if they believed from the evidence that the defendant accepted and used such coal after inspecting the same, or after having an opportunity to inspect the same, then they should find for the plaintiff the value of such coal at the contract price.

It was certainly proper to give the instructions last mentioned. The evidence in the case conduces to prove that the defendant not only had an opportunity to inspect the coal but did in fact know the kind and quality of coal the plaintiff was delivering him. When one has bought personal property, to be delivered at a future day, and receives it with the knowledge that it is not of the kind and quality sold, or could at the time of its delivery by inspection discover, or had a fair opportunity to inspect and discover, the quality, he can not accept the property and afterwards claim a deduction from the contract price on the ground that it was not of the required grade or quality. (Jones Bros. v. McEwan, 91 Ky., 373; O'Bannon & Co. v. Relf & Bledso, 7 Dana, 320; Kerr v. Smith, 5 B. M., 552.)

Under the pleadings and proof in the case it is clear that the instruction given by the court on the motion of the defendant was erroneous, but of this defendant can not complain. The instructions are not in conflict with each other. The court substantially told the jury to find the amount of plaintiff's claim if the defendant accepted and used the coal after inspecting the same, or after having an opportunity to inspect the same, although the jury might have believed from the evidence that the coal was not of the character and quality required by the contract, and that the defendant may have sustained a loss by the use thereof. It follows that when Bannon knew the character and quality of the coal when he received it he could not use it and then assert a claim for losses which resulted from its use in his factory.

The judgment is affirmed.

COLLINS V. FAWCETT, &C.

(Filed February 23, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Settlement of judgment—The evidence in this case is sufficient to support the finding of the chancellor that the judgment sought to be enforced had, by agreement of the parties, been satisfied and settled before the filing of the suit.

W. E. and S. A. Russell for appellant.

J. M. Wood and Samuel Avritt for appellees.

Appeal from Marion Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Burnam.

Rowntree & Fogle, executors of Fogle, deceased, held a lien on certain property—consisting of a mill and forty acres of land, with a dwelling house on it, in Marion county—belonging to Fawcett & Chandler, and brought suit to enforce their lien, and for a sale of the property in the Marion Circuit Court on the 15th day of August, 1877. They obtained a judgment and an order of sale, and on the same day this judgment was assigned to T. D. Collins by the plaintiffs therein. This assignee, Collins, had the property sold to satisfy said judgment in September, 1878, and the appellant, John L. Collins, became the purchaser. On the 7th day of January, 1879, T. D. Collins assigned his judgment to the appellant. Report of sale was made on the 21st day of January, and was confirmed on the 30th day of January. The defendants, Fawcett & Chandler, excepted to the confirmation of the sale on several grounds, chief of which were that the property was sold at a gross sacrifice, and that judgment was erroneous in directing that the mill should not be appraised, and that immediate possession should be given to the purchaser.

While these exceptions were pending the appellant—who was the owner of the judgment and the purchaser of the property at the decretal sale—proposed to the defendants, Fawcett & Chandler, that if they would abandon any further legal steps, and take no appeal from the judgment and let him have immediate possession of the property, he would cancel the unpaid balance due upon the judgment, the property at said sale having failed to pay said judgment by several hundred dollars, and having sold for greatly less than the amount the defendants had contracted to pay to their vendor, Davis.

This proposition of appellant was made to Chandler and was by him, in a letter dated January 15, 1879, communicated to Fawcett, Chandler and appellant living at that time in Taylor county, and Fawcett living in Marion county, where the property was located. Appellant got possession of the mill property at the date of the sale, and in a very short time got possession of the house.

The testimony of Chandler and Sanders, we think, clearly establishes that the proposition was made by appellant to the then defendants, Chandler & Fawcett, and that same was accepted and relied on, and no appeal was ever taken from the judgment confirming the report of sale. This agreement was made in 1879, and no steps were ever taken to enforce the collection of the balance of the judgment until in October, 1891, twelve years after the confirmation of the report of sale, when appellant caused execution to issue on the aforesaid judgment, and, upon the return of nulla bona, instituted this attachment suit to subject an interest of William Fawcett in a tract of land lying in Taylor county, Ky., to the payment of the balance due on the judgment assigned by the executors of Fogle, and Fawcett resists same and sets up the aforesaid facts, and pleads that by the agreement entered into by appellant that judgment had been satisfied, and that appellant was estopped from taking any further steps to collect said balance.

A good deal of proof was taken on the trial of this issue in the lower court, and whilst in his testimony appellant claims that he was released from his proposition by the filing of exceptions to the confirmation of the sale of the property aforesaid by the defendants subsequently thereto, it seems to us that there was a substantial compliance with the agreement entered into between the parties in reference to this matter. Appellant got possession of the mill immediately, and he got possession of the house and the forty acres of land as soon as the appellee could have reasonably been expected to surrender same. No appeal was ever taken from the judgment confirming the report of sale, and we think that the entire evidence in the case supports the conclusion arrived at by the chancellor in the court below, in which he holds that the judgment which is sought to be enforced had, by agreement of the parties, been satisfied and settled before the filing of the suit, and adjudging that plaintiff's petition be dismissed.

Wherefore, the judgment is affirmed.

BICKEL, &C. v. KRAUS.

(Filed February 24, 1897.)

1. Verdict signed by one whose name did not appear as juror—Where one of the nine names signed to the verdict of a jury did not appear in the list of the jury given in the record as having come to try the case, that fact did not render the judgment upon the verdict void, the right to object to the verdict upon that ground being waived by failure to make it at the proper time, no objection being made for more than six months. Moreover, the presumption of regularity must be applied in such a proceeding.

2. Objection to juror waived—It was too late after the verdict was rendered for defendant to object that one of the jurors was hostile to him, as he waived the objection by failing to make a motion to discharge the jury as soon as he discovered that the hostile juror was on the jury.

John Barret for appellants.

O'Neal & Pryor, Alfred Selligman, Phelps & Thum and Isaac T. Woodson for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas division.

Opinion of the court by Judge DuRelle.

This was an action for damages, alleged to have been caused by the gross neglect of Jacob and Henry Bickel, the appellants, in making an excavation for a cellar on Market street in Louisville, extending into or near the sidewalk of the street by leaving it exposed without a proper barrier or lights to prevent persons passing on the street from falling into it.

It was alleged that the appellee, in passing down Market street, fell into this excavation, whereby he received injuriers which resulted in permanent impairment of his mind. The averments of appellee were denied, and contributory negligence was pleaded.

In the trial of the case the record recites, in the usual form, "wherefore, to try the issues joined comes a jury, to wit," following with a list of twelve names, in which was included the name of Joseph Gegg. The record shows that on the day following, the jury, after retiring to consult, returned into court the following verdict: "We, of the jury, find for the plaintiff in the sum of $1,000," signed with nine names, eight of which appear in the list of the jury given in the record as having come to try the case, and one of the names being John Gallagher, whose name does not appear in the record list of the jury. This fact does not appear to have been discovered until the following November, the verdict having been rendered on April 5, 1894. In November a motion was made to set aside the judgment entered upon that verdict upon the ground that the judgment was void because the verdict was signed and returned by one John Gallagher, who was never sworn as a juror in the case, and was signed and returned by only eight of the jurors who were sworn to try the case.

No affidavit of any person is filed to show that Gallagher was not in fact sworn as a juror; on the contrary, upon motion and grounds for a new trial, filed immediately after the verdict was rendered, it appeared by the joint affidavit of Gallagher and three others who signed the verdict that "they were sworn as jurors in the above-styled action, which jury returned a verdict herein on the 5th day of April, 1894, and were present at all the deliberations of said jury."

It seems probable that the insertion of the name of Joseph Gegg in the record as a member of the jury which came to try the case was a mistake of the clerk, and that Gallagher was the juror who was in fact sworn. However that may be, the objection, even if sustained by the facts—and it does not by this record appear to be so sustained—must be deemed to have been waived by failure to object at the proper time. Moreover, the presumption of regularity in the proceedings must be applied in a case like this.

Thompson on Trials, volume 1, edition of 1889, page 6, says: "When the entries of the record are contradictory as to the number of jurors who sat at the trial, so much of the record as states that the jury consisted of twelve men will be regarded as stating the truth, and the contradictory statement will be rejected as a clerical error, the legal presumption being that the portion of the record is true which answers the requirements of the law unless the contrary be made to appear by the bill of exceptions."

We conclude, therefore, that the trial court did not err in overruling the motion to vacate the judgment as void upon this ground.

The only other ground upon which much stress is laid in argument is the ground, set up in a motion for a new trial, of malice or prejudice on the part of the jury, amounting to actual bias. By the affidavits filed on the motion it appears that a few days before the trial Walter Stone and Jacob Bickel, one of the appellants, had become very hostile on account of charges and countercharges of official corruption; that E. M. Stone, who was one of the jurors who signed the verdict, was the father of Walter Stone, and that he had, before the trial, exhibited a hostile feeling toward Jacob Bickel, and had refused to recognize him. The defendant's affidavits charged that Stone in the jury room took a very prominent part in inducing the other jurors to return the verdict against appellants. It appears, however, from the affidavit of Jacob Bickel himself that while he was not in the courtroom when the jury was empaneled he was there during the trial; that he had known Stone for thirty-five years, and no objection was made by him or his counsel to the service of Stone as a juror until after the verdict was rendered. On the other hand the affidavit of Stone and of most of the other jurors, including those who did not concur in the verdict, are distinctly and emphatically to the effect that Stone took no prominent part in inducing the rendition of the verdict and committed no improper act.

Upon the evidence introduced by the affidavits we concur with the lower court that a case for setting aside the verdict on the ground of malice, amounting to actual bias, was not made out. So far as regards the appellant, Jacob Bickel, whatever objection existed to Stone on account of the alleged hostility exhibited by him toward Bickel, should have been taken advantage of as soon as Bickel discovered the fact that he was on the jury, by motion to discharge the jury upon affidavit stating the fact, or the objection must be considered as waived. (Thompson & Merriam on Juries, paragraph 302, et seq.)

The further objection that the verdict was contrary to the evidence, and that the weight of the evidence showed that there was a sufficient barrier protecting the excavation was properly overruled by the trial court. There was sufficient evidence to warrant the jury in finding the verdict which they did, and the fact that the court might possibly not have given the same finding would not justify it in invading the province of the jury and setting aside the verdict.

Wherefore, the judgment is affirmed with damages.

CORNETT, &C. v. BRASHEARS.

(Filed February 26, 1897.)

Title bond—Agreement to abandon contract—The appellee executed a bond in the penal sum of $1,000 that he would make a good and sufficient title to a certain tract of land unto one John Cornett, and his heirs, the appellants, bring this action on the bond. But it appearing that the instrument was merely a proposition to sell the land on specified terms on the part of the appellee, that the terms were never complied with by the decedent, the notes which he executed not being paid, and that both parties, upon the failure of decedent to pay the notes when due, abandoned the contract, the finding of the court below in favor of the appellee will not be disturbed.

R. A. Hurst and J. J. C. Bach for appellants.

Thomas H. Hines, Edward W. Hines, D. D. Fields and S. B. Dishman for appellee.

Appeal from Perry Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge White.

The appellants, as widow and heirs of John Cornett, sued the appellee, H. B. Brashears, in the Circuit Court of Perry county, asking a specific execution of the following contract: "That H. B. Brashears binds himself, my heirs, executors, administrators or assigns, in the penal sum of one thousand dollars, to be levied out of my lands, goods, chattels, tenements, etc. The condition of the above obligation is such that I make unto John Cornett a good and sufficient title to a certain tract or parcel of land lying and in the county of Perry and State of Kentucky, on Owens' Branch of Big Leatherwood, a fork of the north fork of the Kentucky river, and bounded as follows, to wit: On the east by John Lodsey, on the north by James Brashears, on the south by James H. Singleton. John Cornett pays $25 down, the remainder when due. If he, John Cornett, fails to pay when due, the first payment is to be void and contract forfeited. Then this obligation shall be null and void; otherwise in full force and virtue. H. B. BRASHEARS.

"Witness: E. C. CAMPBELL and
"N. CORNETT."

And on this contract plaintiffs ask judgment requiring defendant to convey the land by deed to them as the heirs of John Cornett, deceased, who had died after the execution of the said bond. The defendant answered and admitted the execution of the paper sued on, and stated the amount of the purchase money that Cornett was to pay for said land, and setting out that Cornett had executed two notes, one of $275, to be paid within thirty days after a tide in the north fork of the Kentucky river sufficient to float timber, and $200 in eight months from the 5th day of April, 1888, and averring that said bond was only given as an option, and that said Cornett had failed to pay any part of said purchase, though it had been due since about the 5th of December, 1888, and averring that a tide did come up in said river or stream sufficient to float timber in October, 1888, and thereby said note became due, and that he called on John Cornett on the 25th of December, 1888, for payment, and the said John Cornett, not being able to pay the same, informed appellee that he would have to lose the $25 already paid on said contract; alleges that said contract was but an offer to sell and so understood by John Cornett, and alleges that the contract or paper sued on was placed in the hands of E. C. Campbell to hold, and if the said John Cornett failed to make the payment when due Campbell was to give up the paper to appellant.

Upon the hearing of the case on the evidence the court canceled the notes and dismissed plaintiff's petition, and adjudged that the paper sued on was only a proposition of appellee to sell to John Cornett the land on specified terms, and that Cornett had failed to comply with the terms of the proposition, and adjudged the cost against appellants, and from that judgment this appeal is prosecuted by appellants.

We are inclined to the opinion that the contract sued on. is void for the want of certainty, but the court below adjudged the paper to be a mere proposition of appellee to sell the land on specified terms, which were never complied with, and it appears from the evidence that both parties, upon the failure of Cornett to pay the money when due, abandoned the contract and regarded it as no longer binding on either.

We are of the opinion the judgment of the court below was right.

The judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

BENNETT V. LAMBERT, &C.

(Filed February 26, 1897.)

Damages on injunction bond—Attorneys' fees—No recovery can be had on an injunction bond for attorneys' fees expended in defense of the proceeding for an injunction, where the injunction is the relief sought.

The appellant was proceeded against by appellees for violation of a temporary injunction which they had obtained pending a suit for a perpetual injunction; and the proceedings for contempt, as well as the injunction, having been dismissed with judgment for costs in favor of appellant, the appellant instituted action on the injunction bond to recover counsel fees and expenses incurred in defending the motion to have him punished for violation of the temporary injunction. Held—That the counsel fees and expenses were incurred in defense of the attempt to obtain the perpetual injunction, and that appellant is not entitled to recover on the injunction bond, the injunction being the relief sought.

G. G. Gilbert for appellant.

Pryor J. Foree and L. C. Willis for appellees.

Appeal from Spencer Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Guffy.

The appellees, Lambert and others, instituted suit in the Spencer Circuit Court against the appellant and others, the object of which was to perpetually enjoin the defendants in that suit from opening a certain road and removing fencing of the plaintiffs named in this suit. A temporary injunction was obtained, and pending the suit the plaintiffs therein moved to have Bennett punished for violation of the injunction. The motion was postponed several times, it being called in different counties. Upon final hearing, the court adjudged that Bennett had not been guilty of contempt, and the proceedings seeking to have him fined for contempt were dismissed and said Bennett discharged, and judgment given in his favor against the plaintiffs for his cost arising upon this branch of the proceedings. It was further adjudged that the injunction obtained be dismissed, and Howard and the Spencer County Court were given a judgment for their cost. The other cost arising in and about the injunction were adjudged to be paid by the parties respectively, each party to pay his own cost, but it was also provided that this order adjudging that Bennett shall pay his part of the costs herein is not to be construed so as to include his attorney's fees nor any expenses incurred by him in the employment of counsel to defend the injunction herein.

On the 20th of November, 1894, appellant instituted this action against appellees to recover on the injunction bond executed in the suit above stated, and claiming judgment for $100 damages on account of the said injunction. The answer denied appellant's right to recover for the items or claims set out, and alleged that an injunction was the only remedy sought in the action, and that the attorney's fees and cost were incurred in the defense of the action and not in defense of the injunction.

Appellant's demurrer to the second paragraph of the answer was properly overruled. The reply of appellant alleged that all the costs and damages sued for were incurred and paid by him in attending sessions of this court held in Anderson and Shelby counties in response to motions of said plaintiffs in the former suit to appear therein and show cause why this plaintiff should not be fined and imprisoned for contempt of this court for alleged violations of said temporary injunction charged by the plaintiff in said suit, and before the judge of this court sitting at Shelbyville and Lawrenceburg.

The appellees filed a demurrer to the reply, which were sustained by the court; and appellant, failing to plead further, his action was dismissed, and from this judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

The contention of appellant is that the damages sued for were the result of the temporary injunction, and cites a number of cases to support his contention, but we are unable to see that any of the cases cited sustain appellant's views.

The cost and expense sued for was not incurred in defeating the temporary injunction, but in fact incurred in defense of a motion to have him punished for the violation of the injunction, and the court adjudged him not guilty, and rendered a judgment in his favor for cost. It often happens that a party may be put to cost and expense in defense of an unfounded or unjust suit or motion, and yet a judgment for legal cost be all that he can obtain.

There may be cases where a suit for malicious prosecution might be maintained, but no such case is now presented.

It seems to us that the injunction was the remedy sought; and the counsel fees and expense were incurred in defense of the attempt to obtain the perpetual injunction, if they can be considered as expended in the suit at all.

The decision of this court in New National Turnpike Co. v. Dulaney, &c., 86 Ky., 518, seems to conclusively settle that appellant was not entitled to recover.

In the case supra the turnpike company had instituted proceedings in the county court to condemn a right of way for a turnpike road through land owned by Dulaney, etc., who filed a petition in the Louisville Law and Equity Court enjoining that proceeding.

The demurrer of the turnpike company to the petition was sustained and injunction dissolved and petition dismissed, and the company sued to recover on the bond for attorney's fees expended. The court below held that no recovery could be had, and this court affirmed the judgment for the reason that the injunction was the relief sought; in fact, gives the relief if sustained, and that in such cases no recovery could be had on the bond for counsel fees, quoting Bergin v. Sharer, 14 B. M., 497.

Judgment affirmed.

CUNDIFF V. CUNDIFF, &C.

(Filed February 27, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Breach of contract—Measure of damages—Conjectural profits—In this action by appellees to recover of appellant damages arising from the failure of the latter to roll the logs from land rented to appellee, to build fencing to keep out stock, and to dig a well according to the terms of the contract of rental, the appellees were not entitled to recover as damages the value of the crop which they might have produced upon such of the land as they did not cultivate by reason of the failure of appellant to remove the logs, conjectural profits not being a criterion of damages. And the appellees having failed to state the amount of damages sustained by reason of appellant's failure to build the fencing and to dig the well, they are without proof of actual damages sustained on that branch of the case.

2. Same—Instructions—There was no attempt on the part of the appellees to show the "reasonable value of the use of the land," of which they claim to have been deprived, and an instruction to the jury that "the measure of damages is the reasonable value of the use of the land of which he was deprived, considering his force of work hands," etc., was erroneous.

Birkhead & Clement for appellant.

Noe & Massie for appellees.

Appeal from Daviess Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

This is an action by appellees against appellant sounding in damages for the alleged violation of a contract by which appellant leased to appellees about twenty acres of land to be planted in corn, tobacco, sorghum, etc. It is alleged that appellant was to roll the logs on the land, and fence it in time for the appellees to plant it in a seasonable time, and that appellant was to have a well dug on the rented premises for the use of the appellees; that the appellant failed to roll all the logs and fence it in time for appellees to put in their crop on all the land rented of appellant; that he failed to have the well dug in a suitable time, which required them to carry water some distance, and that the fence was not sufficient to turn stock; that stock broke into his fields and damaged his crop, and in consequence of these several violations of the contract the appellees were damaged in the sum of $325. The several breaches of the contract were denied.

The appellee, W. H. Cundiff, testified that he was damaged $325 "by the failure of defendant to comply with his contract." This was an estimate by a witness who, in reaching the conclusion, determined in his mind the rule for measuring damages; they may have been proximate or remote. On cross-examination he said: "The items that go to make up the damages of $325 is what tobacco I could and would have raised on the land, judging by the crop of the previous years, which tobacco would have brought me about $260, and the corn I could and would have raised on the land would have been worth $60 or $70.

The witness said: "Before I brought this suit I drove the defendant's mule out of my crop once or twice, and his cattle about the same number of times." He also said: "I carried water for domestic purposes a distance of about one-half mile for about one month prior to the digging of the well, about an average of three buckets per day." He did not state whether or not the mule or cattle damaged his crop, nor the value of his services in carrying the water.

Geo. Cundiff, the other plaintiff, testified as follows: "My father carried water about one month before the well was dug. I think I could have made about $100 out of the tobacco I could have raised on the land we were to cultivate if we had got the crop planted."

Campbell Cundiff, in giving his testimony for the plaintiff, said: "I made the contract with the defendant to dig the well. * * * I was to get $4 for digging the well. My father carried water about one-half mile for a month before it was dug."

This constitutes the plaintiff's testimony on the subject of damages. The verdict was for $155.

There being no proof as to the damages as to crop, or in the matter of failing to dig the well for a time, the plaintiff is without any proof as to the amount of damage actually sustained, except that which relates to value of the crop which the land would have produced, or profits on it. The court should have told the jury, in estimating damages, not to take in consideration the value of the crop which the plaintiff might have produced upon such of the land as he did not cultivate by reason of defendant's failure to roll the logs or build the fence; and further, that they could not take into consideration any profits which the plaintiff might have made on land which he failed to cultivate for the reasons indicated. When the witness gave an estimate of the value of the crop he could have produced, it was but a method of estimating what his profits would have been under the contract.

The court held, in Smith v. Phillips, jr., 16 KY. LAW REP., 616, that conjectural profits can not be recovered, and were not the criterion of damages, but that the lessee could recover the actual damages which proximately flowed from the breach of the contract.

The court in instruction No. 2 told the jury that "the measure of damages is the reasonable value of the use of the land of which he was deprived, considering his force of work hands, the trouble and expense of obtaining water up to the time the well was dug, and the damages to their (plaintiff's) crops by reason of the insufficiency of the fence."

This instruction was erroneous. There was no attempt to show the "reasonable value of the use of the land," of which plaintiffs claim they were deprived, except by showing conjectural profits; neither does it appear to us that such value can be shown in any other way. It, therefore, follows that plaintiff's damages can not be measured in that way. It can be seen how a lessor might recover of a lessee the reasonable rental value of land which he rented to the lessee to be cultivated, and which the lessee failed to do.

If the plaintiff's contention is correct that the fence is not the kind which defendant's contract required him to build, and in consequence of it the mule and cattle injured his crop, then he is entitled to recover the actual damages resulting therefrom. If the defendant did not dig the well as soon as required by the contract, then the plaintiffs are entitled to recover the actual damages resulting from such failure. There was no attempt to show that damages other than we have mentioned resulted from the alleged breach of the contract; hence, the question is not before the court as to whether any damages were recoverable other than indicated.

The judgment is reversed, with directions that further proceedings conform to this opinion.

BEARD, &C. V. BANK OF HARDINSBURG.

(Filed March 10, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Individual note—Where partners signed an obligation as individuals, the fact that there was a suit pending to settle the partnership does not postpone the right of the creditor to recover judgment on the note against the obligors, and proceed to collect same from any of them individually.

N. McC. Mercer and David R. Murray for appellants.

M. Eakins for appellee.

Appeal from Breckinridge Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Lewis.

The note sued on in this case was executed to appellee by Taylor Beard, Dudley Miller, J .S. DeJarnett and J. D. Beeler, and none of the payers have made defense denying their individual liability except appellant Beeler, who alleges that it was a debt of the firm of Beard & Beeler, and accepted as such, but the lower court, to which the law and facts were submitted, jury being waived, found that appellee refused to accept the note when offered and attempted to be executed by and in the name of Beard & Beeler, and insisted that it be signed by the obligors as individuals, which was done.

It does not, therefore, seem to us material that there was a suit pending to settle the partnership of Beard & Beeler when this action was commenced, because that fact did not postpone the right of appellee to recover judgment on the note against the obligors and collect the amount of it from them or any one of them individually.

Judgment affirmed.

COLLOPY V. CLOHERTY.

(Filed March 5, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Election by board of councilmen—Quorum—Under a rule adopted by a city council that "a majority of a quorum of members elected and voting shall be necessary to choose any officer elected by this board," a quorum of the members elected should vote to enable a majority of that quorum to elect an officer. Hence where the number of councilmen was fourteen, eight constituting a quorum of that body, and the record showed that only seven members voted at an election, the party for whom they all voted was not legally elected.

Root & Root for appellant.

Appeal from Campbell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

Cloherty was elected "foreman of street repairs and overseer of the poor," and was holding the position in the city of Newport. Collopy claims that the council of the city elected him to the position, and this action was brought to establish his claim.

The charter (1874) provides that a majority of the board of councilmen shall constitute a quorum to transact all ordinary business.

A rule had been adopted by the council which reads as follows: "A majority of a quorum of members elected and voting shall be necessary to choose any officer elected by this board." As to the right of council to adopt it there can be no question. This rule was in force at the time Collopy claims he was elected. There were fourteen members of the board of council. Of course eight would constitute a quorum. The record of the proceedings of the council shows that when it convened at the meeting during which the voting was done for the election of the "foreman of street repairs and overseer of the poor" thirteen of the members were present.

The record of the council exhibited in this record is silent as to the number present when the voting took place. Only seven members voted at the election and all voted for Collopy. However, in our opinion the question to be determined is not as to whether, under the law ordinarily governing the action of boards of council of municipalities, those who may have been present and did not vote should be counted to make a quorum, nor as to whether under that law, if a majority of the council failed to attend, a majority of those present may act.

The question is whether the rule required that a quorum should vote in order that a majority of it should be enabled to elect an officer. If the contention of appellant be correct then five members could meet and elect such officers as the council were authorized to elect, regardless of whether a quorum was present or participated in the election. We are of the opinion that the meaning of it is that a "quorum of the members elected" should vote, and that a majority of that quorum could elect when the quorum was "voting." We will not elaborate our views, but quote from the opinion of the lower court as follows, to wit: "I have not the least doubt as to the purpose of the council in adopting that rule. It was to require at least a quorum to place itself on record in the important matter of electing city officials by that body. And this was the construction placed upon it by the board itself, to which we may look if there be any doubt about it. The presiding officer so construed it, and declared that no one was elected by reason of the failure of the quorum to vote, and the board quietly, without a dissenting voice, and for an entire year, so far as appears, acquiesced in that construction.

"Nor is this construction inconsistent with the language employed in the rule. It is certainly as easy to refer the words 'elected and voting' to the antecedent 'quorum' as it is to treat the words 'majority of a quorum' as an antecedent.

"If, as claimed by plaintiff, five be sufficient to a choice, regardless of the number of votes cast, then the words 'elected and voting' are wholly useless, and should have been omitted. They do no duty whatever, since it is irresistably implied that the successful candidate received as many as five legal votes. This means that he was voted for by five members entitled to vote. It is idle to talk about being elected by votes not cast at all. The words referred to ('elected and voting') are, therefore, upon plaintiff's theory, 'worse than useless;' they only tend to confuse what would be absolutely clear if they were omitted.

"On the other hand if the intent of the rule be to require a quorum to vote these words become intelligible and signify something. We have the idea of a quorum vote; not that any particular candidate must receive it, but that it must be cast either for one or all of the candidates.

"Had the purpose been as claimed by plaintiff, how easy to have omitted the words 'elected and voting,' so that the rule would have read as follows: 'A majority of a quorum of members shall be necessary to choose any officer,' or thus: 'The candidate receiving the votes of a majority of a quorum shall be declared elected.' But it was not done, and it seems significant that it was not done. This construction seems well grounded in both reason and public policy, as well as in the rules of construction. It is, besides, in perfect harmony with Morton v. Youngerman, 89 Ky., 505.

"In that case it is strongly intimated that it would require a specific enactment to overcome the rule of plurality and make a majority of the entire board necessary to a choice.

* * * * * * * * * *

"That the city council had the power, however, to adopt the rule in question is not open to doubt. Indeed the old charter expressly conferred the power to pass any ordinance, resolution or by-law not in conflict with it or the Constitution. * * *

"In Morton v. Youngerman the record showed that council had amended one of its rules by striking out the requirement that a 'majority' of the members elected and voting shall be necessary to choose, etc.

"So that it was unnecessary to consider the question of a majority of the members elected, etc., in that case. The court, however, distinctly and very properly recognized the right of counsel to adopt rules regulating elections by it, as indeed it did in this case.

* * * * * * * * * *

"Insomuch, therefore, as the construction which I feel constrained to give rule 37 seems to me to give effect to the intent of the council; secondly, to every part of the rule as framed; thirdly, to the sensible, as required by the rules of construction; and fourthly, to be in accord with public policy, in that it gives effect to a most salutary rule."

The judgment is affirmed.

AYDELOTT V. MCWILLIAMS & CO.

(Filed March 17, 1897—Not to be reported.

Action on contract—Finding of chancellor supported by evidence—In this action by appellees against appellant to recover the agreed price for erecting a heater in the house of appellant under a written contract, the evidence being voluminous and conflicting, the finding of the chancellor below will not be disturbed.

Gibson & Marshall for appellant.

Burwell K. Marshall for appellees.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hazelrigg.

The appellee, under a written contract, undertook to erect a heating apparatus in the house of the appellant. In this suit, brought for the agreed price therefor, viz, $850, he avers that in all respects he complied with his contract and has been paid no part of the sum agreed on. The appellant resists the collection of the demand on the ground that the appellee failed to comply with the contract; that while he put in the apparatus the work was done so imperfectly as to render it substantially useless. The testimony is voluminous and contradictory. If the appellee and his witnesses are to be credited the finding below should be approved. If we accept the statements of appellant, corroborated in some particulars by other witnesses, judgment ought to have gone only for the amount for which appellant offered to confess, viz, $150.

In suits of this character we can not adjust these discrepancies in the statements of witnesses so accurately as the trial court. We have examined the proof carefully, however, and while the annoyance of the appellant, growing out of the inefficiency of the apparatus at the start, was great, we are not satisfied it was the fault of the appellees.

The chief complaint of the appellant is that the flue back of the boiler connecting it with the chimney was defectively built, causing a lack of draft, and hence causing the furnace to smoke and become clogged with soot. These results, however, are attributed by the appellee to the defective flues in the appellant's chimney, and which were accepted, as appellee contends, upon the assurance of the appellant that they had been examined by other bidders for the work and pronounced sufficient. There is no lack of testimony in support of both contentions, and as already indicated we shall adopt the adjustment of the conflicting statement made by the chancellor.

Judgment affirmed.

COLDIRON'S ADM'R V. TREADWAY.

(Filed March 20, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Appeals—No bill of exception being filed upon appeal, the only question for this court to consider is whether the allegations of the petition are sufficient to support the judgment of the trial court.

2. Pleading—It was not necessary for the petition, in this action to recover of an administratrix a sum of money deposited with her intestate, to allege that the plaintiff was the owner of the money deposited, the fair inference being that he was the owner; and, besides, even if he was not the owner, he might be entitled to recover unless some third party intervened and set up claim to the deposit.

It was not necessary to state in the petition the avocation in which the intestate had been engaged.

A. K. Cook and W. H. Holt for appellant.

Edward W. Hines for appellee.

Appeal from Clay Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Guffy.

The appellee, John Treadway, instituted suit in the Clay Circuit Court against the appellant seeking to recover judgment for the sum of $400, alleged to have been deposited with the intestate of appellant. The answer is a denial of the deposit claimed, and it is also denied that appellee ever had $400.

The law and facts were submitted to the court, and the court rendered a judgment in favor of appellee for the amount claimed. No separate finding of law and facts was asked. A motion for a new trial was made, based upon the ground that the judgment was contrary to the law and facts in the case, which motion was overruled by the court, and appellant has appealed. There is no bill of exceptions filed, hence the only question for decision is whether the petition is sufficient to support the judgment. The material portions of the petition read as follows: "The plaintiff, John Treadway, says that on or about the first part of the month of May, 1892, he deposited with C. L. Coldiron, now deceased, the sum of four hundred dollars in cash, which the said C. L. Coldiron agreed and promised to return on demand; that afterwards, on or about the 7th day of July, 1892, the said C. L. Coldiron departed this life intestate, domiciled in Clay county, Kentucky; * * * that the said C. L. Coldiron or anyone for him never paid to plaintiff or anyone for him the said four hundred dollars deposited by him as aforesaid or any part thereof; that he has made demand of the said administratrix as required by law for the said four hundred dollars, which demand she refused to pay, or any part thereof, and still refuses to pay said account on which demand was made, together with affidavits verifying same, are herewith filed and made a part of this petition; that said account of four hundred dollars is just, due and wholly unpaid; that there is no offset or discount against same or usury embraced therein."

It seems to us that the petition states a cause of action. It was not necessarily incumbent upon plaintiff to aver specifically that he was the owner of the money deposited, but the fair influence from the petition is that he was the owner, and if he was not such owner still he might be entitled to recover, unless some third party intervened and asserted a claim to the deposit. It was not necessary to state in the petition what avocation C. L. Coldiron was engaged in.

The answer put in issue the truth of the petition, and the presumption is that the proof was directed to the issue raised, and the court, having heard the evidence, rendered judgment, and no bill of exceptions being filed there are no grounds for reversal.

Judgment affirmed.

CULLETON, &C. V. KEUNE, &C.

(Filed March 11, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Deed set aside because of grantor's mental incapacity—The chancellor properly set aside a deed from husband and wife to a son of the wife by a former marriage because of the mental incapacity of the husband, who has, by the death of the wife, under the terms of the deed under which they held, become entitled as survivor to the whole of the property owned by them jointly.

2. Estoppel—Although the grantee agreed to hold the property in trust for the grantors, he is not estopped, the deed being set aside, to claim a lot included in the deed, the title to which, subject to his mother's life estate, was in him prior to the execution of the deed.

3. The step-son has no interest in the estate of his step-father by reason of the fact that it was largely the result of the business sagacity and industry and economy of his mother.

4. Improvements—Improvements made by the mother and the step-father upon the lot to which the son was entitled in remainder must be regarded as having been made for his benefit.

Thomas F. Hargis, Wright & McElroy and Hargis & Turner, jr., for appellants.

Thomas H. Hines, B. F. Procter and Sims & Covington for appellees.

Appeal from Warren Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

Wm. Culleton died intestate leaving a widow, Catherine, and an only son, the appellant, John Culleton. The widow married John Burke, and appellee, Mary Keune, is the only issue of the marriage.

Culleton at his death owned a lot in Bowling Green which the son inherited subject to such uses as the law gave his mother. Subsequent to the marriage of Burke and wife, by the industry and thrift of both, certain parcels of real estate were acquired, which were conveyed to the husband, John Burke. On the 25th day of December, 1886, John Burke and his wife made a deed purporting to convey to appellee, Frederick Keune, the husband of their daughter, the real estate which Burke had, and also the Culleton lot. On the same day Keune, by deed, conveyed the property described in the deed to him to John Burke and Catherine Burke, with this provision, to wit: "To Catherine Burke for her life, and, if she should survive John Burke, to her and her assigns forever; but if she should die before John Burke, then at her death the title to all the foregoing-described property shall vest absolutely in the said John Burke and his heirs and assigns forever."

John Culleton was no party to these deeds. On the first day of May, 1890, John Burke and Catherine Burke made a deed to John Culleton, conveying to him the property mentioned in the foregoing deeds.

This action was instituted by Keune and wife to have the deed to John Culletin set aside—first, because John Burke was mentally disqualified from making the deed; second, that while the deed was absolute on its face, in fact it was made with an understanding of all concerned that Culleton was to hold the title in trust for Mrs. Keune. Catherine Burke died before the suit was brought.

The facts with reference to the execution of the deed are substantially these: John Burke had acquired such habits, or such business habits, as made his family feel that he was imperiling his estate, and the conclusion was reached that it was best to have him and his wife convey the property to John Culleton, as the witnesses express it, for "safety." It was not intended by any of them to injure Burke, or in anyway to deprive him of the enjoyment of a comfortable support out of the property. The record shows that he was incapable of managing his estate and incapable of entering into the contract. John Culleton was a priest in the Catholic Church when the deed was made. Afterwards he abandoned his priestly calling, withdrew from the church and married. When this occurred the trouble began. It is but just to Culleton to say that he never claimed that he was the exclusive owner of the property. He claimed that he held one-half of it for himself and the other half for his sister. While Culleton thought it would, at the death of the father and mother, become the property of himself and sister, and as he would die without issue, it would go to his sister, and as that would be the result, the sister concluded that the brother held it in trust for her, yet we are of the opinion had the deed been valid that he would have held it in trust for the father and mother. The court, we think, properly adjudged that the deed should be set aside. When this was done their ownership of the property existed as it did at the time the deed was made.

We find that John Burke, in his own right, and as survivor of his wife, owned all the property except the Culleton lot. The title to this remained in John Culleton because he had never parted with it, nor had he done any act which estops him from asserting claim thereto.

As we understand the judgment of the court, the Culleton lot is adjudged to appellant, including the improvements on it. If it did not do so we would reverse the case, with directions that the lot be adjudged to him, with the improvements thereon.

We think it is perfectly clear that it was largely through his mother's business sagacity, her industry and economy, that the estate of her husband was created and the improvement in the Culleton lot made. She was entitled to the use of part if not all of the lot during her life, and if she invested her money and earnings in placing an improvement on it, and if her husband aided her by his means in doing so thirty years ago, they did so knowing that John Culleton would at her death own the property, and it is conclusively presumed from the facts of this cause that such improvements were made for his benefit.

The fact that the appellant's mother contributed so largely in the manner stated to create the estate of her husband, John Burke, would not entitle the appellant to any part of it.

If John Burke's property had not been conveyed to Keune it follows that at the death of Catherine Burke the appellant would not have had any interest in it, nor would he have on the death of Burke.

Under the deed which Keune made to John Burke and Catherine Burke, at her death, Burke became the owner of the property which he formerly owned and conveyed to Keune. The debts which Keune paid were owed by Burke, and if Keune has any claim for debts paid it is against the property of Burke, not that of appellant. But we are not passing upon the question as to the validity of Keune's claim against Burke's property, but are simply stating, if any exists, Culleton's lot is not liable therefor.

The judgment is affirmed on the original and cross appeal.

WILLS V. EVANS.

(Filed February 9, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Guardian's bond—Infancy of one surety does not release others—The fact that one of several sureties in a guardian bond is not bound because of his infancy does not release the other sureties.

2. Validity of bond—Although neither an order entered May 3, 1884, appointing a guardian and reciting the due execution of bond, nor any of the orders entered thereafter, were signed by the county judge until June 9, 1884, the bond was at least good as a common-law obligation, being properly attested by the clerk and recorded in the bond book, thus showing its acceptance.

Grant E. Lilly for appellant.

Riddell & Riddell for appellee.

Appeal from Estill Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hazelrigg.

The testimony establishes that E. L. Cockrell was a minor when he signed the guardian's bond sued on; and while he was doing business and trading as if of full age, that fact did not make him any older. Since reaching his majority he has done nothing to ratify his former act, and is, therefore, not bound on the bond.

It does not follow, however, as seems to have been held by the trial court, that the other sureties are thereby released. In some cases, notably in taking sheriffs' bonds, the county judge has been held to a strict adherence to the methods provided by law for the execution of the obligation by the sureties, and on his failure to have the bond signed in such way as to bind all, the other sureties have been discharged.

This rule has not been adopted in other States, and will not be extended here to the disadvantage of infants, for whose protection such bonds are executed. Each surety, without any fraud or misrepresentation practiced on him by the officer taking the bond or by the ward, signed the bond in question, and undertook that the principal should faithfully perform his duties.

It appears that an order in the usual form, appointing the guardian and reciting the due execution of the bond by the guardian and his sureties, is entered on the order book of the county court on May 3, 1884, but that order nor any of the orders thereafter made in the court seem to have been signed by the county judge until on June 9, 1884.

The bond which is signed by the sureties, however, recites that their principal had been appointed guardian by the Estill County Court, and had qualified as such with the appellees and their representatives as sureties. This bond was properly attested by the clerk and recorded in the bond book, showing its due acceptance. In any event the bond is good as a common-law obligation. This seems to have been the view taken by the trial court, but the sureties were held to be discharged because of E. L. Cockrell's want of age.

Judgment reversed for proceedings consistent herewith.

HIXON, &C. v. BRIDGES.

(Filed February 9, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Partition—Lien upon land by one joint tenant—The evidence in this case shows that plaintiffs and defendant own the land in controversy jointly, to the exclusion of their brothers and sisters, the land having been bought by their mother, now deceased, with their money which she held as their guardian, and the lower court properly rejected defendant's claim to the whole of the land upon the ground that his mother had given it to him by parol to indemnify him for expenditures made by him for her benefit. And it was error to give defendant a lien upon the land for the amount claimed to have been paid out by him for his mother, as there was no testimony to support his claim except his own, which was incompetent, and, besides, he had been reimbursed by the use of the land.

J. E. Kelly for appellants.

Robert Crenshaw for appellee.

Appeal from Trigg Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Burnam.

These consolidated suits were instituted in the Trigg Circuit Court on the 15th day of December, 1892, by M. A. Hixon and her husband, J. T. Hixon, and Charity Battoe against C. T. Bridges and the other children and heirs at law of Mary Bridges, deceased, the plaintiffs, M. A. Hixon and Charity Battoe, and the defendant, C. T. Bridges, being the youngest children of said Mary Bridges, deceased. They allege that their father, William Bridges, the husband of Mary Bridges, their mother, died many years before their mother's death; that in December, 1853, Mary Bridges qualified as guardian of her three infant children, M. A. Hixon, Charity Battoe and C. T. Bridges, and executed bond as guardian; that she collected $158.24, which was due and owing to each of said minor children from the estate of their grandfather, the interests of all the older children being paid to them direct; that in August, 1854, she purchased at a decretal sale, made by the master commissioner of the Trigg Circuit Court, a tract of land containing 42 acres, situate in Trigg county; that by the advice of her older children she used in this purchase $474.72 which belonged to her three infant children, and for whom she was guardian, she at that time having no other funds with which to make said purchase, and that said purchase was made with the understanding and agreement on the part of all the children that the land purchased was to belong to and be for the benefit of herself and her said infant children, who were at that time residing with her.

The evidence in the record shows that she lived on this land until her death, in July, 1876. Her two daughters married and left the premises, one of them (Charity Battoe) afterwards returning and living with her mother up to the time of her mother's death. Some six or seven years before her death, when she had become old and infirm, she invited the defendant, C. T. Bridges, who was her youngest child, to make his home with her, and the evidence shows that he moved to the farm and lived there from 1869 until her death in 1876. She died intestate; no administration was ever granted upon her estate, and no claims were ever legally asserted against same.

After the death of his mother defendant, C. T. Bridges, continued to use and occupy the land, his sister, Mrs. Battoe, living with him for some time. Finally the plaintiff, Mrs. Hixon, demanded a division of the land, or that he should pay her for her interest in same, and in December, 1877, defendant, C. T. Bridges, entered into an agreement with the husband of plaintiff, M. A. Hixon, by which he selected arbitrators, who, on the same day, returned an award to the effect that Bridges was to pay over to Hixon and wife $200, and that they were to make Bridges a deed to their part of said land, and this was to be a full settlement. This agreement was never carried out because Hixon did not want to make a warranty deed.

The evidence shows also that John Logan recovered a judgment against S. M. Bridges, one of the older children of Mary Bridges, deceased, and an execution issued upon his judgment was levied upon the supposed interest of S. M. Bridges in the tract of land to which his mother held title at her death, the same in dispute in this action, and he also instituted suit to have said interest ascertained and subjected to his debt. The defendant, C. T. Bridges, resisted this proceeding on the part of Logan, and set out the facts in his answer that the property was paid for by money of the three younger children; that it belonged to them at their mother's death, and could not be taken to pay a debt of one of the older children. This answer was filed in 1878.

The defendant continued to occupy said land without accounting to plaintiffs, Hixon and Battoe, for any part of the rents until the institution of this suit in December, 1892. Then the defendant, C. T. Bridges, comes into court and claims, for the first time, that the property really belonged to his mother, and that she had given it to him by parol to indemnify him for moneys expended by him for her use and for services in taking care of her; and he also relies upon the statute of limitation to defeat plaintiffs' recovery.

A good deal of testimony was taken in the case. It all tends to show substantially the truth of plaintiffs' contention that the land was paid for with their money, and that it was recognized by the whole family as belonging to the three youngest children at the time of their mother's death.

The judgment of the court below in effect finds this to be true, holding that the plaintiffs and the defendant are the only heirs of Mary Bridges, to whom the land in controversy belonged at her death, and that the other children of Mary Bridges were not entitled to any part of same, but giving to the said C. T. Bridges a lien on said land for $300 for moneys paid out for the necessaries, doctors' bills, etc., for the benefit of his mother, and directing a sale of the property, first, to pay this $300, and then for a division of the overplus among the other two children.

From a careful examination of the record we are of the opinion that the alleged improvements put upon the land by defendant added little, if anything, to its saleable value, and were put there for the benefit of the defendant alone. We are further of the opinion that his plea of limitation is not supported by the evidence, as it all tends to show that he knew that the property in reality belonged to his sisters and himself jointly, as it was paid for with their money, and he repeatedly recognized this right by his words and acts.

There is no competent evidence to support the claim of defendant as to the moneys paid out for his mother's use and benefit. Said claims were never proven as required by law. His own testimony is wholly incompetent, and is practically the only evidence on that point; and in view of the fact that he has had the use of this property presumably, with the assent of the plaintiffs, since the death of his mother in 1876, and the evidence all shows that it is reasonably worth from $30 to $40 a year on rent, we are of the opinion that he has been fully re-imbursed for any expenditures made by him for the benefit of his mother during her lifetime, and that he should not now, at this late day, be permitted to gobble up this entire property by the assertion of these claims so many years after their alleged creation.

We think that the whole of said claims ought to have been disallowed; but in view of the fact that the plaintiffs acquiesced in his occupancy of the land, we do not think that he should be charged for the rents, except from the date of the institution of this suit, from which time he should be required to account for reasonable rent.

We hold that the land in contest belongs to the plaintiffs, M. A. Hixon and Charity Battoe, and the defendant, C. T. Bridges, jointly, and that same should be divided, if it is susceptible of division, into three equal parts, quality and quantity considered; and, if not, that said land should be adjudged to be sold, and the proceeds applied to the payment, first, of the costs of this suit, and then to be divided equally between the parties.

Wherefore this case is reversed and remanded for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

PFAFFINGER V. GILMAN.

(Filed February 10, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Joint verdict—Judgment against only one of several defendants—In an action against several defendants to recover damages for injuries inflicted upon plaintiff by a wild and vicious bull which it was alleged had been turned loose by defendants upon the streets of the city, a verdict having been returned "for the plaintiff," and assessing the damages, one of the defendants against whom alone judgment was rendered upon that verdict can not complain that judgment was not rendered against the other defendants also, as it was agreed in writing that she alone was the owner of the business for which the bull was purchased, and she was the one who, in law and justice, ought to pay, and would have to pay the judgment; and, besides, counsel for defendants had asked, after the testimony was heard, that the jury be instructed to find for the other defendants.

M. A., D. A. & J. G. Sachs for appellant.

A. A. Stoll and J. W. S. Clements for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Guffy.

The appellee, Gilman, instituted this action in the Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas division, against Margaretha Pfaffinger, Wm. Pfaffinger, John Schwartz, executor of Jacob Pfaffinger, doing business under the firm name of Pfaffinger & Co., and P. C. Kennett to recover damages for injuries inflicted upon him by a wild and vicious bull, which bull was, as alleged, turned loose by defendants upon the streets of Louisville, which bull was known by the defendants to be vicious, or they could, by ordinary diligence, have known the fact.

The defendant Kennett, by separate answer, denied all the averments of the petition, so far as he was concerned, and a motion was finally sustained to instruct the jury to find for him and judgment entered dismissing the action as to him, although no formal verdict was in fact returned as to him.

The other defendants, for joint and separate answer, denied that they were doing business as a firm under any name; also denied the allegations of the petition as to appellee's injuries, as well as the averment that the bull was under their control or that they knew or could, by ordinary diligence, have known the bull was wild or vicious, and pleaded contributory negligence on the part of appellee.

A trial resulted in a verdict and judgment against appellant for $750.

Appellant moved for a new trial upon the following grounds, viz: Excessive damages, given under the influence of passion or prejudice; verdict contrary to law and not supported by the evidence; error in giving and refusing instructions, and error in refusing a peremptory instruction to find for defendants.

Appellant also moved to correct the judgment rendered upon the verdict, all of which was overruled by the court, and from that judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

Before the case was submitted to the jury the defendant moved the court to instruct the jury to find for the defendants other than the appellant, which was overruled.

The verdict of the jury was simply, "We, of the jury, find for the plaintiff, and assess the damages at ($750) seven hundred and fifty," signed by eleven of the jury.

The judgment was rendered only against the appellant, who now contends that it was error not to render it against the other defendants; but, as it was agreed, in writing, that appellant alone was the sole owner of the business, for which it seems the bull was purchased, it is difficult to see how she was injured by the judgment being rendered against her alone. And it further appears that it was the contention of counsel before submission, and after the testimony was all heard, that the case should be dismissed as to the other defendants. If any of the defendants were liable for the damage claimed, it is clear that appellant was the one in law and justice that ought to pay, and would have to pay the judgment. The defendants did not introduce any testimony.

It is also contended by appellant that the parties driving the bull were independent contractors, hence appellant is, in no event, liable for the damages suffered by appellee.

It is pretty evident that Kennett had bought the five bulls, one of which inflicted the injury complained of, for appellant, and that it was his business to receive the same at the stock yard, and that she paid the parties for driving the stock from the stock yards to her place of business or to her stock pens. It is pretty clear that it was negligence to turn these bulls loose in the streets of Louisville. Perhaps one was roped and led, the others were loose. Taking the facts and circumstances as proven, and without any explanations on the part of appellant, the jury was authorized to believe that the parties attempting to drive the bulls were the servants or agents of appellant, and that they were guilty of negligence in turning such a bull loose in the street.

It is manifest from the evidence that appellee was not guilty of any contributory negligence. He was engaged in attending to business requiring his attention when the bull came up behind him and inflicted the injury.

We perceive no error in the instructions given, nor error in refusing those offered, prejudicial to the substantial rights of the appellant. The verdict is not excessive according to the proof.

Judgment affirmed with damages.

DUERRIGAN V. BEWE & CO.

(Filed February 11, 1897—Not to be reported.)

In a contest between appellant and other attaching creditors of a nonresident firm, appellants' claim being for wages, the evidence was sufficient to support the chancellor's finding that appellant was a partner and not an employe of the firm, the burden being upon him, in view of his relation to the firm, to explain every circumstance casting suspicion on his conduct and on his claim, and especially the delay in collecting his wages.

Boggs, Auxier & Harkins and Walter S. Harkins for appellant.

Appeal from Pike Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hazelrigg.

There were three suits filed in the Pike Circuit Court against Bewe & Co., who were alleged to be nonresidents of the State, and attachments were procured and levied on large quantities of timber and other property.

The first attachment was issued and levied in the suit of the appellant, Duerrigan, but, upon the trial of all the actions, after consolidation, the court gave preference to the subsequent attachments and levies of Bartley & Saunders and of H. Ratcliff & Co., and of this appellant complains.

In their answer to his petition these subsequent attaching creditors controvert the debt of appellant on the ground that he was, in fact, a partner in the firm of Bewe & Co. and not entitled to wages, for which he had sued, as an employe of the firm. They charge that the claim is not a just one, but was invented to cover up the property of the firm and to defeat its creditors.

There is some proof conducing to show this, and, while it is not altogether satisfactory, there are circumstances which strongly support the chancellor's finding.

The nonresidents, Bewe & Co., who seem to have lived at Baltimore, do not appear to have transacted in person the business of buying, gathering up and shipping the logs purchased in Kentucky, but left their business to Duerrigan, who held himself out as their "representative, agent or partner." For five years before engaging in the work in Pike county he had been the "shipping clerk, inspector and purchasing agent of Bewe & Co., at Baltimore," and he appears to have bought and paid for large quantities of timber, etc., in Pike county. It is fairly to be inferred from the proof that the debts created in that section were made by him and on his promises.

He testifies that he was working for $75 per month for a part of the time and $100 per month for the latter part of his service. When he learned that Bewe & Co. were about to quit the business, he brought his suit for $1,867 on an account beginning on March 1, 1883, and ending June 1, 1885, the total being $2,625, and credits the claim in a lump as "amount paid on account" $757, and has his attachments issued and levied on substantially all the property belonging to Bewe & Co. in Kentucky.

Just why, with the funds of his debtors constantly passing through his hands, he let his wages remain unpaid for so long a period we are not told. It seems to us, considering the relations existing between himself and the firm, and his attitude toward those with whom he was dealing, that the burden was on him to explain every circumstance casting suspicion on his conduct and on his claim, and especially the delay in collecting his wages. If he fully disclosed the extent of his agency, when buying, he would not be responsible; but even this he did not do, the proof being that he held himself out as the "representative" of the firm of Bewe & Co.; and, according to another witness, he was held out by the firm as its "agent or partner."

On the whole case, we see no good reason for disturbing the judgment of the chancellor, and it is, therefore, affirmed.

BRAMEL, &C. V. BRAMEL, &C.

(Filed March 12, 1897.)

1. Will contest—The testator having by his will disposed of his property in an apparently rational manner for the benefit of those with whom he had lived the greater part of his life, who had cared for him in his declining years and with whom his relations were necessarily closer and more intimate than with any one else, a verdict of a jury sustaining the will should not be disturbed unless manifestly against the evidence. It appearing that the will itself was a rational one, that under the circumstances there seems to have been no undue influence exerted over the testator, and that the fact of his testamentary capacity was supported by disinterested witnesses, the verdict can not be said to be against the evidence.

2. Same—Instructions—Prejudicial error—Although an instruction that "if the jury believe from all the evidence that the instrument of writing read in evidence was subscribed by John Bramel in the presence of two credible witnesses, who subscribed it with their names in his presence, and that said John Bramel, at that time, was of sound mind, they will find said instrument to be his will," is objectionable on the ground that it put to the jury the question of whether the paper was properly executed, which is a question for the court, it was not prejudicial to the rights of the appellants, for the jury found that it was so subscribed, which conclusion the court must have reached as a matter of law.

3. Same—The submission to the jury by the instruction the question of the credibility of the attesting witnesses, although erroneous, was not prejudicial to the appellants.

4. Same—The fact that one instruction told the jury to find for the propounders of the will if they believed from the evidence that the testator was of sound mind, while another told them to find against the propounders if they believed the testator was unduly influenced, was not misleading to the jury, since the instructions are to be considered as a whole, and the omissions in one may be supplied by reference to another.

5. Burden of Proof—The instruction that "if the jury believe from all the evidence that said instrument of writing is consistent in its provisions and rational on its face, the presumption is that John Bramel was of sound mind at the time of its execution, and the burden shifts to contestants to show that he was not of sound mind at that time," was not reversible error under the established rule in this State as to the shifting of the burden of proof.

6. An objection to an instruction as misleading because a statement of a mere abstract proposition upon the subject of testamentary capacity can not be sustained where the instruction proceeded to give a correct definition of the capacity required to render a man mentally competent to make a will according to the decisions of this court.

7. The instruction which stated that the capacity required to render a man competent to make a will was "to know his property and the natural objects of bounty and his duty to them," was not objectionable as stating by implication that the testator owed duties to the devisees named in the paper.

8. The words "settled purpose of his own," as used in the instruction, are not materially different in meaning from the approved language, "fixed purpose of his own."

9. Evidence—The objection urged to the refusal of the court to permit appellants to prove by appellee that on a former trial a devisee testified to a certain conversation between the appellee and the testator can not be sustained, since it is not an admission against the devisee.

E. L. Worthington, W. H. Wadsworth, J. N. Kehoe, A. D. Cole and C. D. Newell for appellants.

Cochran & Son and L. W. Robertson for appellees.

Appeal from Mason Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge DuRelle.

This is an appeal from a judgment from the Mason Circuit Court establishing a paper executed by John Bramel as his last will. He died in March, 1891, in the seventy-ninth year of his age. Although illiterate, he appears, from the evidence in the case, to have been a strong-minded, active and successful man of business, and at the time of his death he and his brother, Turner Bramel, had accumulated a considerable fortune. He had never been married, but for the last forty years of his life had lived with his brother, Turner, whose wife, Martha, attended to the housekeeping duties. The appellants contested the will upon grounds of want of testamentary capacity and undue influence. By his will he left his estate to the wife and four children of his brother Turner, with the exception of an insignificant legacy to a colored boy living on the place, and a legacy of $1,000 to a favorite grandniece. His surviving brothers, and the children of his deceased brother and sisters, were entirely omitted in the will. The testimony in the case is quite conflicting, and shows that he had been in failing health for some time prior to the making of the will, which was followed by his death about seven weeks later. He had grown feebler, and was disposed to make little physical exertion, and showed a tendency to doze at intervals, the symptoms being those which usually accompany old age.

The will was drawn by W. W. Ball and attested by Ball and Thomas Wells, who came to his place for the purpose, having been sent for, according to the testimony, by him. It appears by their testimony that he dictated the terms of the instrument to Ball; that after being written out it was read over to him; he expressed his satisfaction with it, and signed it by mark in the presence of the attesting witnesses.

The contest was not instituted in the county court, nor, indeed, until some twelve months after probate.

Under the circumstances of this case—this will disposing of his estate in an apparently rational manner for the benefit of those with whom he had lived the greater part of his life, who had cared for him in his declining years, and with whom his relations necessarily were closer and more intimate than with anyone else—we should be slow to disturb the verdict of the jury sustaining the will, unless it was manifestly against the evidence, or unless for errors of law to the prejudice of appellant's substantial rights. We cannot say that the verdict was manifestly against the weight of the evidence. On the contrary, the will itself was a rational one, such as a man in his circumstances might naturally be expected to make; and the circumstances proven in the case do not seem to us to show that any undue influence was exerted over the testator. So far as his testamentary capacity is concerned, the fact of his dictation of the will without, so far as appears from the evidence, any suggestion whatever by those present as to the disposition which he should make of his estate, is, of itself, evidence of a disposing mind, which would seem to require direct and specific evidence to the contrary to rebut it. Such evidence is not wholly lacking, but it is offset by much evidence, not only of parties directly interested in the result of the contest, but by disinterested witnesses. We are of the opinion that the verdict was not against the evidence, and we will, therefore, consider the errors of law claimed to have been committed upon the trial.

Numerous instructions were given and refused on both sides, and, to those given, the court, of its own motion, added two.

Instruction 1 is as follows: "If the jury believe from all the evidence that the instrument of writing read in evidence was subscribed by John Bramel in the presence of two credible witnesses, who subscribed it with their names in his presence, and that said John Bramel, at that time, was of sound mind, they will find said instrument to be his will."

To this instruction the objection is urged that it was calculated to confuse the jury by requiring them to decide issues which should have been decided by the court; that it put to them, first, the question whether John Bramel signed the paper, and the further question whether the two witnesses were present when he signed it, and signed it as witnesses in his presence. There being no dispute about these matters, it is argued that the court, and not the jury, ought to say whether the paper was properly executed. This contention is sound, upon the authority of Word v. Whipps, 16 KY. LAW REP., 403. But in this case, as in the case cited, the error was not prejudicial to the rights of appellants, for the jury, by their verdict, found that it was so subscribed, a conclusion to which the court must have come as matter of law. A further objection to this instruction is that it required the jury to pass upon the question of whether the attesting witnesses were credible witnesses or not, and that, by coupling the question of the credibility of these two witnesses with the testamentary capacity of the testator, an advantage was given to the propounders of the will by giving undue weight and prominence to their testimony.

It is true that in the case of Fuller v. Fuller, 83 Ky., 345, this court held that the word "credible" was used in the statute in the sense of competent, and that it was for the court and not for the jury to determine the question of the competency of the attesting witnesses. In that case the propounders of the will complained of the submission of the question to the jury as requiring the jury to decide in their favor a question which, in that case, should have been decided in their favor by the court as matter of law. We can conceive that the jury might in some cases have been misled to the prejudice of the propounders by such an instruction, as it required them to satisfy the jury that the witnesses were credible; but we do not think that this error was prejudicial to the appellants. In the Fuller case the court refused to reverse, although the error in that case was against the propounders.

It is further urged that instruction 7 was erroneous as being inconsistent with instruction 1. That instruction was as follows: "If the jury believe from the evidence that the paper in contest was obtained by undue influence exerted on John Bramel, either by any of the beneficiaries named in the paper, or by any other person, then they will find that the paper in question is not the last will of John Bramel," following with the definition of undue influence.

Appellants claim that these instructions are contradictory; that in one they were instructed to find for the propounders, if they believed Bramel to be of sound mind, and in the other to find against them, if they believed he was unduly influenced. This court has often held that instructions given to a jury are to be considered as a whole, and that omissions in one instruction can be supplied by reference to another; and, while it would have been perhaps better to have added to instruction No. 1 the words "Unless they believe as indicated in Instruction No. 7," we do not think they could have misled the jury, even if we assume that the record discloses sufficient evidence of undue influence to form a basis for an instruction upon that subject.

Instruction No. 2, also complained of, is as follows: "If the jury believe from all the evidence that said instrument of writing is consistent in its provisions and rational on its face, the presumption is that said John Bramel was of sound mind at the time of its execution, and the burden shifts to contestants to show that he was not of sound mind at that time."

It is earnestly contended that the burden of proof does not shift, and, while this court has, in various cases, objected to the use of such phrases as "burden of proof" and "preponderance of evidence" in instructions to juries, their use is not necessarily reversible error.

Judge Marshall, in the case of Hawkins v. Grimes, 13 Ben. Monroe, 257, decided that "If upon the whole evidence, pro and con, it be doubtful whether the party be sane or not, then the presumption in favor of sanity may operate to decide the question otherwise in equipoise."

In the case of Milton v. Hunter, 13 Bush, 163, Chief Justice Lindsay condemned an instruction which placed the burden of proof as to testamentary capacity upon the propounders, in an opinion in which he used almost the exact phrase used in the instruction complained of, saying: "When the propounders of a will have proved the due execution of a paper not irrational in its provisions, nor inconsistent in its structure, language or details with the sanity of the testator, the presumption of law makes out for them a prima facie case, and the burden of showing that the testator was not in fact of sound and disposing mind and memory at the time of the execution of the will is shifted upon the contestants."

Judge Lindsay there held that the instructions under consideration in effect took from the propounders the benefit of the presumption of sanity. So in the case of Flood v. Pragoff, 79 Ky., 612. Judge Hines, delivering the opinion of the court, said: "In fact it is not ordinarily necessary that the propounders should show, as they did by attesting witnesses, that the testator was of sound mind, provided the statutory requirements were complied with, and there is nothing in the paper when presented which is irrational and inconsistent. Then the burden shifts to the contestants."

And in the case of Fee v. Taylor, 83 Ky., 259, Judge Holt stated the law as follows: "When, however, the due execution of a paper, rational in its provisions and consistent in its details of language and structure, has been proven the propounder had made out a prima facie case, and the burden of showing that the testator was not of a sound and disposing mind when the writing was executed, shifts to the contestant. The third instruction given by the court conformed to this rule."

The exact question raised in the case at bar was made in the case cited, and decided contrary to the contention of appellants.

It is claimed, however, that in Johnson v. Stivers, 95 Ky., 128, in an opinion by Judge Hazelrigg, the doctrine we have stated was modified by saying: "The burden was on the propounders to show, by a preponderance of evidence, that the testatrix was of testamentary capacity, and on the contestants to show by a preponderance of testimony that she was unduly influenced or coerced, as defined in the instructions," referring to the case of Fee v. Taylor, above cited, and other cases.

The reference to Fee v. Taylor, in support of the opinion, would clearly indicate that it was not intended to modify the doctrine there laid down, and that the statement that the burden as to testamentary capacity was on the propounders referred to the establishment of a prima facie case.

And in Barlow v. Waters, 16 KY. LAW REP., 426, this court, in another opinion by Judge Hazelrigg, confirms our conclusion as to what was meant by the opinion in Johnson v. Stivers by saying: "No. 7 places the burden of proof, as to the execution of the paper in the manner defined in No. 1, on the propounders, and the burden of showing undue influence or unsoundness of mind on the contestants. This conforms to the rule laid down by this court in Fee v. Taylor, 83 Ky., 259, and Johnson v. Stivers, 95 Ky., 128.

While we think it better practice to instruct the jury that if they believe from all the evidence the testator was of sound and disposing mind, etc., they should find accordingly, with, perhaps, a statement of the presumption of sanity, yet the instruction given in this case is, by the established rule in the State, not reversible error.

Instruction No. 3, which begins by stating to the jury, almost in the language used by Judge Simpson in Howard v. Coke, 7 Ben. Monroe, 658, that "the soundness of mind referred to in the instructions is not necessarily such strength of mind as will enable a man to fairly contract with another at arms length, or of trafficing in property and managing it advantageously," is also objected to as misleading, because a statement of a mere abstract proposition. The instruction, however, proceeds with a correct definition of the capacity required to render a man mentally competent to make a will.

And in Wise v. Foote, 81 Ky., 10, a case frequently referred to in later opinions of this court upon this subject, almost the exact language of the instruction was used as a correct statement of the law. The latter part of this instruction is also complained of as by implication, stating to the jury that the testator owed duties to the devisees named in the paper. That part of the instruction is as follows: "But the capacity required to render a man mentally competent to make a will exists when the testator has will, mind and memory to sufficiently understand that he is selecting the person or persons whom he wishes to have his property, and to know his property and the natural objects of his bounty, and his duties to them and to the persons upon whom his property is bestowed by the testamentary paper which he signs, and to make such disposition in accordance with a then settled purpose of his own."

We do not think that this instruction was an instruction that he owed duties either to the natural objects of his bounty or to the persons upon whom he bestowed his property, but that it left the jury to decide the question of mental capacity to know whether or not he owed them duties, and must have been so understood by the jury. This part of the instruction is also in great part a quotation from Wise v. Foote, supra, to which this court referred with approval in Johnson v. Stivers, 95 Ky., 128, saying: "The other instructions conformed to the law as laid down in Wise, &c. v. Foote, 81 Ky., 15."

The remaining objection to this instruction is that it uses the words "in accordance with a then settled purpose of his own" as carrying with them the idea of less permanence and stability than the words "fixed purpose." The words "fixed purpose of his own" have been often approved by this court in this connection, but we do not think that the words used were or could have been understood by the jury to have a materially different meaning from the language which is more commonly made use of.

The objection is not well taken which is urged to the refusal of the court to permit appellants to prove by appellee, Martha Bramel that on a former trial William Coleman, a devisee, testified to a certain conversation between the appellees, Martha and John W. Bramel. We can see no ground for the admission of such testimony. It was not an admission against interest by Coleman, but hearsay as to an admission against interest by Martha and John Bramel, nor do we think the other refusals to admit testimony were material.

Wherefore, the judgment is affirmed.

CHESAPEAKE & OHIO RY. CO. V. SMITH.

(Filed March 19, 1897.)

1. Fire caused by sparks from railroad locomotive—Contributory negligence—Pleading—In this action to recover damages for the destruction of a barn and its contents, alleged to have been caused by sparks from a locomotive on appellant's railroad, the plea of contributory negligence was properly set up in these words, that the appellee, "on the occasion in question, was guilty of negligence on his part, and that said negligence contributed to the injury complained of by him, and that but for such negligence on his part the injury would not have happened," a specific allegation of the facts constituting such negligence not being necessary.

2. Principal and agent—Evidence—Res gestæ—A statement made by the claim-agent of the railway company to the appellee that he would pay the claim within sixty days was not admissible in evidence either as an admission of liability on the part of the company or as part of the res gestæ.

Wadsworth & Cochran for appellant.

Thomas R. Phister and L. W. Robertson for appellee.

Appeal from Mason Circuit Court.

Opinion of the Court by Judge Burnam.

This case was brought by appellee to recover damages for the destruction of his barn and contents by fire, alleged to have originated from sparks from a locomotive on the appellant's railroad, and resulted in a judgment in favor of appellee for the sum of $800. Appellant seeks a reversal for several alleged errors occurring on the trial.

First, appellant plead as a part of its defense in the action that the appellee, Smith, "on the occasion in question was guilty of negligence on his part, and that said negligence contributed to the injury complained of by him, and that but for such negligence on his part the injury would not have happened."

The plaintiff moved the court to require the defendant to set out the facts in full and specially on which he relied to support this plea of contributory negligence.

Against the contention of the appellant the court sustained this motion, and, upon his refusal to amend as indicated, this defense was striken from the pleadings.

This question as to whether defense can be made under a plea of general denial, as in this case, or whether the facts must be specially alleged, is not entirely free from difficulties. In fact, it has been ruled both ways in the United States. Generally it may be said that in those States "where it is incumbent on the defendant to plead contributory negligence specially, and where the defense can not be made under a general denial, the trend of authorities is that a general averment that the plaintiff was guilty of negligence which contributed to the injury, and that he could have avoided all damage by the exercise of proper care, is not good; the acts and the facts constituting such contributory negligence should be averred." (See Encyclopedia of Pleading and Practice, volume 5, page 12.)

In the case of the Tennessee Coal Co. v. Herndon (100 Ala., 451), the defendant pleaded contributory negligence in these words: "That the plaintiff's intestate was himself guilty of negligence which approximately contributed to his alleged injury." The court said: "A demurrer was sustained to this plea on the ground that the plea did not definitely state in what the contributory negligence consisted, but merely averred contributory negligence generally."

We have held that under our system of pleadings damage suits consist of but little more than averments of conclusions. Many pleas, in form like the one under consideration, have passed this court, but there had been no objection raised against the plea in the trial court, and it would be regarded by us as a plea, in short, by consent.

So in the case of the Phœnix Insurance Company v. Mogg (78 Ala., 301, the court held: "A plea by defendant, which consisted wholly of a conclusion of law, is not sufficient," holding that there should be a succinct statement of the facts relied on as a cause of action.

In the case of Harrison v. the Missouri Railway Company (74 Missouri, 364), after speaking of the duty of defendant to state the specific facts of the negligence complained of, says: "If necessary to state the particular facts constituting negligence before a railroad company can be made liable for the consequences of negligence, it follows necessarily that, when such company seeks exemption from liability to the party complaining on the ground that the injury complained of was occasioned by the negligence of the other party, it should also set up the facts constituting such negligence."

So it has been held in a number of other cases, but the general practice in this State seems to have been to allow the plea of contributory negligence in the general form in which it is relied on here, and seems to rest largely upon the authority of Mr. Bliss in his work on Code Pleading. In section 211 of that work, in pointing out the distinction in pleading fraud and negligence, he says: "To charge fraud it is not enough to say that the party fraudulently procured, or fraudulently did this or that, or committed a fraud; they are but conclusions of law. The facts constituting the fraud must be stated. On the other hand, a general allegation of negligence is allowed. Negligence is the ultimate fact to be pleaded, and is not a legal conclusion, as the defendant did run and manage one of their cars in such a careless, reckless and negligent manner that death was caused. The law draws the conclusion in both cases, yet we have seen that negligence possesses more the element of fact than fraud. In fraud the facts are misrepresentation and deceit; the term 'fraud' is a legal epithet applied to such facts. Fraud is not an act; not a thing in itself any more than murder. We say that one is guilty of fraud because he has done so and so; it is the legal conclusion of these facts. But, on the other hand, negligence is not a term given by law to certain conduct, but forms part of the act from which the injury has arisen. Specific acts constituting negligence can seldom be directly shown, but is presumed from injuries which ordinarily result only from negligence. For instance, the driver upsets a coach and breaks a passenger's arm. Careful driving will hardly have such a result; the passenger knows there has been negligence, but he will not be likely to know in what it consisted. So, where a locomotive sets fire to fields and buildings along the track, the sufferer can not state in what the negligence consists—whether there is a defect in the furnace or carelessness in the management—some negligence is presumed, and it must of necessity be alleged generally. And the same rules apply to an answer which sets up contributory negligence."

This court took this view in the case of the L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Wolf (80 Ky., 82). The court, in deciding that case, used this language: "It is contended by counsel that the reply fails to deny the substantive facts constituting contributory negligence, and only traverses the averment of negligence, which is by denying a legal conclusion. The error in this position lies in the assumption that the allegation of negligence is a mere legal conclusion, and that the supposed substantive facts constitute contributory negligence, neither of which is true. The absence of care in the performance of an act is not merely the result of such absence, but the absence itself, and it is not, therefore, a mere conclusion of law, and may be pleaded generally" in an answer, the facts having been specifically set out in the petition. And in many other cases which have been decided in this court, the plea of contributory negligence was set out substantially as in the amended answer of defendant, and have been held good. There are many ways in cases such as this, in which landholders may be guilty of such contributory negligence as may defeat recovery for losses sustained. (See Sherman and Redfield on Negligence, sections 679 to 682, and Wood on Railways, Minor's edition, 1575 to 1600.

We are, therefore, of the opinion that the court erred in striking this plea from the amended answer. Another ground of error complained of was the admission by court of a statement made by appellee in his testimony before the jury that Patton, the claim agent of appellant, had said that he would settle the claim and would pay it in sixty days; and also in permitting his son-in-law to testify that Patton had said (at the time he came to ascertain the causes of the injury complained of that, in his conversation with appellee), "you will likely hear from it in thirty or sixty days; he said that we would be paid for it, and that we would hear from it in sixty days." This testimony was excepted to at the time, and the court allowed it to go to the jury over the appellant's objection.

This is not an action upon a contract or agreement entered into by the company through its claim agent, Patton. It is a suit for injuries resulting from negligently allowing sparks to escape from the locomotive. And whilst it is very plausibly contended by appellee that this evidence was not introduced to show admission of liability on the part of the railroad; that no instruction was predicated upon it, and that the jury were alone directed to find upon the evidence that the spark-arrester was out of order, and that the testimony was competent because it was part of a conversation which had been called out by plaintiff, being a part of the res gestæ of the conversation, it is well settled that "the admissions or declarations of an agent are received in evidence against a principal but as parts of the res gestæ; hence, only such as accompany the acts which are relied on for recovery can be proven. Thus, it is not true that where an agency is established, the declarations of agents are admitted merely because they are his declarations. They are only evidence when they form a part of the contract entered into by the agent on behalf of a principal, and in that case they become admissible. The cases on the subject draw this distinction between the declarations of the agent accompanying the making of an agreement, and, therefore, forming part of an agreement, and those made either at a subsequent or antecedent period. The basis of such admissions is the legal identity of principal and an agent, and the fact that his declarations are a part of the res gestæ." (See McDermott v. Hannibal and St. Joe R. R. Co., 73 Missouri, 516; 39 American Reports, 526; Moore v. Meecham, 10 N. Y., 207.)

"This is now the well-established doctrine, and its application to other acts of an agent, besides that of making contracts, is equally well settled that the declarations of an agent are received, not as admissions, but as part of the res gestæ."

In the case of the Virginia & Tennessee R. R. Co. v. Sayers (26 Grattan, 328), the court said: "It is true that where the acts of the agent will bind the principal, his declarations, representations and admissions respecting the subject-matter will also bind him if made at the same time, and constitute a part of the res gestæ. They are of the nature of original evidence, and not hearsay—representations and statement in such cases being the ultimate facts to be proven, and not mere admissions of some other fact."

In this case the agent knew nothing whatever of the burning. He was simply seeking information on that point, and the extent of appellee's injuries, therefore, declarations on his part relating to the facts of negligence sued on can not be competent, as they were certainly not a part of the res gestæ of the negligence which occasioned the loss, and it would be very difficult for juries to draw the nice distinctions suggested by the counsel as to the purposes for which such evidence was admitted. They would be very likely to regard such declarations as an admission of liability for negligence on the part of appellant, and a promise to pay, and consequently highly prejudicial to the railroad company.

We think it was error to have admitted this testimony, and for the reasons named this case is reversed and remanded for proceedings consistent herewith.

CLARKE'S ADM'R V. LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE R. R. CO.

(Filed March 9, 1897.)

1. Injury from putting arm outside car window—Willful neglect—Election—In an action by a personal representative under section 6 of Kentucky Statutes to recover damages for the death of his intestate, the petition alleging in one paragraph that the death was caused by the willful neglect of the defendant, and in another paragraph that it was caused by the gross negligence of defendant, but one cause of action was stated, and the way to correct the petition was not by a motion to compel plaintiff to elect which cause of action he would prosecute.

2. Same—Punitive damages—Under section 241 of the Constitution, which provides that "whenever the death of a person shall result from an injury inflicted by negligence or wrongful act, then in every such case damages may be recovered for such death from the corporations or persons causing same, the legislature has the power to fix the degree of negligence for which punitive damages may be awarded, and to provide, as it has done, by section 6, Kentucky Statutes, that such damages may be awarded where the "negligence is gross."

3. Contributory negligence—The word "willful," as descriptive of a degree of negligence, is now eliminated from the statute, the provision of section 6, Kentucky Statutes, that punitive damages may be awarded where the "act is willful" having no reference to acts of negligence; and, therefore, the rule that contributory negligence could not be pleaded as a defense to an action for willful neglect, which applied under section 3, chapter 57, General Statutes, does not apply to an action under section 6, Kentucky Statutes, although willful neglect be alleged.

4. Where a passenger on a railroad train in passing through a tunnel voluntarily though inadvertently placed a part of his arm outside the car window in placing his eye-glasses in his pocket, and while his arm thus protruded it came in contact with an upright timber in the tunnel causing an injury which resulted in his death, the passenger was guilty of such contributory negligence as to preclude a recovery from the railroad company.

5. Where there is no controversy as to the facts or they are admitted, and but one inference can be drawn from them, then it is the duty of the court to declare their effect in law. And as the facts alleged in the petition in this case showed that plaintiff's intestate was guilty of such contributory negligence as to preclude a recovery, it was proper to sustain a demurrer to the petition.

Hanson Kennedy and G. W. Cassidy for appellant.

G. C. Lockhart, W. H. Wadsworth and W. G. Dearing for appellee.

Appeal from Fleming Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

Decedent, S. D. Clarke, in July, 1894, was a passenger on defendant's passenger train, and whilst going from Carlisle, Ky., to Helena Station, Ky., in passing through a tunnel his arm protruded through a window in the coach, struck an upright timber in the tunnel, which had been placed there by the defendant, and the collision of the arm with the timber inflicted an injury from which he died in a few days thereafter.

I is averred that the accident occurred in the manner as follows: That the intestate was sitting on the left side of the car by a window that was hoisted; that he took hold of the left lappel of his coat with his left hand for the purpose of raising same so as to enable him to put his eyeglasses in his vest pocket on the left side with his right hand; that as he raised the left lappel of his coat with his left hand for the purpose stated he, without intending to do so, protruded the elbow of his left arm through the open window, not more than three inches beyond the place where the sash would be when the window is shut, and not more than one and one-half inches beyond the outer surface of the side of the car; that when his elbow was thus protruded the upright timbers in the tunnel were in such close proximity to the side of the car that they struck his arm near the elbow. It is also averred that the width of the tunnel had been reduced in repairing it; that at the time the injury occurred and for months previous thereto the tunnel was in a dangerous condition, and the upright timbers in the side of the tunnel were in such close proximity to the iron rails therein that when cars passed through the natural and usual oscillations of the cars were sufficient to cause them to strike against the timbers; that the sides of the passenger cars did often strike against the timbers, and that the condition of the tunnel as described existed when the accident occurred.

The petition as originally filed was in two paragraphs. In the first it was charged that the accident was the result of willful neglect; in the second it was charged that it resulted from gross negligence. The court compelled the plaintiff to elect which cause of action she would prosecute. She elected to prosecute the cause stated in the first paragraph. Although the plaintiff had two paragraphs in the petition there was in fact but one cause of action (if any existed) stated. The way to correct the petition was not by a motion to compel plaintiff to elect which cause of action she would prosecute. The plaintiff elected to prosecute the action under the first paragraph of the petition, charging the injury resulted from willful neglect. In our opinion, as hereinafter stated, there is not, under the present statute (the one in force when the accident occurred), a cause of action for "willful neglect."

We will consider the case as if the petition contained appropriate averments under the statute as to negligence. Section 241 of the Constitution is as follows: "Whenever the death of a person shall result from an injury inflicted by negligence or wrongful act then in every such case damages may be recovered for such death from the corporations or persons causing same."

As the constitutional provision relating to the liability for producing death by wrongful act or negligence, and as the general assembly has a law (section 6, Kentucky Statutes) under the constitutional provision (section 241), we have very much desired to arrive at the intention of those who made the organic and statutory laws, the construction of which is involved in this case.

This court held (Henderson's adm'r v. K. C. R. R. Co., 86 Ky., 389; Jordan's adm'r v. C., N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co., 89 Ky., 40), no one could maintain an action (under section 3, chapter 57, General Statutes), when death was caused by "willful neglect" unless the deceased left a widow or child. The general assembly had failed to amend the statute so as to allow a recovery in cases where the decedent left neither widow or child.

These were the conditions which suggested to the Constitutional Convention the incorporation of section 241 of the present Constitution.

When the Constitution was adopted, under the statute, punitive damages could be awarded if the life was destroyed by willful neglect.

Section 6, Kentucky Statutes, reads as follows: "Whenever the death of a person shall result from an injury inflicted by negligence or wrongful act then in every such case damages may be recovered for such death from the person or persons, company or companies, corporation or corporations, their agents or servants causing the same, and when the act is willful or the negligence is gross punitive damages may be recovered, and the action to recover such damages shall be prosecuted by the personal representative of the deceased."

There is omitted from this section the words "willful neglect," which were in the former statute. Instead of the present statute authorizing the recovery of punitive damages when the life is destroyed by willful neglect it authorizes a recovery of punitive damages when the "act is willful" or the "negligence is gross."

Punitive damages may be recovered under the present statute when the "negligence is gross."

This court had held that the words "willful" and "gross" were not synonymous, and from the definition given by the court of these words "willful," as applied to negligence, meant a higher degree of negligence than "gross." The word "willful," as descriptive of a degree of negligence, is eliminated from our statute. "Willful" and "gross" are not used in the present statute as synonymous words. The word "willful" is descriptive of the "act," whilst the word "gross" is descriptive of a degree of negligence.

Under "Lord Campbell's Act" an action was maintainable against a person who, by his "wrongful act, neglect or default," may have caused the death of another person. Most, if not all, the American States enacted statutes substantially similar to "Lord Campbell's Act."

These various statutes differ widely in language in which they are expressed, both from the English act and from each other. The words "wrongful act" had no place in our statute relating to actions for the destruction of life. It first appeared in section 241 of the Constitution. It is a more comprehensive term than the word "negligence." Necessarily in every case of negligence there must be a "wrongful act," either of omission or of commission. There may be an actionable "wrongful act" which is not the result of negligence, neither is there an element of negligence in it. It may be willfully or intentionally done. The words "wrongful act" denote or embrace all acts other than those constituting mere negligence, which are wrong, and inflict an injury resulting in death.

Our conclusion is supported by the language of the statute, which allows a recovery of punitive damages if the "act is willful" or the "negligence is gross." If the general assembly was enacting a statute on negligence alone why did it not say punitive damages could be recovered when the negligence is gross or willful. If the Constitution and statute did not provide for a recovery for an injury by negligence, but used the words "wrongful act," then we would adjudge that wrongful acts embraced or included negligent acts.

Section 241 of the Constitution did not repeal section 3, chapter 57, General Statutes. (Wright, &c. v. Wood, 96 Ky., 56.)

Section 6 of the present statute did repeal section 3, chapter 57, General Statutes.

If section 241 of the Constitution did not repeal section 3, chapter 57, General Statutes, as adjudged in Wright v. Wood, thus recognizing the validity of an act of the general assembly to fixing a "degree" of negligence for which punitive damages may be recovered, it follows that the general assembly can change or designate the "degree" for which it may authorize a recovery of punitive damages. Gross is a degree of negligence at the common law. We do not think it any longer an open question as to the authority of the general assembly to pass the statute in question.

This court held in Passamaneck's adm'r v. Louisville Ry. Co., 17 KY. LAW REP., 763, that section 241 is not intended to deprive a defendant of the right to rely on contributory negligence as a defense. Had Clark survived the injury which produced his death, in an action by him for damages for the injury, in which he alleged the injury was the result of gross negligence, contributory negligence would have been available as a defense. We can perceive no reason why it should not be equally as available in an action by his personal representative. Plaintiff seeks to avoid the defense of contributory negligence by alleging that the death resulted from willful neglect. As we said, the present statute does not provide that punitive damages may he recovered by showing willful neglect. It follows that the former adjudications of this court, that contributory negligence was not a defense when willful neglect was shown, are not applicable to actions for negligence or gross negligence under the present statute.

We will further but briefly consider the case in the light of the rules of law stated and such others as are applicable to it.

In Morel v. Miss. Valley Life Ins. Co., 4 Bush, 537, it was alleged that the plaintiff "inadvertently" put his arm a short distance out of the window of the car, when his hand came in contact with a post while the train was running with its usual velocity, without the slightest necessity for doing so, and the court said it was needlessly and negligently done, and he was not entitled to recover.

In the Sickings case, 5 Bush, 7, the arm was placed out of the window unthoughtedly and unnecessarily, and the court held that when one places his arm out of a car window voluntarily and without any qualifying circumstances impelling him to, it must be regarded as negligence in se, and when that is the state of the evidence it is the duty of the court to declare the negligence in law.

In the Favre case, 91 Ky., 544, it was alleged that the plaintiff allowed his hand to protrude eight or ten inches out of the window; that the train was running at a dangerous and unusual rate of speed; that there were dangerous obstructions in immediate proximity to the track unknown to him, whereby his arm was broken.

The court said the "rule of law that a party is precluded from recovering for an injury, to which he so far contributed as that but for his own negligence and want of ordinary care it would not have happened, can, upon neither principle nor public policy, be relaxed or qualified in this character of case, even if the conduct of the other party could be logically considered in any case."

The cases are in accord with the current of authority. In fact no cases have been cited in which a contrary view is expressed, nor do any of them militate against them except in a case or two in jurisdictions where the doctrine of comparative negligence prevails. This doctrine is generally denied in the courts of this country. Whilst the timber was in close proximity to the car, and a slight protrusion of the arm caused the injury, and whilst the facts of this case differ somewhat from the Morel, Sickings and Favre cases, yet we are unable to distinguish it from them so as to hold the doctrine of those cases will not apply to this one. We can not furnish any rule by which to measure the distance a passenger may protrude his arm before it can be said he is guilty of negligence. It is the fact that he does so, without any qualifying circumstances impelling him, not the distance so protruded, that constitutes the negligence.

Clarke inadvertantly, unthoughtedly and unnecessarily, if not purposely, allowed his arm to protrude out of the window and this was negligence in se; although he did so in placing his eyeglasses in his pocket, nevertheless it was his own act.

The necessity for adjudging what are the "qualifying circumstances impelling him to it" (to which the courts refer), which render the act of putting an arm outside of the window non-negligent, does not arise in this case. It is not alleged that the arm protruded in consequence of the oscillations or swerving of the cars, or from any act of those in charge of the train, but it is alleged that the deceased put his arm outside of the window of the car.

The facts alleged in the petition, and which are admitted as true on demurrer, show that but for the decedent's own negligence and want of ordinary care the accident would not have happened. When there is no controversy as to the facts or they are admitted, and but one inference can be drawn from them, then it is the duty of the court to declare their effect in law.

Under the doctrine of the Favre case, it was proper to sustain a demurrer to the petition.

The judgment is affirmed.

RUSSELL & CO. V. COX, &C.

(Filed February 9, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Principal and agent—Parties to actions—Where an agent, in selling goods subject to the approval of his principals, agreed with the buyer to take from him a horse at a certain price, to be credited on the last of three notes executed for the purchase price of the goods, that agreement is not binding on the principals, no reference being made to it in an order for the goods, signed by the buyer, to be forwarded to them, and the agent is not a necessary or proper party to an action upon the note upon which the price of the horse was to be credited.

Vaughan & Howes for appellants.

John P. Wells for appellees.

Appeal from Johnson Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

James Lyon was authorized by the appellants, Russell & Co., who were manufacturers of machinery to sell certain of their products subject to its approval within certain territorial limits. Under a special arrangement with it Lyon was authorized to sell one second-hand six-horse power engine and boiler and certain attachments. He solicited the appellees to become purchasers of the property described, and they informed him that they would not take the property unless he would take a horse at $125. They finally agreed on a sale at $350, for which appellees were to give their notes for the respective sums of $100, payable June 1, 1892; one for $100, payable December 12, 1892, and one for $150, payable June 1, 1893, all of which were to bear interest. Lyon agreed to credit the note for $150 with the price of the horse, he representing to the purchasers that he had commissions for making the sale to come out of the last note, therefore, he would take the horse and credit them therewith on the $150 note. The purchasers understood that Lyon could not make the sale except on the approval of Russell & Co. Thereupon they signed an order, to be forwarded to Russell & Co., for the property, in which there appears language as follows, to wit: "We, the undersigned, agree to receive the above, subject to the conditions named below, to pay the freight and charges thereon from factory, and further agree to pay to your order, on arrival of the goods at the above-named place, the sum of three hundred and fifty dollars, as follows: Cash, $——; one note, due December 12, 1892, $100; one note, due June 1, 1892, $100; one note, due June 1, 1893, $150; notes to be dated as herein specified; to bear interest from date at 6 per cent., to be given on your blanks, payable at Catlettsburg National Bank of Catlettsburg, Ky."

When the order was forwarded to Russell & Co. no notice was given by Lyon or appellees that Lyon had agreed to take a horse and credit it on the note. Instead of the proposed purchasers informing Russell & Co. that they had an agreement to pay $125 in a horse they proposed to pay the entire amount to them in cash as evidenced by the notes. They did this, notwithstanding they knew that Lyon had no authority to make a contract with reference to the property without the approval of Russell & Co.

It was said in Craycraft, &c. v. Selvage, &c., 10 Bush, 709, "the rule is that one dealing with an agent, whose powers he knows are limited, deals at his peril, whether the limitation be as to the extent of the agent's powers or the mode of their execution."

The facts of this case remove it from the class where the principal is bound for the exercise of the apparent authority of the agent. The sale of the horse to Lyon does not entitle appellees to a credit on the note for his value. They must look to him for the agreed value of the horse, as Russell & Co. are not bound therefor. Lyon was not a proper party to the action. If the delivery of the horse to Lyon was a payment on the note then it is unnecessary for him to be made a party to the action, as he was simply an agent in the transaction. If he is bound individually to appellees for the agreed value of the horse, as we think he is, then he should not be made a party to the action. If Russell & Co. owe him then he is not entitled to litigate the matter in this action, which is to determine the controversy between Russell & Co. and appellees.

The judgment is reversed, with directions that further proceedings conform to this opinion.

DULANEY, &C. V. LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE R. R. CO.

NORTON V. SAME.

ERDMAN V. SAME.

(Filed February 9, 1897.)

1. Construction of railroads in streets of city—Injunction—Prior to the enactment of the present statute (section 768, Kentucky Statutes), which does not apply to these cases, the construction of a railroad through the streets of a city, although without legislative or municipal authority, could not be enjoined by abutting lot owners.

2. Same—An act of the legislature requiring a railroad company to make a certain connection which necessitated the use of the streets of the city was sufficient to authorize the use of the streets for that purpose.

3. Same—Under the charter of the Louisville Railway Transfer Company, which authorized that company to acquire the right of way, construct and operate any branch roads connecting with other railroads terminating at Louisville or connecting therewith by bridge or ferry "for the accommodation of the commercial and manufacturing business of the city of Louisville, said city consenting thereto," the company had the right, with the consent of the city, to use the streets of the city to make such connections as the business interests of the city demanded, and it seems that another corporation which owns all the stock of that company may exercise that right.

4. Nunc pro tunc order—Appeals—Where an opinion of the chancellor made a part of the record by order of court was regarded by all the parties as final and as an end of the litigation, a nunc pro tunc order entered ten years thereafter dismissing the petition in accordance with the opinion was proper, and it was then too late to prosecute an appeal.

Pirtle & Trabue, Simrall, Bodley & Doolin, Humphrey & Davie and John W. Barr, jr., for appellants.

Helm & Bruce and H. W. Bruce for appellees.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hazelrigg.

In 1882 the general council of the city of Louisville adopted an ordinance permitting the appellee, the Chesapeake, Ohio and South Western Railroad Company to construct and operate a railroad, with single or double track, along and over "A" street, through the city limits, and provided that all other railroads so desiring might use such tracks upon making proper arrangements therefor with that company. Thereupon the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. under a contract with the C., O & S. W. Co. was about to construct such tracks when the two companies were sued and sought to be enjoined by Dulaney, Downs & Marks, joint owners of lots abutting on "A" street, and who set up that the council had no power to adopt the ordinance; that the construction of the tracks and operation of the road would greatly impair the value of their property and would interfere with the reasonable use of the street. The case was at once prepared, and on final hearing in March, 1883, the chancellor handed down an elaborate opinion, signed officially and made part of the record by an order in which the relief asked was denied. Legislative authority for the ordinance was held to exist, and, moreover, if no such authority in fact existed, it was held that the construction and operation of the road would be a public nuisance, to be abated by the public authorities unless private rights were invaded, which state of case did not exist in the opinion of the chancellor. This ended the litigation, as the plaintiffs determined to prosecute no appeal. According to Dulaney's statement they abandoned the fight. The track was, thereafter, laid on the street, and was there and in use in 1887, when appellants, Norton & Erdman, bought lots abutting thereon, Erdman buying wholly from Dulaney, and Norton buying in large part from him.

In 1893 it was discovered that no formal entry of an order dismissing the petition of Dulaney, Downs & Marks had been made in accordance with the opinion of the chancellor in 1883. After notice to the attorneys of the plaintiffs in that suit, counsel for the railroad companies procured a nunc pro tunc order carrying into effect the opinion of 1883. From that order an appeal is now being prosecuted with Dulaney's consent for the benefit of his vendees, Norton & Erdman. This is the appeal first named above. The other appeals are from judgments against Erdman & Norton, who brought suits against the two railroad companies in 1893, seeking to enjoin them from the further use and occupancy of street "A," and from laying a double track thereon, which it was alleged was about to be done. These actions met the same fate, though at the hands of a different chancellor, as the old Dulaney suit. Hence the appeals of Norton & Erdman.

Passing by for the present the contention of the appellees that no appeal lies from the judgment in the Dulaney case, that the vendees of the plaintiffs in the old suit are bound by the old judgment, and that in any event the laches and delay of the appellants must deprive them of the right by injunction to thus seriously affect the rights of the appellees acquired under the old judgment after the expenditure of large sums in constructing not only the tracks but the union depot at a cost of many thousand dollars, and which they allege and prove was built chiefly, if not solely, because of their supposed right to connect their southern with their eastern lines by the short route afforded by the street in dispute, we come at once to the controlling question in the cases, and that is what are the rights of the abutting owners in and to this public street? It is to be marked in the first place that the property involved is wholly unimproved and vacant. It is substantially out in the commons on the southern limits of the city, and, therefore, we are not called on to consider any alleged injury arising from the jarring of walls by passing trains, or damage from smoke or cinders. These questions are for the future and may never arise. At present they are purely speculative. Nevertheless, the street may not be so appropriated as to unreasonably obstruct or seriously impair the owner's usual mode of ingress or egress to and from the lots when they may be improved. It is upon the expected enjoyment of the right by the owner to freely use the street that the value of the abutting lots largely depends.

The proof discloses and the maps so show that the street is to be sixty feet in width. What width the sidewalk may be when made is unknown, but from the proof and in the nature of things we should think eight feet would be ample. This would leave some thirteen or fourteen feet on either side of the double track for the usual travel, and would seem to be sufficient.

When the conclusion is reached that no private right, such as we have indicated, is invaded, it is the contention of the appellees that the plaintiff's case is at an end, and that for any invasion of the rights of the public, or any encroachment on the public streets by any unauthorized entry on the possession of the public, the right to interfere and abate the nuisance is in the public authorities. And this contention we shall briefly examine.

It is well settled in many of the States, though in some of them by statutory enactment, that the construction of a railroad, to be operated by steam on a public street, is a new servitude or burden on the use to which the street was originally dedicated; that, therefore, the abutting owner may resist such construction and occupancy until he shall receive adequate compensation for this new use. An exhaustive discussion of this question, with full compilation of the authorities, is found in the recent work of Elliott on Railroads, section 1085, et seq.

In Kentucky, however, the rule was settled otherwise, as far back as the Applegate case, decided in 1854 (8 Dana, 301.) It was there said: "But even though some persons owning property on the railroad street may be subjected to some inconvenience and even loss by the construction and use of the road, yet if the use made of the road be consistent with the purpose for which the street was established, and also consistent with the just rights of all, such persons have no right either to damages or to an injunction," and the use of the street for such a purpose was recognized as entirely consistent with the purposes for which a street may be properly used. This doctrine was fully recognized and followed in Wolfe v. Cov. & Lex. R. R. Co., 15 B. M., 409; Lou. & Frank. R. R. Co. v. Brown, 17 B. M., 763, and Newport & Cincinnati Bridge Co. v. Foote, &c., 9 Bush, 264.)

In the case last cited it was said: "There is no rule of law which gives to the owners of property adjacent to an improvement consequential damages by reason of such improvement when constructed with skill and care, and in such manner as not to interfere with any private right, such as the right to light, air or passway, or by destroying the use or enjoyment of the buildings erected on adjacent land by leaving such a small intervening space between the building and the improvement as to prevent ingress and egress."

In Cosby, &c. v. Owensboro & Russellville R. R. Co., 10 Bush, 291, it was held to be a result of these well settled principles that the construction and operation of a railroad through the streets of a city or town was not per se an encroachment upon the property rights of abutting lot owners. "For if it was," said the court, "it is plain that neither the municipal authorities nor the legislature nor both could confer upon a railroad corporation any such right. It would be the taking of private property for public use without compensation, and, therefore, the grant would be violative of the Constitution." And it was further said that "private individuals seeking relief against a public nuisance must show that they suffer an injury distinct from that suffered by the general public, and that said injury is one that the public in the promotion of the general interest has not the right to inflict upon them without compensation."

In Fulton, &c. v. Short Route, &c., 85 Ky., 640, the cases were all reviewed, and it was announced as the settled law of the State that an abutting lot owner could not complain of the existence of the railroad on the public street fronting his property, but his complaint was confined to the manner of its construction and operation. See also the case of Hyland v. Short Route Transfer Co., 10 KY. LAW REP., 900, where this doctrine was said to be too well settled in this State to require the citation of authority. We have cited them, however, though hurriedly, because it is insisted by the appellants that the Cosby case is the only one which considered the question of the lot owner's rights, without reference to whether or not there was legislative warrant for the construction of the railroad; and this may be true, but it follows, from the doctrine announced in all the cases, that an encroachment on the street without warrant is an entry on the possession of the public, and is a public nuisance, to be abated by the public authorities. Confessedly if such an entry was an invasion of a private right, however slight the interference, the legislature could not authorize it.

The cases supposed to be in conflict with the Cosby case are those in which the street was sought to be wholly appropriated, and where confessedly private rights were about to be invaded, or where the original use of the highway had been abandoned by the public and the fee reverted to the owner. (Cornwall v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 87 Ky., 77; Ruttle v. City of Covington, 10 KY. LAW REP., 766; Kreiger v. K. & I. B. Co., 93 Ky., 213; L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Hess, 92 Ky., 410; Green v. Asher, 10 KY. LAW REP., 1006; Corey v. Lancaster, 81 Ky., 174.)

Certainly no case in this State has been held to entitle an abutting owner on vacant and unimproved lots to recover for not merely consequential damages, but those which are wholly speculative and uncertain. However, we are inclined to the opinion that there was legislative as well as municipal warrant for the occupancy of the street in controversy by the railroads.

By the legislative act of 1873 (volume 1, acts 1873, pages 248–253) the Elizabethtown & Paducah Road, now the appellee, the C., O. & S. W., on entering the city of Louisville from the southwest was required to receive freight at East Louisville, and also at the depot at Second and Water streets, to be transported from either of those depots by way of the Louisville Railway Transfer Co. to the Elizabethtown & Paducah company's line. A railway connection was thus required through the city, and it is conceded that the line along A street is the most direct and natural line of connection between the points indicated.

It is true that the connection has not been extended beyond the L. & N. tracks to the C., O. & S. W.'s line, but the authority to make the connection was clearly intended to be conferred; indeed it was required, and it has been so far made under the supervision and control of the C., O. & S. W. Moreover, the charter of the Louisville Railway Transfer Co. (the stock in which is alleged to be owned by the L. & N. R. R. Co.) authorized that company to acquire the right of way, construct and operate any branch roads connecting with other railroads terminating at Louisville, or connecting therewith by bridge or ferry, "for the accommodation of the commercial and manufacturing business of the city of Louisville, said city consenting thereto," and might condemn rights of way for such purpose, etc. We think it altogether consistent with the purpose in view in chartering this connecting road, for such was the sole object of its creation, to so construe the language of its charter as to give the right to make such connections as the business interests of the city demanded, using no line of connection, however, except with the consent of the city.

If the present statutes (section 768, Kentucky Statutes) change the rule as to damages to abutting owners, as it seems to do, these cases are not affected thereby.

Upon the principles announced the judgments below dismissing the petitions are to be approved, but it is proper to say that in the Dulaney appeal it seems clear to us that as all the parties to the old suit regarded the opinion of the chancellor as final and as the end of the litigation, the nunc pro tunc order was properly entered, and it was no longer possible, in 1893, to prosecute an appeal from the judgment of 1883.

The Dulaney appeal is, therefore, dismissed. In the other cases the judgments are affirmed.

SHIELDS, &C. V. YELLMAN, &C.

(Filed February 11, 1897.)

1. Venue of action—Liens—Subsection 3 of section 62 of the Civil Code, providing that actions for the sale of real property under a mortgage must be brought in the county in which the subject of the action is situated, "except for debts of a decedent," does not require that an action to enforce a mortgage lien upon the land of a decedent shall be brought in a county other than that in which the land is situated, unless there is a suit to settle the estate, which must be brought in the county in which the personal representative was qualified.

2. Husband and wife—Curtesy—Where husband and wife, to secure the husband's debt, execute a mortgage upon the wife's land, in which the husband had curtesy, in a suit to enforce the mortgage lien after the wife's death it was error to the prejudice of an infant child to allow the husband the value of his curtesy out of the proceeds, as his interest should be subjected to the payment of his debt and the surplus left for the child.

Geo. R. Pryor for guardian ad litem.

Ben P. Campbell for appellants.

W. S. Pryor for appellees.

Appeal from Jessamine Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hazelrigg.

Appellees, Yellman and wife, executed a mortgage to Shields on certain lands of the wife in Jessamine county to secure a debt of the husband.

The wife died intestate in Fayette county, leaving one child. She had no personal estate and there was no administration. This suit was then brought by the mortgagees in the Jessamine Circuit Court for a sale of the land to satisfy the debt. After its sale, at which the plaintiffs became the purchasers, they became doubtful of the jurisdiction of the court, and raised that issue by an amended petition and by exceptions to the commissioner's report of sale. The chancellor overruled the exceptions and upheld the jurisdiction of the Jessamine court. We think this ruling correct. This was not an action to settle the estate of a deceased person, and for that reason required by section 65 of the Civil Code to be brought in the county in which the personal representative was qualified. Nor in our opinion does subsection 3 of section 62 of the Code apply to an action of this kind.

There it is provided that actions for the sale of real property under a mortgage must be brought in the county in which the subject of the action is situated except for debts of a decedent. It seems to us that this exception had reference to and was made in view of the provisions of section 65.

It is manifest that if an action was pending to settle the estate of a deceased person, and mortgage liens were set up, the court, where the personal representative was qualified, alone having jurisdiction of such action, must also have jurisdiction to decree a sale of the mortgaged property, although it may be situated in another county. Hence the necessity for an exception to the general rule.

In this case there was no personal representative and no suit to settle the estate. Moreover, it was a suit to sell the husband's interest as well as that of his wife's, and for his debt, and we do not see how in a suit in Fayette county his interest could have been sold, the action as to him being clearly local. But in distributing the surplus proceeds of the sale the husband was given his full share as tenant by the curtesy in the whole tract over the objection of the guardian ad litem and his child. It seems to us that, as from the averments of the petition this debt was that of the husband, the value of his interest ought to have gone to pay his debt, which would seem to leave the entire surplus for the child. This being true it is unnecessary to pass upon the question at to whether the husband's interest is to be fixed under the old or new law regulating his interest in his wife's estate. Upon the return of the case the court should adjudge the surplus proceeds to the child unless the husband should make it appear that it was in fact the wife's debt in whole or in part.

This he should be allowed to show if he desires, as there has in fact been no issue made on that behalf or plea to which he was called on to respond.

The judgment as to the Shields is affirmed, and, as the collection of the surplus after satisfaction of the plaintiff's debt was suspended by supersedeas, damages will be awarded.

On the appeal of the guardian ad litem the judgment is reversed for proceedings consistent herewith.

GRAY, &C. V. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed February 11, 1897.)

Change of venue—Power to set aside order—Liability of sureties in bail bond —The court had the power without notice to set aside a consent order granting a change of venue in a criminal case at any time during the term at which it was entered, having erroneously granted the order before the defendant, who was under bond, had given a new bond for his appearance at the proper court or been surrendered to the court or proper officers. And the sureties in the existing bond having failed to see that either of these things was done, they remained bound on the bond after the order granting the change of venue was set aside. The fact that the defendant was in court at the time the order granting the change of venue was entered was not sufficient to release the sureties, either a formal surrender of the defendant to the court or the execution of a new bond being necessary for that purpose.

Eli H. Brown and Wilfred Carrico for appellants.

Guy H. Briggs and Wm. J. Hendrick for appellee.

Appeal from Daviess Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Burnam.

One Scott Gray, being in custody, charged with the offense of murder in the killing of J. H. Borders, was admitted to bail in the sum of $3,000, whereupon the appellants in this action executed the following bond: "Now, we, Scott Gray, N. A. Gray, John Gray, Reuben Gray and W. H. Gray, of the county of Daviess and State of Kentucky, hereby undertake that the above-named Scott Gray shall appear in the Daviess Circuit Court on the 2d day of April term, 1894, to answer charge, and shall at all times render himself amenable to the orders and process of said court in the prosecution of said charge, and if convicted shall render himself in execution thereof, or if he fail to perform any of these conditions we will pay to the Commonwealth of Kentucky the sum of $3,000. This 9th day of April, 1894."

Thereupon the defendant was discharged from the custody of the jailer. On the 10th day of April, at the same term of the Daviess Circuit Court, the grand jury of Daviess county indicted said Scott Gray for the crime of murder for the killing of said J. H. Borders, which indictment was signed and reported into court, and on the same day the defendant filed his petition, supported by divers affidavits, and moved the court to grant him a change of venue in said case. Thereupon the following order was entered: "By consent, and the court advised, it is ordered that the defendant is awarded a change of venue to the Ohio Circuit Court and set for trial the 7th day of the May term of said court."

At the same time a large number of witnesses for the Commonwealth and for the defendant were recognized by the court in the penal sum of $100 each for their appearance in the Ohio Circuit Court on the 7th day of its next term to testify in the case of the Commonwealth against said Gray. Afterwards, viz, on the 20th day of April, 1895, and during the same term of court, the Commonwealth's attorney moved the court to set aside the order awarding the change of venue to the defendant and set the case for trial, and the court, having considered said motion, on the 22d day of April, and during the same term of court, entered this order: "The defendant having failed to appear and execute bond for his appearance in the Ohio Circuit Court, the order awarding the change of venue to the Ohio Circuit Court is now set aside, and this prosecution is now set for trial on the 16th day of the present term." On the 16th day of the term this order was entered: "This day came the Commonwealth's attorney, and the defendant, although solemnly called, came not, but failed to appear in discharge of his bond, it is now ordered that said bond be forfeited and summons awarded thereon."

Summons was issued on the foregoing order directed to the sheriff of Daviess county, commanding him to summon the securities in the aforesaid bond to appear in the court on the 1st day of its August term, 1895, to show cause why judgment should not be entered against them for $3,000 on account of the forfeiture of the bond executed by them for the appearance of said Scott Gray in said court to answer the indictment found against him for murder. At the August term the appellants in this action filed answer to the summons on the forfeiture and resisted judgment, because, they say, that the condition of their bond was that Scott Gray should appear in the Daviess Circuit Court on the 2d day of its April term, 1895, and to render himself amenable to the orders of the court in the prosecution of the charge against him, and that the same had not been broken or forfeited; that they caused the said Scott Gray to appear in said court at the time indicated, and at all other times when required by the orders of the court and the prosecution up to and including the 12th day of April, 1895, on which last-named day they caused said Scott Gray to appear and submit himself to the custody and orders of the prosecution; that he was present in the court during that day; that on the said 12th day of April, 1895, same being the day of the April term for which the prosecution was set for trial, the said Scott Gray appeared in court and obtained an order, which was entered of record and made by consent of the plaintiff, the Commonwealth, changing the venue of said prosecution to the Ohio Circuit Court, and that by reason of the making and entering of said order and the change of venue granted in said prosecution the defendants were released and discharged from further obligation for the appearance of said Scott Gray to answer said prosecution and were discharged from all liability for or on account of their undertaking on said bond, claiming that he was then and there surrendered by them to the custody of the Daviess Circuit Court, and that he was not thereafter in the custody or under the control of the respondents, but was subject to the orders of the court, whose power, custody and control of Gray was supreme and exclusive, and that the failure of the said court to commit said Gray to jail or to the custody of the court's officers or to be conveyed to the Ohio county jail or to require him to execute a new bond for his appearance in the Ohio Circuit Court for trial, and permitting him to depart after making said change of venue, were each and all the acts and omissions of said court, for which they were in nowise responsible, and asked that they be dismissed, which answer was demurred to by the Commonwealth's attorney, which demurrer was sustained by the court, and a judgment was entered in favor of the Commonwealth against said defendants for the sum of $3,000 and costs, to which defendants excepted and prayed an appeal to this court.

The only question presented on the appeal is whether the order granting the change of venue from Daviess to Ohio county released the securities from their liability on the bail bond.

Section 1118 of the Kentucky Statutes provides that "if the applicant or defendant is in custody the order for the change of venue shall be accompanied by an order for his removal by the sheriff or jailer of the county, with such sufficient guard as the judge may direct, and his delivery to the jailer of the county where the trial is to be had. If the applicant or the defendant is under recognizance or bond for his appearance he shall, before the order is granted, give sufficient bail for his appearance at the proper court, or be surrendered into the custody of the proper officers."

By the provisions of this section of the statutes the obligation is imposed upon the defendant, and upon his securities in his bail bond, to see to it that a sufficient bail bond is given for his appearance at the court to which the venue is taken, or that he be surrendered to the custody of the proper officers; that they may see to his proper delivery to the jailer of the county to which the venue is given, and they must see to this before the order for the change is granted.

The record in this case does not show that the defendant or his securities ever executed the new bond required by the statute; nor did the securities ever at any time surrender the custody of the defendant to the court or the proper officer, or indicate to the court in any way that they desired to be released from their obligation on the bail bond of defendant. Their obligation required that the defendant should at all times render himself amenable to the orders and process of the court in the prosecution of said charge, and they could have exonerated themselves on said bond only by a formal surrender of the defendant to the court or its officers, or by the execution of a new bond for his appearance to answer the charge in Ohio county.

The order granting the change of venue before the execution of the necessary bond was an error on the part of the court, which it was the duty of the court to correct by setting aside the order, and it had ample power and authority to do this at any time during the term of court at which said order was entered; and it was not at all incumbent upon it to have given notice to the defendant of such action on the part of the court, as these defendants had entirely failed to perform or comply with the necessary conditions upon which said order could have been legally made under the statutes.

The defendants assumed to answer for the appearance of said Gray, and to see that he complied with all orders of the court, and it was their duty to see that he executed the proper bail for his appearance in the Ohio Circuit Court, or to have surrendered him back to the custody of the court; and the failure to take these necessary steps leaves these defendants bound upon the bond which they executed.

It is not enough for them to say that they caused the said Scott Gray to appear in court at the time of the making of the order changing the venue, or that he remained in court during the entire day; their obligation required more than this—that he "should at all times render himself amenable to the orders and process of the court in the prosecution of the charge; and, if convicted, to render himself in execution thereof, and if he failed to perform any of these conditions that they would pay to the Commonwealth the sum of $3,000."

Having failed to see to the execution of the bail bond for the appearance of the defendant in the Ohio Circuit Court, and having also failed to surrender him to the court, it was undoubtedly their duty to see that he was ready to answer when called upon in the Daviess Circuit Court, in which he stood indicted.

For the reasons indicated in this opinion the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

HARLAN, &C. V. EILKE, &C.

(Filed February 11, 1897.)

Resulting trusts—Where a father who undertook to invest money for his son used it in buying property which he procured to be conveyed to himself without the son's consent, an enforcible trust was thereby created in favor of the son, there being nothing in section 19 of article 1, chapter 63, General

Statutes (section 2353, Kentucky Statutes), which prevents the enforcement of such a trust.

C. B. Seymour for appellants.

Phelps & Thum and Dodd & Dodd for appellees.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

It appears from satisfactory testimony that in 1882 Ellie Eilke, the eleven-year-old son of William Eilke, sr., desired to become a jockey. His father reluctantly consented to it, but finally did so, and emancipated his son, saying to him: "My boy, if you think you can make a living, you can go." He admonished his son to save his money; send it to him and he would invest it for him.

Under these circumstances the son entered upon his career as a jockey, and in the prosecution of his business traveled over the country for several years, earning a yearly salary of some $3,000 or $4,000. The father seems to have been afflicted and thriftless. The son sent him several thousand dollars, and he invested it in the real estate in controversy. The father, without the knowledge of the son, had the deeds made to himself. In 1893 the father died, and this action was instituted by Ellie Eilke to have the trust declared, and to recover the property.

Section 19, article 1, chapter 63, General Statutes, reads as follows: "When a deed shall be made to one person and the consideration shall be paid by another, no use or trust shall result in favor of the latter, but this shall not extend to any case in which the grantee shall have taken a deed in his own name without the consent of the person paying the consideration, or where the grantee, in violation of said trust, shall have purchased the land deeded with the effects of another person."

We agree with the learned counsel for appellants that no claim like that of the appellee should be sustained except upon the fullest and clearest proof. After the examination of the proof in this case we can not escape the conclusion that the money with which the property was bought was that of the appellee, which he sent to his father to invest for him.

Appellee introduced several witnesses to sustain his claim. They appear to be worthy of credit; besides no effort was made to impeach them or to contradict their statements. In addition to the facts which they prove with reference to the son sending home his money to the father and its investment in the real estate, they also prove that the father had no source from which he obtained the money with which to purchase property except through the son.

There is nothing in the statute quoted which prevents the trust from being enforced. On the other hand the saving clauses in the statute recognize the equitable doctrine that an enforcible trust exists where one takes a deed in his own name without the consent of the person paying the consideration, or where the grantee, in violation of such trust, shall have purchased the lands deeded with the effects of another person.

We are of the opinion that the land was held in trust for Ellie Eilke, and that he is entitled to recover it. (Grayham v. King, 96 Ky., 339; Faris v. Dunn, 7 Bush, 276; Miller v. Edwards, 7 Bush, 394.)

The judgment is affirmed.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE R. R. CO. v. BRAYMER.

(Filed February 11, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Weight given expert testimony—In this action against a railroad company to recover damages for injuries received by plaintiff in a collision of two of defendant's trains upon one of which he was a passenger, a verdict for plaintiff for $250 was not flagrantly against the evidence, the jury having the right to credit plaintiff's statement as to his internal injuries and his pain and suffering in preference to the testimony of medical experts that he was not injured, and also to credit his statement that a tumor on his stomach was caused by the sudden shock in preference to the testimony of medical experts that the tumor must have existed prior to the accident.

Boyd & Craft and J. W. Alcorn for appellant.

Appeal from Laurel Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

The appellee was a passenger on the regular passenger train of the appellant when it collided with one of appellant's freight trains near Hazel Patch, which resulted, as appellee claims, from the gross negligence of the agents and servants in charge of the trains. He claims that by the force of the collision he was thrown out of his seat and against the seat in front of him, thence to the floor, with great force, thereby injuring his hand, back, side, breast, and also that he had received internal injuries, from which he suffered great pain.

On the trial he testified that he had not recovered from his injuries, and which affected his capacity to work, and prevented him from doing one-half the work which he could do before he received them; that his stomach was still swollen. He exhibited a tumor thereon, which he claimed was produced by the accident.

Some expert testimony was offered as to the extent of appellee's injuries, and as to whether the tumor on the stomach could have been produced by a sudden shock, or had existed prior to the accident.

On the day following the injury Dr. Pennington found the tumor, but no recent injuries on his body. He said he could not tell what produced it, but his opinion, when he made the examination and now, was that it was not caused by recent injuries. He also said appellee complained of internal injuries, and that he examined him but could not find any.

Another medical gentleman testified that the tumor seemed to be tender to the touch and soft; that a sudden blow could produce a tumor like it in an hour or two, or it might be produced by other causes.

The jury heard the testimony of two gentlemen learned in the medical profession. They also heard the testimony of the appellee, and, if they believed him a credible witness, his evidence that the tumor did not exist before the accident was properly of more weight than the testimony of a multitude of surgeons who testified that it was not of recent date; likewise was his evidence as to his sufferings from pains in the stomach, back and breast. He knew whether or not they existed, and the jury may have well doubted whether or not the surgeon could, from the external examination which was made, tell whether or not there existed a cause which might or might not produce a pain. The presumption is that the jury were of fair average intelligence, and their intelligence would not be impeached if they concluded that the surgeon, from the examination, could not know whether a cause existed to produce pain or tell whether or not appellee felt it; therefore, his testimony was of little value on the question as to whether appellee received or suffered from internal injury.

The principal reason urged for a reversal is that the verdict of the jury was flagrantly against the evidence. We can not agree with counsel on this question. The verdict was for $250, and counsel say "the action of the jury in assessing the damages at this sum is of itself the strongest argument that we could present in favor of our contention that the verdict is palpably against the weight of the evidence, and that in making the verdict the jury was influenced by prejudice."

As faulty as we deem this reasoning to be, we agree with counsel that no greater reason has been suggested why a new trial should be granted. It is urged that the jury did not believe the testimony of the appellant, and that the jury was influenced by prejudice because the verdict was only for $250. We are unable to understand how counsel reached this conclusion. The jury must have believed his testimony or they would not have found a verdict for him. They certainly can not be said to have been influenced by prejudice against the appellant, or they would not have found a verdict for that amount when one for a greater sum might have been found.

It seems to us that the jury was not influenced by prejudice against the appellant in returning the verdict. We have failed to find any error in the instructions which the court gave the jury.

The judgment is affirmed.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE R. R. CO. V. BOWEN.

(Filed February 11, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Limitation—Mistake in summons—An action was begun and limitation ceased to run upon the filing of petition and issuing of summons, notwithstanding a mistake in the summons as to the name of the plaintiff. In fact it was not incumbent upon the plaintiff, in order to stop the running of the statute upon the filing of the petition, to show that summons was issued, as he had the right to rely upon the clerk to perform that duty.

2. Pleading of private statute—Where a plea of limitation by a corporation is based upon a special provision in its charter the pleader must specially refer to the charter, stating its title and the day on which it became a law, it being a private statute.

3. Evidence—In an action against a railroad company in which the failure to give a signal of the approach of a train to a crossing was relied upon as negligence it was not competent for the plaintiff to show that sign boards had been put up and that all trains had blown for this crossing since the date of the accident.

4. Same—It was not proper to permit a witness to express an opinion as to what would have been proper for the engineer to have done under the circumstances, the witness not being an expert and having no better means of forming an opinion than the jury itself.

5. Injury by railroad train to stock grazing near track—Failure to give signal—The failure to give a signal of the approach of a train to a public crossing does not render the company liable for injury to a horse which as the train approached was grazing on the right of way near the crossing, the company being under no obligation to give the signal as a warning to the horse which stood eighteen feet from the track, with its head turned in the opposite direction, and which there was no reason to believe would come upon the track.

W. H. Marriott for appellant.

Sprigg & Chelf for appellee.

Appeal from Hardin Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Burnam.

This action was brought by the appellee to recover the value of a horse which he claims was killed by one of appellant's trains by the negligence of its agents and servants on the 24th day of May, 1893. The petition was filed on the 23d of October, 1893, and summons issued thereon on the day of filing, but in the name of D. C. Brown as plaintiff, which was served on defendant. The return on this summons was, on the motion of plaintiff, quashed, and on the 6th day of January, 1894, another summons was issued giving the name of the plaintiff as D. C. Bowen. This summons was served on the defendant on the 6th day of March, 1894.

The defendant filed answer, denying negligence and pleading the six months statute of limitation. The plaintiff filed a reply in which he denied that the cause of action had not accrued within six months before the commencement of the suit, and denying that same was barred by the statute of limitation. To this plea the defendant demurred, which was overruled. The case was then called for trial, and, after the hearing of the proof and the giving of instructions, all of which were excepted to at the time by the appellant, the jury reported a verdict in favor of the appellee for $125, and judgment was entered accordingly. From that judgment this appeal is prosecuted on a number of errors which have been assigned.

First. The appellant insists that one of the provisions of its charter is that actions of this character must be instituted within six months, and that the plaintiff failed to file his suit and have summons issued thereon within that time. We are of the opinion that in this case the plaintiff had filed his petition setting out a cause of action and had caused summons to issue thereon in time; that he had done all the law required of him. It was the duty of the clerk to issue summons in accordance with law, and it was not incumbent upon the plaintiff to show that he had issued it; on the contrary, he had the right to repose confidence in the clerk not only knowing his duty, but on his performing it. This was the language of the court in the case of the L. & N. R. R. v. Smith, 87 Ky., 501, and we think is conclusive of the question of limitation.

Upon the trial of the case, we think it was error on the part of the court to permit witnesses for appellee to testify that signboards had been put up at the crossing and that all trains had blown for this crossing since the date of the accident. "Whilst there seems to be some diversity of opinion on the question of the admissibility of evidence of this character as a means of showing neglect on the part of the defendant, the decided weight of authority is against same." (Standard Oil Co. v. Tierney, 13 KY. LAW REP., 626, and authorities there cited.) Nor was the testimony given by Williams in this case, in so far as he expressed an opinion as to what would have been proper for the engineer to have done under the circumstances, competent evidence. "Opinions of nonexpert witnesses are never received as evidence when all the facts upon which such opinions are founded are made clear to the court and the jury." It is the province of the jury to determine from the facts what was proper to have been done, and the opinion of a witness solely upon the facts so demonstrated was inadmissible. (Clark v. Fisher, 19 Am. Dec., 102.) It is not a witness' province to give opinions on such matters, as he could have had, in general, no better means of forming an opinion than the jury itself.

By instruction No. 6 the court told the jury that "it is the duty of the defendant's servants in approaching a public crossing to blow its whistle and ring its bell, and if the jury believe that it failed to perform these duties, and that by reason of such failure the plaintiff's horse was killed, the jury should find for the plaintiff." We think that this instruction was erroneous and prejudicial to the rights of the appellant.

The testimony of Joe Neighbors shows the horse of appellee was grazing upon the right of way of appellant fifteen or eighteen feet from the track, and that when he saw him, just before the collision, he had his head turned from the track and the train was about eighty yards from the horse. He states on cross-examination that the horse was between the telegraph pole and the fence, and the train was between his house and that of Jerry Bland, when the horse first began to move, and it was about a hundred feet from his front gate to Jerry Bland's house. The horse was not upon the public crossing, although he was grazing upon the right of way near it. The appellant was under no obligation to blow its whistle or to ring its bell as a warning to a horse, which stood eighteen feet from the track on the right of way, with its head turned in the opposite direction from the track, and not upon a crossing or roadbed of defendant.

The testimony of the engineer in this case clearly shows that he did not see the plaintiff's horse until just about the time it was struck by the locomotive, and that owing to a curve in the track of the railroad the smokestack and the boiler of the engine would have prevented him from seeing a horse standing at the exact spot where this one was proven to have been after they came in sight. The fireman, Thomas Millenix, testified that he saw the horse before it was struck; that it was standing over by the fence eating grass, about sixty yards from the engine; that it whirled around, made a couple of jumps and jumped on the track, and that it just had time to wheel around and jump on the track by the time the train arrived at that point. The testimony of the engineer also showed that he blew the whistle for the station and for the crossing, and that at the station the whistle could be heard from where it was blown for the crossing near where the horse was killed; and he also testifies that he rang the bell as he approached this crossing.

It seems to us from the facts as proven that the appellant did all the law imposed upon it.

In the case of the C., N. O. & T. P. R. R. v. Bagby, 13 Ky. Law Rep., 533, the court said: "Those in charge of a railroad train owe the first duty to persons on it, and to assure their safety it is necessary that the engineer should not lose sight of the track ahead of him; nor can the company be held liable for injury to animals unless those in charge could have avoided it, having due care for the safety of those on the train.

It would, therefore, seem to follow that an engineer can not be reasonably expected or required to lookout for or to see animals at all distances on each side of the railway track, nor to give the danger signal and stop the train to prevent injury to those straying, unless such animal is actually on the track or else so near or in such attitude as would induce a peason of ordinary care and prudence to believe that there was danger of a collision."

In this case it seems to us that no amount of care or prudence could have prevented the accident by which the appellee's horse was killed by the railroad train; and it further appears to us that the employes of appellant were not in this case guilty of any actionable negligence, and that the court erred in giving a judgment for appellee.

The cause is, therefore, reversed for a new trial consistent with this opinion.

BALDWIN & CO. V. WARREN, &C.

(Filed February 12, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Conditional sales—Purchaser at execution sale with notice—A sale of personal property upon condition that it shall remain the property of the seller until paid for gives the seller a lien for the unpaid purchase price, and his right is superior to that of one who, with notice of that lien, purchases the property at a sale made under execution against the buyer. And notice of the lien given by the officer making the sale is sufficient to charge the purchaser.

D. T. Fowles for appellants.

Jeff Henry for appellees.

Appeal from Green Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Guffy.

The appellants had sold to Luther Town an organ on credit, and had taken notes for the deferred payments. The notes contained a stipulation that the organ should remain the property of appellants until paid for. It also appears that some payments had been made by Town, and the contract renewed more than once.

An execution was issued in favor of A. D. Scott against Town and the appellee, W. F. Warren, and placed in the hands of the coroner, Jones, for collection, who proceeded to levy on the organ, and was by Town informed of the lien and contract aforesaid. Jones then required an indemnifying bond before sale, which was given by said W. F. Warren, with the other appellee as surety, and the officer then sold the organ and appellee W. F. Warren bought it.

It was clearly proven on the trial that Jones informed Warren before the sale of the statements made by Town; also that Town notified said Warren and others on the day of sale, but before the sale, that appellant had a lien on the organ, and he (Town) disclaimed the ownership of the organ. The jury found for defendants, and appellants' motion for a new trial having been overruled, they have appealed.

Appellants complain of the instructions given by the court, and also insist that the court should have given the instruction asked by appellants.

The instruction refused in substance asked the court to tell the jury that "if Town notified the officer or the purchaser, Warren, before the sale of appellant's lien, then the jury should find for plaintiff."

The effect of the instruction given was to tell the jury that unless the appellants or their agent had notified the officer or said Warren of appellants' lien, that the jury should find for defendants.

This court, in Baldwin & Co. v. Crow, &c., 86 Ky., 679, expressly held that such contracts as the one under consideration in the case at bar gave appellants a lien on the property, and that the same was valid against all purchasers with notice.

It is manifest in this case that appellees had full notice of the lien from a trustworthy source—from one who knew the truth of the matter—hence it is immaterial whether Town be regarded as appellants' agent or not; the notice was sufficient. The court, therefore, erred in refusing the instruction asked, and erred in giving instructions 1 and 2.

The judgment appealed from is, therefore, reversed and cause remanded, with directions to set aside the verdict and judgment and award appellants a new trial and for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

SLACK & PERKINS V. KOON & PERRY, &C.

(Filed February 12, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Landlord's lien—Partnership—Where one of two parties in the hotel and saloon business had only an interest in the profits and not in the furniture, etc., used in the business, the lien of the landlord for rent under a lease to the partner who owned the goods is superior to the lien of a partnership creditor.

2. It was not necessary for the landlord to sue out his attachment in order to preserve his landlord's lien, it being sufficient for him to assert it by petition in this suit by the attaching partnership creditors.

Bush & Worten and Hill & Hill for appellants.

J. C. Hodge for appellees.

Appeal from Livingston Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge White.

The appellants, Slack & Perkins, sued Koon & Perry, the appellees, in the Livingston Circuit Court on an account for $380.66, and at the same time sued out attachments against the property of Koon & Perry and had it levied on a lot of personal property then in the St. Clair Hotel and saloon, at Grand Rivers. This property consisted of furniture, bar-room fixtures, liquors and many other articles usually found in a hotel and bar room. Several other small executions were also sued out from the quarterly court of Livingston county, and levied on the same property, subject to appellants' attachment lien.

On notice and motion the county judge made an order of sale, and the attached property was sold, and brought the sum of $500, the appellee, Ross, claiming a landlord's lien on the attached property; also procured from a justice of the peace an attachment for rent due, and to become due, for the sum of $360, rent of the premises occupied by Koon, and also had the same levied on the property attached by appellants.

Appellee Ross filed his petition, asserting that he was the owner of the property known as the St. Clair Hotel property, in the town of Grand Rivers, and that the defendant, Koon, had rented said property from him for the period of twelve months from the 1st day of April, 1892, to the 31st day of March, 1893, at the agreed price of $360, to be paid monthly ($30 each month), and to be paid in advance, except the month of April, which was to be paid on May 1st, and claiming landlord's lien for his rent on the goods attached and on the money arising from sale of same.

To this petition appellants filed an answer, denying that the hotel property was rented to Koon by the year, but the renting was by the month; and, if the renting was for a year, the contract was made in March, and for more than one year, and was not to be performed within a year and was by parol, and, therefore, was not an enforcible contract under the statutes of Kentucky; that Ross had taken possession of said hotel property a short time after the levy of the attachment, rented the same and received the rents; therefore, he was estopped from claiming rent except for one month.

To this answer appellee Ross filed reply, denying that he had taken possession of said leased property at any time since said leasing, and, by an amended petition, set up the fact that the contract of renting to Koon was made on the 20th day of April, 1892, instead of in March, as stated in his petition heretofore filed in this case.

The issue made by the pleadings was tried by the court, and judgment rendered in favor of appellee Ross for the rent of the hotel, amounting, with interest, to the sum of $394.58, and giving Ross a superior lien on the funds in court arising from the sale of the attached property. From that judgment appellants have appealed to this court, and ask a reversal.

The proof in the case shows that Koon & Perry had occupied this hotel property for some time before the renting set up by Ross; that a hotel and saloon business had been carried on by Koon & Perry, and the account sued on was for goods furnished by appellants to Koon & Perry as partnership debts. The appellants claim by reason thereof they have a superior lien to that of the landlord.

It appearing from the evidence that Perry had only an interest in the profits of the business, and not in the property itself, the partnership creditor had no lien on these goods, by reason of the partnership of Koon & Perry, superior to that of the landlord.

It is established by the testimony of Ross and Koon that Koon, on the 1st or 2d day of April, 1892, rented of Ross the hotel property from the 1st day of April, 1892, to 31st day of March, 1893, at the rental price of $360 for the year, payable monthly.

There is no evidence in this case contradicting this testimony as to the contract of renting, and there is no testimony whatever that Ross took possession in any manner of the leased premises during the term they were leased to Koon, or received rent for the same. It was not necessary for the appellee, Ross, to sue out his attachment in this case to preserve his landlord's lien—having the lien, he properly presented it by petition, claiming the funds upon which he had lien.

The judgment of the lower court being in accordance with these views, it is affirmed.

STORM & FLOYD V. CHESTNUT'S ADM'R.

(Filed February 12, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Assignment of note—Where the holder of a note transferred it by delivery in part payment for timber which he was to take from a certain tract of land represented by the assignee as belonging to him, it was error thereafter to permit the assignor to recover upon the note upon the ground that the assignee had no title to a part of the land from which the timber was to be taken, and that plaintiff had been required to pay as damages for taking timber from that part of the land belonging to another a sum equal to the amount of the note. Before the plaintiff can be allowed to recover upon the note the title to it must be restored to him by a rescission of the contract for the sale of the timber. But he will be entitled under proper pleadings to recover the value of so much of the timber as was upon the land of the person to whom he was required to respond in damages.

H. C. Eversole for appellants.

Ewell & Smith for appellee.

Appeal from Laurel Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge White.

The appellee sued the appellants in the Laurel Circuit Court. The cause of action as set out in the petition states that some years ago appellee, Dorcus Chestnut, sold G. N. Chestnut, also appellee, two tracts of land by metes and bounds, but made no deed to G. N. Chestnut to the same. Afterwards G. N. Chestnut sold said land to appellants, Storm & Floyd, or to Isaac Storm. Storm executed the note sued on for $100 to G. N. Chestnut, it being the balance due as the purchase price for said land. Afterwards G. N. Chestnut sold and assigned said note to C. M. Chestnut for value received. C. M. Chestnut transferred said note by delivery to James C. Floyd, appellant, in part pay for railroad ties and timber to be made into railroad ties on a certain tract of land described by metes and bounds by a written contract filed as exhibit in this case, lying on Laurel river in Laurel county, containing about two hundred acres. C. M. Chestnut went upon said land and cut and made, or caused to be made, the tie timber thereon into ties, but before he finished one W. H. Jackson, claiming a portion of the land embraced in the contract by superior and paramount title to that of J. C. Floyd, C. M. Chestnut was forced to pay and did pay W. H. Jackson $100 for damages done him in cutting his timber, so that instead of C. M. Chestnut realizing $175 on said purchase of timber from Floyd he only realized about $75, setting up lien in favor of C. M. Chestnut for $100 with interest on the two tracts of land sold to Storm & Floyd or to Storm, and that after these transactions C. M. Chestnut departed this life and W. B. Sutton was appointed his administrator; that when the contract was executed for the sale of the timber to C. M. Chestnut he surrendered the note to Floyd and can not file the same, asking the court to compel defendant to file the note.

The contract filed with the petition recites that Floyd had sold to Chestnut the tie timber and the ties then made on a certain tract of land containing two hundred acres, described by metes and bounds, for the consideration of $175, cash in hand paid, binding Floyd to deliver the same to said Chestnut, and granting to said Chestnut the right of way over said land to remove said timber. Appellants answered and admitted that G. N. Chestnut sold the land to J. N. Storm as alleged in the petition, and that J. N. Storm executed the note sued on, and that it was the last payment on the land described in the petition, averring that J. N. Storm had fully paid off and taken up the said note, and that said note is now in his possession, denying that J. N. Storm had any connection with the trade between Floyd and Chestnut for the sale of said tie timber, and denied that they or either of them ever authorized or agreed for C. M. Chestnut to pay W. H. Jackson the $100, or that they or either of them are responsible for any sum of money C. M. Chestnut paid to W. H. Jackson; denies that Chestnut has any lien on the two tracts of land for said $100; denies that appellees have any cause of action against appellants, and prayed to be dismissed. Appellants filed reply, averring among other things that it was true that C. M. Chestnut delivered the note to J. C. Floyd, but that Floyd had paid for the note in the sale of land (meaning timber) that did not belong to him; that it belonged to W. H. Jackson; that the $100 paid by Chestnut to Jackson was paid for timber cut on the land sold to Chestnut by Floyd, for which Floyd had no title, and for which Jackson had title, and that Chestnut paid Jackson the $100 to avoid law suits and indictment.

Appellants rejoined, denying all the allegations in the reply, and denying that Jackson had any title to the land that he (Floyd) had sold the timber off of to Chestnut to pay off the note, averring that Storm had fully paid off the note to Floyd, denying the right to bring and prosecute suit on said note. After all these pleadings had been filed defendants withdrew their pleadings and demurred to plaintiff's petition, but the court overruled the demurrer, to which ruling appellants excepted. Appellants then refiled their pleadings, and a trial being had the court gave appellees judgment for the amount of the note and interest, with lien on the two tracts of land, and ordered sale of same to satisfy the judgment. From this judgment appellants have appealed to this court and ask a reversal. The evidence in the case shows that Chestnut paid the $100 to Jackson without the knowledge or consent of appellants. It also shows that there was a conflict between the land of Jackson and Floyd of about thirteen acres, but neither the pleadings nor evidence show what amount of tie timber was on this thirteen acres of land claimed by Jackson. The note having been given up to Floyd in payment for the timber, before plaintiff can recover on the note the contract of sale of the timber must be rescinded and the title to the note recovered by appellees. But plaintiff had the right to recover under proper pleading the value of the timber embraced in the contract that was on the land of Jackson, and on the return of this case the parties should be allowed to amend (if they so desire) and show the proportion of the timber sold by Floyd that was in the boundary of any land owned by Jackson.

Wherefore, the judgment is reversed and cause remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

M. I. SOWLE MFG. CO. v. BERNARD.

(Filed February 12, 1897.)

1. Discharge of insolvent debtors—Liability—Where judgment has been rendered sustaining an order of arrest in a civil action the circuit court has no jurisdiction to discharge the defendant as an insolvent debtor, and its order to that effect does not exonerate the bail. Nor has the defendant the right to apply to any court to be released or discharged unless he has been surrendered by the bail or taken under an execution.

2. The right of an insolvent debtor to obtain such a discharge being a right created by statute, it can be enforced only in the manner prescribed by the statute.

J. A. Craft and William Jarvis for appellant.

Stone & Sudduth and D. M. Rodman for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Law and Equity division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Guffy.

The appellant instituted suit in the law and equity court of Jefferson county, in 1892, against Sitwell Harris, and procured the arrest of said Harris as provided by law. Said Harris then executed bond as provided by the Code of Practice, with the appellee, S. M. Bernard, as surety.

On December 2, 1892, judgment was obtained by appellant against Harris for the debt, and the order of arrest was sustained, and on the same day said Harris asked to be discharged as an insolvent debtor, which discharge was then denied. On December 12th said Harris went before the judge of the Jefferson Circuit Court, Law and Equity division, and said judge permitted said Harris to take the insolvent debtor's oath, assumed to exonerate him from all obligation to surrender himself under the judgment, in spite of the exception of appellant's counsel.

At that time no capias ad satisfaciendum or ca. sa. had been issued against Harris. On the 19th of December a ca. sa. was issued against Harris, and on the following day was by the sheriff returned not found. Afterwards suit was instituted on the bond against appellee Bernard. Bernard pleaded the judgment of discharge or release aforesaid in bar of appellant's claim, and the appellant in his reply denied the jurisdiction of the law and equity court to grant the release or discharge, and also denied the jurisdiction of the court to exonerate the bail or surety. Appellee's demurrer to the reply was sustained and cause dismissed, and to reverse that judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

The sole question presented for decision is as to the jurisdiction of the law and equity court to render the judgment and make the orders relied on by appellee.

The right to take the insolvent debtor's oath, and be discharged in such cases as this, is a statutory right, and it will be found that the various statutes enacted conferring such right and regulating the proceedings confer the power to discharge insolvent debtors upon justices of the peace or county judges or police judge of the county seat.

It is provided in the General Statutes, page 782, that a person taken or charged in execution in any civil case may by petition apply for a discharge to two justices of the peace, or the judge of the county court, or the police judge of the county town, who shall, by warrant, command the keeper of the jail to bring the body of the petitioner before them or him, at the courthouse, on a day fixed, and a list of the several executions with which he may stand charged.

It is further provided that ten days' notice shall be given by the applicant to the adverse party, and a list of the property he intends to surrender. Some other requirements are made, and it is also provided that the appellant, after compliance with all requirements, shall be discharged unless it be made to appear that he has acted fraudulently. The scheduling warrant and petition shall be returned to and safely kept on file by the clerk of the county court.

The foregoing statute was in force at the time of the attempted discharge of said Harris.

Section 171 of the Civil Code provides: "A return of not found upon an execution against the body of the defendant, placed in the hands of the sheriff within twenty days after it might have issued upon the judgment, shall be necessary to fix the liability of the bail, which shall be to pay the amount of the judgment and costs."

Section 170 of the Code provides that the bail may, at any time or place, arrest the defendant for the purpose of surrendering him.

Section 172 provides that the bail can be proceeded against in a separate action only.

Section 173 specifies the causes or means by which the bail is exonerated, none of which are applicable to this case unless the attempted discharge of Harris by the law and equity judge is valid.

It is suggested that section 168 confers jurisdiction upon the circuit court. We quote as follows from said section: "Upon judgments in actions in which the defendant has been arrested and held to bail, and in which the order of arrest has not been vacated, an execution against the body of the defendant may be issued, upon which the same proceedings shall be had, and the defendant shall be dealt with in the same manner as is provided by law in the civil actions in which executions may be issued against the body of the defendant, except that the oath of insolvency, upon reasonable notice, may be taken at any time after the arrest by delivering to the plaintiff, his agent or attorney, a schedule of the property intended to be surrendered, although said schedule may not have been delivered ten days before the taking of such oath."

It will be seen that the only change made in the section supra is to dispense with the ten days' notice and the delivery of the schedule ten days before taking the oath, and perhaps allowing notice to be served on the agent or attorney.

The arrest referred to evidently means the arrest under the execution, for the reason that such execution had been authorized; but if the section even meant that the discharge could be obtained before the arrest under the ca. sa., still the statute before quoted, specifying the officers who could grant the discharge, is left in full force.

If the ca. sa. be not issued within twenty days from the time the plaintiff is entitled thereto the bail is exonerated, or he may become released by surrendering the defendant to the sheriff of the county on or before the return day of the summons in the action against the bail, or within such further time as the court in which the action is pending may allow.

"When a statute has created a new right, he who claims the right must pursue the statute remedy." (Smith v. Drew, 5 Mass., 576.) Quoted with approval in 13 Bush, 310, et seq.

In Johnston v. Louisville, 11 Bush, 533, the court says: "It is a rule when a statute gives a new right or a new power, and at the same time provides a specific, full and adequate mode of executing the power or enforcing the right given, the fact that a particular mode is prescribed will be regarded as excluding by implication the right to resort to any other mode of executing the power or of enforcing the right." (Dillon on Municipal Corporations, section 653; 2 Barrows, 1157; 6 Mass., 286; 1 Blackford, 39; 1 Mo., 147, 428; 2 McCord, 117; 36 Mo., 543; 11 Mass., 363; 12 Mass., 482; 4 Wend., 667; 4 Ind., 431; 1 Ind., 285.)

The right of an insolvent debtor to obtain the discharge in question being, as before stated, a right given or created by statute, it follows that it can be enforced only in the manner prescribed by the statute. Moreover, Harris was not in the custody of the court at the time of the alleged discharge, but in law in the amicable custody of the bail. It might have been that within twenty days the bail would have been exonerated by the delay of plaintiff to have the ca. sa. issued, in which event the bail would have had no further interest in the case, in which event Harris would not be in confinement, and never could be imprisoned unless plaintiff elected to have the ca. sa. issued.

Harris had not been surrendered by the bail nor arrested under a

ca. sa., hence he had no right to apply to any court for a release or discharge, for he was not restrained of his liberty by any one.

In the numerous cases decided by this court involving the responsibility of bail, or discharge of insolvent debtors, we have not found a case in which the circuit court or a circuit judge had ordered the discharge of an insolvent debtor, nor have counsel referred to any such case.

We think it manifest that the circuit court had no jurisdiction nor authority to entertain the motion of Harris to be allowed to take the oath to be discharged, nor to receive the schedule of property, and the orders and judgment in that regard are null and void, and are no defense to this action.

The judgment appealed from is, therefore, reversed and cause remanded, with directions to overrule the demurrer and for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

If, however, the appellee has any valid defense he should be allowed to plead it.

FRAZIER, &C. v. DOWLING, &C.

(Filed February 13, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Trade-marks—The purchasers of a distillery known as the "Waterfill & Frazier" distillery, and of the exclusive privilege to use the brand "Waterfill & Frazier" in the manufacture of whisky, are entitled to protection in the use of that brand as against the firm of Waterfill & Frazier, composed of one of the original owners of the brand and a son of the other. And the fact that the defendants sought to be enjoined from using the brand purchased by plaintiffs discarded the brands with which they commenced business, and which were unobjectionable, and imitated the plaintiffs' system of making their goods, is evidence of fraudulent intent. Nor is the use of the word "Distillers" by plaintiffs after the words of the old brand calculated to deceive the trade or the public, and hence this fact does not operate to prevent plaintiffs from obtaining relief.

Thomas F. Hargis and Phelps & Thum for appellants.

Humphrey & Davie for appellees.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hazelrigg.

Beginning in 1870 the firm of Waterfill & Frazier, composed of W. J. Waterfill and R. H. Frazier, built up in the course of several years a widespread reputation for a brand of whisky manufactured by them in Anderson county, consisting of the words "Waterfill & Frazier, distillers, hand-made sour-mash whisky, Anderson county, Kentucky," the particular words composing the brand being "Waterfill & Frazier," coupled, however, with the other words as arranged above.

In 1882 Waterfill sold his interest in the distillery and in the brand to his partner, Frazier, who continued the business as before.

In 1885 Waterfill again became the owner of a half interest in the property and business in connection with John and Edward Dowling, Frazier conveying to them the "Waterfill & Frazier distillery," so known throughout the entire country and so named in the government records, together with the exclusive privilege to use the brand of "Waterfill & Frazier" in the manufacture of whisky. The business was continued as before and the same brand used, their trade and distilling name being "Waterfill & Frazier." In the meantime R. H. Frazier had died, leaving a son, G. G. Frazier, and who, in about 1890, with J. M. Waterfill, a cousin of W. J. Waterfill, decided, to erect a distillery at McBrayer, in Anderson county, and manufacture "Waterfill & Frazier" whisky. This came to the ears of Levy & Bros., the Cincinnati brokers, who were handling the Waterfill & Frazier product, and to their inquiry of Waterfill & Dowling about it W. J. Waterfill wrote to the brokers saying, among other things, "we have no apprehension of their attempting to make the W. & F. brand. In the first place they can not do so, as we are the sole owners of that brand, having paid one of the gentlemen's father a good price for it, and we have no fear but that any court of jurisdiction will protect us in the right of property in that brand."

The new concern made inquiries as to their rights, and decided to advertise their whiskies thus: "McBrayer, Anderson county, Kentucky, Waterfill & Frazier, distillers of the G. G. Frazier & Co. and J. M. Waterfill & Co." They branded their barrels "J. M. Waterfill & Co. Distillers, Hand-Made Sour Mash Whisky, Anderson County, 8th District Kentucky."

In the meantime W. J. Waterfill sold out his interest in the old Waterfill & Frazier distillery, together with the brand "Waterfill & Frazier," and we next find him in partnership with the new "Waterfill & Frazier" company. The new concern made a considerable quantity of whiskey, but had found no sale for it until they made a contract with one Wolf, of Chicago, for their entire product for a number of years, provided they should brand it "Waterfill & Frazier, Distillers Hand-Made Sour-Mash, McBrayer, Anderson County, Kentucky."

Accordingly they ordered this brand, and were threatening to brand their goods as "Waterfill & Frazier" whisky when the Dowlings brought this action of injunction.

The chancellor granted the relief prayed for, and in this we concur. It seems to us that to state the case is to decide it. The object of the new concern in discarding the brands with which they commenced business of "G. G. Frazier & Co.," and of "J. M. Waterfill & Co.," to which there was no objection, and in adopting the artificial combination of "Waterfill & Frazier," was to get the benefit of the reputation of the old brand.

In Avery v. Meikle, 81 Ky., 113, Chief Justice Hargis argues that the chief test of intentional and illegal fraud is that the defendants there had changed the manner in which they had formerly branded their goods and had imitated the plaintiff's system.

It is not true as contended that this combination represented the name of either of the partners in the new concern. Neither J. M. Waterfill nor G. G. Frazier is named "Waterfill & Frazier," nor is that the name of W. J. Waterfill; and if the sole object in using this combination was to tell the truth as intimated it does not do so any more than did the discarded brand, "G. G. Frazier & Co.," or "J. M. Waterfill & Co."

The proof discloses clearly that the use of the word "distillers" by the Dowlings, after the words of the old brand, was not at all calculated to deceive the trade or the public, and hence this fact does not operate to prevent the plaintiffs from obtaining relief. (See Mattingly v. Mattingly, &c., 17 Ky. Law Rep., 1; Dant v. Head, 90 Ky., 261; Kidd v. Johnson, 100 U. S., 666.)

The judgment below is affirmed.

MAYSVILLE & BIG SANDY R. R. CO. V. TRUSTEES OF THE DOVER CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(Filed February 13, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Railroads—Injury to church property from construction of road—In this action againt a railroad company to recover damages for injury to church property caused by the construction and operation of defendant's road along the street in front of it, a verdict in favor of plaintiffs for $1,500 is not flagrantly against the evidence, the jurors being the judges of the facts.

2. The fact that the jury viewed the property after dark, and that one of the plaintiffs, who furnished the lanterns, was present, does not afford ground for a new trial, as there is no evidence that with the lights furnished the jury could not properly view the property, and the evidence shows that the plaintiff, who was present, did not speak to any of the jury or in their presence.

Wadsworth & Cochran for appellant.

E. L. Worthington, L. W. Robertson and Garrett S. Wall for appellee.

Appeal from Mason Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

This action was brought to recover the damages caused to the church property by the obstruction thereto by the construction and operation of appellant's road along the street in front of it. The jury was told by the court that they could only award damages for the obstruction to the easement of access to their property by the construction and prudent operation of the road along the street in front of the church, and that they could not make an allowance to the plaintiffs on account of depreciation in the value of the property by reason of noise from passing or standing trains disturbing public worship. The jury returned a verdict for plaintiffs for $1,500.

The principal reasons urged for reversal are, first, that the verdict is not supported by the evidence; second, that the view of the property by the jury was had after dark, and that one of the plaintiffs assisted in the view.

One witness testified that the value of the church property was $3,500 to $4,000 just before it was generally known that the road was to be built; that the value of the property was depreciated, by injury to ingress and egress, two-thirds of the value it possessed before the road was built.

Another witness fixed the value of the property at $3,500, and estimated its depreciation at two-thirds of that value by reason of the construction and operation of the road in obstructing the access to the property.

Another witness estimated the value of the property at from $3,000 to $3,500, and estimated the depreciation at three-fourths of the value of the property, but he considered that one-half of the damages was caused by the noise of passing trains and one-half on account of obstruction to access.

Another witness estimated the value of the property at $1,800 to $2,000 before the road was built, and estimated its value at $400 after it was built; that the construction of the road had destroyed the use of the property because access was obstructed. On cross-examination he said that the noise of trains produced one-half of the depreciation.

The jury saw and heard the witnesses. Two of them fixed the depreciation of the value of the property by the obstruction to access at much more than the verdict of the jury. One of them fixed it at lightly less, and one at considerably less than the verdict.

The jury saw and heard the witnesses, and viewed the property. The jurors were the judges of the facts, and we are not warranted, from the testimony in the case, to grant a new trial for the reason suggested, that the verdict is not supported by the evidence.

There is no evidence that with the lights furnished the jury they could not properly view the property. The uncontradicted evidence of the party furnishing the lanterns is that he did so at the instance of the sheriff in charge of the jury; that he did not speak to or talk with any of the jury, nor in their presence. There is no evidence that the sheriff was not present every moment during the examination of the property. Because of some unusal delay the jury reached the property at 5 P. M., instead of 2 P. M., on the day on which they started to and did view the property.

Judgment affirmed.

WHALEN, &C. ON PETITION.

(Filed February 16, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Ex parte petition for construction of will—The circuit court is not authorized to render judgment construing a will upon the ex parte petition of devisees where there is no allegation that any one is claiming adversely to the petitioners or that any controversy is liable to arise, and no affidavit even is filed as required by section 637 of the Civil Code.

L. Benton for petitioners.

Appeal from Harrison Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge White.

On the 8th day of May, 1895, J. W. Whalen, Newton Whalen and S. T. Whalen filed their petition in the Harrison Circuit Court, asking a construction of certain provisions of their father's will as to what estate they took in lands devised to them by said will.

The petition is purely ex parte. No defendants are made, nor do they claim that anyone claiming adversely to the devise in the will or denying their right in fee to the land devised, and no controversy is set up or shown in the petition as likely to arise, nor do they even file any affidavit, as required by section 637 of the Code.

We think the petition fails to make out a cause of action that either the Harrison Circuit Court or this court can take jurisdiction of, and, therefore, hold that the judgment appealed from was unauthorized. We, therefore, remand the proceedings, with direction to the lower court to set aside the judgment and dismiss the proceeding.

INDEX TO VOLUME XVIII.

ABANDONMENT— Page.
the right of abandonment of insured goods does not depend on the certainty but on the high probability of total loss..... 445
ACCOMPLICE—
each person engaged in a game of chance is guilty of an individual offense, and the one is not the accomplice of the other; and one may be convicted on the testimony of the other..... 624
ACCORD AND SATISFACTION—
1. in an action on a promissory note the defense that by an agreement, to which the surety was a party, the plaintiff had agreed to apply to the payment of the note a sum which he owed the surety and to release the principals was insufficient, no consideration for the release of the principals being alleged and the facts stated not being sufficient to constitute an accord and satisfaction..... 46
2. to constitute a good plea of accord and satisfaction the delivery or performance of what is agreed upon must be averred..... 46
ACCRETION—
one acquires title by accretion when real estate owned by him is gradually added to by alluvial deposit—where the stream which forms the line between two estates suddenly changes its course the original thread of the stream continues to mark the line between the estates..... 870
ACTIONS—
1. in determining whether a suit has been brought within the statutory period of limitation, the filing of the petition and the issuing of summons is to be regarded as the commencement of the action..... 2
2. commencement of—an action is not commenced until a summons is issued or a warning order is made..... 148
3. an action is not commenced by the issuing of a summons against a defendant who is known by the plaintiff to be a nonresident... 148
4. proceedings for failure to keep turnpike in repair must be in the name of the State..... 221
5. action to enforce lien on land for part of purchase money paid after rescission of contract of sale should be brought in the county in which the land is situated..... 230
6. an action for the rescission of a contract of sale of land is one in personam, and, therfore, transitory..... 230
7. upon suggestion of death of plaintiff the court should have revived the action in the name of his personal representative..... 285
8. where upon the maturity of the lien notes others were executed in their stead, a suit brought to enforce the lien before the maturity of the renewal note was not premature..... 312
9. a recovery by the husband as personal representative of his wife for her death by the wrongful act of another is a bar to an action by the husband for damages for the "loss of her society" from the time of the injury until her death..... 379
10. acceptance of forged note in renewal of a genuine note—payee has a right of action upon the original note..... 511
11. section 786, Kentucky Statutes, having provided that the fine, which it prescribes for the offense there created, is "to be recovered by indictment," the fine can not be recovered by penal action. 610
12. a railroad company may maintain an action in equity against the owner to have decaying trees near the track removed..... 624
13. to maintain a bill of peace one must show a right or title at law.. 707

ACTIONS—Continued— Page.
14. dismissal of—an action having been dismissed as to the appellants, the court should have rescinded an order placing the land in controversy in the hands of a receiver ... 728
15. an action to enforce the liability of a corporation upon a contract entered into in its behalf by the projectors of the corporation should be in equity ... 765
16. penal actions by the Commonwealth to recover penalty against life insurance companies barred after one year ... 778, 779
17. a suit on a county levy bond was properly brought in the name of the county, although the covenant was to the Commonwealth ... 809
18. action for injury resulting in death received by putting arm outside car window—allegation of petition of wilful neglect and of gross negligence—election ... 1089
19. an action was begun and limitation ceased to run upon the filing of a petition and issuing of summons, notwithstanding a mistake in the summons as to the name of the plaintiff ... 1099

ACTION TO QUIET TITLE—one can not maintain an action to quiet title to land unless he has the legal title ... 297

ADMINISTRATORS—as to the right of a father to administer upon the goods and chattels of his deceased son ... 104

ADMISSIONS—
an admission in a letter from the secretary of the company, from whose wire the intestate received the fatal shock, was not competent as an admission by the company as to the intestate's death ... 761

ADVANCEMENTS—
1. the finding of a chancellor below as to the amount of advancements received by a particular heir, based upon the report of a commissioner, will not be disturbed, the evidence being conflicting ... 72
2. the valuation placed by the testator upon the property devised was merely his estimate of its value and was not a direction to account for advancements made ... 189
3. advancement in certain case operated to cancel father's indebtedness to his daughter ... 1026

ADVERSE POSSESSION—
1. where the evidence shows that the use of a passway for fifteen years was permissive merely, the plaintiff in the action is not entitled to enjoin the defendants from closing same upon the ground of an adverse use ... 53
2. the proof showing an adverse possession by the decedent and his theirs that had ripened into a title, the right of the heirs to the land in controversy is perfect ... 72
3. where the joint owners of a tract of land, without executing deeds of partition, agreed upon a division of the land, fixing the line between them, persons claiming under one of them who have been in the actual, adverse possession of their part of the land for more than thirty years have acquired a possessory title ... 121
4. adverse possession for thirty years bars the right of recovery by the heirs of a married woman, although a sale of the land by her was void ... 215
5. the adverse holding relied on by the defendant in a particular case was not sustained by the evidence ... 564
6. adverse possession for forty years defeats the recovery of the plaintiffs in ejectment in this case ... 631
7. title to real estate by adverse holding may be proved by parol, but paper title, if denied, must be proved by the paper itself ... 683
8. if the title to land is acquired by deed or by possession, the owner is entitled to recover the land, though he had been out of the possession for any period short of fifteen years ... 871

ADVERSE USER—
1. obstruction of passway—adverse use for fifteen years established right to passway ... 869
2. adverse user of passway—limitation did not begin to run against an infant until he reached his majority—as fifteen years have not elapsed since that time the claim by adverse user is not sustained. 905

ALIMONY— Page.
the court properly placed the children under the control of the mother and made an allowance for her and their support where the husband abandoned them without cause 988
ALLEGATION AND PROOF—
a charge in an indictment of willful and malicious wounding by "shooting" is not supported by proof that the wounding was done by "striking" with a pistol or other weapon 57
APPEALS—
1. appellant can not complain here of the failure to file the exhibits referred to in the petition, there being no rule asked in the lower court to require them to be filed 2
2. while a pleading must upon demurrer be construed against the pleader where the averments are of doubtful meaning, yet where there has been no demurrer to a petition and no motion to make its averments more specific it will, if possible, be so construed upon appeal as to uphold a judgment in favor of plaintiff 9
3. the court will not disturb the verdict of the jury, there being evidence tending to sustain it, where the only ground for a reversal was that the evidence did not support the verdict 14
4. the evidence in certain cases was sufficient to authorize the chancellor's judgment dismissing the plaintiff's petition and the defendant's counterclaim 88
5. a judgment in favor of a defendant for the amount he paid to plaintiff upon a judgment which was subsequently reversed was proper 88
6. the fact that the plaintiff sued as "agent" without disclosing the names of the persons for whom he was acting can not be complained of on appeal where no objection was raised below, such failure amounting to a waiver of the objection 55
7. the finding of the chancellor below will not be disturbed in particular case, the evidence being conflicting 72
8. the evidence in particular case is sufficient to support the judgment dismissing the petition 76
9. where there was evidence tending to establish the guilt of accused, this court can not disturb a verdict of guilty upon the ground that the evidence was insufficient to warrant a conviction 99
10. the evidence being conflicting, this court will not disturb the finding of the master commissioner and of the chancellor as to the cost of certain repairs upon sawmill property, etc 125
11. the measure of damages laid down by the Superior Court upon a former appeal in certain case would control if the evidence were sufficient to authorize a recovery regardless of the view of this court as to the correctness of the opinion of that court upon that question 127
12. in an action by the heirs of the husband to recover land belonging to husband and wife the defendant, who does not by his answer assert claim to the land, can not complain in this court for the first time that the heirs of the wife were not joined as parties 137
13. this court, in the absence of the firm books, will not disturb the judgment of the chancellor, based upon the report of a commissioner, stating in detail the partnership transaction 150
14. an appellee can not complain by cross appeal of a judgment in favor of a co-appellee, as a cross appeal can affect the appellant only 159
15. the conclusions announced by the Superior Court upon a former appeal in this case must be accepted as the law of the case, however erroneous they may appear to this court 167
16. as to what will be considered a part of the record upon appeal to Court of Appeals 167
17. verdict not disturbed where testimony was conflicting 170
18. judgment having been rendered on the 24th day of the month, a motion for a new trial made on the 27th day of the month was too late, and, therefore, the case is to be treated as if there had been no motion for new trial 171
19. in the absence of a motion for a new trial in an ordinary action in which the law and facts have been submitted to the court, nothing can be considered by this court except the question whether the pleadings stated a cause of action and whether the evidence heard and properly presented by a bill of exceptions authorized the judgment 171

APPEALS—Continued— Page.
20. in the absence of evidence this court can not say that the lower court erred in refusing to allow certain credits indorsed on the note sued on 171
21. upon appeal by a defendant the value in controversy is the amount of the judgment rendered against him and not the amount claimed by the plaintiff; the amount of the judgment in this case being less than $100, this court has no jurisdiction of the appeal 172
22. the judgment appealed from, being in accordance with the mandate of this court on a former appeal, must be affirmed, though inconsistent with a subsequent opinion of the court in another case 186
23. the collection of a judgment does not preclude the prosecution of an appeal 202
24. this court can not reverse in a criminal case for an error occurring at the hearing of the motion for a new trial 205
25. as appellant was found guilty only of manslaughter the court will not inquire whether three was any error in the instructions as to murder 212
26. though the admission of certain evidence was error the accused was not prejudiced thereby, he having admitted the facts proven to be true 220
27. no reversal on account of action of court in granting a new trial in the absence of bill of exceptions 222
28. as to right of appeal from a decission of the contesting board adjudging the act, under which the election was held, as void 233
29. no provision in charter for cities of the third class for testing the validity of city ordinances—method for testing same is by appeal from judgment in police court 269
30. the Court of Appeals has no jurisdiction of an appeal from a judgment of the circuit court establishing a town 271
31. conclusiveness of opinion of Superior Court on former appeal 303
32. the court refuses to reverse a judgment for $3,000 damages on account of the action of the trial court in setting aside a former verdict for $6,750 because it was excessive 326
33. transfer of suit from one court to another—as to the presumption indulged where the transcript fails to show clearly at what stage of the proceedings the transfer was made 364
34. where the transcript shows that the record contained a paper which may have contained matter that would sustain the decision, the appellant must include such paper in the transaction or this court will presume the decision appealed from correct 364
35. in the absence of an order of court or a bill of exceptions showing the contrary, the presumption must be indulged that a certified copy of the record of another suit, which was made a part of the answer, was a part of this record and considerded on the trial of the case 364
36. second appeal—effect of former opinion where the facts presented on the second differ materially from those of the former 367
37. language of Commonwealth's attorney in certain case not prejudicial, and there can be no reversal on that account 367
38. judgment of circuit court dismissing an appeal from the county court and the proceedings to open a road is affirmed on this appeal 376
39. as to power of Court of Appeals to appoint a commissioner—may use commissioner below 400
40. this court can not reverse on the ground that the verdict is not supported by the evidence where there is evidence which tends to show defendant's guilt 510
41. the judgment will not be disturbed where the court below proceeded according to the direction of this court upon a former appeal 510
42. when the court acts upon its own motion an exception alone to the decision entitles a party to rely for a reversal upon the decision if erroneous 521
43. partial transcript—schedules filed with clerk—duty of clerk to make single transcript of such parts of the record as called for by schedules 525

APPEALS—Continued— Page.
44. where appellant obtains and files a partial transcript, which is apparently sufficient for the purposes of the appeal, the appeal will not be dismissed upon motion of appellee, the appellant taking the risk of the transcript being sufficient 525
45. an appellant, in order to protect himself from paying for unnecessary parts of the record ordered by the appellee, may apply to the judge of the trial court to obtain a schedule 525
46. appellant having objected to appellee's offer to file a reply can not now complain that none was filed 536
47. in the absence of the evidence heard the court must presume that it authorized the judgment rendered 536
48. where in ordinary action the law and facts were submitted to the court, the judgment of the court must be treated as the verdict of a properly instructed jury, and can not be disturbed unless flagrantly against the evidence 598
49. in the absence of a motion for a new trial the only question that can be considered is whether the pleadings and evidence support the judgment 594
50. after judgment has been affirmed upon appeal, the appellee failing to prosecute a cross appeal, he can not re-open the question by another appeal 607
51. "error of law occurring at the trial and excepted to at the time by the defendant," assigned as grounds for a new trial, is not sufficient to authorize this court to reverse for an error in giving or refusing instructions 633
52. the action of the trial judge in overruling a motion to have a jury empaneled to try the question of the sanity of the accused can not be reviewed on appeal, no evidence being heard on the motion. 641
53. an order overruling a motion of an officer for an order of the circuit court allowing a reward which was offered by governor for a fugitive from justice is subject to revision by this court 646
54. an appeal does not lie from an order sustaining a motion to set aside an indictment 648
55. this court can not review the action of the lower court in overruling a motion for a new trial, a part of the evidence heard on the motion not appearing in the record 690
56. the judgment in a particular action reversed that other persons may be made parties to the action 718
57. contention as to whether the grantees in a conveyance held the land in trust for certain heirs of the grantor—the judgment of the chancellor that no trust existed is supported by the evidence. 723
58. this court will not reverse because of a violation of section 606, subsection 4 of the Civil Code, as to the introduction of testimony, if it appears that the party appealing has not been prejudiced 725
59. where the court is satisfied that the rejection of evidence technically competent did not affect the substantial rights of accused the judgment will not be reversed 812
60. circuit judge has a sound discretion in passing upon a motion for change of venue—his ruling will not be disturbed unless this court is satisfied the discretion was abused 885
61. instructions referred to in the bill of exceptions, but not embodied therein, can not be considered by this court upon appeal 899
62. where the bill of exceptions does not contain all the instructions given the court can not reverse for an error in instructing the jury 899
63. action on note by payee—appeal of a surety against his cosurety dismissed, there being no judgment in his favor 919
64. no reversal on ground of admission of incompetent testimony, that error not being made a ground for a new trial 937
65. modification of injunction pending appeal 978
66. failure to file transcript in time 982
67. suit for settlement of assigned estate—deed of assignment not copied into transcript—presumption on appeal that it was sufficient to sustain the action of the court in denying the debtor the right of homestead 1001
68. upon appeal from a judgment in an action in which the law and facts were submitted to the court, the findings of fact are entitled to the weight which attaches to the verdict of a jury 1046

APPEALS—Continued— Page.
69. no bill of exceptions being filed on appeal, the court can only consider the sufficiency of the allegations of the petition 1064
70. after the lapse of ten years, and at the expiration of that time the entry of an order nunc pro tunc, it was too late to prosecute an appeal 1088
APPEALS TO CIRCUIT COURT—appeal to circuit court from orders of county court admitting will to record did not suspend powers of administrator 869
APPEARANCE—
where a defendant, although not summoned, entered her appearance and the allegations of the petition were on her motion taken to be controverted, the court had jurisdiction of her person 175
APPELLATE JURISDICTION—
1. an appeal lies from a judgment in rem to enforce a street assessment lien without regard to the amount for which the lien is adjudged 238
2. Court of Appeals has no jurisdiction of an appeal from a judgment enjoining appellant from collecting a judgment for an amount less than $100 897
3. costs properly included as part of the amount in controversy in particular case—the sum of the debt and costs being more than $100, this court has jurisdiction on appeal 908
APPRAISEMENT—
1. failure to have appraisers sworn will not affect the title of the purchaser at execution sale unless the purchaser participates in the irregularity 1005
2. as to sufficiency of appraisement of execution defendants' interest in land 1005
ARBITRATION AND AWARD—
1. arbitrators have no power to select an umpire unless they are authorized to do so by the terms of the submission 216
2. award is void in so far as it determines matters not submitted 216
3. an agreement to refer a case to arbitration will not be regarded by the courts 709
ARREST OF JUDGMENT—a motion for arrest of judgment can not be sustained if the indictment states facts constituting a public offense within the jurisdiction of the court 668
ARSON—
it is arson at common law to maliciously burn another's barn stored with hay or grain 100
ASSAULT AND BATTERY—
1. in certain case the court should have given an instruction as to the offense of assault and battery, which was a lower degree of the offense charged 93
2. the evidence shows the defendant, if guilty of any offense, was guilty of an assault and battery 93
3. judgment awarding the plaintiff $100 damages for an assault and battery sustained by the court 913
4. action to recover damages for an assault on married woman—evidence tending to show a miscarriage as a result of the assault is competent 1004
ASSESSMENT—
1. a report by the sheriff to the county clerk of property omitted by the assessor is sufficient if certified by the clerk, though not signed by the sheriff, since the law does not specify how the report shall be made 2
2. the statute having expressly excepted from appeal all obligations incurred under existing laws, it did not relieve appellant from liability for the tax of a previous year, and the sheriff had authority to make the assessment 2
3. no valid assessment can be made unless made by a proper officer, and the person assessed is entitled to a hearing as to the value to be placed upon his property 35
4. the defendants, having had an opportunity to apply for correction of an assessment by the proper tribunal, but failed to do so, can not complain of same in an action to recover the taxes 417

ASSESSMENTS FOR STREET IMPROVEMENT— Page.
1. as to method of apportionment of cost of improvement—what is "original construction" of street within the meaning of the statute 473
2. in assessing property for the cost of construction of an alley in the interior of a square, the quarter square and not the whole square is the taxing district 475
3. correction of estimates properly made—interest on the amount charged against certain individual should bear interest only from the date of the judgment 910

ASSESSOR—
1. an act creating a taxing district is unconstitutional and void so far as it authorizes the turnpike company to appoint an assessor, requiring neither bond nor oath, and making no provision for a hearing by the taxpayer as to the value placed on his property ... 85
2. the company did not have the power to appoint a person as assessor who did not reside in the taxing district, since the Constitution requires all officers to reside in the county or district for which they act 85

ASSIGNMENTS—
assignment of notes—the signing of the names of the payees as "administrators of J F. Triplett, deceased," does not nullify the assignment 602

ASSIGNMENTS BY OPERATION OF LAW—
1. it is not sufficient that the petition in an action to have an act of preference operate as an assignment be filed within six months after the act complained of, but the action must be commenced within that time, as required by section 39, Civil Code 148
2. where it is sought to have an act of preference committed by an insolvent debtor declared to operate as an assignment under the statute, both the debtor and the preferred creditor are necessary parties to the action 148
3. a preference of one creditor to the exclusion of others does not, on that account, render the assignment void, but may be enforced for the exclusive benefit of the preferred creditor unless the excluded creditor brings an action within six months to have it operate as an assignment under the statute 321
4. action to have mortgage operate as an assignment of all the mortgagor's property for benefit of creditors—necessary averments should be definitely and distinctly made in the petition—denial of knowledge or information, etc., not sufficient 462
5. suit to have mortgage declared to be a preference—sale of attached property set aside where the mortgagee was a nonresident and no warning order was made against him 565
6. evidence authorized the chancellor to declare the mortgage to operate as an assignment under the statute 918

ASSIGNMENTS FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS—
1. an assignment for the benefit of creditors by the purchasers of goods procured under fraudulent representations does not prevent a recovery of the goods 226
2. the assignee occupies no better position than the assignors 226
3. advancements on account made by assignee to attorney—loan to attorney by receiver—liability of assignee 559
4. receiver not responsible for the failure to collect a loan made to the attorney of the assignee for the benefit of creditors if he took bond therefor in good faith and the surety, at date of the execution of the bond, was solvent and good for that amount 559
5. reconveyance to assignor—bond of indemnity—subrogation of creditor to rights of assignee 578
6. reservation by assignor in a deed of assignment of a "homestead exemption" reserves only such right as the law gave him 1001
7. purchase by assignee of bid of one who had, prior to the assignment, bought the the land of the debtor at execution sale—he must be regarded as having redeemed the property for the benefit of the debtor 1043
8. a debtor who executed to the assignee a receipt and released him from liability, the settlement being acquiesced in by all parties for years, is concluded by the settlement in the absence of proof of fraud 1043

ATTACHMENTS— Page.
1. attaching creditors having had lands placed in the hands of a receiver in order to subject the rents, they thereby acquired a lien upon the rents, and the creditor to whom the grantor of the lands had assigned the purchase-money notes as collateral did not acquire a lien upon the rents by suing out an attachment and having process of garnishment served upon the receiver..... 101
2. where it is stated in an affidavit for an attachment that the plaintiff "believes" he ought to recover a certain sum, followed by an affidavit of his attorney (the plaintiff himself being absent from the county) that he "believe" the statements in the affidavit are true, this is sufficient as to the sum to be recovered..... 101
3. judgment sustaining an attachment upon the ground of no property to satisfy the demand was supported by the evidence 272
4. the validity of an attachment and the sufficiency of the grounds thereof may be tried and determined after a personal judgment has been entered 465
5. where a person has a mortgage lien on personal property the mortgage expressly providing that the mortgagees might retain the possession and use of the property the mortgagor can not be defeated of his right by the levy of a general attachment by another upon the property and a sale by order of the county judge..... 500
6. although the mortgaged property was not subject to the general attachment, that constituted no reason for discharging same, the grounds thereof not being controverted and no party in interest having moved for the discharge 500
7. suit to have mortgage declared to be a preference—sale of attached property set aside where the mortgagee was a nonresident and no warning order was made against him..... 565
8. failure of garnishee to make satisfactory disclosures—plaintiff might sue garnishee 573
9. attachment of insurance money to satisfy a debt for purchase price of land—evidence was sufficient to authorize the judgment sustaining the attachment..... 701
10. service of summons upon garnishees gave to the attaching creditor a lien upon money held by them, although they had issued check for same to the agent of the debtor..... 785
11. the debtor's undivided interest in his deceased father's land having been sold by him by title bond before the debt sued on was created, that interest was not subject to attachment..... 907
12. grounds of the attachment against the tobacco levied upon were sustained by the proof..... 912
13. action to recover damages for wrongful suing out of attachment—defects in petition cured by answer 997
14. action for damages for wrongful attachment—attorney's fees—proof should have been confined to attorney's fees paid or agreed to be paid "for the defense of the attachment"..... 997
15. judgment sustaining attachment and enforcing mortgage lien was proper..... 1017
16. contest between attaching creditors of a nonresident firm—evidence sufficient to support finding of chancellor that appellant was a partner in th firm and not an employe..... 1079

ATTORNEYS—
1. where a prisoner has been put at hard labor for the nonpayment of a fine the county is not liable to the county attorney for 30 per cent. of the fine as provided by law, where such fines are imposed and "collected" 61
2. improper statement of Commonwealth's attorney in his argument before the jury—when not prejudicial to defendant..... 99
3. improper for Commonwealth's attorney to say in his argument to the jury "the defendant is no boy; he is no spring chicken; he has already served a term for the State at Frankfort"..... 99
4. attorney's fee for defending lunatic—attorney not entitled to recover fee in the absence of allegation that services were necessary —lunatic has no power to bind his estate..... 987

ATTORNEY AND CLIENT—
1. the evidence in particular case is sufficient to support the judgment of the chancellor disallowing appellant's claim against the estate of a deceased attorney for an amount which was allowed to decedent as additional compensation for his services as appellant's attorney..... 165

ATTORNEY AND CLIENT—Continued— Page.
2. in an action for malicious prosecution the defendant is not liable if he acted in good faith upon the advice of an attorney after laying the facts before him 299
3. attorney had the right under the circumstances to consent for his client to a correction in the judgment 422
4. where one is resisting the relief sought in an action, and employs his own counsel, although the judgment granting the relief may directly or incidentally benefit him, he ought not to be compelled to contribute to the payment of the counsel fees of his adversary. 615
5. action to secure attorneys' fee—error to allow client to state that his understanding of the contract was different from the plain language of the writing 709
6. action by client to recover money retained by attorney as his fee—the only issue being as to the amount to be retained, the burden of proof is on plaintiff 808
7. attorney entitled to reasonable compensation for services rendered for one upon trial of proceeding to have such one adjudged a lunatic 879
8. action to recover attorney's fee fixed by contract—employment of additional counsel by client at the instance of attorney did not deprive the latter of the right to the full amount 901

BAIL—
1. the bail of a defendant, who has been committed to jail by an examining court, having at the next term of the court having jurisdiction to try the offense been fixed by that court, the clerk of the court may take the bail bond at any time after that term, whether it be during the vacation or during the subsequent term of court 51
2. the proceedings upon a forfeited bail bond subsequent to the service of summons are the same as in an ordinary civil action 51
3. power of court to set aside order for change of venue—liability of sureties on bail bond 1093
4. after judgment sustaining an order of arrest in a civil action the circuit court has no jurisdiction to discharge the defendant as an insolvent debtor, and its order to that effect does not exonerate the bail 1106

BANKS AND BANKING—
1. a depositor has an action for damages against the bank for its refusal, without sufficient justification, to pay his check 178
2. bank may apply deposit of customer to payment of his indebtedness to the bank—refusal to honor checks sufficient appropriation of the deposit 178
3. publication of false statement by bank officers as to its financial condition, whereby persons were induced to purchase bank stock—measure of damages 562
4. as to personal liability of bank directors for false statement as to the condition of the bank 716
5. credit of collection to wrong person—proper party may recover the sum of the bank 922

BAR—
1. although a judgment was in favor of the infants by their next friend, when it appears the action was brought by the guardian, it is a bar to any further action either by a next friend or by the statutory guardian 9
2. if actual injury results to plaintiff's spring by reason of the drainage from a privy running into same, he will not be precluded from procuring an abatement of the privy as a nuisance by reason of the dismissal of his petition to enjoin the erection of the privy because of uncertainty as to the anticipated damage 73
3. a former conviction for a breach of the peace is a bar to a subsequent prosecution for assault and battery, based upon the act constituting that breach of the peace 145
4. adverse claimants, who were made parties to an action and failed to assert claim to the land, are barred by judgment in the case 253
5. a recovery by the husband as personal representative of his wife for her death by the wrongful act of another is a bar to an action by the husband for damages for the "loss of her society" from the time of the injury until her death 379
6. neither the judgment of the county nor circuit court dismissing the proceedings to open a road will be a bar to new proceedings.. 376

BILL OF EXCEPTIONS— Page.
1. as to time for filing bill of exceptions when day for filing is fixed by order of court ... 202
2. no reversal on account of action of court in granting a new trial in the absence of a bill of exceptions ... 229
3. instructions referred to in the bill of exceptions, but not embodied therein can not be considered by this court upon appeal ... 899
4. where the bill of exceptions does not contain all the instructions given, the court can not reverse for an error in instructing the jury ... 899

BILLS OF LADING—
bills of lading are assignable ... 745

BILLS AND NOTES—
1. in an action on a promissory note the defense that by an agreement, to which the surety was a party, the plaintiff had agreed to apply to the payment of the note a sum which he owed the surety and to release the principals was insufficient, no consideration for the release of the principals being alleged and the facts stated not being sufficient to constitute an accord and satisfaction ... 46
2. execution of notes to a bank to be substituted in renewal of other notes—misappropriation of proceeds of same by bank—bank not entitled to judgment upon the notes ... 159
3. as the parties were joint makers of the notes and the paper was not placed on the footing of a foreign bill of exchange, there was no necessity for protest on notice of dishonor ... 159
4. notes not on footing of bills of exchange—assignment did not cut off the defense of fraud ... 223
5. action to enforce vendor's lien for purchase money—notes not due at institution of suit—supplemental decree of sale ... 254
6. the compromise of a claim against defendant and the dismissal of an action thereon was a sufficient consideration for the note sued on in this action ... 285
7. effect of renewal of lien notes—suit brought to enforce the lien before the maturity of the renewal notes was not premature ... 312
8. suit by administrator upon note executed to his intestate—asserted claim of third person to the note under an assignment—denial that the assignment was the act of the intestate—burden was on claimant of the note ... 342
9. execution of accommodation paper by corporation—signing bill of exchange by secretary and treasurer—his act binding on corporation ... 425
10. endorsements on a note are prima facie evidence against the owner in possession ... 468
11. a promise by the obligor in a note to the purchaser of same to pay the note after it was assigned to her does not defeat his right to make the defense relied upon ... 468
12. action upon certain promissory notes—evidence sufficient to support judgment for plaintiff ... 478
13. acceptance of forged note in renewal of a genuine note—payee has a right of action upon the original note ... 511
14. where the original note was executed September 30, 1884, due in twelve months, a suit brought September 23, 1892, was not barred by limitation ... 511
15. an assignment of a forged renewal note passed to the assignee the claim which the assignor had against the sureties on the original note ... 511
16. the renewal note being a forgery, the assignor was not released from liability by the failure of the assignee to prosecute the makers of the note with diligence ... 511
17. failure of consideration not a defense to the title of bona fide holder of negotiable instrument who acquired without notice of infirmity ... 569
18. possession of such a note by an incorporated bank—presumption that bank acquired it in good faith ... 569
19. in action on note this presumption can not be overcome by anything short of allegation of facts which, if true, would render the note void from the beginning ... 569
20. holder of note not affected by bad faith on part of endorser—certain facts not sufficient to put holder on inquiry ... 569

affirmed the judgment for the reason that the injunction was the relief sought; in fact, gives the relief if sustained, and that in such cases no recovery could be had on the bond for counsel fees, quoting Bergin v. Sharer, 14 B. M., 497.

Judgment affirmed.

CUNDIFF V. CUNDIFF, &C.

(Filed February 27, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Breach of contract—Measure of damages—Conjectural profits—In this action by appellees to recover of appellant damages arising from the failure of the latter to roll the logs from land rented to appellee, to build fencing to keep out stock, and to dig a well according to the terms of the contract of rental, the appellees were not entitled to recover as damages the value of the crop which they might have produced upon such of the land as they did not cultivate by reason of the failure of appellant to remove the logs, conjectural profits not being a criterion of damages. And the appellees having failed to state the amount of damages sustained by reason of appellant's failure to build the fencing and to dig the well, they are without proof of actual damages sustained on that branch of the case.

2. Same—Instructions—There was no attempt on the part of the appellees to show the "reasonable value of the use of the land," of which they claim to have been deprived, and an instruction to the jury that "the measure of damages is the reasonable value of the use of the land of which he was deprived, considering his force of work hands," etc., was erroneous.

Birkhead & Clement for appellant.

Noe & Massie for appellees.

Appeal from Daviess Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

This is an action by appellees against appellant sounding in damages for the alleged violation of a contract by which appellant leased to appellees about twenty acres of land to be planted in corn, tobacco, sorghum, etc. It is alleged that appellant was to roll the logs on the land, and fence it in time for the appellees to plant it in a seasonable time, and that appellant was to have a well dug on the rented premises for the use of the appellees; that the appellant failed to roll all the logs and fence it in time for appellees to put in their crop on all the land rented of appellant; that he failed to have the well dug in a suitable time, which required them to carry water some distance, and that the fence was not sufficient to turn stock; that stock broke into his fields and damaged his crop, and in consequence of these several violations of the contract the appellees were damaged in the sum of $325. The several breaches of the contract were denied.

The appellee, W. H. Cundiff, testified that he was damaged $325 "by the failure of defendant to comply with his contract." This was an estimate by a witness who, in reaching the conclusion, determined in his mind the rule for measuring damages; they may have been proximate or remote. On cross-examination he said: "The items that go to make up the damages of $325 is what tobacco I could and would have raised on the land, judging by the crop of the previous years, which tobacco would have brought me about $260, and the corn I could and would have raised on the land would have been worth $60 or $70.

BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION— Page.
1. stipulation in an obligation executed in another State to pay "a reasonable attorney's fee," in the event of litigation, will not be enforced in this State 768
2. premature dissolution of building association—payment by advanced members of balances due on their securities 768
3. winding up an insolvent building association—settlement with and distribution to stockholders, borrowers and non-borrowers ... 768

BURDEN OF PROOF—
1. suit by administrator upon note executed to his intestate—asserted claim of third person to the note under an assignment—denial that the assignment was the act of the intestate—burden was on claimant of the note 343
2. appellant having filed response to rule of court setting up certain facts, the burden was on appellant 536
3. in an action to enjoin the collection of taxes the burden is on the plaintiff to show that the property was improperly assessed or that it is not liable for the taxes in question 543
4. in every case of separation of jury on trial of felony case the State must show there was no opportunity for the exercise of improper influences on the juror 575
5. action by insured to recover from insurance company money paid by him for the purpose of renewing policy which had lapsed, the obligation being in writing to refund the money if the company declined to restore the policy—when burden is on defendant insurance company 744
6. conveyance to father in trust for his daughter attacked by creditor of father as fraudulent—circumstances were sufficient to throw burden on defendant 759
7. action by client to recover money retained by attorney as his fee—the only issue being as to the amount to be retained, the burden of proof is on plaintiff 808
8. appellant having acquiesced in the ruling of the court that the burden rested upon appellee, who then introduced his testimony first, apellant waived his right to the concluding argument to the jury 913
9. if a will is consistent in its provisions and rational on its face, the burden of proof shifts to the contestants to show that the testator was of unsound mind at the time of its execution 1074

CARRIERS—
1. a postal clerk carried by a railroad is a passenger as regards the liability of the company for injuries received by him 82
2. passenger carriers can not by contract relieve themselves from liability for personal injuries to passengers caused by the negligence of the carriers 735
3. a shipper of goods may, even after delivery to the carrier and the bill of lading has been signed and delivered, direct the goods delivered to another consignee 745
4. consignee in bill of lading presumptively the owner of the goods—as to notice required where consignor intends to control the ultimate disposition of the goods 745
5. bills of lading are assignable 745
6. carrier liable in damages to the shipper where it delivered the goods to the consignee without enforcing the condition upon the performance of which alone the consignor had directed the delivery of the goods 746
7. contract limiting common law liability of carrier 974
8. duty of conductor of an electric street car to warn passenger of danger 1086

CAVEAT EMPTOR—
1. the rule of caveat emptor does not apply where the seller has full knowledge of the quality of the article, and the buyer, from lack of experience or capacity, has not such knowledge 432
2. the rule of caveat emptor should apply where the buyer tested the implements before purchasing 432

CHANGE OF VENUE—
circuit judge has a sound discretion in passing upon a motion for change of venue—his ruling will not be disturbed unless this court is satisfied the discretion was abused 835

CHILDREN— Page.
discretion of children—degree of care required to be exercised by railroad company toward children 258
CIRCUIT COURTS—
1. after judgment sustaining an order of arrest in a civil action the circuit court has no jurisdiction to discharge the defendant as an insolvent debtor, and its order to that effect does not exonerate the bail 1106
2. ex parte petition for construction of will—circuit court not authorized to render judgment construing will where there is no allegation that any one else is claiming adversely to the petitioners or that any controversy is liable to arise 1112
CLERICAL MISPRISION—
1. where the record makes it manifest that the error in a judgment was a misprision of the clerk, the court properly entered a judgment nunc pro tunc 966
2. the rendition of judgment against defendants for a few dollars more than the prayer of the petition authorized was a clerical misprision 809
CODES OF PRACTICE—Provisions cited, construed, etc.—
CIVIL CODE—
1. section 39 148
2. section 62, subsection 3 1092
3. section 113, subsection 4 974
4. section 118, subsection 7 661
5. section 134 283
6. section 388 500
7. section 490 185
8. section 606, subsection 4 725
9. section 637 1112
10. section 722 611
CRIMINAL CODE—
1. section 11 610
2. section 158 129
3. section 210, subsection 7 652
COMMENCEMENT OF ACTIONS—
in determining whether a suit has been brought within the statutory period of limitation, the filing of the petition and the issuing of summons is to be regarded as the commencement of the action ... 2
COMMISSIONERS—action on special commissioner's bond to recover money collected—verdict supported by evidence 252
COMMISSIONS—
where a real estate agent undertakes to find a purchaser for property upon certain terms his commission is earned if he presents a purchaser upon modified terms who is accepted by the principal 299
COMMON CARRIERS—
1. must acquire facilities for transporting commodities—insufficiency of rolling stock—excused from liability in a certain case for failure to furnish mining company with cars for the transportation of coal 126
2. where goods delivered to carrier were destroyed by fire by reason of its delay in shipping them, the carrier is liable for the loss 227
3. action against carrier for failure to deliver goods in good condition—fire in car caused by negligence of carrier 228
4. a common carrier can not by contract escape liability for damage or loss due to its negligence 229
5. carriers of live stock—in case of unreasonable delay in transporting live stock the company is liable for the loss occasioned thereby—waiver of notice of loss 275
COMMON SCHOOLS—
1. the common school law provides that the railroad tax shall be apportioned between the white and colored schools in the same district, but this provision has no application to the tax upon the property of any other corporation 103
2. in the taxation of private corporations for the support of graded schools the stock owned by colored persons is liable to be taxed only for the colored schools, and that owned by white persons only for the white schools 103

claims that the council of the city elected him to the position, and this action was brought to establish his claim.

The charter (1874) provides that a majority of the board of councilmen shall constitute a quorum to transact all ordinary business.

A rule had been adopted by the council which reads as follows: "A majority of a quorum of members elected and voting shall be necessary to choose any officer elected by this board." As to the right of council to adopt it there can be no question. This rule was in force at the time Collopy claims he was elected. There were fourteen members of the board of council. Of course eight would constitute a quorum. The record of the proceedings of the council shows that when it convened at the meeting during which the voting was done for the election of the "foreman of street repairs and overseer of the poor" thirteen of the members were present.

The record of the council exhibited in this record is silent as to the number present when the voting took place. Only seven members voted at the election and all voted for Collopy. However, in our opinion the question to be determined is not as to whether, under the law ordinarily governing the action of boards of council of municipalities, those who may have been present and did not vote should be counted to make a quorum, nor as to whether under that law, if a majority of the council failed to attend, a majority of those present may act.

The question is whether the rule required that a quorum should vote in order that a majority of it should be enabled to elect an officer. If the contention of appellant be correct then five members could meet and elect such officers as the council were authorized to elect, regardless of whether a quorum was present or participated in the election. We are of the opinion that the meaning of it is that a "quorum of the members elected" should vote, and that a majority of that quorum could elect when the quorum was "voting." We will not elaborate our views, but quote from the opinion of the lower court as follows, to wit: "I have not the least doubt as to the purpose of the council in adopting that rule. It was to require at least a quorum to place itself on record in the important matter of electing city officials by that body. And this was the construction placed upon it by the board itself, to which we may look if there be any doubt about it. The presiding officer so construed it, and declared that no one was elected by reason of the failure of the quorum to vote, and the board quietly, without a dissenting voice, and for an entire year, so far as appears, acquiesced in that construction.

"Nor is this construction inconsistent with the language employed in the rule. It is certainly as easy to refer the words 'elected and voting' to the antecedent 'quorum' as it is to treat the words 'majority of a quorum' as an antecedent.

"If, as claimed by plaintiff, five be sufficient to a choice, regardless of the number of votes cast, then the words 'elected and voting' are wholly useless, and should have been omitted. They do no duty whatever, since it is irresistably implied that the successful candidate received as many as five legal votes. This means that he was voted for by five members entitled to vote. It is idle to talk about being elected by votes not cast at all. The words referred to ('elected and voting') are, therefore, upon plaintiff's theory, 'worse than useless;' they only tend to confuse what would be absolutely clear if they were omitted.

"On the other hand if the intent of the rule be to require a quorum to vote these words become intelligible and signify something. We have the idea of a quorum vote; not that any particular candidate

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW— Page.
1. a bill, properly enrolled, signed by the presiding officer of each of the two houses of the general assembly and signed and approved by the governor, can not be impeached by reference to the journals of either house either in a matter affecting the contents of the bill or the regularity of the steps taken in its passage 17
2. the legislature has the power to authorize the county court to declare the office of sheriff vacant upon the failure of the incumbent to renew either his revenue bond or general official bond within the time fixed by statute 25
3. an act creating a taxing district and levying a tax upon the property therein for the benefit of a turnpike road company is not void because some of the property embraced therein is included in the taxing district of another company, for the benefit of which it is also taxed 35
4. the fact that the road is of no value to the complainants, or that the tax is "useless and burdensome," does not invalidate the act as to them 35
5. an act creating a taxing district is unconstitutional and void so far as it authorizes the turnpike company to appoint an assessor, requiring neither bond nor oath, and making no provision for a hearing by the taxpayer as to the value placed on his property ... 35
6. a turnpike company, for whose benefit a tax was levied, had no power to appoint as assessor a person who did not reside in the taxing district, since the Constitution requires all officers to reside in the county or district for which they act 35
7. section 816 of the Kentucky Statutes, which provides for the punishment of any railroad corporation which shall charge "more than a just and reasonable rate of toll or compensation for the transportation of passengers or freight," is void for uncertainty, no standard being fixed by which the corporation may regulate its conduct 42
8. the infliction of the penalty prescribed by section 816, Kentucky Statutes, would be taking property without due process of law and in violation of both State and Federal Constitutions 42
9. a statute fixing a penalty upon any railroad corporation which shall charge "more than a just and reasonable rate of toll, etc.," could not be enforced against a corporation which has not exceeded the rates fixed in its charter, as those rates remain the legal rates until changed by law 42
10. section 1899 of the Kentucky Statutes and succeeding sections, providing for the punishment of the offense of catching fish with a seine, etc., do not violate the provision of the Constitution prohibiting special legislation for the protection of game and fish... 50
11. a statute providing that a part of a fine imposed for a violation thereof shall go to the civil officer securing the apprehension and conviction of the offender is valid 50
12. the statute conferring upon circuit courts the power to establish towns is not in violation of the Constitution 271
13. it is within the power of the legislature to determine from what judgments appeals may be taken 271
14. the legislature can not delegate to the mayor and board of aldermen the power to determine for what causes city officers may be removed 329
15. the legislature had power to confer upon the board of aldermen the jurisdiction to remove a park commissioner by virtue of section 160 of the Constitution 341
16. as to power of legislature to create courts 341
17. constitutional power of general assembly to extend territorial limits of municipal corporation is not restricted—the only restriction is in respect to the power to tax the added territory 389
18. a city or town may by statute be constituted a taxing district, with power as such to impose a railroad or school tax upon the property therein 417
19. the salary of a city officer may be fixed by statute or ordinance after he goes into office where no salary has theretofore been fixed. 427
20. a statute fixing the minimum limit to the salaries of the members of the boards of public safety and public works of a city did not

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—Continued— Page.
fix the salaries of those officers ... 427
21. members of boards of public safety and public works of cities are officers within the meaning of the Constitution, section 161—their salaries can not be changed during their term of office ... 427
22. those sections of the Kentucky Statutes providing for the trial of indictable offense before a county judge before an indictment has been found in the circuit court are not in violation of section 12 of the Constitution ... 481
23. the legislature having been invested by the Constitution with the power to provide the mode of filling an office, it may also determine the manner and by what tribunal an incumbent may be removed ... 546
24. an office not fixed by the Constitution, but established by statute, may be abolished by statute unless a contract right has been secured by the incumbent ... 684
25. the legislature had the power to amend the charters of town and cities between the adoption of the present Constitution and the enactment of general laws for the government of towns and cities. 909
26. amendment of March 31, 1892, to the charter of the city of Mayfield is valid ... 909
27. section 832 of Myers' Code was in contravention of the Constitution then in force, which provided that "the jurisdiction of justices of the peace shall be co extensive with the county" ... 1004

CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTES—
1. a statute should be construed according to its spirit and reason ... 396
2. the court is never authorized, unless the language used be explicit and unambiguous, to so construe a statute as to give a public officer or agent unrestricted power to appropriate or expend public money ... 456

CONTINUANCE—
1. motion for continuance by defendant because he had been unable to procure counsel—appointment of counsel by court ... 441
2. absence of material witnesses—agreement that statements of the affidavit be taken as true—announcement of ready by defendant—failure to grant new trial not error ... 441
3. the failure to grant a continuance upon affidavits showing that defendant could not have a fair trial in the county was not error. 640
4. where the accused was unable on account of his nervous condition to give his attorneys the names of the witnesses who would sustain his plea of self-defense, a continuance should have been granted, the case being set for trial on the fourth day after the killing occurred ... 709
5. continuance asked on ground of the absence of material witness properly refused where due diligence was not exercised ... 835
6. continuance to enable defendant to prove contents of a letter which had been lost properly refused where he failed to show that he had used any diligence in trying to discover its whereabouts .. 874
7. continuance asked on ground that the defendant was not in physical condition to attend court was properly refused, as it was not shown that he expected to testify or that his presence was necessary ... 901
8. continuance should have been granted where both of litigants' attorneys were engaged in other courts ... 986

CONTRACTS—
1. the delay of parties to a contract for more than a year to signify their intention to stand by the contract loses to them their right to enforce it ... 108
2. by failing to accompany their demand for a performance of the contract with a tender of the purchase price of the property contracted for, the parties failed to put themselves in a proper attitude to entitle them to an enforcement ... 108
3. sale of timber by one or two joint owners is a conversion—a rescission of the contract of sale by the joint owner did not change the legal effect of his act ... 167
4. a written contract between a turnpike company and subscribers to the road not affected by a contemporaneous parol agreement ... 180

CONTINUANCE—Continued. Page.
5. construction of contract for furnishing water to four distilleries and the proportionment of the expense of same 216
6. a common carrier can not by contract escape liability for damage or loss due to its negligence 299
7. action by vendee for a rescission of a contract for the sale of land upon the ground that vendor can not make good title to the land, 230
8. the seal of the city and the signature of the mayor as mayor was a sufficient execution of a contract by the city 238
9. where a person acted as agent for both buyer and seller a contract entered into with him was voidable 294
10. a contract between a father and his married daughter is binding upon him, although not upon her, where she complies with the terms of the contract 453
11. the father has a lien upon the land conveyed to his married daughter to secure him in the event she fails to care for him in the future as required by the contract 453
12. certain contract for the benefit of slaves, being taken in connection with a writing evidencing the sale of the slave, was supported by sufficient consideration 460
13. the acceptance of a deed by the grantee and the possession of the land under it operate as an agreement on his part to pay the purchase price, and an action therefor is founded upon a contract in writing within the meaning of the statute of limitations 601
14. any material alteration of a written contract made by the obligee without the consent of the obligor invalidates the contract 617
15. an alteration may be a material one, although it does not make the contract more burdensome to the obligor 617
16. an intention to defraud is not necessary to make an alteration in a written contract work a forfeiture of same 617
17. courts may reform written contracts so as to make them conform to the real agreement, but an obligee in a contract can not do so. 617
18. building contract—damage to the building by cyclone—owner to pay cost of repairs 656
19. builders required to accept, at the price fixed in the contract, a city lot which they agreed to accept as part pay for erecting the building 656
20. breach of contract for purchase of trees—damages recovered on account of the breach 683
21. an oral contract for the purchase of standing trees is valid where marked so as to be identified 683
22. a contract between the board of public works and member of the fire department not binding longer than the relation of employer and employe existed, which either might terminate at will 684
23. mistake in deed may be corrected where the same consisted in the omission of a covenant therefrom—the omitted covenant may be enforced as against the grantee or the contract of sale rescinded .. 754
24. although a married woman could not make herself liable in damages for a failure to comply with her contract, if she comes into a court of equity the defendant will be allowed to set off the damages he has received by reason of her fraud, or the contract will be rescinded 792
25. to entitle a daughter to recover for personal care and attention bestowed upon her mother there must be a promise to pay, express or implied 822
26. contract by appellees to assist appellants in purchasing and putting up tobacco—it not appearing that appellants sustained any damage by reason of a breach of the contract by appellees, they are not entitled to recover damages 842
27. a violation of the terms of a contract by which appellees rendered themselves amenable to discharge from service places them in the same attitude as if they had voluntarily quit the service of appellants 842
28. damages for breach of building contract—judgment supported by evidence 889
29. right given by contract to return part of property—measure of damages for failure to accept property tendered—interest 895
30. action for damages for breach of contract to grant passway 937

Thomas F. Hargis, Wright & McElroy and Hargis & Turner, jr., for appellants.

Thomas H. Hines, B. F. Procter and Sims & Covington for appellees.

Appeal from Warren Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

Wm. Culleton died intestate leaving a widow, Catherine, and an only son, the appellant, John Culleton. The widow married John Burke, and appellee, Mary Keune, is the only issue of the marriage.

Culleton at his death owned a lot in Bowling Green which the son inherited subject to such uses as the law gave his mother. Subsequent to the marriage of Burke and wife, by the industry and thrift of both, certain parcels of real estate were acquired, which were conveyed to the husband, John Burke. On the 25th day of December, 1886, John Burke and his wife made a deed purporting to convey to appellee, Frederick Keune, the husband of their daughter, the real estate which Burke had, and also the Culleton lot. On the same day Keune, by deed, conveyed the property described in the deed to him to John Burke and Catherine Burke, with this provision, to wit: "To Catherine Burke for her life, and, if she should survive John Burke, to her and her assigns forever; but if she should die before John Burke, then at her death the title to all the foregoing-described property shall vest absolutely in the said John Burke and his heirs and assigns forever."

John Culleton was no party to these deeds. On the first day of May, 1890, John Burke and Catherine Burke made a deed to John Culleton, conveying to him the property mentioned in the foregoing deeds.

This action was instituted by Keune and wife to have the deed to John Culletin set aside—first, because John Burke was mentally disqualified from making the deed; second, that while the deed was absolute on its face, in fact it was made with an understanding of all concerned that Culleton was to hold the title in trust for Mrs. Keune. Catherine Burke died before the suit was brought.

The facts with reference to the execution of the deed are substantially these: John Burke had acquired such habits, or such business habits, as made his family feel that he was imperiling his estate, and the conclusion was reached that it was best to have him and his wife convey the property to John Culleton, as the witnesses express it, for "safety." It was not intended by any of them to injure Burke, or in anyway to deprive him of the enjoyment of a comfortable support out of the property. The record shows that he was incapable of managing his estate and incapable of entering into the contract. John Culleton was a priest in the Catholic Church when the deed was made. Afterwards he abandoned his priestly calling, withdrew from the church and married. When this occurred the trouble began. It is but just to Culleton to say that he never claimed that he was the exclusive owner of the property. He claimed that he held one-half of it for himself and the other half for his sister. While Culleton thought it would, at the death of the father and mother, become the property of himself and sister, and as he would die without issue, it would go to his sister, and as that would be the result, the sister concluded that the brother held it in trust for her, yet we are of the opinion had the deed been valid that he would

COSTS— Page.
1. attorney's fee of $20 is taxable in favor of the Commonwealth in appeals in Commonwealth cases ... 828
2. error to give judgment for all costs of defendant against plaintiff in certain case ... 949
COUNTERCLAIM—
1. when defendant may plead as a counterclaim a demand against the plaintiff held by him jointly with others ... 85
2. as to right to recover by way of counterclaim damages suffered by reason of defective goods—recovery may be had, although the purchaser used the goods after discovering the defects ... 498
COUNTERCLAIM AND SET-OFF—the defendant in a judgment may set-off against it a judgment against the plaintiff, which has been assigned to him by another. 847
COUNTIES—
the authorities of the county are the proper parties to sue for possession of the courthouse square or for a trespass thereon ... 302
COUNTY ATTORNEY—
where a prisoner has been put at hard labor for the nonpayment of a fine, the county is not liable to the county attorney for 30 per cent. of the fine as provided by law where such fines are imposed and "collected" ... 61
COUNTY BONDS—
limit of tax rate for county—two thirds of all the voters voting at the general election at which the question was submitted were required to authorize the issual of certain county bonds ... 286
COUNTY COURTS—
1. county courts have the power to adjourn from day to day, but they are not required to adjourn each day when they cease to transact business—the court may, where it is in session more than one day, treat the entire time as one day ... 412, 414
2. the county court has the power to remove for cause an inspector of illuminating oils ... 546
3. as to jurisdiction of county court to appoint an administrator in a particular case ... 878
COUNTY JUDGE—
1. as to trial of indictable offense before ... 481
2. county judge and other magistrates entitled to $2 in each felony case in which they sit as examining courts, but not to exceed $4 in any one case where trial lasts longer than one day ... 857
COUNTY LEVY—
1. validity of an order of the county court approving a sheriff's county levy bond ... 412, 414
2. the fact that no order of court appears showing that the sheriff executed an official bond does not affect the validity of the county levy bond ... 412, 414
3. suit by county on county levy bond of sheriff—allegation necessary in petition as to approval of bond by county judge ... 809
4. a suit on a county levy bond was properly brought in the name of the county, although the covenant was to the Commonwealth ... 809
5. one who has been appointed by the fiscal court to receive the money from the sheriff will be presumed to have accepted the appointment, where he in fact undertook the duties imposed upon him ... 809
6. the sureties on a county levy bond are liable for the failure of the sheriff to "pay over" the county levy which he collected ... 810
COURTS—
1. the act of February 25, 1854, establishing a levy and county court for Jefferson county and providing for bi-monthly terms of the county court, was repealed by the act of June 10, 1893, which fixed the first Monday of the month as the beginning of each regular monthly term of the Jefferson County Court ... 87
2. county courts have the power to adjourn from day to day, but they are not required to adjourn each day when they cease to transact business—the court may, where it is in session more than one day, treat the entire time as one day ... 412, 414
3. as to jurisdiction of county court to appoint an administrator in a particular case ... 878
4. after judgment sustaining an order of arrest in a civil action the circuit court has no jurisdiction to discharge the defendant as an insolvent debtor, and its order to that effect does not exonerate the bail ... 1106

COURTS--Continued. Page.
5. ex parte petition for construction of will—circuit court not authorized to render judgment construing will where there is no allegation that any one else is claiming adversely to the petitioners or that any controversy is liable to arise.....1112
CRIMINAL ASSAULT—in an action by husband and wife to recover damages for an alleged criminal assault by defendant upon the wife, only one witness being introduced upon each side, it was error, after instructing the jury that the burden of proof was on plaintiff, to tell them that this does not necessarily mean that the plaintiff must have two witnesses to the wrongful act, but that the case, in all its facts and circumstances given in evidence, must preponderate in their judgment in favor of plaintiffs 146
CRIMINAL LAW—
1. an indictment under section 807 of the Kentucky Statutes need not allege, in the language of the statute, that the fixture disturbed was "attached to the track or switch"..... 16
2. a charge in an indictment of willful and malicious wounding by "shooting" is not supported by proof that the wounding was done by "striking" with a pistol or other weapon 57
3. to authorize a conviction of a lower degree of an offense than that charged in the indictment the evidence must show that the lower degree of the offense was committed substantially in the manner stated, etc..... 57
4. in cases of homicide testimony showing the violent character of deceased is admissible in evidence where it was shown that deceased had threatened and was about to assault accused 59
5. in certain case the court should have given an instruction as to the offense of assault and battery, which was a lower degree of the offense charged 98
6. under an indictment under section 1166 of the Kentucky Statutes it was proper to submit to the jury the question whether an axe handle, when used as it was in the particular case, was a "deadly weapon" 129
7. upon the trial of accused for murder he was not prejudiced by testimony to the effect that the deceased left a wife and four children, and that his wife had been sick ever since her husband's death..... 141
8. the defendant in a prosecution for murder was not prejudiced by the appeal made by the prosecuting attorney to the jury to have regard to the reputation of the State and county in arriving at their verdict 141
9. where there was no evidence of a shooting without an intent to kill, although there may have been no intent to kill deceased, there was nothing to justify an instruction as to voluntary manslaughter..... 142
10. a former conviction for a breach of the peace is a bar to a subsequent prosecution for assault and battery, based upon the act constituting that breach of the peace 145
11. an indictment for rape is not defective in failing to allege that the female was over twelve years of age 205
12. neither fornication nor adultery is a degree of the offense of rape. 205
13. the evidence of the defendant on a trial for his life being viewed with suspicion, he should be allowed to corroborate it upon a material point if he can 205
14. as appellant was found guilty only of manslaughter the court will not inquire whether there was any error in the instructions as to murder..... 212
15. as to the right of the accused to rescue his brother, who had been abducted—degree of force which might be used 212
16. a livery stable where bridles, buggies, etc., are kept is a warehouse or storehouse within the meaning of section 1164, Kentucky Statutes..... 220
17. the removal of a pin and shoving a door open constitutes a breaking 220
18. the failure to give an instruction as to self-defense upon a trial for murder is not error where there is not the slightest evidence to show that the homicide was excusable upon that ground 367

Appeal from Trigg Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Burnam.

These consolidated suits were instituted in the Trigg Circuit Court on the 15th day of December, 1892, by M. A. Hixon and her husband, J. T. Hixon, and Charity Battoe against C. T. Bridges and the other children and heirs at law of Mary Bridges, deceased, the plaintiffs, M. A. Hixon and Charity Battoe, and the defendant, C. T. Bridges, being the youngest children of said Mary Bridges, deceased. They allege that their father, William Bridges, the husband of Mary Bridges, their mother, died many years before their mother's death; that in December, 1853, Mary Bridges qualified as guardian of her three infant children, M. A. Hixon, Charity Battoe and C. T. Bridges, and executed bond as guardian; that she collected $158.24, which was due and owing to each of said minor children from the estate of their grandfather, the interests of all the older children being paid to them direct; that in August, 1854, she purchased at a decretal sale, made by the master commissioner of the Trigg Circuit Court, a tract of land containing 42 acres, situate in Trigg county; that by the advice of her older children she used in this purchase $474.72 which belonged to her three infant children, and for whom she was guardian, she at that time having no other funds with which to make said purchase, and that said purchase was made with the understanding and agreement on the part of all the children that the land purchased was to belong to and be for the benefit of herself and her said infant children, who were at that time residing with her.

The evidence in the record shows that she lived on this land until her death, in July, 1876. Her two daughters married and left the premises, one of them (Charity Battoe) afterwards returning and living with her mother up to the time of her mother's death. Some six or seven years before her death, when she had become old and infirm, she invited the defendant, C. T. Bridges, who was her youngest child, to make his home with her, and the evidence shows that he moved to the farm and lived there from 1869 until her death in 1876. She died intestate; no administration was ever granted upon her estate, and no claims were ever legally asserted against same.

After the death of his mother defendant, C. T. Bridges, continued to use and occupy the land, his sister, Mrs. Battoe, living with him for some time. Finally the plaintiff, Mrs. Hixon, demanded a division of the land, or that he should pay her for her interest in same, and in December, 1877, defendant, C. T. Bridges, entered into an agreement with the husband of plaintiff, M. A. Hixon, by which he selected arbitrators, who, on the same day, returned an award to the effect that Bridges was to pay over to Hixon and wife $200, and that they were to make Bridges a deed to their part of said land, and this was to be a full settlement. This agreement was never carried out because Hixon did not want to make a warranty deed.

The evidence shows also that John Logan recovered a judgment against S. M. Bridges, one of the older children of Mary Bridges, deceased, and an execution issued upon his judgment was levied upon the supposed interest of S. M. Bridges in the tract of land to which his mother held title at her death, the same in dispute in this action, and he also instituted suit to have said interest ascertained and subjected to his debt. The defendant, C. T. Bridges, resisted this proceeding on the part of Logan, and set out the facts in his answer that the property was paid for by money of the three younger

CRIMINAL LAW—Continued. Page.
47. when an indictment after demurrer sustained may be re-submitted to the grand jury 781
48. the fact that the sheriff had taken unusual interest in bringing about the conviction of defendant was not sufficient to require the court to appoint another person in his stead during the trial. 795
49. if the accused cut off the head of his victim in Campbell county while she was in fact alive, he was guilty of murder, although he believed her already dead, provided this act was part of a felonious attempt to kill her in Cincinnati 795
50. administration of drugs for the purpose of procuring an abortion —as to the degree of the offense as regulated by the danger to the life of the victim 796
51. prosecution for murder—right of accused to act in defense of his brother—instruction as to that question was properly given 835
52. increased punishment on account of former conviction 1020
CURATORS—appointment of administrator, with the will annexed, terminated the powers of the curator 802
CURTESY—execution of mortgage upon wife's land to secure husband's debt—after wife's death the value of husband's curtesy should be subjected to the payment of the debt and the surplus should go to the child 1092
DAMAGES—
1. where a passenger on a railroad train was injured by the negligence of the railroad company's employes in leaving a switch open, with full knowledge of the expected approach of the train, an instruction for punitive damages was authorized 82
2. punitive damages may be awarded against a corporation for injuries resulting from the wanton and reckless acts of its employes in the course of their employment, although such acts of the employes were not ratified or approved by the corporation 82
3. a verdict for $12,000 for injury to the plaintiff is excessive in view of the fact that his present helpless condition is due largely to injuries sustained by him in a former accident 82
4. for injury to tobacco, resulting from the failure of warehousemen to use such care regarding it as ordinarily prudent men would take of their own property under like circumstances, they are liable in damages 84
5. where, in an action to recover damages for the cutting of timber from certain lands, the evidence showed title in plaintiff, the court should have granted the relief sought 177
6. where goods delivered to carrier were destroyed by fire by reason of its delay in shipping them, the carrier is liable for the loss ... 227
7. punitive damages not allowed against railroad for carrying passengers beyond station 296
8. as to what is excessive damages for the loss of a hand 326
9. a verdict in favor of railway passenger for $200 in damages for being unlawfully ejected from the train, not palpably against the weight of evidence, will not be disturbed 388
10. punitive damages not allowed to passenger who has been required to pay ticket fare after the agent has refused to sell him a ticket. 415
11. a plaintiff can not recover punitive damages unless the facts alleged in his petition show his right to such relief 415
12. in an action to recover damages for the death of a horse the court should have required the jury to believe, in order to find for plaintiff, that the negligence of defendant, if any, was the proximate cause of the injury 470
13. in an action by the debtor to recover mortgaged property wrongfully taken under attachment and to recover damages for its taking and detention, he is not entitled to recover damages for the taking, but only for the detention 500
14. measure of damages, where bank publishes false statement of its condition, is the difference between the value if statement had been true and the actual value at time of purchase 532
15. if the publication was by the publisher known to be false, he is liable for punitive damages 552
16. a verdict for $100 in damages in particular suit for libel was not excessive 558

the payment, first, of the costs of this suit, and then to be divided equally between the parties.

Wherefore this case is reversed and remanded for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

PFAFFINGER V. GILMAN.

(Filed February 10, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Joint verdict—Judgment against only one of several defendants—In an action against several defendants to recover damages for injuries inflicted upon plaintiff by a wild and vicious bull which it was alleged had been turned loose by defendants upon the streets of the city, a verdict having been returned "for the plaintiff," and assessing the damages, one of the defendants against whom alone judgment was rendered upon that verdict can not complain that judgment was not rendered against the other defendants also, as it was agreed in writing that she alone was the owner of the business for which the bull was purchased, and she was the one who, in law and justice, ought to pay, and would have to pay the judgment; and, besides, counsel for defendants had asked, after the testimony was heard, that the jury be instructed to find for the other defendants.

M. A., D. A. & J. G. Sachs for appellant.

A. A. Stoll and J. W. S. Clements for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Guffy.

The appellee, Gilman, instituted this action in the Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas division, against Margaretha Pfaffinger, Wm. Pfaffinger, John Schwartz, executor of Jacob Pfaffinger, doing business under the firm name of Pfaffinger & Co., and P. C. Kennett to recover damages for injuries inflicted upon him by a wild and vicious bull, which bull was, as alleged, turned loose by defendants upon the streets of Louisville, which bull was known by the defendants to be vicious, or they could, by ordinary diligence, have known the fact.

The defendant Kennett, by separate answer, denied all the averments of the petition, so far as he was concerned, and a motion was finally sustained to instruct the jury to find for him and judgment entered dismissing the action as to him, although no formal verdict was in fact returned as to him.

The other defendants, for joint and separate answer, denied that they were doing business as a firm under any name; also denied the allegations of the petition as to appellee's injuries, as well as the averment that the bull was under their control or that they knew or could, by ordinary diligence, have known the bull was wild or vicious, and pleaded contributory negligence on the part of appellee.

A trial resulted in a verdict and judgment against appellant for $750.

Appellant moved for a new trial upon the following grounds, viz: Excessive damages, given under the influence of passion or prejudice; verdict contrary to law and not supported by the evidence; error in giving and refusing instructions, and error in refusing a peremptory instruction to find for defendants.

Appellant also moved to correct the judgment rendered upon the

DEBTOR AND CREDITOR—Continued. Page.
6. marshaling securities—priority of liens—notice to senior lienholder of a junior lien 281
7. an insolvent debtor will not be allowed to place his earnings beyond the reach of his creditors by conducting business for his wife who has been empowered to trade as a feme sole..... 555
8. the increase of a wife's estate which is employed in a business conducted by the husband, the wife giving no attention to the business, may be subjected to the husband's debts..... 555
9. setting aside conveyance to wife of certain tract of land in lieu of her inchoate right of dower in all the other lands of the debtor .. 971
10. contest between attaching creditors of a nonresident firm—evidence sufficient to support finding of chancellor that appellant was a partner in the firm and not an employe 1079
DECEDENTS' ESTATES—
1. where a creditor appears in a suit to settle a decedent's estate and proves a claim against the estate, which is allowed, the judgment in that action is a bar to a suit by him against the personal representative upon another claim against the estate..... 97
2. as to the right of the father to administer upon the goods of his deceased son..... 104
3. the mere fact that one has divested himself of all interest in a claim against the estate of the deceased does not render him a competent witness against the estate with regard to the transaction had by him with the decedent, out of which the claim arose. 343
4. sale of lands by administrator for the payment of debts—adverse claimants to lands under mortgage liens 453
5. payment by administrator to distributee, who had assigned his interest—recovery against administrator..... 454
6. apportionment of rent between executor and devisee..... 455
7. action against administratrix to recover funeral expenses—defense that the services were performed at the instance of railroad company in whose service the deceased was at the time he was killed —finding supported by evidence 593
8. right of distributees to maintain an action upon a note held by intestate 784
9. verification of claim against decedent's estate held by several joint claimants—effect of failure of one or more to join in the verification 853
10. where purchaser of land by parol contract died before delivery of the deed, his administrator had no power to bind his estate for the purchase money by accepting the deed..... 858
11. division of lands of father between his four children..... 916
12. widow and heirs of decedent, and not the administrator, proper persons to sue for breach of contract to grant decedent passway over certain lands 938
13. purchase of decedent's land by widow at decretal sale—collusion.. 954
DEEDS—
1. where a father eighty six years of age and physically infirm conveyed to his son his property, which was exempt from execution, because he feared it would be taken from him, in consideration of being supported and cared for by the son, the conveyance should be set aside in an action brought by the grantor within seven months, considering his age and condition and the fact that the grantee failed to comply with the covenants of the deed. 74
2. where a party agreed to convey certain property in consideration of the extension of a certain railroad and executed deed in compliance with the agreement, the fact that the extension of the road was made under a charter other than that under which the original road was built affords no ground for a cancellation of the deed..... 89
3. grounds for cancellation of—the fact that the same train service was not had on an extension of a railroad as on the original road when a certain bond was executed affords no ground for the cancellation of a deed executed pursuant to the bond, where no particular kind of train service was stipulated in the bond or deed.. 89
4. under deed conveying land to husband and wife for life, with remainder to their "right heirs," both husband and wife having died without issue, the land passed to their collateral heirs as remaindermen 137

Appeal from Pike Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hazelrigg.

There were three suits filed in the Pike Circuit Court against Bewe & Co., who were alleged to be nonresidents of the State, and attachments were procured and levied on large quantities of timber and other property.

The first attachment was issued and levied in the suit of the appellant, Duerrigan, but, upon the trial of all the actions, after consolidation, the court gave preference to the subsequent attachments and levies of Bartley & Saunders and of H. Ratcliff & Co., and of this appellant complains.

In their answer to his petition these subsequent attaching creditors controvert the debt of appellant on the ground that he was, in fact, a partner in the firm of Bewe & Co. and not entitled to wages, for which he had sued, as an employe of the firm. They charge that the claim is not a just one, but was invented to cover up the property of the firm and to defeat its creditors.

There is some proof conducing to show this, and, while it is not altogether satisfactory, there are circumstances which strongly support the chancellor's finding.

The nonresidents, Bewe & Co., who seem to have lived at Baltimore, do not appear to have transacted in person the business of buying, gathering up and shipping the logs purchased in Kentucky, but left their business to Duerrigan, who held himself out as their "representative, agent or partner." For five years before engaging in the work in Pike county he had been the "shipping clerk, inspector and purchasing agent of Bewe & Co., at Baltimore," and he appears to have bought and paid for large quantities of timber, etc., in Pike county. It is fairly to be inferred from the proof that the debts created in that section were made by him and on his promises.

He testifies that he was working for $75 per month for a part of the time and $100 per month for the latter part of his service. When he learned that Bewe & Co. were about to quit the business, he brought his suit for $1,867 on an account beginning on March 1, 1883, and ending June 1, 1885, the total being $2,625. and credits the claim in a lump as "amount paid on account" $757, and has his attachments issued and levied on substantially all the property belonging to Bewe & Co. in Kentucky.

Just why, with the funds of his debtors constantly passing through his hands, he let his wages remain unpaid for so long a period we are not told. It seems to us, considering the relations existing between himself and the firm, and his attitude toward those with whom he was dealing, that the burden was on him to explain every circumstance casting suspicion on his conduct and on his claim, and especially the delay in collecting his wages. If he fully disclosed the extent of his agency, when buying, he would not be responsible; but even this he did not do, the proof being that he held himself out as the "representative" of the firm of Bewe & Co.; and, according to another witness, he was held out by the firm as its "agent or partner."

On the whole case, we see no good reason for disturbing the judgment of the chancellor, and it is, therefore, affirmed.

BRAMEL, &C. V. BRAMEL, &C.

(Filed March 12, 1897.)

1. Will contest—The testator having by his will disposed of his property in an apparently rational manner for the benefit of those with whom he had lived the greater part of his life, who had cared for him in his declining years and with whom his relations were necessarily closer and more intimate than with any one else, a verdict of a jury sustaining the will should not be disturbed unless manifestly against the evidence. It appearing that the will itself was a rational one, that under the circumstances there seems to have been no undue influence exerted over the testator, and that the fact of his testamentary capacity was supported by disinterested witnesses, the verdict can not be said to be against the evidence.

2. Same—Instructions—Prejudicial error—Although an instruction that "if the jury believe from all the evidence that the instrument of writing read in evidence was subscribed by John Bramel in the presence of two credible witnesses, who subscribed it with their names in his presence, and that said John Bramel, at that time, was of sound mind, they will find said instrument to be his will," is objectionable on the ground that it put to the jury the question of whether the paper was properly executed, which is a question for the court, it was not prejudicial to the rights of the appellants, for the jury found that it was so subscribed, which conclusion the court must have reached as a matter of law.

3. Same—The submission to the jury by the instruction the question of the credibility of the attesting witnesses, although erroneous, was not prejudicial to the appellants.

4. Same—The fact that one instruction told the jury to find for the propounders of the will if they believed from the evidence that the testator was of sound mind, while another told them to find against the propounders if they believed the testator was unduly influenced, was not misleading to the jury, since the instructions are to be considered as a whole, and the omissions in one may be supplied by reference to another.

5. Burden of Proof—The instruction that "if the jury believe from all the evidence that said instrument of writing is consistent in its provisions and rational on its face, the presumption is that John Bramel was of sound mind at the time of its execution, and the burden shifts to contestants to show that he was not of sound mind at that time," was not reversible error under the established rule in this State as to the shifting of the burden of proof.

6. An objection to an instruction as misleading because a statement of a mere abstract proposition upon the subject of testamentary capacity can not be sustained where the instruction proceeded to give a correct definition of the capacity required to render a man mentally competent to make a will according to the decisions of this court.

7. The instruction which stated that the capacity required to render a man competent to make a will was "to know his property and the natural objects of bounty and his duty to them," was not objectionable as stating by implication that the testator owed duties to the devisees named in the paper.

8. The words "settled purpose of his own," as used in the instruction, are not materially different in meaning from the approved language, "fixed purpose of his own."

9. Evidence—The objection urged to the refusal of the court to permit appellants to prove by appellee that on a former trial a devisee testified to a certain conversation between the appellee and the testator can not be sustained, since it is not an admission against the devisee.

E. L. Worthington, W. H. Wadsworth, J. N. Kehoe, A. D. Cole and C. D. Newell for appellants.

Cochran & Son and L. W. Robertson for appellees.

Appeal from Mason Circuit Court.

DEVISES—Continued. Page.
23. devise from brother to sister of all his estate, real and personal, for life, and at her death to her heirs, but giving to her the right to sell and use same at will during life—the property passed to the sister at his death, with power to sell, her heirs taking at her death only what might be left 637
24. under a devise of all property, "personal, mixed and real estate," during the lifetime of the devisee, with full power to sell, with "what may have been left" at her death to certain heirs, devisee could pass the fee by sale 710
25. a devise of land by a testator to his widow for life, and at her death to his son and heirs, but providing that the testator's other heirs, naming them, were to have an equal part out of the proceeds of said land, is not void for uncertainty 717
26. construction of devise "between all my nieces and nephews, share and share alike; and if any of my nieces and nephews be then dead, leaving children or child, such issue are to take the share of the parent" 720
27. under a devise by a testator to his widow of all his estate, real and personal, "absolutely and forever, with power to sell or dispose of as she deems proper," the widow took the fee, notwithstanding a subsequent provision of the will devising the remainder to others 840

DISMISSAL OF ACTIONS—
1. in an action to enjoin the erection of a schoolhouse and outhouse, including a privy, on the ground that the drainage would run into plaintiff's spring, the petition was properly dismissed, since it was indefinite as to the anticipated damage 73
2. as plaintiffs, upon the return of this case to the lower court from the Superior Court after a former appeal, pleaded no new matter, there was left no alternative for the lower court under the mandate of the Superior Court but to dismiss the action on the pleadings without further trial 108
3. an action having been dismissed as to the appellants, the court should have rescinded an order placing the land in controversy in the hands of a receiver 723

DISTILLERY—
water used in the operation of distilleries—construction of contract regarding the expense of operating the pumphouse 216

DIVORCE—action by wife seeking divorce from husband upon the ground of cruel and inhuman treatment—divorce should have been granted, 741

DIVORCE AND ALIMONY—liability of husband for wife's attorney's fees 941

DOWER—
1. sale of entire tract of land to satisfy a lien upon a part only—in alloting dower to widow of debtor how land should be valued and out of which part she is entitled to dower 191
2. allotment of inchoate right of dower in several tracts of land to wife 971
3. widow not entitled to dower and homestead, she having separated from her husband, and, at the time of his death, was living in adultery with another man 975
4. suit by assignee for creditors for settlement of trust—consent of wife of debtor to accept value of dower in money—order directing value of dower ascertained—death of wife before value was ascertained—estoppel 1026

DRUGGISTS—
1. a license to sell liquor is not necessary in order to authorize one who is both a physician and druggist to prescribe and sell liquor as a medicine, nor is a written prescription necessary 49
2. the fact that one has had a license to sell liquor which he has forfeited does not deprive him of the right of subsequently carrying on the business of a druggist and selling liquor as such for medical purposes in accordance with law 49

EJECTMENT—
adverse possession for forty years defeats the recovery of the plaintiffs in ejectment in this case 631

ELECTIONS— Page.
1. there having been no election in November, 1893, of trustees of a town of the sixth class, the old trustees held over by virtue of the provision of section 167 of the Constitution that they should hold until their successors should be elected and qualified 18
2. election under the local option law—the sixty days required by statute begins to run with and after the act of lodging the application, and the day on which the application was lodged should be counted 80
3. the requirement of the election law that the voter shall declare his disability "on oath" before his ballot can be marked for him by the clerk is mandatory to the voter, and a ballot marked by the clerk without such a statement "on oath" of the voter can not be counted 104
4. a ballot marked in the voting booth, either by the clerk of the election or in his presence, is a ballot "shown to another person" within the meaning of section 1474 of the Kentucky Statutes, and, if deposited, should not be counted 105
5. in an election contest the testimony of voters should not be received to show for what candidate they voted 105
6. the fact that during the absence of the clerk of election one of the judges of the election acted in his place and signed the clerk's name upon the back of the ballot is not sufficient to authorize the court to throw out the vote of the precinct 105
7. the fact that the act fixed as the day for holding the election to take the sense of the voters a day on which, under the law, an election for school trustees was required to be held did not render it violative of the requirement of the Constitution that "all elections shall be free and equal" 181
8. election held under local option law—certificate of canvassing board—judgment of contesting board 233
9. a contestant is not allowed to set up by way of amendment entirely new grounds of contest in addition to those stated in his notice.. 233
10. a contestant may amend grounds embraced in notice of contest ... 233
11. defining powers of contesting boards—power to determine validity of law under which election was held 233
12. election under local option law—time for filing petition and the orders necessary to be entered in the county court—order for election to be at next regular term 283
13. limit of tax rate for county—two-thirds of all the voters voting at the general election at which the question was submitted were required to authorize the issual of certain county bonds 286
14. an election held to take the sense of the voters of a city as to incurring an indebtedness can not be held on any other day than that of a regular annual election 313
15 two-thirds of all the voters voting at the general election held on the day the question was submitted and in favor of the indebtedness are required to authorize the incurring of an indebtedness in excess of the limit fixed by the Constitution 313, 324
16. as to how vacancies in elective offices for towns and cities shall be filled—vacancy in office of mayor of city of first class 354
17. the county school superintendent has no authority to determine a contested election for school trustee 526
18. the jurisdiction to determine a contested election for school trustee is in the county board of contest 526
19. in cases of viva voce voting the voter can not change his vote after the same has been recorded and other votes have been cast 527
20. nominee by petition—right of nominee to have his name placed on the ballot under the party device 599
21. where a nominee by petition sought to have his name placed on the ballot under the party device, and did not ask to have it placed elsewhere on the ballot, being denied the relief asked, he was not entitled to have his name placed on the ballot at all 599
22. the county judge is not authorized to order an election under the local option law until the next term of court after the petition is noted of record 694
23. submission to the voters of a city of the question of incurring an indebtedness by the city—the proposition does not carry unless two-thirds of all those voting at that election vote in favor of it.. 752

ELECTIONS—Continued. Page.
24. disposition of questioned ballots—provision of section 1482, Kentucky Statutes, requiring them to be sealed up, etc., is mandatory 771
25. contested election—failure of one member of the county contest board to act did not invalidate the finding of the board 860
26. error in officers' return may be shown in election contest 860
27. election by board of councilmen of a city—what constitutes a quorum 1061
ELECTRICITY—as to duty of electric light company to insulate its wires—must use the utmost care to keep insulation perfect—very great care not sufficient 693
ENROLLED BILL—
1. a bill, properly enrolled, signed by the presiding officer of each of the two houses of the general assembly and signed and approved by the governor, can not be impeached by reference to the journals of either house either in a matter affecting the contents of the bill or the regularity of the steps taken in its passage 1
2. conclusiveness of enrolled bill—the house and senate journals are not admissible as evidence for the purpose of showing that an enrolled bill was not constitutionally passed 30
3. the validity of an "emergency clause" of an act of the legislature is to be determined in the same way as the validity of other parts or sections of the act is determined, and, therefore, the court can not go behind the enrolled bill 113
4. the local option act of August 6, 1892, being properly enrolled and signed, must be deemed enacted according to requirement of the Constitution 233
ENTRIES—
as the proof shows that those under whom appellants claim entered on the lands without right, no title vested in them or those claiming under them from that entry 78
ESTATES—
a deed conveying to the grantor's son "a life estate" in a tract of land, "and at his death to his heirs and assigns in fee forever," reserving a life estate to the grantor, created in the grantee only an estate for life, remainder to his children 488
ESTATES CREATED BY DEVISE—
1. under a devise of realty to the testator's children equally, provided that "should any of my children die without heirs it is to go to the rest equally," each of the children took a defeasible fee, and upon the death of one of the sisters without issue her interest, which had been invested in bank stock, went to the other children 110
2. as to the general rule in the construction of wills where an estate is given or devised with remainder over, but in the event the remainderman should die without child or children, then to a third person 116
3. under such a devise the first taker upon the death of the testator takes a defeasible fee, subject to be defeated upon his dying at any time without issue 116
4. a devise of land by father, to his children for life, with power to dispose of same by will, there being no devise over in the event of their failure to exercise the power, vests in each one the fee simple title to his part of the land 157
5. daughter took life estate under the will of her father, with remainder to her son in fee 193
6. certain provisions of will passed a fee simple estate to the devisee. 193
7. fee simple estate passed under the provisions of certain will 582
ESTATES UPON CONDITION—when an estate depends upon a double contingency both must occur. 194
ESTOPPEL—
1. a party having executed a deed pursuant to an agreement after the extension of a railroad was made, he can not complain that the road was built under a charter other than the one under which the original road was constructed 89

ESTOPPEL—Continued. Page.
2. the action of processioners in attempting to establish the line between the parties does not affect the right of the parties to have their claim determined in this action, since the appellees never joined in the application to have the processioners establish the line and never consented to their acts 107
3. the mere silence of one whose property is sold under attachment against another does not estop him from reclaiming his property, the purchaser knowing all about the title at the time he purchased 134
4. residence in neighborhood for ten years after suit brought to subject lands to the payment of decedent's debts without making claim to same is a circumstance which tends to show that the person had no claim 452
5. a promise by the obligor in a note to the purchaser of same to pay the note after it was assigned to her does not defeat his right to make the defense relied upon 468
6. suit by assignee for creditors for settlement of trust—consent of wife of debtor to accept value of dower in money—order directing value of dower ascertained—death of wife before value was ascertained—estoppel 1026
7. a grantee who held property in trust for the grantors was not estopped to claim a lot included in the deed, the title being in him prior to the execution of the deed 1065
EVIDENCE—
1. the house and senate journals are not admissible as evidence for the purpose of showing that an enrolled bill was not constitutionally passed 30
2. upon the trial of a druggist for the offense of selling liquor without license it was error to exclude testimony tending to show that as a physician and druggist he had prescribed and sold the liquor in question as a medicine 49
3. in cases of homicide testimony showing the violent character of deceased is admissible in evidence where it was shown that deceased had threatened and was about to assault accused 59
4. in cases of homicide testimony as to the general moral character of the deceased is not competent 60
5. testimony as to an indefinite threat by deceased, which was not shown to have any reference to accused and was not communicated to him, was inadmissible. 60
6. for the purpose of supporting his statement as to representations made to him by the attorney who procured the deed, it was not competent for an appellee to show by others what took place between them and the attorney as to their contracts 89
7. in an election contest the testimony of voters should not be received to show for what candidate they voted 105
8. action for damages for criminal assault—it appearing that the defendant, a short time after the alleged assault, returned to the house of plaintiffs and left a message for the husband, to the effect that a certain person named had agreed to let him have the tobacco plants he desired, it was competent for plaintiffs to prove that the person named had no tobacco plants to spare 146
9. it is not competent for persons who are neither professional nurses nor physicians to testify that a person died from the effects of a fall and not from typhoid fever 161
10. where the cause of the death of a person is in question nonprofessional witnesses may detail his symptoms as they appeared to them from day to day, and from these statements those skilled in diseases may give their opinions as to the cause of death 161
11. while threats against the life of accused a year previous to the killing were too remote, those made a month before were competent 205
12. evidence that articles stolen were found in the possession of accused was competent to show he had stolen them 220
13. stealing evidence that breaking was with intent to steal 220
14. witnesses, having stated all that they knew about a fire, were properly allowed to give their opinions as to its origin 229
15. what the conductor said to plaintiff on days previous to the one on which the injury occurred was incompetent in evidence 258
16. a declaration of the conductor after the accident happened that he had been expecting such an accident was not a part of the res gestæ and was incompetent ... 258

EVIDENCE—Continued. Page.
17. as to the contradiction of conductor by a witness as to a statement which the conductor denied he made—incompetent ... 258
18. action on account—error to allow plaintiff to prove that defendant had promised to pay him a check which he had given him and which had not been collected by reason of the failure of the bank on which it was drawn ... 287
19. action for libel—as to testimony of witnesses, who did not show an acquaintance with plaintiff, upon the issue of plaintiff's general character ... 291
20. where the libelous publication was that plaintiff "had been in more rows than any other one man in the county," it was competent for defendant to prove specific acts of disorder on the part of plaintiff ... 291
21. the testimony of a witness in a former trial preserved in a bill of exceptions may be read in evidence at the subsequent trial if the witness is out of the State ... 326
22. the mere fact that one has divested himself of all interest in a claim against the estate of the deceased does not render him a competent witness against the estate with regard to the transaction had by him with the decedent, out of which the claim arose. 343
23. upon an issue as to the value of appellant's services as warehouseman the court properly refused to permit him to introduce testimony as to the character of other business in which he was interested and that needed his attention ... 350
24. party not allowed to testify for himself as to agreement between himself and one deceased ... 351
25. testimony as to what the engineer of the train that hurt plaintiff said when he was returning to the train from the place of the injury was not competent as part of the res gestæ ... 435
26. upon trial for murder the court properly refused to permit counsel for defendant to ask a Commonwealth's witness upon cross examination if he had not said, the evening before the killing, that defendant would be killed before the next night ... 441
27. action upon policy of marine insurance—testimony of witnesses taken upon an investigation had in the office of hull inspectors as to facts attending the disaster properly rejected ... 444
28. proper to permit captain to testify as to sufficiency of boat crew —evidence as to seaworthiness of boat ... 444
29. evidence to show that there was no insurance on the boat was properly admitted to show that there could have been no motive to destroy the boat ... 444
30. in an action upon a policy of marine insurance it was competent for the plaintiffs to show the competency of the captain and crew of the boat where it was charged that they were unskillful and unfit for the service ... 444
31. endorsements on a note are prima facie evidence against the owner in possession ... 468
32. action for recovery for death of horse—defendant should have been permitted to prove that the horse was frightened and caused to slip and fall by the noise made by persons on the street ... 470
33. error to permit witnesses to testify as experts as to the proper manner for liverymen to hitch horses without first showing that they had had experience in that regard ... 470
34. proof of what defendant's brother had testified on another occasion could not be received as substantial evidence against the defendant ... 560
35. it was improper to permit a witness to testify that the deceased had said on a day prior to that of the killing that he did not have a knife—it was incompetent to show deceased did not own a knife or that the knife found by his side was not his ... 561
36. the statements of the brother as to the purpose of the deed executed to his sister were incompetent as evidence because not brought home to her ... 637
37. extra-judicial confessions alone are inadequate to establish the corpus delicti, yet slight corroboration may suffice ... 640
38. confessions, to be admissible as evidence, must be shown to be voluntary and not procured by the flattery of hope or the torture of fear ... 640

EVIDENCE—Continued. Page.
39. criminal prosecution—certain evidence which was admitted was not prejudicial to defendant—whether competent not decided..... 668
40. prosecuting witness allowed to deny that he "swore" at defendant where testimony was introduced to show that he did 668
41. statements of the father of accused as to what accused told him a few minutes after the killing in regard to same properly refused by the court..... 670
42. such statements were not competent as part of the res gestæ 670
43. action by appellee against appellant for breach of contract for the purchase of trees—error to admit testimony as to the statement of persons that appellee had bought trees from them..... 688
44. title to real estate by adverse holding may be proved by parol, but paper title, if denied, must be proved by the paper itself 688
45. upon a trial for murder, general threats by the accused to commit such an offense are admissible in evidence..... 708
46. in case of apparent error in the calls of a patent the actual location of the patent may be shown by parol testimony..... 707
47. action to secure attorney's fee—error to allow client to state that his understanding of the contract was different from the plain language of the writing 709
48. the schedule of fees adopted by the Elizabethtown bar for services in that county was not competent in evidence..... 709
49. the amount of legal business which the attorney had on hand at the time was irrelevant..... 709
50. this court will not reverse because of a violation of section 606, subsection 4 of the Civil Code, as to the introduction of testimony, if it appears that the party appealing has not been prejudiced 725
51. issue as to whether defendants were sureties in the note or jointly bound as principals with another obligor—statements made by that other obligor to the payee were not competent as evidence, the statements being made in the absence of defendants..... 725
52. action for damages against railroad company for personal injuries received by plaintiff—not error to permit plaintiff to testify that "he did not see very well" 735
53. it was not competent for plaintiff to prove that there had been on the route a quarrel between other passengers and the trainmen .. 735
54. action for trespass—oral testimony properly admitted to show the land embraced in a deed 742
55. an admission in a letter from the secretary of the company, from whose wire the intestate received the fatal shock, was not competent as an admission by the company as to the intestate's death. 761
56. evidence to show that deceased was pregnant was competent to show the motive for the killing, although no such charge was made in the indictment 795
57. proof of voluntary conversations between codefendants, in which each accused the other of the crime, was not improper..... 795
58. conversations between defendants when confined in the "sensitive cells" were competent, being voluntary 795
59. cocaine being found in the stomach of the dead girl, proof as to the use of the drug in procuring abortions and its effect upon the system was competent 795
60. where the court is satisfied that the rejection of evidence technically competent did not affect the substantial rights of accused the judgment will not be reversed 812
61. action in ejectment—error to allow witnesses to testify as to statements made to them as to the location of lines and corners by persons still living..... 818
62. an assigned deed was competent in evidence only for the purpose of showing the boundary claimed..... 818
63. testimony as to land that had been added by accretion to plaintiff's land at some other point on the stream than that in controversy was incompetent..... 871
64. action to recover damages for an assault on married woman—evidence tending to show a miscarriage as a result of the assault is competent..... 1004
65. certain evidence admitted was not prejudicial where it was otherwise satisfactorily shown that the beating was without reason or excuse..... 1004

sisted. So, where a locomotive sets fire to fields and buildings along the track, the sufferer can not state in what the negligence consists—whether there is a defect in the furnace or carelessness in the management—some negligence is presumed, and it must of necessity be alleged generally. And the same rules apply to an answer which sets up contributory negligence."

This court took this view in the case of the L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Wolf (80 Ky., 82). The court, in deciding that case, used this language: "It is contended by counsel that the reply fails to deny the substantive facts constituting contributory negligence, and only traverses the averment of negligence, which is by denying a legal conclusion. The error in this position lies in the assumption that the allegation of negligence is a mere legal conclusion, and that the supposed substantive facts constitute contributory negligence, neither of which is true. The absence of care in the performance of an act is not merely the result of such absence, but the absence itself, and it is not, therefore, a mere conclusion of law, and may be pleaded generally" in an answer, the facts having been specifically set out in the petition. And in many other cases which have been decided in this court, the plea of contributory negligence was set out substantially as in the amended answer of defendant, and have been held good. There are many ways in cases such as this, in which landholders may be guilty of such contributory negligence as may defeat recovery for losses sustained. (See Sherman and Redfield on Negligence, sections 679 to 682, and Wood on Railways, Minor's edition, 1575 to 1600.

We are, therefore, of the opinion that the court erred in striking this plea from the amended answer. Another ground of error complained of was the admission by court of a statement made by appellee in his testimony before the jury that Patton, the claim agent of appellant, had said that he would settle the claim and would pay it in sixty days; and also in permitting his son-in-law to testify that Patton had said (at the time he came to ascertain the causes of the injury complained of that, in his conversation with appellee), "you will likely hear from it in thirty or sixty days; he said that we would be paid for it, and that we would hear from it in sixty days." This testimony was excepted to at the time, and the court allowed it to go to the jury over the appellant's objection.

This is not an action upon a contract or agreement entered into by the company through its claim agent, Patton. It is a suit for injuries resulting from negligently allowing sparks to escape from the locomotive. And whilst it is very plausibly contended by appellee that this evidence was not introduced to show admission of liability on the part of the railroad; that no instruction was predicated upon it, and that the jury were alone directed to find upon the evidence that the spark-arrester was out of order, and that the testimony was competent because it was part of a conversation which had been called out by plaintiff, being a part of the res gestæ of the conversation, it is well settled that "the admissions or declarations of an agent are received in evidence against a principal but as parts of the res gestæ; hence, only such as accompany the acts which are relied on for recovery can be proven. Thus, it is not true that where an agency is established, the declarations of agents are admitted merely because they are his declarations. They are only evidence when they form a part of the contract entered into by the agent on behalf of a principal, and in that case they become admissible. The cases on the subject draw this distinction between the declarations of the agent accompanying the making of an agreement, and, therefore,

EXECUTIONS—Continued. Page.
9. an execution issued by justice of the peace within ten days after the rendition of judgment was not premature, he being both judge and clerk 1005
10. even if an execution was prematurely issued it was not void..... 1005
11. validity of levy of execution—description of land—title of purchaser at execution sale..... 1005
12. a levy upon the right, title and interest of an execution defendant in land without specifying the interest is sufficient..... 1005
13. a levy signed by the deputy sheriff for the sheriff is not void 1005
14. failure to have appraisers sworn will not affect the title of the purchaser at execution sale unless the purchaser participates in the irregularity 1005

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—
1. an executor derives his right to qualify from the appointment made by the testator and by reason of the special confidence placed in him by the testator and the latter's desire that he should take charge of the estate..... 68
2. as to the right of a father to administer upon the goods and chattels of the deceased son..... 104
3. payment by administrator to distributee, who had assigned his interest—recovery against administrator..... 454
4. evidence in particular case fails to show such want of capacity upon the part of the widow to manage the estate as executrix as to authorize the appointment of a committee or receiver..... 840
5. where purchaser of land by parol contract died before delivery of the deed his administrator had no power to bind his estate for the purchase money by accepting the deed..... 853
6. appointment of administrator, with the will annexed, terminated the powers of the curator..... 862
7. appeal to circuit court from orders of county court admitting will to record did not suspend powers of administrator 862
8. to suspend upon appeal the powers of the administrator appointed by the county court it was necessary to execute a supersedeas bond, 862
9. jurisdiction of county court to appoint administrator in certain case—domicil of infant ward..... 878
10. widow and heirs of decedent, and not the administrator, proper persons to sue for breach of contract to grant decedent passway over certain lands..... 938
11. right of administrator to acquire by assignment a promissory note —may maintain an action thereon without alleging that it is an asset of the estate..... 979

EXEMPTIONS—
1. a conveyance by a debtor of property which is exempt from execution is not fraudulent as to creditors..... 74
2. levy upon exempt personal property 942

EXPERT TESTIMONY—
1. the opinions of nonprofessional witnesses are never received where the inquiry is into a subject matter, the nature of which requires some peculiar habit, study or scientific knowledge to enable one to understand it and form a correct judgment thereon..... 161
2. it is not competent for persons who are neither professional nurses nor physicians to testify that a person died from the effects of a fall and not from typhoid fever 161
3. error to permit witnesses to testify as experts as to the proper manner for liveryman to hitch horses without first showing that they had had experience in that regard..... 470

FALSE IMPRISONMENT—in an action for false imprisonment the petition should have alleged that the officers who made the arrest were not duly elected and qualified..... 903

FALSE REPRESENTATIONS—
sale by insurance company of its register of applications of membership and of good will of company—false representations as to age of applicants—defendant might set same up as a defense to an action on a note executed in payment of indebtedness created by the sale..... 79

FEES— Page.
county judge and other magistrates entitled to $3 in each felony case in which they sit as examining courts, but not to exceed $4 in any one case where trial lasts longer than one day 857
FINAL ORDERS—
1. order overruling motion for a new trial was a final order, and the court had no power over it after the term of court at which it was rendered 209
2. an order directing the master commissioner to retain until the further order of the court a certain amount out of an allowance made to appellant as receiver is not a final judgment from which an appeal lies 545
FINES—
where a prisoner has been put at hard labor for the nonpayment of a fine the county is not liable to the county attorney for 30 per cent. of the fine as provided by law, where such fines are imposed and "collected" 61
FIRE INSURANCE—
1. failure to furnish certificate of loss not a bar to a recovery on the policy 537
2. failure of the insured to disclose the fact that there had been an attempt to burn the insured property does not authorize a forfeiture of the policy unless he was asked about the matter 537
3. if the general agent of the company denied the debt and refused to pay, the insured was not required to furnish proofs of loss 537
FORCIBLE DETAINER—
a warrant of forcible detainer need not set out the boundaries of the land alleged to be detained, a general description being sufficient, 178
FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER—a warrant sued out for a forcible entry may be amended before trial or issue joined 718
FORGERY—
1. an indictment for forgery, substantially in the language of the statute, is good, although it does not charge that the act complained of was done feloniously, that word not appearing in the statute 480
2. an indictment for forging a check must allege that the bank upon which the check was forged was authorized by law of the United States or a State or of some foreign government 484
3. allegations of indictment for forgery insufficient in particular case, 614
FORMER CONVICTION—a former conviction for a breach of the peace is a bar to a subsequent prosecution for assault and battry based upon the act constituting that breach of the peace 145
FRAUD—
1. the evidence in this case is not sufficient to authorize the court to throw out the vote of a whole precinct upon the ground of fraud, although the conduct of the election clerk gave rise to grave suspicions 105
2. where a transfer of stock in a corporation to the president of same was induced by false and fraudulent representations, the transfer should have been canceled 185
3. where actual fraud on the part of the vendor is shown the vendee is entitled to relief on account of a defect in the title, although he is in the undisturbed possession of the land under a conveyance with covenants of general warranty 157
4. action to recover purchase price of goods—recovery of goods upon ground that they were obtained by fraudulent representations... 226
5. an intention to defraud is not necessary to make an alteration in a written contract work a forfeiture of same 617
6. although a married woman could not make herself liable in damages for a failure to comply with her contract, if she comes into a court of equity the defendant will be allowed to set-off the damages he has received by reason of her fraud, or the contract will be rescinded 792
7. where joint tenants propose to sell their interests in land together, fair dealing requires that one should not undertake secretly to procure for himself more than it is understood each and all shall have; such action is fraudulent 814

FRAUDS, STATUTE OF— Page.
1. where a firm agreed with a customer, in consideration of certain things to be done by him, to give him credit upon his account by the amount of a debt which a member of a firm owed him, the agreement, though not in writing, is not within the statute of frauds 84
2. an agreement by a purchaser of land of decedent at judicial sale to pay one of the heirs the value of her interest if she would refrain from redeeming was not within the statute of frauds, and was enforcible, though not in writing ..... 678.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES—
1. the liability of the grantor in a deed on his covenant of warranty, upon which judgment was recovered against his estate on account of his widow's claim to dower, must be regarded as an "existing liability" from the time the deed was made, and transfers of property made by him without consideration subsequent to the execution of the deed were constructively fraudulent as to that liability 37
2. a conveyance by a debtor of property which is exempt from execution is not fraudulent as to creditors 74
3. when a conveyance was set aside at the suit of attaching creditors of the grantor upon the ground that it was fraudulent as to creditors, the cancellation of the conveyance destroyed the lien of a creditor to whom the grantor had transferred the purchase-money notes as collateral 101
4. where a father collected and retained money belonging to his adult children under an agreement to convey to each of them a town lot, subsequent conveyances, pursuant to that agreement, are neither actually nor constructively fraudulent as to creditors. 156
5. evidence shows that a conveyance by a debtor of all his property to his minor son was executed with intent to defraud creditors .. 298
6. conveyance to father in trust for his daughter attacked by creditor of father as fraudulent—circumstances were sufficient to throw burden on defendant 759

FRAUDULENT REPRESENTATIONS—
1. to entitle buyer of personal property to rescission on the ground of false representations he must have been deceived and induced to purchase by the false statements—false representations must be of material facts 432
2. publication of false statement by bank officers as to its financial condition, whereby persons were induced to purchase bank stock —measure of damages 532
3. as to personal liability of bank directors for false statement as to the condition of the bank 716

GAME AND FISH—
1. section 1899 of the Kentucky Statutes and succeeding sections, providing for the punishment of the offense of catching fish with a seine, etc., do not violate the provisions of the Constitution prohibiting special legislation for the protection of game and fish ... 50
2. an indictment for catching fish with a seine in a stream in Grayson county need not allege that the stream is not one "forming the boundary line between this and other States" 50
3. it is lawful to kill gray squirrels at any season of the year 780
4. section 2 of chapter 183 of the acts of 1891-2-3 was repealed as to gray squirrels by an amendment passed in March, 1894 780

GAMING—
1. an ordidnance of a city of the third class providing for the punishment of the offense of gaming is void 269
2. betting on horse race is an offense under section 1977, Kentucky Statutes 515
3. each person engaged in a game of chance is guilty of an indivdual offense, and the one is not the accomplice of the other; and one may be convicted on the testimony of the other 694
4. right to recover money advanced to pay losses of gaming 892
5. the law does not permit corporations to be formed to carry on gaming 892

GARNISHMENT—
service of summons upon garnishees gave to the attaching creditor a lien upon money held by them, although they had issued check for same to the agent of the debtor ..... 785.

GAS METER RENT— Page.
where the charter of the gas company limits the amount which it may charge for gas, the company can not charge an additional amount as "meter rent" 849
GENERAL STATUTES—Provisions cited, construed, etc—
1. chapter 92, article 7, section 21 493
2. chapter 57, section 3 1088
3. chapter 63, article 1, section 19 1096
GRANTOR AND GRANTEE—
1. deed properly set aside because of grantor's mental incapacity 1065
2. a grantee who held property in trust for the grantors was not estopped to claim a lot included in the deed, the title being in him prior to the execution of the deed 1065
GUARDIAN AND WARD—
1. power of guardian of infants to bind his wards 216
2. without statutory restraint guardian may compromise, settle and release claims due to his ward, and the latter will be bound thereby unless it is done in bad faith 352
3. section 2030 of the Kentucky Statutes does not require leave of court in order to authorize a guardian to compromise a claim of the ward for unliquidated damages on account of a tort 352
4. suit by guardian for sale of land and division of proceeds, alleging that ward had interest in reminder under her grandfather's will. 966
5. guardian's bond—the infancy of one surety does not release the others 1067
HOMESTEAD—
1. where husband and wife owned adjoining tracts of land which were cultivated as one farm, the husband was entitled to the homestead exemption out of his part of the land, notwithstanding the dwelling house in which they resided was on the wife's part of the land 40
2. to the extent that a homestead was paid for with exempt wages of the debtor it is exempt from his debts 98
3. homestead of wife continues after her death for the benefit of the surviving husband 182
4. the husband is not entitled to a homestead exemption in the lands of his wife until after her death 206
5. as to what constitutes abandonment of homestead 206
6. where by a stipulation in a mortgage the husband and wife waive all their rights to the land under the "exemption laws," they are not entitled to a homestead 898
7. action seeking to subject lands in the hands of adult children to the debts of a deceased debtor twenty years after his death—evidence failed to establish the claim that the land was set apart as a homestead 994
8. reservation by assignor in a deed of assignment of a "homestead exemption" reserves only such right as the law gave him 1001
HOMICIDE—
1. homicide by one assisting an officer in the execution of process—instruction upon the trial for such offense 485
2. homicide in the defense of another—instructions 560
3. evidence in certain case sufficient to authorize an instruction upon the subject of murder 657
4. trial for murder—verdict of guilty of voluntary manslaughter supported by evidence—instructions correctly stated the law 665
5. an indictment for murder against two persons jointly, charging that both did "kill and murder" deceased "by one or the other" cutting off her head, the other aiding and abetting, etc., was good 795
6. upon the trial of accused for murder the instruction given was unobjectionable 844
7. there being no evidence upon which to base instructions as to self-defense, insanity and manslaughter, the instructions asked were properly refused 844
HOUSEBREAKING—
1. a livery stable where bridles, buggies, etc., are kept is a warehouse or storehouse within the meaning of section 1164, Kentucky Statutes 220
2. the removal of a pin and shoving a door open constitutes a breaking 220

HOUSEBREAKING—Continued. Page.
3. when one by some trick gains admission to a warehouse with intent to steal therefrom, this constitutes a breaking within the meaning of section 1164, Kentucky Statutes 782
4. the ownership of the warehouse broken was properly alleged to be in the company which owned and retained control of the building 782
HUSBAND AND WIFE—
1. where a lease of a storehouse was executed by an agent for husband and wife and children, who owned the property jointly, an agreement by the husband with the tenant can not affect the wife and children 55
2. where the only rights which a husband has to certain property of his deceased wife grow out of the marital relation, they must be held subordinate to the provisions of the will under which she held the property 110
3. where the wife, a feme sole, owned a stock of merchandise which was managed by her husband and brother under a firm name, a creditor of the husband can not complain of a transfer of the property to the wife after dissolution of the alleged firm as a fraudulent preference 182
4. capital and credit furnished by husband, but business carried on in wife's name—rights of husband's creditors 249
5. wife entitled, as against husband's creditors, to the amount of money which she put into the business 249
6. the increase of a wife's estate which is employed in a business conducted by the husband, the wife giving no attention to the business, may be subjected to the husband's debts 555
7. fraudulent conveyance—real estate paid for by wife by her work not subject to husband's debts 935
8. fraud as to creditors—charge of fraud not established by evidence. 1018
9. it was competent for the wife to waive her right to testify and introduce her husband as a witness 1018
10. execution of mortgage upon wife's land to secure husband's debt—after wife's death the value of husband's curtesy should be subjected to the payment of the debt, and the surplus should go to the child 1092
IMPEACHMENT OF OFFICERS—board of aldermen of city of first class has jurisdiction of a proceeding to remove a member of the board of park commissioners 341
IMPRISONMENT—
in an action for false imprisonment the petition should have alleged that the officers who made the arrest were not duly elected and qualified 908
IMPROVEMENTS—improvements made by the mother and the stepfather upon the lot to which the son was entitled in remainder must be regarded as having been made for his benefit 1065
INCOMPATIBLE OFFICES—the office of deputy sheriff is incompatible with the office of city collector 245
INDEMNITY—as to liability of sureties on an indemnifying bond in an execution .. 981 INDICTMENT—
1. an indictment under section 807 of the Kentucky Statutes need not allege, in the language of the statute, that the fixture disturbed was "attached to the track or switch" 16
2. an indictment under the local option law must allege that the election was ordered upon a petition by a number of "legal voters in each precinct" equal to 25 per cent. of the votes cast therein, it not being sufficient to allege that the petition was "by a number of legal voters equal to 25 per cent. of the votes cast in each of the precincts" 80
3. it is not necessary that the indictments should allege in terms that the petition was "signed" by the requisite number of voters, it being sufficient to allege, as in this case, that the county judge ordered the election upon a written petition which he had "received and filed" on a certain day "by a number of legal voters," etc 80

INDICTMENT—Continued. Page.
4. when an act of the legislature can only be put in force by taking the sense of the legal voters of a given territory, an indictment for a violation of the act should allege a state of facts showing that the act has been put in force as required by its terms..... 80
5. an indictment for catching fish with a seine in a stream in Grayson county need not allege that the stream is not one "forming the boundary line between this and other States"..... 50
6. an indictment accusing the defendant "of the crime of arson or barn burning" is sufficiently direct and certain as to the offense charged..... 100
7. the question of duplicity in an indictment can be raised properly only by a demurrer and not by a motion to quash..... 129
8. a motion to quash an indictment raises only the question named in section 158 of the Criminal Code..... 129
9. where facts charged in an indictment do not constitute an offense the court during the trial may quash the indictment, or the defendant may move in arrest of judgment..... 129
10. an indictment under the special act of the legislature prohibiting the sale of spirituous, vinous and malt liquors in Robertson county should negative the exceptions contained in the statute... 130
11. where a statute provided that it should be in full force when the clerk of the county court should have recorded the certificate of the canvassing board, etc., an indictment was defective in failing to allege that the certificate was recorded as required..... 131
12. an indictment for rape is not defective in failing to allege that the female was over twelve years of age..... 205
13. the indictment alleging certain facts charged the public offense of obtaining money under false pretenses..... 423
14. an indictment for perjury must negative the truth of the statements of the defendant alleged to be false..... 479
15. an indictment for forgery, substantially in the language of the statute, is good, although it does not charge that the act complained of was done feloniously, that word not appearing in the statute..... 480
16. an indictment for a common-law felony should allege that the act constituting the offense was done "feloniously," but not so as to a statutory felony unless that word is used in the statute..... 480
17. indictment against a railroad company for failure to provide a water closet at station "on the 1st day of September, 1895, and for two consecutive months thereafter"—the allegations as to the continuance for two months was surplusage and need not have been proved..... 483
18. as to what can not be rejected as surplusage..... 483
19. an indictment for forging a check must allege that the bank upon which the check was forged was authorized by law of the United States or a State or of some foreign government..... 484
20. an indictment for keeping a disorderly house which charges defendant with permitting evil disposed persons to frequent rooms under his control, "and habitually engage in betting, winning and losing money on horse races," is good..... 515
21. allegation and proof—variance..... 576
22. indictment for forgery—allegations insufficient in certain case.... 614
23. an indictment for a violation of the local option law must allege facts showing that the law was in force in the county and precinct in which the liquor was sold..... 634
24. an indictment against the mayor and councilmen of a city for suffering a nuisance on a public highway in the city, by suffering persons to make indecent exposures of their persons, failed to state facts which constitute an offense..... 647
25. unless an indictment for a misdemeanor is returned within twelve months after the commission of the offense the statute of limitation bars the prosecution..... 667
26. indictment for misdemeanor must allege that the offense was committed within twelve months before the finding of the indictment, 667
27. an indictment under section 1166, Kentucky Statutes, which charges the offense of "malicious cutting and wounding," is sufficient..... 758
28. when an indictment after demurrer sustained may be resubmitted to the grand jury..... 781

INDICTMENT—Continued. Page.
29. the omission of the letter "f" in the word "off," as used in the expression "bite off," was not fatal in the indictment 781
30. an indictment for murder against two persons jointly, charging that both did "kill and murder" deceased "by one or the other" cutting off her head, the other aiding and abetting, etc., was good. 795
31. increased punishment on account of former conviction—allegations of the indictment 1020
32. indictment charged but one offense—motion to require Commonwealth to elect properly overruled 1021
INJUNCTION—
1. in an action to enjoin the erection of a schoolhouse and outhouse, including a privy, on the ground that the drainage would run into plaintiffs spring, the petition was properly dismissed, since it was indefinite as to the anticipated damage 73
2. individuals can not enjoin the collection of tolls upon a turnpike because of failure to keep road in repair 221
3. a State court has jurisdiction of an action upon an injunction bond executed in the United States Circuit Court 825
4. enforcement of judgment enjoined—ascertainment of damages at time of dissolution of injunction 825
5. modification of injunction pending appeal 978
6. evidence sufficient to sustain judgment perpetuating injunction restraining the levy of an execution on the ground the replevin bond upon which it was issued had been paid 983
7. damages on injunction bond—no recovery can be had for attorney's fees where the injunction was the relief sought 1057
8. construction of railroads through the streets of a city—injunction. 1068
INJURIES RESULTING IN DEATH—
1. action for injury resulting in death received by putting arm outside car window—allegation of petition of willful neglect and of gross negligence—election 1082
2. where a passenger on a railroad train, in passing through a tunnel, voluntarily though inadvertently placed his arm outside the car window, thereby receiving an injury resulting in death, he was guilty of such contributory negligence as precluded a recovery of damages from the railroad company 1083
INSANE PERSONS—as to jurisdiction of county court to appoint a committee for a lunatic who owns an estate 649
INSOLVENT DEBTOR—
1. after judgment sustaining an order of arrest in a civil action the circuit court has no jurisdiction to discharge the defendant as an insolvent debtor, and its order to that effect does not exonerate the bail 1106
2. the right of an insolvent debtor to obtain such a discharge can be enforced only as prescribed by statute 1106
INSTRUCTIONS—
1. the court erred in giving a peremptory instruction for the defendant where the evidence was conflicting 15
2. there being some testimony tending to show guilt, the court properly refused a peremptory instruction to find for defendant 16
3. an instruction that if accused "brought on the difficulty and was the aggressor he must in good faith have abandoned it before he could avail himself of the plea of self-defense" would not have been proper 60
4. in an action for damages for injuries sustained by reason of the negligence of the employes of a railroad company it was error to instruct the jury that they could not consider, "in mitigation of damages," the plaintiff's physical disability at the time of the accident 89
5. as the striking and wounding was done with a stone, it was error to give an instruction as to shooting and cutting in sudden affray, described in section 1242, Kentucky Statutes 98

INSTRUCTIONS—Continued. Page.
6. under an indictment for striking and wounding with deadly weapon it was error to instruct the jury to find defendant guilty if they believed from the evidence that such striking and wounding was done "with rocks, clubs, bludgeons or other hard substance, deadly weapon or weapons," since the effect was to say that the stone with which the wounding was done was a deadly weapon 98
7. in certain case the court should have given an instruction as to the offense of assault and battery, which was a lower degree of the offense charged 98
8. as there was no testimony tending to show either that the wounding was the result of a sudden affray or was done in sudden heat and passion, an instruction requiring the jury to believe that the wounding was done under both of these conditions in order to find the defendant guilty only of a misdemeanor did not prejudice the defendant, as the court might have properly omitted the instruction altogether 129
9. the court properly refused to tell the jury by instruction what would not be evidence sufficient to establish the true line between the lots of plaintiff and defendant, since the jury is the judge of the weight of the evidence 137
10. it would have been improper for the court to instruct the jury with regard to the abstract proposition of law that where both parties to an action for the recovery of land claim title through the same person neither party is required "to show title back of that person" 137
11. where there was no evidence of a shooting without an intent to kill, although there may have been no intent to kill deceased, there was nothing to justify an instruction as to voluntary manslaughter 142
12. where the instructions given fully covered the law of self-defense the court did not err in refusing an instruction asked by the defendant upon that subject 142
13. in an action by husband and wife to recover damages for an alleged criminal assault by defendant upon the wife, only one witness being introduced upon each side, it was error, after instructing the jury that the burden of proof was on plaintiff, to tell them that this does not necessarily mean that the plaintiff must have two witnesses to the wrongful act, but that the case, in all its facts and circumstances given in evidence, must preponderate in their judgment in favor of plaintiffs 146
14. the word "preponderance" should be omitted from certain instructions, as it was calculated to mislead 146
15. prosecution for willful and malicious striking and wounding with intent to kill—where the weapon used was an iron weight the accused was not prejudiced by an instruction that by the words "a deadly weapon," as used in the instructions, is meant a weapon with which death could be produced when used in the manner in which defendant used it on the occasion mentioned ... 176
16. an instruction as to the degree of care the plaintiff, a boy of eleven years of age, was required to exercise without connecting same with the acts of plaintiff and the circumstances surrounding him was misleading 259
17. an instruction that the jury should find for defendant if the publication was proved to be true in fact, or "substantially true as published," was properly given 291
18. submission to jury of state of facts from which, if proved, malice would be implied—effect of an instruction to find for defendant if the publication was made "without actual malice," etc 291
19. an instruction as to contributory negligence which submitted to the jury the question as to the intelligence of the plaintiff's intestate, a boy thirteen years old, was not prejudicial to defendant. 348
20. the failure to give an instruction as to self-defense upon a trial for murder is not error where there is not the slightest evidence to show that the homicide was excusable upon that ground 367
21. action on policy of marine insurance—instruction as to seaworthiness of the boat and competency of captain and crew 444

INSTRUCTIONS—Continued. Page.
22. in an action to recover damages for the death of a horse the court should have required the jury to believe, in order to find for plaintiff, that the negligence of defendant, if any, was the proximate cause of the injury 470
23. indictment for failure to keep turnpike road in repair—instruction given erroneous 487
24. where the court in a separate instruction set out every circumstance and condition necessary to constitute a correct instruction the jury could not have been misled by another instruction which contained words which were out of place therein 518
25. the words "considerable provocation" were properly used in an instruction where they were explained by the words which followed, "such as a blow or other trespass to the person at the hand of deceased" 519
26. where neither party asked any specific instructions, but asked the court to give the law to the jury, instructions given under this request must be regarded as given by the court on its own motion, 521
27. indictment charging offense of drawing a pistol upon and pointing it at another—instruction to find accused guilty if the jury believe he drew the pistol upon or pointed it at the prosecuting witness 668
28. insertion in an instruction of the words "and not in his self-defense" not error in particular case 668
29. instruction on the law of self-defense not objectionable in certain case 670
30. there being no evidence tending to show gross negligence, it was error to give an instruction as to punitive damages 672
31. it was error to instruct the jury that it was the duty of the railroad company to so light its platform as to admonish its passengers that that platform was "exclusively used for passengers" 687
32. instructions drawing attention to particular facts or evidence are not favored in law 692
33. trial of accused upon the charge of murder—an instruction upon the law of self-defense was erroneous in pointing out and making too prominent the facts proved on the trial and in not requiring the jury to believe, "to the exclusion of a reasonable doubt," that those facts existed 728
34. carrying passenger past station—the court properly refused to instruct the jury that they could only find nominal damages 751
35. instruction as to the punishment to be inflicted according to the degree of the offense of which the accused is found guilty—reference to degrees as "malicious cutting and wounding" and "cutting and wounding in sudden heat and passion" was sufficient .. 758
36. in certain case a peremptory instruction to find the defendant "not guilty" was proper 783
37. error to give an instruction which left the jury the sole judges of both law and facts 819
38. an error in admitting incompetent evidence was cured by an instruction telling the jury to disregard the testimony 835
39. there being evidence conducing to show the existence of a conspiracy, an instruction upon that subject was not prejudicial 835
40. prosecution for murder—right of accused to act in defense of his brother—instruction as to that question was properly given .. 835
41. manslaughter—instruction to find accused guilty of manslaughter if he did the killing "upon some provocation which was reasonably calculated to excite his passion beyond the power of self-control" was proper 835
42. there being no evidence upon which to base instructions as to self-defense, insanity and manslaughter, the instructions asked were properly refused 844
43. action for damages for breach of contract—where no attempt was made to show the "reasonable value of the use of the land" an instruction that "the measure of damages is the reasonable value of the use of the land, etc.," was erroneous 1059
44. instructions are to be considered as a whole, and the omissions in one may be supplied by reference to another 1074
45. an instruction which put to the jury the question of whether the will was properly executed, though erroneous, was not prejudicial to appellants, for the finding of the jury was what the court must have concluded as a matter of law 1074

INSTRUCTIONS—Continued. Page.
46. the submission to the jury by the instruction the question of the credibility of the attesting witnesses, although erroneous, was not prejudicial to the appellants 1074
47. objection to an instruction because of a mere statement of an abstract porposition upon the subject of testamentary capacity can not be sustained where the instruction proceeded to give a correct definition of the capacity required 1074
INSURANCE—
1. as to the mode of ascertaining the equitable value of a life insurance policy where the contract of insurance provided that when the insured ceases to pay, after a certain period, he should have the equitable value of what he had paid in cash or insurance 1
2. sale by insurance company of its register of applications of membership and of good will of company—false representations as to age of applicants—defendant might set same up as a defense to an action on a note executed in payment of indebtedness created by the sale 79
3. action upon an accident insurance policy which provided that no action should be instituted until thirty days after proof of loss ... 161
4. the requirement of an insurance policy that immediate notice of the accident or death shall be given may be waived by the company or its general agent 161
5. waiver of notice of loss by a statement of the general agent of the company to the insured that written notice was unnecessary 190
6. failure to furnish proofs of loss within thirty days did not deprive insured of his right to recover 190
7. furnishing original and duplicate invoices by assured—examination under oath as to questions pertaining to the loss—forfeiture. 190
8. when one comes to his death by a shot fired intentionally through his body by another, death results from "external, violent and accidental" means within the meaning of an accident insurance policy 308
9. the expression "intentional injuries" does not embrace death resulting from such injuries 308
10. provision in policy that the beneficiary was not to get the full amount of the policy if the insured was killed in any occupation more hazardous than druggist—petition should negative that condition 308
11. action upon policy of marine insurance--abandonment of goods—evidence 444
12. the mere negligence of the owners of a vessel or the officers in charge constitutes no defense to a policy which insures against the perils of the river 444
13. action on policy of marine insurance—instruction as to seaworthiness of the boat and competency of captain and crew 444
14. the right of abandonment of insured goods does not depend on the certainty but on the high probability of total loss 445
15. recovery for partial loss, although the action was for total loss—mandate of the court 445
16. the insurance company was not entitled to credit by any part of the expense which it incurred in preparing to recover the property which was never recovered in a particular case 445
17. assignment of policy of life insurance—consent of beneficiary necessary 588
18. a creditor, whose name was by a marginal writing on the original policy substituted for that of the beneficiary, has no lien upon the policy 588
19. change of beneficiary—insurable interest 588
20. the alteration of an insurance policy without the consent of the company invalidates the policy 617
21. action on fire insurance policy—defense that there was a concealment of mortgage on property—refusal to give instruction as to that fact not reversible error because it was not assigned as a ground for new trial 632
22. revocation by the insurance company of its agent's authority—notice to insured 654
23. life insurance—what constitutes insurable interest in the life of another 858
24. fire insurance—effect of house becoming vacant 865

INSURANCE—Continued. Page.
25. co-operative life insurance company—member must designate as a beneficiary one of the members of his family or one dependent upon him 1029
26. benefit certificate void as to stranger, for want of insurable interest. 1029
27. beneficiary may recover from stranger, who advanced premiums on the policy, the portion of the insurance paid him less the premiums paid 1029
28. fire insurance—void condition for want of consideration 1034
INTEREST—
1. a note payable "ten years from date, with interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum from —— until paid," bears interest from date and not merely from maturity 183
2. unsettled and uncertain matters between parties—interest allowed on balance found due by appellant only from the date of commencement of the action 351
3. where partner withdrew from firm and those succeeding him retained his assets and used them, compound interest can not be charged in the absence of a contract 400
4. interest payable after the maturity of the purchase-money notes can not constitute a part of the price of the land, but is necessarily for forbearance 602
5. error to allow eight per cent. interest in certain case, although at the time the contract was made it was legal to contract for that rate 602
6. certain interest allowed by the court is not subject to the objection that it was upon a claim for unliquidated damages 895
7. judgment for interest at eight per cent. not prejudicial in certain case 930
INTERSTATE COMMERCE—
1. section 196 of the Constitution is not a regulation of interstate commerce 996
2. the liability of telegraph company for negligence in transmission of message from point in another State to point in this State is governed by the law of this State 996
ISSUES—
It is the duty of the court, upon or without motion, to compel the parties to form a material issue in the action and to cause all redundant or irrelevant matter to be stricken from the pleadings .. 46
JAILERS—
1. compensation of jailer for attending upon and furnishing fuel, light and water to the county, quarterly and circuit courts—report to auditor 489
2. the jailer is not required or authorized by law to furnish fuel, light and water to any of the county or other officers 489
JOINT TENANTS—
1. in action for partition of lands between joint owners what one or more of them may have previously taken or derived therefrom is a proper subject of the litigation 209
2. where one joint tenant buys in an outstanding title, the purchase will enure to the benefit of the other tenant, the purchaser being entitled to contribution 509
3. where joint tenants propose to sell their interests in land together, fair dealing requires that one should not undertake secretly to procure for himself more than it is understood each and all shall have; such action is fraudulent 814
4. collection of rents by one of several joint tenants—right to credit for disbursements 1024
JUDGES—
liability of circuit judge for imprisonment of witness—evidence in action against a judge 968 JUDGMENTS—
1. although a judgment was in favor of the infants by their next friend, when it appears the action was brought by the guardian, it is a bar to any further action either by a next friend or by the statutory guardian 9
2. a judgment in favor of a defendant for the amount he paid to plaintiff upon a judgment which was subsequently reversed was proper 83

plaintiffs became the purchasers, they became doubtful of the jurisdiction of the court, and raised that issue by an amended petition and by exceptions to the commissioner's report of sale. The chancellor overruled the exceptions and upheld the jurisdiction of the Jessamine court. We think this ruling correct. This was not an action to settle the estate of a deceased person, and for that reason required by section 65 of the Civil Code to be brought in the county in which the personal representative was qualified. Nor in our opinion does subsection 3 of section 62 of the Code apply to an action of this kind.

There it is provided that actions for the sale of real property under a mortgage must be brought in the county in which the subject of the action is situated except for debts of a decedent. It seems to us that this exception had reference to and was made in view of the provisions of section 65.

It is manifest that if an action was pending to settle the estate of a deceased person, and mortgage liens were set up, the court, where the personal representative was qualified, alone having jurisdiction of such action, must also have jurisdiction to decree a sale of the mortgaged property, although it may be situated in another county. Hence the necessity for an exception to the general rule.

In this case there was no personal representative and no suit to settle the estate. Moreover, it was a suit to sell the husband's interest as well as that of his wife's, and for his debt, and we do not see how in a suit in Fayette county his interest could have been sold, the action as to him being clearly local. But in distributing the surplus proceeds of the sale the husband was given his full share as tenant by the curtesy in the whole tract over the objection of the guardian ad litem and his child. It seems to us that, as from the averments of the petition this debt was that of the husband, the value of his interest ought to have gone to pay his debt, which would seem to leave the entire surplus for the child. This being true it is unnecessary to pass upon the question at to whether the husband's interest is to be fixed under the old or new law regulating his interest in his wife's estate. Upon the return of the case the court should adjudge the surplus proceeds to the child unless the husband should make it appear that it was in fact the wife's debt in whole or in part.

This he should be allowed to show if he desires, as there has in fact been no issue made on that behalf or plea to which he was called on to respond.

The judgment as to the Shields is affirmed, and, as the collection of the surplus after satisfaction of the plaintiff's debt was suspended by supersedeas, damages will be awarded.

On the appeal of the guardian ad litem the judgment is reversed for proceedings consistent herewith.

GRAY, &C. V. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed February 11, 1897.)

Change of venue—Power to set aside order—Liability of sureties in bail bond —The court had the power without notice to set aside a consent order granting a change of venue in a criminal case at any time during the term at which it was entered, having erroneously granted the order before the defendant, who was under bond, had given a new bond for his appearance at the proper court or been surrendered to the court or proper officers. And the sureties in the JUDICIAL SALES—Continued. Page.

4. the commissioner is not estopped to deny the receipt of the purchase money, although he had so reported to the court, the surety on the bonds having persuaded him to report a deed acknowledging the receipt of the money ... 786
5. an indebtedness of the master commissioner to one of the sureties on the bond of the purchaser at judicial sale can in no way influence the action of the court in regard to the collection of the purchase money ... 787
6. motion to quash writ of possession improperly sustained in certain case ... 826
7. judicial sale of property of lunatic—agreement to prevent competitive bidding ... 833
8. death of judgment debtor after confirmation of sale but before the expiration of redemption period—no revivor is necessary to give validity to conveyance to the purchaser ... 859
9. sales of notes and accounts—title of purchaser to note that was withdrawn by the administrator before date of sale ... 1003

JURIES—
1. as to misconduct of juryman in asking and answering questions of the court in the presence of the whole jury ... 16
2. competency of juror—kinship to party ... 327
3. the court in ordering the sheriff to summon a jury from an adjoining county did not err in selecting a county from which former juries in the case had been taken ... 367
4. separation of jurors after submission of felony case—where juryman was allowed to go to his place of business, though in company with deputy sheriff, the jury should have been discharged upon a motion therefor ... 575
5. in every case of separation of jury on trial of felony case the State must show there was no opportunity for the exercise of improper influences on the juror ... 575
6. in forming a jury it is not improper, after exhausting the panel, to summon jurors from bystanders ... 640
7. qualifications of jurors—implied bias—conscientious scruples on the subject of capital punishment ... 652
8. the fact that a juror has formed an opinion based upon rumor does not render him incompetent ... 652
9. it was too late after verdict rendered for defendant to object to juror because he was hostile to him, such objection being waived by failure to object earlier ... 1054

JURISDICTION—
1. upon appeal by a defendant the value in controversy is the amount of the judgment rendered against him and not the amount claimed by the plaintiff; the amount of the judgment in this case being less than $100, this court has no jurisdiction of the appeal. 172
2. where a defendant, although not summoned, entered her appearance and the allegations of the petition were on her motion taken to be controverted, the court had jurisdiction of her person. ... 175
3. as to jurisdiction of police court of prosecutions under section 1977, Kentucky Statutes, for the offense of gaming ... 269
4. board of aldermen of city of first class has jurisdiction of a proceeding to remove a member of the board of park commissioners. 341
5. the county court has the power to remove for cause an inspector of illuminating oils ... 546
6. a State court has jurisdiction of an action upon an injunction bond executed in the United States Circuit Court. ... 825
7. jurisdiction of county court to appoint administrator in certain case—domicil of infant ward ... 878
8. party having appealed from judgment in an attachment suit can not, in another suit, question the jurisdiction of the judge who rendered the judgment ... 928
9. the jurisdiction of justices of the peace is co-extensive with the county under old Constitution ... 1004
10. after judgment sustaining an order of arrest in a civil action the circuit court has no jurisdiction to discharge the defendant as an insolvent debtor, and its order to that effect does not exonerate the bail ... 1106

JURISDICTION OF COURT OF APPEALS—
1. upon appeal by a defendant the value in controversy is the amount of the judgment rendered against him and not the amount claimed by the plaintiff; the amount of the judgment in this case being less than $100, this court has no jurisdiction of the appeal. 172

JURISDICTION OF COURT OF APPEALS—Continued. Page.
2. Court of Appeals has no jurisdiction of an appeal from a judgment enjoining appellant from collecting a judgment for an amount less than $100 897
3. costs properly included as part of the amount in controversy in particular case—the sum of the debt and costs being more than $100, this court has jurisdiction on appeal 908
JUSTICE OF THE PEACE—
1. the jurisdiction of justices of the peace is co-extensive with the county under old Constitution 1004
2. an execution issued by justice of the peace within ten days after the rendition of judgment was not premature, he being both judge and clerk 1005
KENTUCKY STATUTES—Provisions cited, construed, etc.—
1. section 6 1089
2. section 71 546
3. section 117 828
4. section 287 641
5. section 353 857
6. section 356 489
7. section 361 622
8. section 483 228
9. section 656 778
10. section 768 1088
11. section 786 610
12. section 800 491
13. section 807 16
14. section 816 42
15. section 1073 481
16. section 1130 630
17. section 1188 778
18. section 1139 610
19. section 1164 ..... 220, 782
20. section 1166 ..... 129, 758
21. section 1189 484
22. section 1474 105
23. section 1482 771
24. section 1584 ..... 526, 860
25. section 1730 489
26. section 1773 489
27. section 1774 489
28. section 1899 50
29. section 1910 463
30. section 1977 ..... 269, 515
31. section 2030 852
32. section 2053 456
33. section 2054 456
34. section 2353 1097
35. section 2515 778
36. section 2519 585
37. section 2781 ..... 329, 841
38. section 2788 854
39. section 2794 329
40. section 2826 10
41. section 2854 314
42. section 3279 882
43. section 3304 882
44. section 3426 684
45. section 3646 208
46. section 3746 245
47. section 3901 62
48. section 4089 692
49. section 4058 692
50. section 4077 620
51. section 4134 25
52. section 4436 534
53. section 4731 487
LACHES—
where the evidence shows that the party seeking the cancellation of a transfer of stock in a corporation had no knowledge of the fraud until a short time before he instituted suit, he can not be deemed guilty of laches 185

the court to which the venue is taken, or that he be surrendered to the custody of the proper officers; that they may see to his proper delivery to the jailer of the county to which the venue is given, and they must see to this before the order for the change is granted.

The record in this case does not show that the defendant or his securities ever executed the new bond required by the statute; nor did the securities ever at any time surrender the custody of the defendant to the court or the proper officer, or indicate to the court in any way that they desired to be released from their obligation on the bail bond of defendant. Their obligation required that the defendant should at all times render himself amenable to the orders and process of the court in the prosecution of said charge, and they could have exonerated themselves on said bond only by a formal surrender of the defendant to the court or its officers, or by the execution of a new bond for his appearance to answer the charge in Ohio county.

The order granting the change of venue before the execution of the necessary bond was an error on the part of the court, which it was the duty of the court to correct by setting aside the order, and it had ample power and authority to do this at any time during the term of court at which said order was entered; and it was not at all incumbent upon it to have given notice to the defendant of such action on the part of the court, as these defendants had entirely failed to perform or comply with the necessary conditions upon which said order could have been legally made under the statutes.

The defendants assumed to answer for the appearance of said Gray, and to see that he complied with all orders of the court, and it was their duty to see that he executed the proper bail for his appearance in the Ohio Circuit Court, or to have surrendered him back to the custody of the court; and the failure to take these necessary steps leaves these defendants bound upon the bond which they executed.

It is not enough for them to say that they caused the said Scott Gray to appear in court at the time of the making of the order changing the venue, or that he remained in court during the entire day; their obligation required more than this—that he "should at all times render himself amenable to the orders and process of the court in the prosecution of the charge; and, if convicted, to render himself in execution thereof, and if he failed to perform any of these conditions that they would pay to the Commonwealth the sum of $3,000."

Having failed to see to the execution of the bail bond for the appearance of the defendant in the Ohio Circuit Court, and having also failed to surrender him to the court, it was undoubtedly their duty to see that he was ready to answer when called upon in the Daviess Circuit Court, in which he stood indicted.

For the reasons indicated in this opinion the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

HARLAN, &C. V. EILKE, &C.

(Filed February 11, 1897.)

Resulting trusts—Where a father who undertook to invest money for his son used it in buying property which he procured to be conveyed to himself without the son's consent, an enforcible trust was thereby created in favor of the son, there being nothing in section 19 of article 1, chapter 63, General

Statutes (section 2353, Kentucky Statutes), which prevents the enforcement of such a trust.

C. B. Seymour for appellants.

Phelps & Thum and Dodd & Dodd for appellees.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

It appears from satisfactory testimony that in 1882 Ellie Eilke, the eleven-year-old son of William Eilke, sr., desired to become a jockey. His father reluctantly consented to it, but finally did so, and emancipated his son, saying to him: "My boy, if you think you can make a living, you can go." He admonished his son to save his money; send it to him and he would invest it for him.

Under these circumstances the son entered upon his career as a jockey, and in the prosecution of his business traveled over the country for several years, earning a yearly salary of some $3,000 or $4,000. The father seems to have been afflicted and thriftless. The son sent him several thousand dollars, and he invested it in the real estate in controversy. The father, without the knowledge of the son, had the deeds made to himself. In 1893 the father died, and this action was instituted by Ellie Eilke to have the trust declared, and to recover the property.

Section 19, article 1, chapter 63, General Statutes, reads as follows: "When a deed shall be made to one person and the consideration shall be paid by another, no use or trust shall result in favor of the latter, but this shall not extend to any case in which the grantee shall have taken a deed in his own name without the consent of the person paying the consideration, or where the grantee, in violation of said trust, shall have purchased the land deeded with the effects of another person."

We agree with the learned counsel for appellants that no claim like that of the appellee should be sustained except upon the fullest and clearest proof. After the examination of the proof in this case we can not escape the conclusion that the money with which the property was bought was that of the appellee, which he sent to his father to invest for him.

Appellee introduced several witnesses to sustain his claim. They appear to be worthy of credit; besides no effort was made to impeach them or to contradict their statements. In addition to the facts which they prove with reference to the son sending home his money to the father and its investment in the real estate, they also prove that the father had no source from which he obtained the money with which to purchase property except through the son.

There is nothing in the statute quoted which prevents the trust from being enforced. On the other hand the saving clauses in the statute recognize the equitable doctrine that an enforcible trust exists where one takes a deed in his own name without the consent of the person paying the consideration, or where the grantee, in violation of such trust, shall have purchased the lands deeded with the effects of another person.

We are of the opinion that the land was held in trust for Ellie Eilke, and that he is entitled to recover it. (Grayham v. King, 96 Ky., 339; Faris v. Dunn, 7 Bush, 276; Miller v. Edwards, 7 Bush, 394.)

The judgment is affirmed.

LIFE ESTATES—Continued. Page.
2. a deed conveying to the grantor's son "a life estate" in a tract of land "and at his death to his heirs and assigns in fee forever," reserving a life estate to the grantor, created in the grantee only an estate for life, remainder to his children 488
3. under a devise by a testator to his widow of all his estate, real and personal, "absolutely and forever, with power to sell or dispose of as she deems proper," the widow took the fee, notwithstanding a subsequent provision of the will devising the remainder to others 840
4. life tenant may purchase the remainder estate from the remainderman 1009
LIFE INSURANCE—
as to the mode of ascertaining the equitable value of a life insurance policy where the contract of insurance provided that when the insured ceases to pay, after a certain period, he should have the equitable value of what he had paid in cash or insurance 1
LIMITATION—
1. in determining whether a suit has been brought within the statutory period of limitation, the filing of the petition and the issuing of summons is to be regarded as the commencement of the action 2
2. the promise by the son for a valuable consideration to pay a debt of another owing to his father being in writing, an action thereon is not barred until the lapse of ten years 37
3. where a certain amount was placed as a credit on a running account between the parties, no cause of action accrued thereon until final settlement of the accounts, and limitation began to run only from that date 84
4. the thirty years' statute is a complete bar to actions for the recovery of real estate 215
5. the right of action, if any, for damages for injury to abutting property from the construction of a railroad accrued when the roadbed was constructed, and the action was barred in five years. 276
6 where property was held in trust for persons until the death of their parents, which occurred in 1881, and suit was brought in 1892, the right to the property was not barred by limitation 461
7. where the original note was executed September 30, 1884, due in twelve months, a suit brought September 23, 1892, was not barred by limitation 511
8. in an action to enjoin the collection of taxes the burden is on the plaintiff to show that the property was improperly assessed or that it is not liable for the taxes in question 543
9. section 2519 of the Kentucky Statutes, as to limitation of actions for relief for fraud, does not apply to an action upon the official bond of a clerk 585
10. the sureties on the official bond of the clerk are released after the lapse of seven years from the accrual of the cause of action 585
11. the acceptance of a deed by the grantee and the possession of the land under it operate as an agreement on his part to pay the purchase price, and an action therefor is founded upon a contract in writing within the meaning of the statute of limitation 601
12. the fifteen years' statute applies to an action to enforce a lien for the purchase price upon the lands of a married woman, the lien being retained in the deed 601
13. unless an indictment for a misdemeanor is returned within twelve months after the commission of the offense the statute of limitation bars the prosecution 667
14. penal actions by the Commonwealth to recover penalty against life insurance companies barred after one year 778, 779
15. a payment made upon a second execution which was issued after the lapse of fifteen years from the date of the judgment did not revive the judgment and both the second and the third executions were properly quashed 790
16. the pendency of a suit in equity to enforce a judgment did not stop the running of the statute, as this did not suspend the right to have successive executions issued 790
17. where a voluntary payment is made upon a judgment within fifteen years, limitation begins to run anew from the date of payment 790

LIMITATION—Continued. Page.
18. action upon a new promise to pay a debt barred by limitation—proof as to the promise being conflicting, the judgment for the defendant is not disturbed 904
19. adverse user of passway—limitation did not begin to run against an infant until he reached his majority—as fifteen years have not elapsed since that time the claim by adverse user is not sustained. 905
20. no cause of action accruing against remaindermen until death of life tenant, limitation did not begin to run until then 968
21. action by stockholder to recover dividend declared by corporation—limitation begins to run when dividend is declared 964
22. stockholder must make demand for dividend before he can sue .. 964
23. an action was begun and limitation cease to run upon the filing of a petition and issuing of summons, notwithstanding a mistake in the summons as to the name of the plaintiff 1099
24. where a plea of limitation by a corporation is based upon a special provision of its charter, the pleader must specially refer to the charter 1099
LIQUOR SELLING—
1. as to right of a town to take a vote under the local option law for the purpose of determining whether liquor should be sold therein. 17
2. election under the local option law—the sixty days required by statute begins to run with and after the act of lodging the application, and the day on which the application was lodged should be counted 80
3. an indictment under the local option law must allege that the election was ordered upon a petition by a number of "legal voters in each precinct," equal to 25 per cent. of the votes cast therein, it not being sufficient to allege that the petition was "by a number of legal voters equal to 25 per cent. of the votes cast in each of the precincts" 80
4. it is not necessary that the indictment should allege in terms that the petition was "signed" by the requisite number of voters, it being sufficient to allege, as in this case, that the county judge ordered the election upon a written petition which he had "received and filed" on a certain day "by a number of legal voters," etc. 80
5. a license to sell liquor is not necessary in order to authorize one who is both a physician and druggist to prescribe and sell liquor as a medicine, nor is a written prescription necessary 49
6. the fact that one has had a license to sell liquor which he has forfeited does not deprive him of the right of subsequently carrying on the business of a druggist and selling liquor as such for medical purposes in accordance with law 49
7. where a prohibitory liquor law was in force in a town by virtue of a vote taken in the magisterial district of which the town formed a part, a vote subsequently taken in the town alone under the local option law of 1892 189
8. resulting in favor of the sale of liquor, had the effect to render the former law inoperative as to the town 118
8. an indictment under the special act of the legislature prohibiting the sale of spirituous, vinous and malt liquors in Robertson county should negative the exceptions contained in the statute... 180
9. although the local option law of Logan county has been repealed in so far as it confers jurisdiction upon justices of the peace to try offenses thereunder, such offenses may be tried before the county judge 481
10. an indictment for a violation of the local option law must allege facts showing that the law was in force in the county and precinct in which the liquor was sold 634
11. the county judge is not authorized to order an election under the local option law until the next term of court after the petition is noted of record 634
12. sale of liquor to inebriate—right of action in favor of the wife only against a "licensed" dealer 928
13. excessive charge by city authorities for liquor license—voluntary payment 1068

LIVERY STABLE KEEPERS— Page.
negligence in hitching customer's horse—liability of liveryman for injury resulting to horse by reason of such negligence 469
LOCAL OPTION—
1. an indictment under the special act of the legislature prohibiting the sale of spirituous, vinous and malt liquors in Robertson county should negative the exceptions contained in the statute... 130
2. election held under local option law—certificate of canvassing board—judgment of contesting board 233
3. election under local option law—time for filing petition and the orders necessary to be entered in the county court—order for election to be at next regular term 233
4. although the local option law of Logan county has been repealed in so far as it confers jurisdiction upon justices of the peace to try offenses thereunder, such offenses may be tried before the county judge 481
5. an indictment for a violation of the local option law must allege facts showing that the law was in force in the county and precinct in which the liquor was sold 634
6. the county judge is not authorized to order an election under the local option law until the next term of court after the petition is noted of record 634
LUNATICS—
1. as to jurisdiction of county court to appoint a committee for a lunatic who owns an estate 649
2. service of process on lunatic—delivery of copy to physician in charge of him—certificate of physician—officer's return 821
3. judicial sale of property of lunatic—agreement to prevent competitive bidding 833
4. lunatic can not bind himself by contract—note executed by lunatic not obligatory 879
5. attorney entitled to reasonable compensation for services rendered for one upon trial of proceeding to have such one adjudged a lunatic 879
6. sale of lunatic's property under execution is void 959
7. attorney's fee for defending lunatic—attorney not entitled to recover fee in the absence of allegation that services were necessary —lunatic has no power to bind his estate 987
MALICE—
in contemplation of law malice may exist, although there is no actual intent to injure 552 MALICIOUS CUTTING AND WOUNDING—
an indictment under section 1166, Kentucky Statutes, which charges the offense of "malicious cutting and wounding," is sufficient... 758
MALICIOUS PROSECUTION—
1. in an action for malicious prosecution malice may be inferred from want of probable cause, but probable cause can not be inferred from anything else 299
2. what facts and circumstances amount to probable cause is a question of law for the court—whether they exist or not in any particular case is a question of fact for the jury 299
3. in an action for malicious prosecution the defendant is not liable if he acted in good faith upon the advice of an attorney after laying the facts before him 299
4. to an action for malicious prosecution the petition should state that the charge upon which the arrest was made, if upon any, was false or that the arrest was without probable cause 903
5. damages for wrongful prosecution by city attorney—sufficiency of petition 947
MANDATE—
1. as plaintiffs, upon the return of this case to the lower court from the Superior Court after a former appeal, pleaded no new matter, there was left no alternative for the lower court under the mandate of the Superior Court but to dismiss the action on the pleadings without further trial 108
2. the opinion of this court reversing the judgment of the lower court and directing the collection of the unpaid purchase money for land was not erroneous 786

MARRIAGE— Page.
1. issue of void marriage—legitimacy of—right of issue of void marriage, solemnized in another State, to inherit property in this State ... 895
2. marriage void because a former husband or wife was living when marriage was contracted—issue of the marriage is legitimate.... 896
MARRIED WOMEN—
1. a contract between a father and his married daughter is binding upon him, although not upon her, where she complies with the terms of the contract ... 453
2. sale of married woman's land for taxes—she has the right to redeem at any time within five years from the time notice of the purchase was given both husband and wife ... 493
3. the land of a married woman can not be subjected to the payment of a note for the purchase money, a lien being retained in the deed. 601
4. although a married woman could not make herself liable in damages for a failure to comply with her contract, if she comes into a court of equity the defendant will be allowed to set-off the damages he has received by reason of her fraud, or the contract will be rescinded ... 792
5. the real estate of a married woman is subject to pay the rental of a hotel kept by her as a business for profit, such debt not being one for "necessaries" ... 908
MASTER AND SERVANT—
1. employment for indefinite time—may be terminated at any time at the discretion of either party—recovery of wages ... 808
2. damages for personal injury—evidence authorized the submission of the case to the jury ... 826
3. defective appliances furnished to servant by master—what constituted negligence in that regard in certain case ... 747
4. as to liability of railroad company for injury received by one of its servants by reason of the negligence of fellow servant superior in authority ... 828
5. evidence did not show negligence on part of plaintiff's fellow servant, and no recovery can be had against the railroad company .. 829
6. servant, who called the attention of his foreman to a dangerous place in the roof of the mine, and then continued to work under the dangerous part, is not entitled to damages for an injury sustained thereby ... 915
MECHANICS' LIENS—
1. to create a mechanic's lien upon the property of a married woman the service or labor must be performed or the materials furnished under a written contract signed by her ... 439
2. a written contract signed by the husband is not sufficient ... 439
3. the wife's mere acquiescence does not make her property liable for the debt ... 439
METER RENT—
where the charter of the gas company limits the amount which it may charge for gas, the company can not charge an additional amount as "meter rent" ... 849
MORTGAGES—
1. as to priority of first mortgage over second in particular case ... 125
2. mortgage took effect from time of acceptance—execution levied before acceptance of mortgage has priority ... 311
3. sale of mortgaged goods by the mortgagor—the purchase money was due by the purchaser to the mortgagee—mortgagee's claim was superior to a lien asserted by an attaching creditor ... 821
4. provision of section 1910, Kentucky Statutes, as to recording mortgages within thirty days from its execution applies only in cases where there has been an antecedent preferential conveyance ... 463
5. where a person has a mortgage lien on personal property the mortgage expressly providing that the mortgagees might retain the possession and use of the property, the mortgagor can not be defeated of his right by the levy of a general attachment by another upon the property and a sale by order of the county judge ... 500
6. where principal in a negotiable note executed a mortgage to secure his sureties and the note was renewed from time to time, the mortgage continued in force to secure the last renewal, and the mortgage was a superior lien to that of an attaching creditor 681

MORTGAGES—Continued. Page.
7. where by a stipulation in a mortgage the husband and wife waive all their rights to the land under the "exemption laws," they are not entitled to a homestead 898
8. verbal agreement to mortgage personal property exempt from execution—rights of promisee as against purchaser with notice..... 946
9. judgment sustaining attachment and enforcing mortgage lien was proper..... 1017
10. junior mortgagee can not set up plea of limitation against prior mortgagee ten years after judgment and sale to enforce prior mortgage lien..... 1088
11. the only right of a junior mortgagee, who has not been made a party to the foreclosure of a prior mortgage, is to redeem the property from that mortgage..... 1088
12. enforcement of mortgage lien—accounting for rents from the property..... 1088
MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—
1. without some legislative authority a city has no power either to condemn or close streets or alleys 10
2. the act for the government of cities of the first class does not grant to such cities the power to close public ways 10
3. the city having authority to contract for street improvements, but none to make it a charge upon the abutting property which belonged to the school board, it was liable to the contractor for the cost of the work. 124
4. disposition of license fees for privilege of selling liquor in cities of fifth class 208
5. as to passage and publication of ordinances for the improvement of streets in cities of the first class—two weeks to elapse between first and second passage 238
6. the seal of the city and the signature of the mayor as mayor was a sufficient execution of a contract by the city 238
7. section 2740, Kentucky Statutes, for classifying cities and towns, was not intended to create towns not previously existing..... 246
8. an ordinance of a city of the third class providing for the punishment of the offense of gaming is void..... 269
9. powers of legislative board in fixing penalty for an offense—may fix any sum within the jurisdiction of the police court 269
10. no provision in charter for cities of the third class for testing the validity of city ordinances—method for testing same is by appeal from judgment in police court 269
11. limitation of indebtedness—where indebtedness of city of second class was fourteen per cent. of the assessed value of the property therein the city had the right to incur an additional indebtedness of two per cent..... 288
12. issual of bonds by the city in series—the city incurs the debt the year the bonds are issued..... 288
13. assent of two thirds of the voters of the city if the debt exceeds the city income provided for the year 288
14. the trustees of a town have no control of the courthouse square, and can not make a valid conveyance of any part of it..... 302
15. an election held to take the sense of the voters of a city as to incurring an indebtedness can not be held on any other day than that of a regular annual election..... 313
16. two-thirds of all the voters voting at the general election held on the day the question was submitted and in favor of the indebtedness are required to authorize the incurring of an indebtedness in excess of the limit fixed by the Constitution..... 313, 324
17. removal of "officers of towns and cities"—constitutional provisions apply as well to offices created by statute as by the Constitution..... 329
18. the legislature can not delegate to the mayor and board of aldermen the power to determine for what causes city officers may be removed..... 329
19. as to how vacancies in elective offices for towns and cities shall be filled—vacancy in office of mayor of city of first class 354
20. municipal government one of the auxiliaries of State government—object is to aid the State in its governmental functions—same rules govern where negligence is imputed to common council as when imputed to the officers of the State 377

It is manifest in this case that appellees had full notice of the lien from a trustworthy source—from one who knew the truth of the matter—hence it is immaterial whether Town be regarded as appellants' agent or not; the notice was sufficient. The court, therefore, erred in refusing the instruction asked, and erred in giving instructions 1 and 2.

The judgment appealed from is, therefore, reversed and cause remanded, with directions to set aside the verdict and judgment and award appellants a new trial and for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

SLACK & PERKINS V. KOON & PERRY, &C.

(Filed February 12, 1897—Not to be reported.)

1. Landlord's lien—Partnership—Where one of two parties in the hotel and saloon business had only an interest in the profits and not in the furniture, etc., used in the business, the lien of the landlord for rent under a lease to the partner who owned the goods is superior to the lien of a partnership creditor.

2. It was not necessary for the landlord to sue out his attachment in order to preserve his landlord's lien, it being sufficient for him to assert it by petition in this suit by the attaching partnership creditors.

Bush & Worten and Hill & Hill for appellants.

J. C. Hodge for appellees.

Appeal from Livingston Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge White.

The appellants, Slack & Perkins, sued Koon & Perry, the appellees, in the Livingston Circuit Court on an account for $380.66, and at the same time sued out attachments against the property of Koon & Perry and had it levied on a lot of personal property then in the St. Clair Hotel and saloon, at Grand Rivers. This property consisted of furniture, bar-room fixtures, liquors and many other articles usually found in a hotel and bar room. Several other small executions were also sued out from the quarterly court of Livingston county, and levied on the same property, subject to appellants' attachment lien.

On notice and motion the county judge made an order of sale, and the attached property was sold, and brought the sum of $500, the appellee, Ross, claiming a landlord's lien on the attached property; also procured from a justice of the peace an attachment for rent due, and to become due, for the sum of $360, rent of the premises occupied by Koon, and also had the same levied on the property attached by appellants.

Appellee Ross filed his petition, asserting that he was the owner of the property known as the St. Clair Hotel property, in the town of Grand Rivers, and that the defendant, Koon, had rented said property from him for the period of twelve months from the 1st day of April, 1892, to the 31st day of March, 1893, at the agreed price of $360, to be paid monthly ($30 each month), and to be paid in advance, except the month of April, which was to be paid on May 1st, and claiming landlord's lien for his rent on the goods attached and on the money arising from sale of same.

To this petition appellants filed an answer, denying that the hotel

NEGLECT— Page.
1. the act of the employes of a railroad company in leaving a switch open, with full knowledge of the expected approach of a train, was such negligence as authorized an instruction as to punitive damages in an action by a passenger who was injured by reason of said negligence 89
2. if the petition in an action for negligence specifies the negligence complained of, the plaintiff can not recover upon showing a different character of negligence 164
3. the same rule applies if the plaintiff specifies the particular officer or agent who is charged with the negligent act 164
4. a railroad company was not guilty of negligence in placing a pile of coal on its right of way for its necessary use 258
5. action upon policy of marine insurance—abandonment of goods—evidence 444
6. negligence in hitching customer's horse—liability of liveryman for injury resulting to horse by reason of such negligence 469
7. injury to conductor of freight train through negligence of car inspector—may recover for injury, he and the car inspector not being fellow servants in the sense of being upon a common footing and agents of each other 505
8. action for damages for injury sustained by reason of turnpike road company failing to keep the road in safe condition—plaintiff not guilty of contributory negligence in continuing to drive his horse along the pike after discovering the train at which the horse became frightened 612
9. killing of stock on railroad track—presumption of negligence—the question of negligence should have been left to the jury 685
10. the fact that plaintiff did not come to a full stop to listen for the train, but brought her horse to a slow walk in order to listen, was not per se contributory negligence 738
11. the question of contributory negligence was properly submitted by the instructions in a certain case 788
12. defective appliances furnished to servant by master—what constituted negligence in that regard in certain case 747
13. death from electric shock—as to negligence of telephone company in putting up its wires and allowing a "dead wire" to hang in close proximity to an electric light wire 761
14. the term "wilful neglect" defined as used in the Constitution and statute 761
15. the word "gross," when used to qualify the word "negligence," is a relative one, and is supposed to emphasize merely the want of due care 761
16. negligence is gross or ordinary, according to the circumstances under which due care is omitted to be exercised 761
17. a section foreman on a railroad was not guilty of negligncee in undertaking to assist a section hand in carrying a cross-tie, the foreman being a stout man 829
18. crossing street car track in front of an approaching car, with knowledge of its approach, was contributory negligence 921
19. action to recover for death of horse through alleged negligence of trainer—latter required to take such care as an ordinarily prudent man would take of his own property 937
20. the court ought not to take the question of negligence or contributory negligence from the jury, where different findings might reasonably be made by men of average intelligence 957
21. failing to stop and listen before passing over a public railroad crossing in a crowded city is not per se contributory negligence .. 957
22. action to recover damages for the destruction of a barn by fire caused by sparks from railroad locomotive—a specific allegation of the facts constituting contributory negligence is not necessary in pleading such negligence as a defense 1079
23. the word "willful," as descriptive of a degree of negligence, is now eliminated from the statute—plea of contributory negligence as a defense to an action for willful neglect 1082
24. where a passenger on a railroad train, in passing through a tunnel, voluntarily, though inadvertently, placed his arm outside the car window, thereby receiving an injury resulting in death, he was guilty of such contributory negligence as precluded a recovery of damages from the railroad company 1083

NEW PROMISE— Page.
action upon a new promise to pay a debt barred by limitation—proof as to the promise being conflicting, the judgment for the defendant is not disturbed 904
NEW TRIAL—
1. where a judgment was rendered on the 24th day of the month, a motion for a new trial made on the 27th day of the month was too late 171
2. the statement that the verdict is "contrary to law" is too general and indefinite to be considered as a ground for new trial 178
3. no reversal on account of action of court in granting a new trial in the absence of a bill of exceptions 222
4. the court was authorized to grant a new trial upon additional grounds filed within three days after verdict 229
5. motion for new trial upon ground of newly discovered evidence—properly refused where the evidence was only cumulative and it was doubtful if due diligence had been used by defendant 558
6. "error of law occurring at the trial and excepted to at the time by the defendant," assigned as grounds for a new trial, is not sufficient to authorize this court to reverse for an error in giving or refusing instructions 682
7. surprise as ground for new trial—circumstances of certain case afforded no grounds for 665
8. the trial court should be allowed a reasonable discretion as to granting new trials—no reversal because of the action of the lower court in granting a new trial 748
9. plaintiff in certain action entitled to new trial upon the grounds of accident and surprise, of newly-discovered evidence and of the insufficiency of the evidence 866
1. newly-discovered evidence, which will entitle a party to a new trial, was not intended to be confined merely to testimony of living witnesses, but applies to any character of competent evidence 868
11. there was no error in refusing a new trial, asked upon the ground of "accident" in certain case 901
12. action for injury to church from construction of railroad along street in front of it—the fact that the jury viewed the property after dark, and that one of the plaintiffs who furnished the lanterns was present, does not afford grounds for a new trial 1111
NEXT FRIEND—suit in name of next friend—amendment of petition 945
NOTICE—
1. where a certificate of stock was assigned to a principal on a note to secure a particular note in bank, he having no authority to pledge it for any other purpose, a pledge of same by the principal to a surety on another note can not be enforced against the owner, since the surety had notice of the purpose of the assignment 80
2. the requirement of an insurance policy that immediate notice of the accident or death shall be given may be waived by the company or its general agent 161
3. when the creator of a nuisance is entitled to notice from those inconvenienced thereby 278
4. waiver by the general freight agent of a railroad company of notice to the company of loss occasioned by delay in the transportation of live stock 275
5. a senior lien holder will be regarded as having notice of the junior lien if he has notice of facts sufficient to put him upon inquiry .. 281
NUISANCE—
1. if actual injury results to plaintiff's spring by reason of the drainage from a privy running into same, he will not be precluded from procuring an abatement of the privy as a nuisance by reason of the dismissal of his petition to enjoin the erection of the privy because of uncertainty as to the anticipated damage 73
2. the maintenance of a dam in such a way as to emit disagreeable odors affords a right of action to those who may be inconvenienced 278
3. consent to the creation of a nuisance—consent to its continuance withdrawn when notice to that effect is given 278
4. the creators of a nuisance entitled in certain case to some notice from those inconvenienced thereby 278

NUISANCE—Continued. Page.
5. an indictment against the mayor and councilmen of a city for suffering a nuisance on a public highway in the city, by suffering persons to make indecent exposures of their persons, failed to state facts which constitute an offense 647
6. recovery of damages on account of animals being insufficiently buried by defendant near residence of plaintiff—if done wantonly and maliciously punitive damages may be recovered 824
7. obstruction of alley—nuisance—measure of damages to owner of lot abutting upon the alley 989, 998
NUNC PRO TUNC ORDERS—
1. where an error in a judgment was a misprission of the clerk the court properly entered a judgment nunc pro tunc 266
2. nunc pro tunc order, entered after the expiration of ten years, was proper in certain case 1068
OBTAINING MONEY BY FALSE PRETENSES—as to what facts necessary to be alleged to charge the offense 428
OFFICE AND OFFICER—
1. there having been no election in November, 1893, of trustees of a town of the sixth class, the old trustees held over by virtue of the provision of section 167 of the Constitution, that they should hold until their successors should be elected and qualified 18
2. the legislature has the power to authorize the county court to declare the office of sheriff vacant upon the failure of the incumbent to renew either his revenue bond or general official bond within the time fixed by statute 25
3. the county court has the power to accept the renewal bond of a sheriff after the first Monday in January, which is the date fixed by statute, and having done so it is too late to declare the office vacant 25
4. the marshal of a town of the fifth class has no authority to execute an order of attachment from the circuit court, although the order be directed to him 185
5. the office of deputy sheriff is incompatible with the office of city collector 245
6. the office of deputy sheriff is a "county office" within the meaning of section 3746, Kentucky Statutes 245
7. removal of "officers of towns and cities"—constitutional provisions apply as well to officers created by statute as by the Constitution. 329
8. a general power to remove an officer does not give right to remove except for causes upon notice and trial 329
9. section 2794, Kentucky Statutes, does not confer upon the mayor and board of aldermen the power to remove a city officer without cause 329
10. the court assumes that members of the board of public safety and the board of public works of the city of Louisville are officers whose removal is provided for by section 2794, Kentucky Statutes, 329
11. where no cause of removal have been designated by the statute the common-law rule supplies the defect—removal for malfeasance or misfeasance 341
12. as to how vacancies in elective offices for towns and cities shall be filled—vacancy in office of mayor of city of first class 354
13. presidential electors are "State officers" within the meaning of section 152 of the Constitution 354
14. common school trustees are "district officers" within the meaning of section 152 of the Constitution 354
15. the salary of a city officer may be fixed by statute or ordinance after he goes into office where no salary has theretofore been fixed. 427
16. a statute fixing the minimum limit to the salaries of the members of the boards of public safety and public works of a city did not fix the salaries of those officers 427
17. who are officers within the meaning of the Constitution—salaries of certain officers can not be increased or diminished during the terms for which they were elected, though their salaries may have been fixed after they went into office 427
18. compensation of jailer for attending upon and furnishing fuel, light and water to the county, quarterly and circuit courts—report to auditor 489
19. the jailer is not required or authorized by law to furnish fuel, light and water to any of the county or other officers 489

OFFICE AND OFFICER—Continued. Page.
20. appointment to fill vacancy in the office of inspector of illuminating oils for Jefferson county--appointee holds for the unexpired term only ..... 528.
21. the sheriff having collected of a corporation the full amount of taxes fixed by a judgment which is still in force, he can not be held liable for his failure to collect a greater amount..... 621.
22. the tax on the franchise of a corporation is not collectible by the sheriff..... 621.
23. a city council which has, in the exercise of discretion given by the general assembly, established a city office, may at its pleasure abolish it..... 684.
24. town marshal had right to levy execution, issued by a justice of the peace, upon property outside of the corporate limits of the town ..... 931.
25. liability of officer for trespass, who acted under void appointment but under valid judgment of the court in seizing personal property..... 934.
26. officer may show in mitigation of damages that plaintiff received the benefit of the sale of the property ..... 984.
OFFICIAL BONDS—
1. sureties on the official bond of a city officer are bound as such, although the officer may have been ineligible to the office by reason of his failure to make a settlement with the city for a preceding term, as was required by ordinance..... 377.
2. suit by county levy bond of sheriff—allegation necessary in petition as to approval of bond by county judge. ..... 809.
3. the county judge was the proper person to verify the petition in a suit by the county on the county levy bond of the sheriff..... 809.
ORDINANCES—
1. as to passage and publication of ordinances for improvement of streets in cities of the first class—two weeks to elapse between first and second passage ..... 238.
2. validity of ordinance for original construction of street—ordinance valid in part and void in part..... 238.
3. no provision in charter for cities of the third class for testing the validity of city ordinances—method for testing same is by appeal from judgment in police court ..... 269.
4. an ordinance of a city of the third class providing for the punishment of the offense of gaming is void..... 269.
5. validity of city ordinance providing for the improvement of streets at the cost of adjacent lot owners—ordinance need not prescribe the width and thickness of the stone..... 279.
6. an ordinance of a city of the third class providing for the levying of a license tax was not void for uncertainty as to the purpose for which it was levied..... 284.
7. an ordinance providing for the payment of a license fee for the sale of beer, which has been brewed out of the city, will not be held unconstitutional in the absence of an averment that such license fee is not charged upon such goods manufactured in the city..... 855.
8. defect in record of the passage of city ordinance 881
9. ordinance for the improvement of a street is not an ordinance which requires the signature of the mayor under section 3304 of the Kentucky Statutes..... 882.
PARENT AND CHILD—
1. a daughter, who went to her father's home upon the death of his wife and lived with him until his death, is not entitled to recover for her services in the absence of a contract to pay..... 488.
2. to entitle a daughter to recover for personal care and attention bestowed upon her mother, there must be a promise to pay, express or implied..... 822.
3. the stepson has no interest in the estate of his stepfather by reason of the fact that it was largely the result of the industry and economy of his mother ..... 1065.
PARTIES TO ACTIONS—
1. though the children of the beneficiary of a trust fund, to whom he had transferred his interest, had the right after his death to bring an action to recover the fund, still the administrator of the deceased should be made a party to the action ..... 18.

PARTIES TO ACTIONS—Continued. Page.
2. when one not a party to an action is bound by the judgment therein ... 65
3. as the company which controlled the defense in an action to be regarded as already a party defendant and bound by the judgment, the court properly rejected an amended petition seeking to make it a party ... 65
4. if a corporation had not been bound by a judgment rendered in an action it would have been too late after appeal and judgment to bring it into the litigation ... 65
5. if the defendant in the original action was a necessary party to an action against a garnishee who failed to make satisfactory disclosures, the failure to make him a party does not afford ground for reversal, there being no special demurrer for defect of parties. 573
6. notes being made payable to a part of the grantors for the benefit of all and assigned by the payees to the plaintiff, the other grantors were not necessary parties to the action ... 602
7. the judgment in a particular action reversed that other persons may be made parties to the action ... 713
8. the agent is not a necessary or proper party to an action by the principal on a note upon which the agent had, without the authority of the principal, credited the price of a horse ... 1087

PARTITION—
1. in action for partition of lands between joint owners, what one or more of them may have previously taken or derived therefrom is a proper subject of the litigation ... 209
2. action for partition—lien upon the land by one joint tenant not supported by the testimony ... 1068

PARTNERSHIP—
1. as to the rights of partnership and individual creditors ... 132
2. while entries in partnership books are prima facie correct an error shown to have been committed may be corrected, and the error may be established by other books connected with the partnership. 150
3. this court in the absence of the firm books, will not disturb the judgment of the chancellor, based upon the report of a commissioner, stating in detail the partnership transaction ... 150
4. certain contract between the parties created a partnership which could not be terminated by one of them at his own will and pleasure ... 187
5. settlement of—compensation of one partner for his services ... 187
6. settlement of partnership accounts—crediting one partner with what he had paid another for his position in the firm ... 383
7. firm not charged with notes discounted in bank, the proceeds of which were appropriated by one partner to his individual use ... 384
8. settlement of partnership accounts—withdrawal of member of a firm and his interest passing into other firms subsequently formed—member of succeeding firm responsible upon partnership liability. 400
9. a settlement of partnership accounts, which was signed by the parties as a firm in their individual names, must be assumed correct after the lapse of thirty years ... 400
10. insolvent firm placed assets in hands of member of a partnership, being indebted to him as an individual and as to his partnership—upon settlement of the partnership it should not be charged against the member that he failed to appropriate the assets to the partnership debt ... 400
11. where partner withdrew from firm and those succeeding him retained his assets and used them, compound interest can not be charged in the absence of a contract ... 400
12. as to power of partner to bind the firm—allegation of petition in action to recover on obligation signed in firm name ... 831
13. settlement of partnership—plaintiff and defendant each entitled to one-half the assets of the firm ... 866
14. action against administrator upon a promissory note executed by his intestate for balance due upon purchase price of interest in stock of goods—settlement of partnership accounts ... 1041
15. note signed by partners as individuals—a suit pending to settle the partnership does not postpone the right of the creditor to recover judgment on the note and to collect same ... 1061

ca. sa., hence he had no right to apply to any court for a release or discharge, for he was not restrained of his liberty by any one.

In the numerous cases decided by this court involving the responsibility of bail, or discharge of insolvent debtors, we have not found a case in which the circuit court or a circuit judge had ordered the discharge of an insolvent debtor, nor have counsel referred to any such case.

We think it manifest that the circuit court had no jurisdiction nor authority to entertain the motion of Harris to be allowed to take the oath to be discharged, nor to receive the schedule of property, and the orders and judgment in that regard are null and void, and are no defense to this action.

The judgment appealed from is, therefore, reversed and cause remanded, with directions to overrule the demurrer and for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

If, however, the appellee has any valid defense he should be allowed to plead it.

FRAZIER, &C. v. DOWLING, &C.

(Filed February 13, 1897—Not to be reported.)

Trade-marks—The purchasers of a distillery known as the "Waterfill & Frazier" distillery, and of the exclusive privilege to use the brand "Waterfill & Frazier" in the manufacture of whisky, are entitled to protection in the use of that brand as against the firm of Waterfill & Frazier, composed of one of the original owners of the brand and a son of the other. And the fact that the defendants sought to be enjoined from using the brand purchased by plaintiffs discarded the brands with which they commenced business, and which were unobjectionable, and imitated the plaintiffs' system of making their goods, is evidence of fraudulent intent. Nor is the use of the word "Distillers" by plaintiffs after the words of the old brand calculated to deceive the trade or the public, and hence this fact does not operate to prevent plaintiffs from obtaining relief.

Thomas F. Hargis and Phelps & Thum for appellants.

Humphrey & Davie for appellees.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hazelrigg.

Beginning in 1870 the firm of Waterfill & Frazier, composed of W. J. Waterfill and R. H. Frazier, built up in the course of several years a widespread reputation for a brand of whisky manufactured by them in Anderson county, consisting of the words "Waterfill & Frazier, distillers, hand-made sour-mash whisky, Anderson county, Kentucky," the particular words composing the brand being "Waterfill & Frazier," coupled, however, with the other words as arranged above.

In 1882 Waterfill sold his interest in the distillery and in the brand to his partner, Frazier, who continued the business as before.

In 1885 Waterfill again became the owner of a half interest in the property and business in connection with John and Edward Dowling, Frazier conveying to them the "Waterfill & Frazier distillery," so known throughout the entire country and so named in the government records, together with the exclusive privilege to use the brand of "Waterfill & Frazier" in the manufacture of whisky. The PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVE—Continued. Page.

3. to suspend upon appeal the powers of the administrator appointed by the county court it was necessary to execute a supersedeas bond 862
4. jurisdiction of county court to appoint administrator in certain case—domicil of infant ward 878
5. widow and heirs of decedent, and not the administrator, proper persons to sue for breach of contract to grant decedent passway over certain lands 938
6. right of administrator to acquire by assignment a promissory note—may maintain an action thereon without alleging that it is an asset of the estate 979

PLEADINGS—
1. while a pleading must, upon demurrer, be construed against the pleader where the averments are of doubtful meaning, yet where there has been no demurrer to a petition and no motion to make its averments more specific it will, if possible, be so construed upon appeal as to uphold a judgment in favor of plaintiff 9
2. it is the duty of the court, upon or without motion, to compel the parties to form a material issue in the action, and to cause all redundant or irrelevant matter to be stricken from the pleadings. 46
3. the court upon sustaining a demurrer to pleading is not required to give leave to amend unless such leave is asked 51
4. as the company which controlled the defense in an action is to be regarded as already a party defendant and bound by the judgment, the court properly rejected an amended petition seeking to make it a party 65
5. in an action to enjoin the erection of a schoolhouse and outhouses, including a privy, on the ground that the drainage would run into plaintiff's spring, the petition was properly dismissed, since it was indefinite as to the anticipated damage 73
6. it was not improper for the court to permit the filing of an amended answer to conform to the proof in certain case 85
7. in a suit upon a policy of life insurance, although the petition is defective in that its averments as to the performance of conditions precedent are too general, such defects are cured by a verdict for plaintiff 95
8. in an action by the heirs of the husband to recover land belonging to husband and wife the defendant, who does not by his answer assert claim to the land, can not complain in this court for the first time that the heirs of the wife were not joined as parties ... 137
9. the requirement of the Code that in an action for the recovery of land "the answer of the defendant must state whether or not he claims it or any part of it" is imperative 137
10. in an action for the settlement of a partnership, in which the plaintiff alleges in his petition that defendant was to keep the accounts and has refused to permit plaintiff to examine the books or to make a settlement with him, an answer setting up the condition of the partnership and the liability of the one to the other in the conduct of the partnership business required no reply 150
11. the denial in an answer of knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the making of a certain plat of a city, set out in the petition, and the recovery of same was not good, as the plat, being a matter of public record, is presumptively within defendant's knowledge 155
12. there being no sufficient denial of the acts constituting a dedication of a street, a denial that there was a dedication is but a conclusion of the pleader, and, therefore, not good 155
13. a pleading is to be construed most strongly against the pleader—as to sufficiency of pleading in certain case 155
14. in an action upon an accident insurance policy which provided that no action should be instituted until thirty days after proof of loss, a plea that the action was instituted within that time was a plea in abatement—when offered at the next term after a plea in bar had been filed it came too late 161
15. if the petition in an action for negligence specifies the negligence complained of, the plaintiff can not recover upon showing a different character of negligence 164
16. the same rule applies if the plaintiff specifies the particular officer or agent who is charged with the negligent act 164

PLEADINGS—Continued. Page.
17. an objection to a pleading upon the ground it is not verified by oath must be made before the commencement of the trial, otherwise it will be regarded as waived 169
18. the plea of contributory neglect is affirmative matter which must be controverted 224
19. where ignorant of fraud at the time of filing original petition, the plaintiff was properly allowed to file an amendment setting up the fraud 226
20. even though a petition was defective the action of the court in overruling a demurrer thereto was not prejudicial to the defendant where the plaintiff afterwards pleaded over 288
21. a petition was defective in failing to allege that the required sum was subscribed where under a contract a certain sum should be subscribed by a certain time 246
22. plaintiff, having replied to answer, can not complain that the answer was not good because not denominated a counterclaim or set off 253
23. the allegation of the answer that twenty-two years had elapsed from the making of the embankment before the commencement of the action was sufficient foundation for a plea of limitation without stating the time when it was made 276
24. erroneous conclusion of the pleader—pleadings must be construed most strongly against the pleader 302
25. provision in policy that the beneficiary was not to get the full amount of the policy if the insured was killed in any occupation more hazardous than druggist—petition should negative that condition 305
26. action to recover purchase price of machinery—plea of breach of warranty and counterclaim—answer offering to return the machinery should not have been permitted to be filed 346
27. allegation of petition that railroad track where plaintiff was hurt had been used as a passway for years, "with the consent and knowledge" of company, can not be construed to import an express consent to such use as to have made it the duty of the servants of the company to keep a special lookout at that point .. 434
28. action for damages for injuries at hands of railroad company—petition was fatally defective in failing to show that plaintiff had a right to be on the track 434
29. amended answers offered to conform to the proof properly rejected where the defendant might, by ordinary diligence, have sooner known all the facts alleged, if true 444
30. action to have mortgage operate as an assignment of all the mortgagor's property for benefit of creditors—necessary averments should be definitely and distinctly made in the petition—denial of knowledge or information, etc., not sufficient 462
31. action against livery-stable keeper to recover for the death of plaintiff's horse, resulting, as alleged, by the negligent hitching of the horse—error to strike from the answer an allegation that the horse slipped the halter and escaped by reason of its own restlessness, without negligence on the part of defendant 470
32. in an action to recover the purchase price of land the vendees are not entitled to a reduction on account of an encumbrance upon the land without alleging facts showing that the encumbrance exists 518
33. action to enjoin collection of taxes—denial in plaintiff's reply that it "had in the city and subject to taxation the property in the answer mentioned" was merely a denial that the property was subject to taxation and not that it owned the property 543
34. action against garnishee who failed to make satisfactory disclosures—failure to allege that the attachment was sustained did not make the petition bad on demurrer 578
35. action on the official bond of county clerk to recover license fees which he collected and failed to pay over—not necessary to allege that the licenses were granted by the county court 585
36. amended answer of infant defendants—not prejudicial error for court to impose as the condition to its filing that it should be traversed of record 602
37. the court had discretion to impose reasonable terms in permitting one of the defendants to file his answer out of time 602

PLEADINGS—Continued. Page.
88. a denial that plaintiff is the owner of the notes "as the assignee of the vendors in the deed" is objectionable 602
89. a denial that by the terms of the deed a lien was retained to secure the payment of the notes is a mere conclusion of law 602
40. a mere denial of information and belief as to whether the payees assigned the notes sued on is not good 602
41. suit to recover salary as city attorney—sufficiency of answer which put in issue the facts of plaintiff's election 636
42. when facts alleged affirmatively in the pleading of one party are presumptively within the knowledge of the other party justice requires a straightforward denial or confession 661
43. action for trespass—allegation that defendant forcibly removed the furniture of plaintiff's intestate from her house and placed another in the possession of the house—sufficient to deny in the answer that the plaintiff's intestate was in the rightful possession of the land or that the person so charged forcibly or without right removed any of the furniture from her house 715
44. action against bank directors to recover damages for false statement published as to the condition of the bank—petition must allege that the statements were false, so known by the directors and made by them to deceive 716
45. defects in petition cured by the answer 716
46. action to recover damages for injuries sustained by reason of the failure of servants in charge of a railroad train to give signal for crossing—not necessary for plaintiff to plead that the failure to give the signal was in violation of law 738
47. amendment of pleadings where it was alleged that certain terms of the contract sued on had been omitted by mistake—failure to verify 740
48. amendment of pleadings to conform to the proof—not error to refuse leave to amend in certain case 742
49. defects in petition cured by judgment 744
50. in suit on county levy bond of sheriff it was sufficient to aver in the petition that the bond was accepted and approved by the county court 809
51. although the covenants of the bond sued on are not specifically set out in the petition, the pleading must be held good after judgment 809
52. the bond being referred to as part of the pleading "as if fully set out" must be held to aid in some degree the averments of the petition 809
53. the county judge was the proper person to verify the petition in a suit by the county on the county levy bond of the sheriff 809
54. the defendants can not complain that a blank in the petition was not filled, as they did not ask that it be done 810
55. it was within the sound discretion of the court to allow or disallow the filing of a special plea in certain case 818
56. necessary allegations of petition in action to recover on obligation signed in firm name 831
57. when petition shows on its face that several paragraphs relate to the same cause of action plaintiff should be required to elect which he will prosecute, and the others should be stricken out 831
58. in an action for malicious prosecution the petition should state that the charge upon which the arrest was made, if upon any, was false, or that the arrest was without probable cause 903
59. in an action for false imprisonment the petition should have alleged that the officers who made the arrest were not duly elected and qualified 903
60. action to recover damages for wrongful suing out of attachment—defects in petition cured by answer 927
61. affirmative allegation properly stricken from answer, where the denial in the answer had put that question in issue 932
62. suit in name of next friend—amendment of petition 945
63. action to recover price of goods sold upon faith of a letter of credit—sufficiency of petition 949
64. allegation that a loss occurred by the negligence of one or the other of two defendants is not good as to either one of them 974
65. a denial in the reply that the note sued on was obtained by fraud, misrepresentation "and" covin, was good 972

PLEADINGS—Continued. Page.
66. action to recover of administratrix a sum of money deposited with her intestate—not necessary for plaintiff to allege ownership of the money....1064
67. it was not necessary to allege the avocation in which the intestate was engaged....1064
68. action to recover damages for the destruction of a barn by fire caused by sparks from railroad locomotive—a specific allegation of the facts constituting contributory negligence is not necessary in pleading such negligence as a defense....1079
69. action for injury resulting in death received by putting arm outside car window—allegation of petition of willful neglect and of gross negligence—election....1082
70. an action was begun and limitation ceased to run upon the filing of a petition and issuing of summons, notwithstanding a mistake in the summons as to the name of the plaintiff....1099
PLEDGE—
where a certificate of stock was assigned to a principal on a note to secure a particular note in bank, he having no authority to pledge it for any other purpose, a pledge of same by the principal to a surety on another note can not be enforced against the owner, since the surety had notice of the purpose of the assignment.... 80
POSSESSION—
1. the purchaser at an execution sale entitled to a writ of possession in a certain case.... 175
2. motion to quash writ of possession improperly sustained in certain case.... 826
POWERS—
1. the legislature can not delegate to the mayor and board of aldermen the power to determine for what causes city officers may be removed.... 829
2. general power to remove an officer does not give right to remove except for cause upon notice and trial.... 829
PRACTICE IN CIVIL CASES—
1. appellant can not complain here of the failure to file the exhibits referred to in the petition, there being no rule asked in the lower court to require them to be filed.... 2
2. it is the duty of the court, upon or without motion, to compel the parties to form a material issue in the action, and to cause all redundant or irrelevant matter to be stricken from the pleadings. 46
3. it is the better practice to set up and controvert the grounds for provisional remedies in separate affidavits and not in the pleadings.... 46
4. the court upon sustaining demurrer to a pleading is not required to give leave to amend unless such leave is asked.... 51
5. as the company which controlled the defense in an action is to be regarded as already a party defendant and bound by the judgment, the court properly rejected an amended petition seeking to make it a party.... 65
6. after appeal and judgment, unless a corporation had been bound by the judgment, it was too late to bring it into the litigation... 65
7. where in an action on a note the defense was that false representations had been made as to the subject of the transaction, a good defense was presented, but this allegation having been traversed by the reply the defendant should have sustained the defense by a preponderance of the testimony.... 79
8. it was not improper for the court to permit filing of an amended answer to conform to the proof in certain case.... 85
9. in an action upon an accident insurance policy which provided that no action should be instituted until thirty days after proof of loss, a plea that the action was instituted within that time was a plea in abatement—when offered at the next term after a plea in bar had been filed it came too late.... 161
10. if the petition in an action for negligence specifies the negligence complained of, the plaintiff can not recover upon showing a different character of negligence.... 164
11. the same rule applies if the plaintiff specifies the particular officer or agent who is charged with the negligent act.... 164

PRACTICE IN CIVIL CASES—Continued. Page.
12. as to placing a case upon the equity docket under the rules of practice in the Daviess Circuit Court 167
13. where a judgment was rendered on the 24th day of the month, a motion for a new trial made on the 27th day of the month was too late 171
14. where the defendant failed to ask in her answer that certain relief be granted her, the court was not authorized to grant such relief. 175
15. by entering his appearance to a motion for the appointment of a receiver and filing an answer the defendant waived his right to complain of an irregularity regarding the entering the motion 183
16. as to time for filing bill of exceptions when day for filing is fixed by order of court 202
17. order overruling motion for a new trial was a final order and the court had no power over it after the term of court at which it was rendered 202
18. action on notes—plea that notes were procured by fraud—error to render personal judgment until that issue was determined 223
19. the failure of plaintiff to controvert a plea of contributory neglect entitles defendant to a judgment notwithstanding the verdict 224
20. where parties were brought into court and made defense they were not prejudiced by failure to issue summons on an amended petition 226
21. even though a petition was defective the action of the court in overruling a demurrer thereto was not prejudicial to the defendant where the plaintiff afterwards pleaded over 233
22. vendor's lien upon land over which the vendee had sold the right of way to a railroad—judgment for sale of the property on each side of the railroad—railroad company properly permitted to file an answer and cross petition 410
23. a plaintiff can not recover punitive damages unless the facts alleged in his petition show his right to such relief 415
24. a judgment erroneously describing a lot of ground, for the recovery of which it was rendered, may, at a subsequent term of the court, be corrected by consent of the parties 421
25. death of plaintiff in an action after judgment—motion at subsequent term to correct judgment—failure to revive in name of her heirs or representative was immaterial, since they were brought before the court 422
26. where a party has testified for himself in chief before he has introduced other testimony for himself in chief, it is in the sound discretion of the court as to whether he may be recalled after he has introduced other testimony for himself in chief 444
27. the objection that an amended petition was filed in vacation can not be sustained where the defendant appeared and filed answer. 465
28. plaintiff had no right, pending an appeal by him for the judgment of a lower court, to continue the prosecution of the suit in the lower court—as to quashal of summons 472
29. hearsay testimony having been admitted without objection or exception, the action of the court in refusing to give an instruction telling the jury not to consider it was not a reversible error 504
30. if the defendant in the original action was a necessary party to an action against a garnishee who failed to make satisfactory disclosures, the failure to make him a party does not afford ground for reversal, there being no special demurrer for defect of parties. 573
31. where in ordinary action the law and facts were submitted to the court, the judgment of the court must be treated as the verdict of a properly instructed jury and can not be disturbed unless flagrantly against the evidence 593
32. amended answer of infant defendants—not prejudicial error for court to impose as the condition to its filing that it should be traversed of record 602
33. the court had discretion to impose reasonable terms in permitting one of the defendants to file his answer out of time 602
34. action for slander—inconsistent defenses—election 658
35. although the pleas were inconsistent it was error to require the defendant to elect 659
36. a plaintiff may, in the discretion of the court, introduce additional testimony after a motion had been made by the defendant for a peremptory instruction 677

ALIMONY— Page.
the court properly placed the children under the control of the mother and made an allowance for her and their support where the husband abandoned them without cause 988
ALLEGATION AND PROOF—
a charge in an indictment of willful and malicious wounding by "shooting" is not supported by proof that the wounding was done by "striking" with a pistol or other weapon 57
APPEALS—
1. appellant can not complain here of the failure to file the exhibits referred to in the petition, there being no rule asked in the lower court to require them to be filed 2
2. while a pleading must upon demurrer be construed against the pleader where the averments are of doubtful meaning, yet where there has been no demurrer to a petition and no motion to make its averments more specific it will, if possible, be so construed upon appeal as to uphold a judgment in favor of plaintiff 9
3. the court will not disturb the verdict of the jury, there being evidence tending to sustain it, where the only ground for a reversal was that the evidence did not support the verdict 14
4. the evidence in certain cases was sufficient to authorize the chancellor's judgment dismissing the plaintiff's petition and the defendant's counterclaim 88
5. a judgment in favor of a defendant for the amount he paid to plaintiff upon a judgment which was subsequently reversed was proper 88
6. the fact that the plaintiff sued as "agent" without disclosing the names of the persons for whom he was acting can not be complained of on appeal where no objection was raised below, such failure amounting to a waiver of the objection 55
7. the finding of the chancellor below will not be disturbed in particular case, the evidence being conflicting 72
8. the evidence in particular case is sufficient to support the judgment dismissing the petition 76
9. where there was evidence tending to establish the guilt of accused, this court can not disturb a verdict of guilty upon the ground that the evidence was insufficient to warrant a conviction 99
10. the evidence being conflicting, this court will not disturb the finding of the master commissioner and of the chancellor as to the cost of certain repairs upon sawmill property, etc 125
11. the measure of damages laid down by the Superior Court upon a former appeal in certain case would control if the evidence were sufficient to authorize a recovery regardless of the view of this court as to the correctness of the opinion of that court upon that question 127
12. in an action by the heirs of the husband to recover land belonging to husband and wife the defendant, who does not by his answer assert claim to the land, can not complain in this court for the first time that the heirs of the wife were not joined as parties 137
13. this court, in the absence of the firm books, will not disturb the judgment of the chancellor, based upon the report of a commissioner, stating in detail the partnership transaction 150
14. an appellee can not complain by cross appeal of a judgment in favor of a co-appellee, as a cross appeal can affect the appellant only 159
15. the conclusions announced by the Superior Court upon a former appeal in this case must be accepted as the law of the case, however erroneous they may appear to this court 167
16. as to what will be considered a part of the record upon appeal to Court of Appeals 167
17. verdict not disturbed where testimony was conflicting 170
18. judgment having been rendered on the 24th day of the month, a motion for a new trial made on the 27th day of the month was too late, and, therefore, the case is to be treated as if there had been no motion for new trial 171
19. in the absence of a motion for a new trial in an ordinary action in which the law and facts have been submitted to the court, nothing can be considered by this court except the question whether the pleadings stated a cause of action and whether the evidence heard and properly presented by a bill of exceptions authorized the judgment 171

PRACTICE IN CRIMINAL CASES—Continued. Page.
7. the trial of a defendant indicted for a felony can be fixed for the same term of the court at which the indictment is found 441
8. sentence may be passed upon one convicted on the day verdict was returned—consideration of motion for new trial after judgment.. 441
9. the separation of one juror from the others a short distance not ground for setting aside the verdict where there was no evidence of undue influence 441
10. it was proper for the Commonwealth to show by defendant's witness upon cross examination that she and defendant had been living together without being married 441
11. when the court admitted evidence to impeach the general moral character of defendant it was not its duty to admonish the jury that the evidence was competent only to discredit him as a witness 441
12. indictment against a railroad company for failure to provide a water closet at station "on the 1st day of September, 1895, and for two consecutive months thereafter"—the allegation as to the continuance for two months was surplusage and need not have been proved 483
13. absence of accused from courtroom for not more than five minutes while Commonwealth's attorney was making argument—not prejudiced thereby 518
14. separation of jurors after submission of felony case—where juryman was allowed to go to his place of business in company with deputy sheriff the jury should have been discharged upon a motion therefor 575
15. in every case of separation of jury on trial of felony case the State must show there was no opportunity for the exercise of improper influences on the juror 575
16. the provision of section 210, subsection 7, Criminal Code, as to challenging jurors for implied bias applies to cases in which the punishment is either death or confinement in the penitentiary.. 652
17. the argument of a case may be reasonably limited—limiting the argument to four hours a side was not an abuse of discretion by the court 652
18. a motion for arrest of judgment can not be sustained if the indictment states facts constituting a public offense within the jurisdiction of the court 668
19. objection to an indictment upon the grounds that two offenses were charged was waived, no demurrer being filed 668
20. where the accused was unable, on account of his nervous condition, to give his attorneys the names of the witnesses who would sustain his plea of self-defense, a continuance should have been granted, the case being set for trial on the fourth day after the killing occurred 702
21. where a verdict of guilty would be palpably and flagrantly against the evidence, the trial court should not submit the case to the jury 783
22. the fact that the verdict would rest on evidence not entirely satisfactory or conclusive is not sufficient to authorize the court to take the case from the jury 783
23. the fact that the sheriff had taken unusual interest in bringing about the conviction of defendant was not sufficient to require the court to appoint another person in his stead during the trial. 795
24. the ticket system of admission to the courtroom during the trial did not deprive the accused of his right to a public trial 795
25. historical allusions to celebrated cases of circumstantial evidence were not improper in argument to the jury 796
26. thre being no evidence upon which to base instructions as to self-defense, insanity and manslaughter, the instructions asked were properly refused 844

PREFERENCE OF CREDITORS—
1. where the wife, a feme sole, owned a stock of merchandise which was managed by her husband and brother under a firm name, a creditor of the husband can not complain of a transfer of the property to the wife after dissolution of the alleged firm as a fraudulent preference 132

PREFERENCE OF CREDITORS—Continued. Page.
2. it is not sufficient that the petition in an action to have an act of preference operate as an assignment be filed within six months after the act complained of, but the action must be commenced within that time, as required by section 39, Civil Code 148
3. where it is sought to have an act of preference committed by an insolvent debtor declared to operate as an assignment under the statute, both the debtor and the preferred creditor are necessary parties to the action 148
4. a preference of one creditor to the exclusion of others does not on that account render the assignment void, but may be enforced for the exclusive benefit of the preferred creditor unless the excluded creditor brings an action within six months to have it operate as an assignment under the statute 321
5. provision of section 1910, Kentucky Statutes, as to recording mortgage within thirty days from its execution applies only in cases where there has been an antecedent preferential conveyance 463
6. evidence authorized the chancellor to declare the mortgage to operate as an assignment under the statute 918
PREJUDICIAL ERROR—
1. the plaintiffs could not have been prejudiced by the defendant being allowed to plead as a counterclaim a demand against plaintiffs held by him jointly with others where the defendant's partners were estopped from suing for the same cause 85
2. appellants were not prejudiced by a remark made by the court which was simply a direction to the jury to look alone to the instructions given and not to interpretation by attorneys arguing the case 85
3. where the court sustained the defendant's objection to a statement made by the Commonwealth's attorney in his argument to the jury and the latter withdrew the statement, the defendant was not prejudiced 99
4. as there was no testimony tending to show either that the wounding was the result of a sudden affray or was done in sudden heat and passion, an instruction requiring the jury to believe that the wounding was done under both of these conditions in order to find the defendant guilty only of a misdemeanor did not prejudice the defendant, as the court might have properly omitted the instruction altogether 129
5. upon the trial of accused for murder he was not prejudiced by testimony to the effect that the deceased left a wife and four children, and that his wife had been sick ever since her husband's death ... 141
6. the defendant in a prosecution for murder was not prejudiced by the appeal made by the prosecuting attorney to the jury to have regard to the reputation of the State and county in arriving at their verdict 141
7. prosecution for willful and malicious striking and wounding with intent to kill—where the weapon used was an iron weight the accused was not prejudiced by an instruction that by the words "a deadly weapon," as used in the instructions, is meant a weapon with which death could be produced when used in the manner in which defendant used it on the occasion mentioned 176
8. appellant not prejudiced by what Commonwealth's attorney said. 212
9. charge of trial judge to the jury in regard to agreeing upon a verdict was not prejudicial 212
10. though the admission of certain evidence was error, the accused was not prejudiced thereby, he having admitted the facts proven to be true 220
11. language of Commonwealth's attorney in certain case not prejudicial and there can be no reversal on that account 367
12. absence of accused from courtroom for not more than five minutes while Commonwealth's attorney was making argument—not prejudiced thereby 518
13. where the court in a separate instruction set out every circumstance and condition necessary to constitute a correct instruction, the jury could not have been misled by another instruction which contained words which were out of place therein 518
14. amended answer of infant defendants—not prejudicial error for court to impose as the condition to its filing that it should be traversed of record 602

PREJUDICIAL ERROR—Continued. Page.
15. criminal prosecution—certain evidence which was admitted was not prejudicial to defendant—whether competent not decided.... 668
16. defendant not prejudiced by the admission of testimony as to certain declarations of his son, as the tendency of the testimony was rather to sustain the defendant's defense..... 690
17. this court will not reverse because of a violation of section 606, subsection 4 of the Civil Code as to the introduction of testimony, if it appears that the party appealing has not been prejudiced 725
18. in a certain case the plaintiff was not prejudiced by the action of the court in permitting the defendant to testify for himself in chief after reading to the jury the deposition of another witness. 725
19. where court is satisfied that the rejection of evidence technically competent did not affect the substantial rights of accused the judgment will not be reversed 812
20. an error in admitting incompetent evidence was cured by an instruction telling the jury to disregard the testimony..... 835
21. certain evidence admitted was not prejudicial where it was otherwise satisfactorily shown that the beating was without reason or excuse 1004
22. an instruction which put to the jury the question of whether the will was properly executed, though erroneous, was not prejudicial to appellants, for the finding of the jury was what the court must have concluded as a matter of law.....1074
23. the submission to the jury by the instruction the question of the credibility of the attesting witnesses, although erroneous, was not prejudicial to the appellants 1074
24. objection to an instruction because of a mere statement of an abstract proposition upon the subject of testamentary capacity can not be sustained where the instruction proceeded to give a correct definition of the capacity required 1074
25. an instruction which stated that the testamentary capacity was "to know his property and the natural objects of his bounty, and his duty to them," was not objectionable 1074
PRESCRIPTION—
testimony in a particular case does not sustain the claim of a right of passway by prescription 464
PRESUMPTIONS—
1. transfer of suit from one court to another—as to the presumption indulged where the transcript fails to show clearly at what stage of the proceedings the transfer was made..... 364
2. where the transcript shows that the record contained a paper which may have contained matter that would sustain the decision, the appellant must include such paper in the transcript or this court will presume the decision appealed from correct..... 364
3. in the absence of an order of court or a bill of exceptions showing the contrary, the presumption must be indulged that a certified copy of the record of another suit, which was made a part of the answer, was a part of this record and considered on the trial of the case 364
4. whatever is the duty of a party to know, or he is in a position where reasonable diligence would enable him to know, the court will hold so to be presumptively within his knowledge..... 661
5. consignee in bill of lading presumptively the owner of the goods—no notice required where consignee intends to control the ultimate disposition of the goods 745
6. suit for settlement of assigned estate—deed of assignment not copied into transcript—presumption on appeal that it was sufficient to sustain the action of the court in denying the debtor the right of homestead.....1001
7. verdict signed by one whose name did not appear as juror—objection to verdict waived by failure to make it for six months—presumption of regularity must be applied 1054
PRINCIPAL AND AGENT—
1. agent for both buyer and seller—voidable contract 294
2. where a real estate agent undertakes to find a purchaser for property upon certain terms his commission is earned if he presents a purchaser upon modified terms who is accepted by the principal. 299

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT—Continued. Page.
3. a "detective" or "special agent" of a railroad company had no authority to employ conductors for regular or permanent service—such employment not binding on the company where the employed knew that fact 304
4. right of real estate broker to commissions where the property was withdrawn in good faith and afterwards sold to one to whom the broker attempted to sell 567
5. action by principal to recover from agent money given him as agent—evidence supported verdict for defendant 711
6. a statement made by the claim agent of the railway company to appellee that he would pay the claim within sixty days was not admissible in evidence either as an admission of liability on the part of the company or as part of the res gestæ..... 1079
7. sale of goods by agent subject to approval by principal—agreement by agent not submitted to principal not binding on the latter... 1087
8. the agent is not a necessary or proper party to an action by the principal on a note upon which the agent had, without the authority of the principal, credited the price of a horse.....1087

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY—no recovery can be had as against an obligor on a note whose name had been placed there as a principal by the payee when the understanding was that he was to be surety only 919

PRIVATE PROPERTY FOR PUBLIC USE—a mere money consideration to be paid to the government, State or municipal, is not a public use for which private property can be taken from one citizen and given to another 11

PROCESS—
1. the marshal of a town of the fifth class has no authority to execute an order of attachment from the circuit court, although the order be directed to him..... 185
2. a defendant may have compulsory process at the expense of the State for a witness who is a prisoner in the penitentiary..... 622
3. service of process on lunatic—delivery of copy to physician in charge of him—certificate of physician—officer's return 821
4. a judgment rendered September 7th was not premature, the summons having been served August 28th 852

PROPERTY, TAKING WITHOUT DUE PROCESS OF LAW—the infliction of the penalties prescribed by section 816, Kentucky Statutes, would be taking property without due process of law and in violation of both State and Federal Constitutions 42

PROTEST—
as the parties were joint makers of the notes and the paper was not placed on the footing of a foreign bill of exchange, there was no necessity for protest or notice of dishonor..... 159

PROVISIONAL REMEDIES—
it is the better practice to set up and controvert the grounds for provisional remedies in separate affidavits and not in the pleadings. 46

PROXIMATE CAUSE—
1. though the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury was the dislocation of the lumps of coal, when his feet struck it, the company is not liable for the injury, not being guilty of negligence in placing the coal beside the track 258
2. in an action to recover damages for the death of a horse the court should have required the jury to believe, in order to find for plaintiff, that the negligence of defendant, if any, was the proximate cause of the injury..... 470

PUBLIC PRINTING—
cost of printing for the State board of health to be paid out of its appropriation and not out of the general fund..... 456

PUNITIVE DAMAGES—
1. if the publication was by the publisher known to be false, he is liable for punitive damages 552
2. recovery of damages on account of animals being insufficiently buried by defendant near residence of plaintiff—if done wantonly and maliciously punitive damages may be recovered..... 824

QUESTIONS FOR COURT AND JURY— Page-
1. under an indictment for willfully and maliciously striking and wounding another with a deadly weapon with intent to kill, the question whether a stone used in the manner indicated by the testimony was a deadly weapon should have been submitted to the jury 98
2. where the evidence upon the question of whether or not there had been a waiver of certain provisions of an insurance policy was conflicting it was a question for the jury 161
3. what facts and circumstances amount to probable cause is a question of law for the court—whether they exist or not in any particular case is a question of fact for the jury 299
4. the court ought not to take the question of negligence or contributory negligence from the jury, where different findings might reasonably be made by men of average intelligence 957
5. where there is no controversy as to the facts, or they are admitted and but one inference can be drawn from them, then it is the duty of the court to declare their effect in law 1083

RAILROADS—
1. section 816 of the Kentucky Statutes, which provides for the punishment of any railroad corporation which shall charge "more than a just and reasonable rate of toll or compensation for the transportation of passengers or freight," is void for uncertainty, no standard being fixed by which the corporation may regulate its conduct 42
2. a statute fixing a penalty upon any railroad corporation which shall charge "more than a just and reasonable rate of toll, etc.," could not be enforced against a corporation which has not exceeded the rates fixed in its charter, as those rates remain the legal rates until changed by law 42
3. the statute which requires that whenever railroads cross each other in this State the trains shall be brought to a "full stop, etc.," applies to cases where the trains on both roads are operated by the same company 54
4. a postal clerk carried by a railroad is a passenger as regards the liability of the company for injuries received by him 82
5. where a passenger on a railroad train was injured by the negligence of the railroad company's employes in leaving a switch open, with full knowledge of the expected approach of the train, an instruction for punitive damages was authorized 82
6. must acquire facilities for transporting commodities—insufficiency of rolling stock—excused from liability in a certain case for failure to furnish mining company with cars for the transportation of coal 126
7. duty of freight conductor upon discovering a boy upon the train .. 258
8. injury to child—what necessary to prove to render railroad liable for the injury 258
9. though the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury was the dislocation of the lumps of coal, when his feet struck it, the company is not liable for the injury, not being guilty of negligence in placing the coal beside the track 258
10. a railroad company was not guilty of negligence in placing a pile of coal on its right of way for its necessary use 258
11. what the conductor said to plaintiff on days previous to the one on which the injury occurred was incompetent in evidence 258
12. a declaration of the conductor after the accident happened that he had been expecting such an accident was not a part of the res gestæ and was incompetent 258
13. as to the contradiction of conductor by a witness as to a statement which the conductor denied he made—incompetent 258
14. carriers of live stock—in case of unreasonable delay in transporting live stock the company is liable for the loss occasioned thereby—waiver of notice of loss 275
15. action by property owner to recover damages for injury to abutting property from the construction of the railroad 276
16. carrying passengers beyond station—punitive damages not allowed 296
17. where a railroad crossing near a populous town was unusualy dangerous by reason of a deep cut which obstructed the view, it was not unreasonable to require the company to have a flagman at that point 347

ATTORNEY AND CLIENT—Continued— Page.
2. in an action for malicious prosecution the defendant is not liable if he acted in good faith upon the advice of an attorney after laying the facts before him 299
3. attorney had the right under the circumstances to consent for his client to a correction in the judgment 422
4. where one is resisting the relief sought in an action, and employs his own counsel, although the judgment granting the relief may directly or incidentally benefit him, he ought not to be compelled to contribute to the payment of the counsel fees of his adversary. 615
5. action to secure attorneys' fee—error to allow client to state that his understanding of the contract was different from the plain language of the writing 709
6. action by client to recover money retained by attorney as his fee—the only issue being as to the amount to be retained, the burden of proof is on plaintiff 808
7. attorney entitled to reasonable compensation for services rendered for one upon trial of proceeding to have such one adjudged a lunatic 879
8. action to recover attorney's fee fixed by contract—employment of additional counsel by client at the instance of attorney did not deprive the latter of the right to the full amount 901

BAIL—
1. the bail of a defendant, who has been committed to jail by an examining court, having at the next term of the court having jurisdiction to try the offense been fixed by that court, the clerk of the court may take the bail bond at any time after that term, whether it be during the vacation or during the subsequent term of court 51
2. the proceedings upon a forfeited bail bond subsequent to the service of summons are the same as in an ordinary civil action 51
3. power of court to set aside order for change of venue—liability of sureties on bail bond 1098
4. after judgment sustaining an order of arrest in a civil action the circuit court has no jurisdiction to discharge the defendant as an insolvent debtor, and its order to that effect does not exonerate the bail 1106

BANKS AND BANKING—
1. a depositor has an action for damages against the bank for its refusal, without sufficient justification, to pay his check 178
2. bank may apply deposit of customer to payment of his indebtedness to the bank—refusal to honor checks sufficient appropriation of the deposit 178
3. publication of false statement by bank officers as to its financial condition, whereby persons were induced to purchase bank stock —measure of damages 562
4. as to personal liability of bank directors for false statement as to the condition of the bank 716
5. credit of collection to wrong person—proper party may recover the sum of the bank 922

BAR—
1. although a judgment was in favor of the infants by their next friend, when it appears the action was brought by the guardian, it is a bar to any further action either by a next friend or by the statutory guardian 9
2. if actual injury results to plaintiff's spring by reason of the drainage from a privy running into same, he will not be precluded from procuring an abatement of the privy as a nuisance by reason of the dismissal of his petition to enjoin the erection of the privy because of uncertainty as to the anticipated damage 78
3. a former conviction for a breach of the peace is a bar to a subsequent prosecution for assault and battery, based upon the act constituting that breach of the peace 145
4. adverse claimants, who were made parties to an action and failed to assert claim to the land, are barred by judgment in the case 258
5. a recovery by the husband as personal representative of his wife for her death by the wrongful act of another is a bar to an action by the husband for damages for the "loss of her society" from the time of the injury until her death 379
6. neither the judgment of the county nor circuit court dismissing the proceedings to open a road will be a bar to new proceedings.. 376

RAILROADS—Continued. Page.
42. while the passenger on a freight train assumes the additional risk, if any, the carrier owes to him as high a degree of care as if he were riding on a passenger train 735
43. passenger carriers can not by contract relieve themselves from liability for personal injuries to passengers caused by the negligence of the carriers 735
44. a passenger on a freight train under a contract for transporting his stock, for which he has paid the freight charges, must be regarded as carried for hire 735
45. the failure to give the signal for a railroad crossing was the proximate cause of the injury to a traveler on the highway who, in ignorance of the train's approach, attempted to make the crossing. 738
46. carrying passenger past station—verdict supported by the evidence. 750
47. the court properly refused to instruct the jury that they could only find nominal damages 751
48. failing to stop and listen before passing over a public railroad crossing in a crowded city is not per se contributory negligence.. 957
49. duty of servants in charge of locomotive engine 957
50. action for injury to passengers caused by collision of trains—instructions not erroneous—finding for plaintiff not flagrantly against evidence 1016
51. fire caused by sparks from a railroad locomotive—contributory negligence 1079
52. construction of railroads through the streets of a city—injunction. 1088
53. an act of the legislature requiring a railroad company to make a certain connection, which necessitated the use of the streets of a city, was sufficient to authorize the use of the streets for that purpose 1088
54. injury by railroad train to stock grazing near the track—failure to give signal did not render the company liable for injury to the horse 1099
55. injury to church property from construction of road along street in front of it 1111

RAPE—
1. an indictment for rape is not defective in failing to allege that the female was over twelve years of age 205
2. neither fornication nor adultery is a degree of the offense of rape.. 205
3. under an indictment for rape the defendant may be convicted of the offense of detaining the woman against her will with intent to have carnal knowledge with her 714

RECEIVERS—
1. surcharge of receiver's settlement—the order of court confirming the settlement and discharging the receiver can not be disregarded 691
2. action by receiver of bank to collect alleged subscription to same—there being no testimony to sustain plaintiff's contention, peremptory instruction to find for defendant was proper 981

RECORDS—
1. as to what will be considered a part of the record upon appeal to Court of Appeals 167
2. as to what constitutes a part of the record in Court of Appeals.... 225
3. supplying omission in record 225

REMAINDERS—
1. under a deed conveying land to husband and wife for life, with remainder to their "right heirs," both husband and wife having died without issue, the land passed to their collateral heirs as remaindermen 137
2. life tenant may purchase the remainder estate from the remainderman 1009

RENTS—
1. apportionment of rent between executor and devisee 455
2. collection of rents by one of several joint tenants—right to credit for disbursements 1024
3. enforcement of mortgage lien—accounting for rents from the property 1089

REPEAL OF STATUTES—
1. the revenue law of 1892 did not repeal the act of 1890 giving authority to bring suit for taxes .....

REPEAL OF STATUTES—Continued. Page.
2. the act of February 25, 1854, establishing a levy and county court for Jefferson county and providing for bi-monthly terms of the county court, was repealed by the act of June 10, 1893, which fixed the first Monday of the month as the beginning of each regular monthly term of the Jefferson County Court 87
3. while the Constitution does not by its own force repeal any "local option" law in existence at the time of its adoption, it does not forbid the repeal of such laws by the general assembly 113
4. the penalties denounced by special prohibitory laws in force at the time of the adoption of the Constitution have not been repealed either by the Constitution or the general local option law enacted pursuant thereto 481
5. section 2 of chapter 183 of the acts of 1891-2-3 was repealed as to gray squirrels by an amendment passed in March, 1894 780
RES GESTÆ—
1. a declaration of the conductor after the accident happened that he had been expecting such an accident was not a part of the res gestæ and was incompetent 258
2. testimony as to what the engineer of the train that hurt plaintiff said when he was returning to the train from the place of the injury was not competent as part of res gestæ 435
3. a statement made by the claim-agent of the railway company to appellee that he would pay the claim within sixty days was not admissible in evidence either as an admission of liability on the part of the company or as part of the res gestæ 1079
RES JUDICATA—
1. a judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction is in general conclusive not only as to matters determined by it, but all incidental matters which might have been properly litigated and decided in the same suit 37
2. if actual injury results to plaintiff's spring by reason of the drainage from a privy running into same, he will not be precluded from procuring an abatement of the privy as a nuisance by reason of the dismissal of his petition to enjoin the erection of the privy because of uncertainty as to the anticipated damage 73
3. where a creditor appears in a suit to settle a decedent's estate and proves a claim against the estate, which is allowed, the judgment in that action is a bar to a suit by him against the personal representative upon another claim against the estate 97
4. a judgment to the effect that the children took a fee simple estate, which was rendered in a suit brought by their executrix for a construction of the will, is not a bar to this suit brought against the husband of one of the devisees after his wife's death to recover her stock 110
5. the measure of damages laid down by the Superior Court upon a former appeal in certain case would control if the evidence were sufficient to authorize a recovery regardless of the view of this court as to the correctness of the opinion of that court upon that question 127
6. the conclusions announced by the Superior Court upon a former appeal in this case must be accepted as the law of the case, however erroneous they may appear to this court 167
7. the judgment appealed from, being in accordance with the mandate of this court on a former appeal, must be affirmed, though inconsistent with a subsequent opinion of the court in another case 186
8. conclusiveness of opinion of Superior Court on former appeals 303
9. in a suit to collect taxes for one year the defense that the assessment is unjust and excessive can not be treated as res judicata because of a decision in a court to collect taxes for former years. 417
10. where the validity of an attachment could have been presented on a former appeal, and the mandate of this court on that appeal directed the entry of the judgment from which this appeal is taken, that question must be presumed to be res judicata 465
11. a judgment in favor of the purchaser for the "possession" of a married woman's land sold for taxes leaves both title and the right to redeem as if no judgment had been rendered 493

RES JUDICATA—Continued. Page.
12. where the defendant in an action on a note was denied the right, by the judgment in the action, to recover against the payee, who had assigned the note, the usury embraced therein because no such action was set up in her cross petition and she had not then paid the note, such judgment is not a bar to a subsequent action against the payee 507
13. there being no appeal from a judgment directing a corporation to pay into court a certain sum of money in full of all taxes, that judgment is a bar to an action to recover an additional amount.. 620
14. the sheriff having collected of a corporation the full amount of taxes fixed by a judgment which is still in force, he can not be held liable for his failure to collect a greater amount..... 621
RESCISSION—
1. rescission of compromise for fraud—necessity for tender of amount received 730, 784
2. mistake in deed may be corrected where the same consisted in the omission of a covenant therefrom—the omitted covenant may be enforced as against the grantee or the contract of sale rescinded.. 754
3. fraudulent combination to cheat sellers out of their goods—rescission—restoration of goods 1002
RESTITUTION—
a judgment in favor of a defendant for the amount he paid to plaintiff upon a judgment which was subsequently reversed was proper..... 33
REVERSIBLE ERRORS—
1. in the asbence of evidence this court can not say that the lower court erred in refusing to allow certain credits endorsed on the note sued on 171
2. hearsay testimony having been admitted without objection or exception, the action of the court in refusing to give an instruction telling the jury not to consider it was not a reversible error 504
3. when the court acts upon its own motion an exception alone to the decision entitles a party to rely for a reversal upon the decision, if erroneous 521
4. if the defendant in the original action was a necessary party to an action against a garnishee who failed to make saitsfactory disclosures, the failure to make him a party does not afford ground for reversal, there being no special demurrer for defect or parties..... 578
5. action on fire insurance policy—defense that there was a concealment of mortgage on property—refusal to give instruction as to that fact not reversible error because it was not assigned as a ground for new trial..... 632
6. "error of law occurring at the trial and excepted to at the time by the defendant," assigned as grounds for a new trial, is not sufficient to authorize this court to reverse for an error in giving or refusing instructions 632
7. the action of the trial judge in overurling a motion to have a jury empaneled to try the question of the sanity of the accused can not be reviewed on appeal, no evience being heard on the motion..... 641
8. there can be no reversal in a criminal case for error in refusing to grant a new trial nor on account of decisions of the court upon challenges to the panel and for cause..... 652
9. no revesal can be had because of demonstrations of approval in the courtroom while the attorney for the State was addressing the jury, as this was first called to the court's attention on motion for new trial..... 657
10. the mere fact that an improper question was asked is not a reversible error, the court refusing to permit it to be answered..... 670
11. there can be no reversal because of the refusal of the court to permit the defendant to answer a particular question propounded him, there being no avowal as to what his answer would be..... 844
12. the failure of one or more of several joint claimants against a decedent's estate to join in the verification is not ground for reversal, since the objection was waived by not being made in the lower court 853
13. no reversal on ground of admission of incompetnt testimony, that error not being made a ground for a new trial 937

Page.

REVIVOR—
1. upon suggestion of death of plaintiff the court should have revived the action in the name of his personal representative 285
2. death of plaintiff in an action after judgment—motion at subsequent term to correct judgment—failure to revive in name of her heirs or representative was immaterial, since they were brought before the court 422
3. death of judgment debt after confirmation of sale but before the expiration of redemption period—no revivor is necessary to give validity to conveyance to the purchaser 852

REWARDS—
1. a reward offered by the governor for a fugitive from justice can be paid only upon production of the officer's receipt, approved and certified by the circuit court of the county of his residence 646
2. the mere apprehension of a fugitive from justice does not entitle the person making it to any reward, but there must be delivery of the fugitive into custody of the proper officer 646

ROADS AND PASSWAYS—
1. proceedings to open a road properly dismissed in certain case 376
2. neither the judgment of the county nor circuit court dismiss the proceedings to open a road will be a bar to new proceedings 376

SALARIES—
1. the salary of a city officer may be fixed by statute or ordinance after he goes into office where no salary has theretofore been fixed 427
2. a statute fixing the minimum limit to the salaries of the members of the boards of public safety and public works of a city did not fix the salaries of those officers 427
3. who are officers within the meaning of the Constitution—salaries of certain officers can not be increased or diminished during the terms for which they were elected, though their salaries may have been fixed after they went into office 427

SALES—
1. under a deed conveying the timber on a tract of land the grantee was not required to promptly remove the timber in order to preserve his right to it 563
2. deficiency in amount of land sold—modification of judgment 963

SALE OF INFANTS' REAL ESTATE—
a remainder interest of infants in real estate is not an estate in possession within the meaning of section 490, Civil Code, and can not be sold under that section 184

SALES OF PERSONAL PROPERTY—
1. action to recover purchase price of machinery—plea of breach of warranty—offer to return machinery 346
2. false representations—to entitle buyer to a rescission he must show that he was actually deceived and induced to purchase by the alleged false representations 432
3. the rule of caveat emptor does not apply where the seller has full knowledge of the quality of the article and the buyer, from lack of experience or capacity, has not such knowledge 432
4. the rule of caveat emptor should apply where the buyer tested the implements before purchasing 432
5. as the right to recover by way of counterclaim damages suffered by reason of defective goods—recovery may be had, although the purchaser used the goods after discovering the defects 498
6. refusal of purchaser to receive—right of seller to sell and recover of purchaser the difference between contract price and what he actually received—notice of intention to sell 851
7. right given by contract to return part of property—time during which the return might be made—measure of damages for failure to accept the property returned 894
8. limitation upon agent's authority as to prices 948
9. fraudulent combination to cheat settlers out of their goods—rescission—restoration of goods 1002
10. sales of timber—construction of contract—recovery of contract price 1022
11. acceptance of goods after opportunity to discover defects estopped purchaser from claiming a deduction from contract price on ground of inferior quality 1050

SALES OF PERSONAL PROPERTY—Continued. Page.
12. sale upon condition that the title to the property shall remain in the seller until paid for gives seller a lien for the unpaid purchase price—purchaser at execution sale with notice 1103
SCHOOL TAX—
1. the common school law provides that the railroad tax shall be apportioned between the white and colored schools in the same district, but this proivsion has no application to the tax upon the property of any other corporation 103
2. in the taxation of private corporations for the support of graded schools the stock owned by colored persons is liable to be taxed only for the colored schools, and that owned by white persons only for the white schools 103
3. district including parts of two counties—reported in county in which the schoolhouse was situated 873
SELF-DEFENSE—
1. where the instructions given fuly covered the law of self-defense the court did not err in refusing an instruction asked by the defendant upon that subject 142
2. the failure to give an instruction as to self defense upon a trial for murder is not error where there is not the slightest evidence to show that the homicide was excusable upon that ground 367
3. trial of accused upon the charge of murder—an instruction upon the law of self defense was erroneous in pointing out and making too prominent the facts proved on the trial and in not requiring the jury to believe "to the exclusion of a reasonable doubt" that those facts existed 728
SEPARATE COACHES—
failure of railroad conductor to comply with separate coach law—where the company has set apart coaches, as by law provided, the conductor and not the company may be indicted and punished for failure to comply with the law 491
SET-OFF—
1. although a married woman could not make herself liable in damages for a failure to comply with her contract, if she comes into a court of equity the defendant will be allowed to set-off the damages he has received by reason of her fraud, or the contract will be rescinded 792
2. the defendant in a judgment may set-off against it a judgment against the plaintiff, which has been assigned to him by another. 847
3. set-off on demand due by plaintiff in his individual capacity against demand due to plaintiff in a representative capacity 951
4. building contract—acceptance of order drawn upon employer by contractor—set-off 1011
SETTLEMENT—
1. settlement of accounts of the lessee of State penitentiaries—State and lessee bound by former settlement as to items embraced in the settlement—no interest to be collected on those items 371
2. surcharge of receiver's settlement—the order of court confirming the settlement and discharging the receiver can not be disregarded 691
SHERIFFS—
1. forfeiture of office for failure to renew bond in time 25
2. the county court has the power to accept the renewal bond of a sheriff after the first Monday in January, which is the date fixed by statute, and having done so it is too late to declare the office vacant 25
3. the original revenue bond of a sheriff, like the general official bond, covers the entire term and not merely one year, and so with the several renewal bonds 25
4. the sheriff having collected of a corporation the full amount of taxes fixed by a judgment which is still in force, he can not be held liable for his failure to collect a greater amount 691
5. the tax on the franchise of a corporation is not collectible by the sheriff 691
SLANDER—
1. action for slander—inconsistent defenses—election 658
2. although the pleas were inconsistent, it was error to require the defendant to elect 659
3. husband not liable for wife's slanders 659

SLANDER—Continued. Page.
4. statement made of a married woman that "she is a dirty bitch; that she has no character, and is no account," is not actionable1. 048
SPECIAL JUDGE—
1. upon the election of a special judge to sit in a case such orders as are made are presumed to have been made by such judge..... 230
2. if a special judge fails to attend and try the case an election can be held to select another special judge for the purpose..... 230
3. special judge has all the powers of the regular judge—he may suspend or set aside a rule of the court and may hold his session at the same time the regular judge is holding court..... 465
SPECIAL LEGISLATION—
1. a statute which applies to the whole State is not special legislation merely because it provides that the fines imposed for a violation of the statute shall be disposed of in a way different from the usual mode of disposing of fines..... 50
2. a statute is not special legislation because it confers upon the circuit courts exclusive jurisdiction to try and punish offenses under the statute when justices of the peace have concurrent jurisdiction to try other offenses punished in the same way..... 50
STATE BOARD OF HEALTH—cost of printing for the State board of health to be paid out of its appropriations and not out of the general fund..... 456
STATUTES—
1. an act creating a taxing district and levying a tax upon the property therein for the benefit of a turnpike road company is not void because some of the property embraced therein is included in the taxing district of another company, for the benefit of which it is also taxed..... 35
2. an act creating a taxing district is unconstitutional and void so far as it authorizes the turnpike company to appoint an assessor, requiring neither bond nor oath, and making no provision for a hearing by the taxpayer as to the value placed on his property... 35
3. section 816 of the Kentucky Stautes, which provides for the punishment of any railroad corporation which shall charge "more than a just and reasonable rate of toll or compensation for the transportation of passengers or freight," is void for uncertainty, no standard being fixed by which the corporation may regulate its conduct..... 42
4. section 1899 of the Kentucky Statutes and succeeding sections, providing for the punishment of the offense of catching fish with a seine, etc., do not violate the provisions of the Constitution prohibiting special legislation for the protection of game and fish... 50
5. the Kentucky statute which declares the issue of void marriages to be legitimate is a statute of descent and distribution..... 395
6. a statute should be construed according to its spirit and reason... 396
7. an act of the legislature to cure the defects in an assessment is void as to the parties to an action to enjoin the collection of taxes which was brought prior to the passage of the act..... 755
STATUTES, CONSTRUCTION OF—
1. the court is never authorized, unless the language used be explicit and unambiguous, to so construe a statute as to give a public officer or agent unrestricted power to appropriate or expend public money..... 456
2. where a statute which creates an offense prescribes a remedy for the enforcement of its penalties that remedy must be pursued ... 610
3. section 786, Kentucky Statutes, having provided that the fine, which it prescribes for the offense there created, is "to be recovered by indictment," the fine can not be recovered by penal action..... 610
STATUTE OF FRAUDS—an agreement by a purchaser of land of decedent at judicial to pay one of the heirs the value of her interest if she would refrain from redeeming was not within the statute of frauds, and was enforcible, though not in writing..... 678 STATUTE, REPEAL OF—
1. the revenue law of 1892 did not repeal the act of 1890 giving authority to bring suit for taxes..... 2

STATUTE, REPEAL OF—Continued. Page.
2. the act of February 25, 1854, establishing a levy and county court for Jefferson county and providing for bi-monthly terms of the county court, was repealed by the act of June 10, 1893, which fixed the first Monday of the month as the beginning of each regular monthly term of the Jefferson County Court..... 87
3. while the Constitution does not by its own force repeal any "local option" law in existence at the time of its adoption, it does not forbid the repeal of such laws by the general assembly..... 113
4. section 3646, Kentucky Statutes, repeals certain local acts regarding the appropriation of license fees..... 208
5. local or special acts of the legislature not inconsistent with the present Constitution, and which have not been repealed by general law, remain in force..... 266
6. as to the repeal of special acts by general law..... 266
7. the penalties denounced by special prohibitory laws in force at the time of the adoption of the Constitution have not been repealed either by the Constitution or the general local option law enacted pursuant thereto..... 481
8. section 2 of chapter 183 of the Acts of 1891-2-3 was repealed as to gray squirrels by an amendment passed in March, 1894..... 780
STREETS AND ALLEYS—
1. without some legislative authority a city has no power either to condemn or close streets or alleys..... 10
2. closing of public way—as to consent of lot owners..... 10
3. dedication of street—effect upon subsequent conveyance of the property..... 155
4. where the dedication of a street may be implied..... 608
5. obstruction of alley—nuisance—measure of damages to owner of lot abutting upon the alley..... 989, 993
STREET IMPROVEMENTS—
1. the fact that the territory attempted to be treated as a taxing district is very large is not a good defense to an action to enforce a lien for the cost of street improvements..... 8
2. the property of the Louisville School Board, held by it for the use of the State to carry on the system of common schools, can not be subjected to pay assessments for the cost of street improvements..... 124
3. the city having authority to contract for street improvements, but none to make it a charge upon the abutting property which belonged to the school board, it was liable to the contractor for the cost of the work..... 124
4. as to passage and publication of ordinances for the improvement of streets in cities of first class—two weeks to elapse between first and second passage..... 238
5. after contract let and the work performed it is too late to raise objection to notice..... 238
6. mistakes in apportionment warrants will not prevent a recovery.. 238
7. as to validity of ordinance for the original construction of a street..... 238
8. improving streets at the cost of the adjacent lot owners—validity of city ordinance..... 279
9. assessment for street improvement—what is "original construction" within the meaning of the statute..... 473
10. as to method of apportionment of cost of improvement..... 473
11. publication of the ordinance authorizing the improvement—copy of the contract, etc., certified to by the city clerk proof of the passage and publication of the ordinance..... 473
12. in assessing property for the cost of construction of an alley in the interior of a square, the quarter-square and not the whole square is the taxing district..... 475
13. correction of estimates properly made—interest on the amount charged against certain individual should bear intrest only from the date of the judgment..... 910
14. assessment for street improvements—lien superior to mortgage ...1013
SUBMISSION OF ACTION—construction of order submitting case for judgment..... 880
SUBROGATION—
1. reconveyance to assignor—bond of indemnity—subrogation of creditor to rights of assignee..... 578

SUBROGATION—Continued. Page.
2. right of original vendor to be substituted to rights of vendee, who conveyed to corporation 985
SUBSCRIPTIONS—
1. a subscription "to form a joint stock company or a partnership" can not be enforced by a corporation organized for the purposes set out in the agreement under which the subscription was made. 246
2. promise to sign articles of incorporation after subscription made to form "joint stock company or a partnership" was without consideration 246
SUMMONS—
1. where parties were brought into court and made defense they were not prejudiced by failure to issue summons on an amended petition 226
2. prosecution of suit pending an appeal from judgment of lower court—as to quashal of summons 472
3. a judgment rendered September 7th was not premature, the summons having been served August 28th 852
4. an action was begun and limitation ceased to run upon the filing of a petition and issuing of summons, notwithstanding a mistake in the summons as to the name of the plaintiff 1099
SUPERSEDEAS—to suspend upon appeal the powers of the administrator appointed by the county court it was necessary to execute a supersedeas bond.. 862
SURETIES—
1. as to the liability of a surety of a tenant under a lease that provided the lessee should not "underlease" without the written consent to the lessor 55
2. sureties on the official bond of a city officer are bound as such, although the officer may have been ineligible to the office by reason of his failure to make a settlement with the city for a preceding term, as was required by ordinance 877
3. the sureties on a county levy bond are liable for the failure of the sheriff to "pay over" the county levy which he collected 810
4. guardian's bond—the infancy of one surety does not release the others 1067
TAXATION—
1. property omitted by the assessor—a report by the sheriff to the county clerk of property omitted by the assessor is sufficient if certified by the clerk, though not signed by the sheriff, since the law does not specify how the reports shall be made 2
2. the provisions of the statute gave the sheriff power to report property theretofore omitted from assessmnt as well as such as might be omitted after the act took effect 2
3. the statute having expressly excepted from repeal all obligations incurred under existing laws, it did not relieve appellant from liability for the tax of a previous year, and the sheriff had authority to make the assessment 2
4. as this court has held that the act exempting appellant's property from taxation to be unconstitutional, appellant can not claim the exemption either for the years prior to the repeal of the exemption act or those subsequent thereto 2
5. an act creating a taxing district and levying a tax upon the property therein for the benefit of a turnpike road company is not void because some of the property embraced therein is included in the taxing district of another company, for the benefit of which it is also taxed 85
6. an act creating a taxing district is unconstitutional and void so far as it authorizes the turnpike company to appoint an assessor, requiring neither bond nor oath, and making no provision for a hearing by the taxpayers as to the value placed on his property.. 85
7. no valid assessment can be made unless made by a proper officer, and the person assessed is entitled to a hearing as to the value to be placed upon his property 85
8. in the taxation of private corporations for the support of graded schools the stock owned by colored persons is liable to be taxed only for the colored schools, and that owned by white persons only for the white schools 108

TAXATION—Continued. Page.
9. the common school law provides that the railroad tax shall be apportioned between the white and colored schools in the same district, but this provision has no application to the tax upon the property of any other corporation 103
10. limit of tax rate for county—two-thirds of all the voters voting at the general election at which the question was submitted were required to authorize the issual of certain county bonds 286
11. when courts will relieve against the taxation of lands embraced within the corporate limits of a city by an extension of the boundaries 389
12. farming lands included within town boundaries subject to municipal taxation in particular case 390
13. the right to collect taxes is based upon yearly assessments, each of which may in turn be called in question 417
14. in a suit to collect taxes for one year the defense that the assessment is unjust and excessive can not be treated as res judicata because of a decision in a court to collect taxes for former years. 417
15. the capital of a resident corporation is taxable for city purposes, whether or not it is "employed" in the city 543
16. action to enjoin collection of taxes—denial of plaintiff was not a denial that it owned the property, but merely a denial that it was subject to taxation 543
17. in an action to enjoin the collection of taxes the burden is on the plaintiff to show that the property was improperly assessed or that it is not liable for the taxes in question 543
18. assessment of city property which had been omitted from assessment—the five-year statute does not apply 543
19. tax upon franchise of corporation—assessment of value of franchise can not be made by the county assessor 620
20. the franchise tax was not collectible by or payable to the sheriff but to the auditor 620, 621
21. franchise tax is in addition to the tax on the tangible property of the corporation 620
22. taxation of gas and oil lease—as to what provision of the statute they were taxable under in certain case 692
23. it is essential to the validity of an assessment that it be made by the proper officer 755
24. a town ordinance instructing the assessor in making assessments to adopt the list made by the county assessor for State and county taxation and assessments made pursuant thereto is void 755
25. the assessment of a poll tax pursuant to the town ordinance was valid 755
26. constitutionality of ordinance imposing license tax 864
27. four acres of ground brought into municipal boundary by extension of city limits subject to taxation for municipal purposes... 924

TAX SALES—
1. sale of married woman's land for taxes—she has the right to redeem at any time within five years from the time notice of the purchase was given both husband and wife 493
2. a judgment in favor of the purchaser for the "possession" of a married woman's land sold for taxes leaves both the title and the right to redeem as if no judgment had been rendered 493
3. the sheriff had no right to levy upon land and sell it for taxes until the personal property of the taxpayer was exhausted 755

TELEGRAPHS—
1. liability of telegraph company for mistake and delay in transmission of messages 995
2. provision of contract that company is not liable in damages unless claim is presented in writing within sixty days is void 995
3. the liability of telegraph company for negligence in transmission of message from point in another State to point in this State is governed by the law of this State 996

TITLE—
1. title to real estate by adverse holding may be proved by parol, but paper title, if denied, must be proved by the paper itself 688
2. to maintain a bill of peace one must show a right or title at law.. 707
3. if the title to land is acquired by deed or by possession, the owner is entitled to recover the land, though he had been out of the possession for any period short of fifteen years 871

TITLE BOND—
a bond to make a good and sufficient title to a certain tract of land will not be enforced where an agreement to abandon the contract was shown 1056
TOWNS AND CITIES—
1. without some legislative authority a city has no power either to condemn or close streets or alleys..... 10
2. the act for the governmnt of cities of the first class does not grant to such cities the power to close public ways 10
3. where property caught fire from the burning of a station house the fact that the city built the same of wood, thus rendering it more liable to burn than if built of stone or brick, does not make the city liable for the loss 550
4. the fact that a prisoner was confined in the station house without any one in charge of him or the house does not render the city liable for the loss..... 550
5. submission to the voters of a city of the question of incurring an indebtedness by the city—the proposition does not carry unless two-thirds of all those voting at that election vote in favor of it. 752
6. a town ordinance instructing the assessor in making assessments to adopt the list made by the county assessor for State and county taxation and assessments made pursuant thereto is void..... 755
TRADE-MARK—
1. a person selling goods at a particular place under a certain trade name had the right, upon moving to another building, to continue the use of the trade name, and to enjoin the one who moved into the old building from using same 257
2. though the defendant was enjoined from using a certain trade-mark of the plaintiffs, the latter was not entitled to an account of profits arising from the use 680
3. as to the right of the owners to be protected in the use of the whisky brand of "Waterfill & Frazier"..... 1109
TRANSCRIPT—
1. partial transcript—schedules filed with the clerk - duty of clerk to make single transcript of such parts of the record as called for by schedules 525
2. where appellant obtains and files a partial transcript, which is apparently sufficient for the purpose of the appeal, the appeal will not be dismissed upon motion of appellee, the appellant taking the risk of the transcript being sufficient..... 525
3. an appellant, in order to protect himself from paying for unnecessary parts of the record ordered by the appellee, may apply to the judge of the trial court to obtain a schedule..... 525
TRANSFER OF ACTIONS—
1. action to recover rental value of land and damages on account of waste properly brought in equity, and court erred in transferring same to ordinary docket..... 202
2. formation of new county and establishing courts in same do not authorize the transfer of suits pending in the courts of the old county because the subject of litigation may be within the limits of the newly-formed county..... 364
TRESPASS—
1. where, in an action to restrain further trespass the evidence showed title in plaintiff, the court should have granted the relief sought..... 177
2. in an action by the debtor to recover mortgaged property wrongfully taken under attachment, and to recover damages for its taking and detention, he is not entitled to recover damages for the taking, but only for the detention..... 500
3. action for trespass—forcible removal of the furniture of plaintiff's intestate from her house and placing another in possession of the house—the acts being done under a writ of possession, the defendant is not liable..... 715
4. action for trespass—oral testimony properly admitted to show the land embraced in a deed..... 742
TRIAL—undue haste in trial of case..... 818

TRUSTS— Page.
1. indefiniteness as to the beneficiaries does not invalidate a charitable trust ... 194
2. under the provisions of certain will the trusteeship was to continue only so long as the daughters remained under age and unmarried ... 595
3. continuance of trusteeship by appointment after death of trustee—application of purchase money after sale of land under the terms of the trust ... 595
4. a judgment allowing $2,000 to the trustee of certain county bonds was not flagrantly against the evidence in particular case ... 721
5. contention as to whether the grantees in a conveyance held the land in trust for certain heirs of the grantor—the judgment of the chancellor that no trust existed is supported by the evidence. 723
6. investment by father of money for his son in property which he procured to be conveyed to himself without the son's consent—an enforcible trust was created in favor of the son ... 1096

TURNPKES—
1. an act creating a taxing district and levying a tax upon the property therein for the benefit of a turnpike road company is not void because some of the property embraced therein is included in the taxing district of another company, for the benefit of which it is also taxed ... 35
2. action to recover tolls alleged to have been wrongfully collected—as to contract rights of turnpike company—written contract not affected by a contemporaneous parol agreement ... 180
3. as to the right of the turnpike company to erect tollgates on a branch road ... 180
4. right under an amendment to charter to charge toll for certain kinds of travel did not take away right to charge tolls for all kinds of travel ... 180
5. individuals can not enjoin the collection of tolls upon a turnpike because of failure to keep road in repair ... 221
6. "an act to provide free turnpike roads in Mason county" is not repealed by the legislative enactments since the adoption of the present Constitution ... 266
7. failure to keep turnpike in repair—a road may be in good repair, although so obstructed as to render it unfit for public travel, or may be free from obstructions and yet so out of repair as to render it unfit for public travel ... 487
8. as to personal liability of officers of turnpike road company to the contractor for the construction of the road ... 531
9. failure to keep in safe condition for travel—contributory negligence of party injured ... 612

USURY—
1. where each of two partners upon a settlement assumed one half of a partnership debt, each releasing the other to that extent, one of the partners who executed a note for his half was, upon a plea of usury, properly allowed a credit of one-half the usury which had been paid by the firm prior to the settlement ... 78
2. where a note had been renewed from time to time, interest being paid in advance each time, in purging the claim of usury it was error to deduct from the principal the amounts paid as interest as of the dates they were paid, and then calculate interest on the balance ... 78
3. as the receiving of legal interest in advance is not usurious, the payments, to the extent of the legal rate, should have been treated as interest paid in advance, and the excess of the legal rate credited upon the principal ... 78
4. in an action on a note, it appearing that usury was charged and paid for several years, the amount of the excess over the legal rate of interest should be credited on the principal sum ... 468
5. where the obligor in a negotiable note, which was usurious, paid a judgment upon same to a bank to which the payee had discounted it, she may recover the usury thus paid against the payee ... 507
6. the fact that a forged renewal note embraced usury did not affect defendant's liability on the original note ... 933

VACANCY IN OFFICE—
as to how vacancies in elective offices for towns and cities shall be filled—vacancy in office of mayor of city of first class ... 854

VARIANCE— Page.
the evidence must substantially sustain the allegations of the indictment as to the acts constituting the offense 576
VENDOR AND VENDEE—
1. where a father eighty-six years of age and physically infirm conveyed to his son his property which was exempt from execution, because he feared it would be taken from him, in consideration of being supported and cared for by the son, the conveyance should be set aside in an action brought by the grantor within seven months, considering his age and condition and the fact that the grantee failed to comply with the covenants of the deed. 74
2. in an action upon one of two notes executed for the purchase price of land, the other having been paid, as it appears from the evidence that a title to a part of the land is in another than the vendor and the vendee has never accepted any conveyance, only a quit-claim deed being tendered, the court should have dismissed the petition, the land to which the vendor has no title being worth as much as the amount of the note sued on 144
3. where actual fraud on the part of the vendor is shown the vendee is entitled to relief on account of a defect in the title, although he is in the undisturbed possession of the land under a conveyance with covenants of general warranty 157
4. as to lien of vendor for purchase money 223
5. action by vendee for a rescission of a contract for the sale of land upon the ground that vendor can not make good title to the land. 230
6. vendee entitled in the event of the rescission of the contract of sale to a lien upon vendor's land to secure what he had paid. 230
7. sale in gross as evidenced by the deed and notes—out of a whole number of 452 acres a deficit of 18¼ acres is too small to entitle vendee to any relief 253
8. action to enforce vendor's lien for purchase money—notes not due at institution of suit—supplemental decree of sale 254
9. vendor's lien upon land over which the vendee had sold the right of way to a railroad—judgment for sale of the property on each side of the railroad--railroad company properly permitted to file an answer and cross petition 410
10. vendor was not entitled to a sale of the right of way with the improvements upon it, such as rails, the railroad company not being a trespasser 410
11. action to recover purchase price of land—reduction in favor of vendees on account of encumbrance upon the land—allegation necessary regarding encumbrance 513
12. where defendant purchased land with knowledge of an outstanding title, he is not entitled to credit for the amount which he paid out in the purchase of the outstanding title 516
13. the acceptance of a deed by a grantee and the possession of the land under it operate as an agreement on his part to pay the purchase price recited in the deed 601
14. vendor's lien upon land of married woman—limitation 601
15. interest payable after the maturity of the purchase-money notes can not constitute a part of the price of the land, but is necessarily for forbearance 602
16. specific performance of contract for sale of land—vendor entitled to in particular case 689
17. vendee entitled to be given credit for damages to the house by fire, the vendor having failed to repair same, although he collected the insurance money for said damage 689
18. release of vendor's lien—parol agreement—the court can not find, upon conflicting parol testimony, that such agreement was made. 660
19. the vendor of an undivided half interest in a tract of land has a lien for the payment of the purchase money upon only one-half the land 794
20. the vendor having united with the vendee in a mortgage, her lien is postponed to that of the mortgagee 794
21. evidence sustains chancellor's finding that no fraudulent representations were made by the vendor in the sale of the land, for the purchase price of which he sues 874
22. right of original vendor to be substituted to rights of vendee, who conveyed to corporation 985

VENUE OF ACTIONS— Page.
an action to enforce a mortgage lien upon the land of a decedent must be brought in the county where the land is situated unless there is a suit to settle the estate, which must be brought in the county where the personal representative was qualified.....1092
VENUE, CHANGE OF—
1. the court properly overruled a second motion for a change of venue, as the statute expressly provides that not more than one application for a change of venue shall be allowed 690
2. circuit judge has a sound discretion in passing upon a motion for change of venue—his ruling will not be disturbed unless this court is satisfied the discretion was abused 885
3. power of court to set aside order—liability of sureties on bail bond 1098
VERBAL AGREEMENTS—
1. where the joint owners of a tract of land, without executing deeds of partition, agreed upon a division of the land, fixing the line between them, persons claiming under one of them who have been in the actual, adverse possession of their part of the land for more than thirty years have then acquired a possessory title 121
2. a written contract between a turnpike company and subscribers to the road not affected by a contemporaneous parol agreement..... 180
3. release of vendor's lein—parol agreement—the court can not find, upon conflicting parol testimony, that such agreement was made. 660
4. an oral contract for the purchase of standing trees is valid where marked so as to be identified..... 688
5. verbal agreement to mortgage personal property exempt form execution—rights of promisee as against purchaser with notice..... 946
VERDICT—
1. a verdict for the appellee in an action by the appellant to recover the price of a separator and straw stacker will not be disturbed where the evidence was conflicting 170
2. a verdict in favor of railway passenger for $900 in damages for being unlawfully ejected from the train, not palpably against the weight of evidence, will not be disturbed..... 388
3. the verdict in a particular case can not be disturbed upon the ground that it is not sustained by the evidence, it being supported by a preponderance of the evidence..... 485
4. a verdict for $2,000 for the injuries and suffering and loss of time caused thereby in certain case was not excessive 738
5. a verdict "for plaintiff" without assessing the amount of the recovery was not sufficient to authorize a judgment 746
6. action for carrying passenger past station—verdict for $918 not so great as to indicate passion or prejudice..... 751
7. prosecution for detaining woman against her will—evidence was sufficient to authorize a verdict of guilty..... 752
8. a finding "for the plaintiff and $25 for damages" is too indefinite and uncertain..... 818
9. a verdict of $10,000 damages for slight personal injuries indicates passion or prejudice on the part of the jury..... 823
10. where defects of substance or form appear in a verdict upon its rendition the jury should be required to perfect it either in the presence of the court or by returning for the purpose to their room 888
11. immaterial part of a verdict of the jury rejected as surplusage... 895
12. $1,000 damages for an assault upon a girl is not excessive.....1049
13. verdict signed by one whose name did not appear as juror—judgment upon verdict not void 1054
14. joint verdict—judgment against only one of several defendants ...1071
WAIVER—
1. the fact that the plaintiff sued as "agent" without disclosing the names of the persons for whom he was acting can not be complained of on appeal where no objection was raised below, such failure amounting to a waiver of the objection..... 55
2. appellee, by executing the deed with knowledge of the fact that the trains were running regulary on the extension of a railroad, in effect waived all objection to the train service furnished by the road 90
3. the requirement of an insurance policy that immediate notice of the accident or death shall be given may be waived by the company or its general agent..... 161

WAIVER—Continued. Page.
4. by entering his appearance to a motion for the appointment of a receiver and filing an answer the defendant waived his right to complain of an irregularity regarding the entering the motion .. 188
5. the objection that an amended petition was filed in vacation can not be sustaind where the defendant appeared and filed answer .. 465
6. objection to an indictment upon the ground that two offenses were charged was waived, no demurrer being filed 668
7. failure to object to the verification of a claim against a decedent's estate in the lower court was a waiver of the objection..... 858
8. verdict signed by one whose name did not appear as juror—objection to verdict waived by failure to make it for six months—presumption of regularity must be applied 1054
9. it was too late after verdict rendered for defendant to object to juror because he was hostile to him, such objection being waived by failure to object earlier 1054

WAREHOUSEMEN—
1. it is the duty of tobacco warehousemen engaged in the business of storing and selling tobacco to take such care of tobacco while stored in their warehouse as ordinarily prudent men would take of their own property under like circumstances..... 84
2. the injury to tobacco resulting from the failure of warehousemen to use such care regarding it as ordinarily prudent men would take of their own property under like circumstances, they are liable in damages..... 84
3. contract between tobacco warehousemen and tobacco buyers for the latter to ship to the former for sale all of a certain lot of tobacco bought in consideration of advancements of money to be made by the warehousemen—failure of warehousemen to advance the money released the buyers from their obligation..... 457
4. freight charges are payable out of the proceeds of the tobacco, and, as between the consignor and warehousemen, are not due until such sale 457
5. as to who is a warehouseman within the meaning of the statute .. 625
6. warehouse receipts—liens created thereby..... 625
7. possession should accompany the pledge of property in order to invest the pledgee with title or interest therein 626
8. receipt by warehouseman of tobacco from one not the owner—as to his liability to owner..... 675

WARNING ORDER—
suit to have mortgage declared to be a preference—sale of attached property set aside where the mortgagee was a nonresident and no warning order was made against him 565

WARRANTY—
1. where one vendor wararnted 40 per cent. of the land sold and the other 60 per cent., the judgment should be for 40 per cent. against one and 60 per cent. against the other..... 280
2. action to recover purchase price of machinery—plea of breach of warranty—offer to return machinery at the trial came too late—machinery should be paid for and damages allowed for the breach of warranty, if any 846

WILLS—Construction of—See Devises—
1. regarding the interpretation of the description of the lands devised by the terms of the will 4
2. probate of—appointment of curator to preserve estate 62
3. wills may be admitted to probate on days other than the first day of the county court 87
4. ordinary rules of construction subordinate to the cardinal rule that the intention of the testator, as gathered from his entire will, must prevail 193
5. construction of devise to daughter to go to her child or children at her death, or, if she and her son Robert die without children, the estate to revert to her four brothers now living, their heirs or assigns forever." 193
6. a restriction upon right of disposition of devised property applies only to that embraced by the residuary clause in certain case 193
7. effect of the omission of the words and their heirs forever" after a gift to devisee..... 193
8. effect of codicil in particular will 194
9. construction of words "die without issue"..... 194

DEBTOR AND CREDITOR—Continued. Page.
6. marshaling securities—priority of liens—notice to senior lienholder of a junior lien 281
7. an insolvent debtor will not be allowed to place his earnings beyond the reach of his creditors by conducting business for his wife who has been empowered to trade as a feme sole..... 555
8. the increase of a wife's estate which is employed in a business conducted by the husband, the wife giving no attention to the business, may be subjected to the husband's debts..... 555
9. setting aside conveyance to wife of certain tract of land in lieu of her inchoate right of dower in all the other lands of the debtor .. 971
10. contest between attaching creditors of a nonresident firm—evidence sufficient to support finding of chancellor that appellant was a partner in the firm and not an employe 1072
DECEDENTS' ESTATES—
1. where a creditor appears in a suit to settle a decedent's estate and proves a claim against the estate, which is allowed, the judgment in that action is a bar to a suit by him against the personal representative upon another claim against the estate..... 97
2. as to the right of the father to administer upon the goods of his deceased son..... 104
3. the mere fact that one has divested himself of all interest in a claim against the estate of the deceased does not render him a competent witness against the estate with regard to the transaction had by him with the decedent, out of which the claim arose. 343
4. sale of lands by administrator for the payment of debts—adverse claimants to lands under mortgage liens 452
5. payment by administrator to distributee, who had assigned his interest—recovery against administrator..... 454
6. apportionment of rent between executor and devisee 455
7. action against administratrix to recover funeral expenses—defense that the services were performed at the instance of railroad company in whose service the deceased was at the time he was killed —finding supported by evidence 593
8. right of distributees to maintain an action upon a note held by intestate 784
9. verification of claim against decedent's estate held by several joint claimants—effect of failure of one or more to join in the verification 853
10. where purchaser of land by parol contract died before delivery of the deed, his administrator had no power to bind his estate for the purchase money by accepting the deed..... 853
11. division of lands of father between his four children..... 916
12. widow and heirs of decedent, and not the administrator, proper persons to sue for breach of contract to grant decedent passway over certain lands 988
13. purchase of decedent's land by widow at decretal sale—collusion.. 954
DEEDS—
1. where a father eighty six years of age and physically infirm conveyed to his son his property, which was exempt from execution, because he feared it would be taken from him, in consideration of being supported and cared for by the son, the conveyance should be set aside in an action brought by the grantor within seven months, considering his age and condition and the fact that the grantee failed to comply with the covenants of the deed. 74
2. where a party agreed to convey certain property in consideration of the extension of a certain railroad and executed deed in compliance with the agreement, the fact that the extension of the road was made under a charter other than that under which the original road was built affords no ground for a cancellation of the deed..... 89
3. grounds for cancellation of—the fact that the same train service was not had on an extension of a railroad as on the original road when a certain bond was executed affords no ground for the cancellation of a deed executed pursuant to the bond, where no particular kind of train service was stipulated in the bond or deed.. 89
4. under deed conveying land to husband and wife for life, with remainder to their "right heirs," both husband and wife having died without issue, the land passed to their collateral heirs as remaindermen 187

ELECTIONS— Page.
1. there having been no election in November, 1893, of trustees of a town of the sixth class, the old trustees held over by virtue of the provision of section 167 of the Constitution that they should hold until their successors should be elected and qualified 18
2. election under the local option law—the sixty days required by statute begins to run with and after the act of lodging the application, and the day on which the application was lodged should be counted 80
3. the requirement of the election law that the voter shall declare his disability "on oath" before his ballot can be marked for him by the clerk is mandatory to the voter, and a ballot marked by the clerk without such a statement "on oath" of the voter can not be counted 104
4. a ballot marked in the voting booth, either by the clerk of the election or in his presence, is a ballot "shown to another person" within the meaning of section 1474 of the Kentucky Statutes, and, if deposited, should not be counted 105
5. in an election contest the testimony of voters should not be received to show for what candidate they voted 105
6. the fact that during the absence of the clerk of election one of the judges of the election acted in his place and signed the clerk's name upon the back of the ballot is not sufficient to authorize the court to throw out the vote of the precinct 105
7. the fact that the act fixed as the day for holding the election to take the sense of the voters a day on which, under the law, an election for school trustees was required to be held did not render it violative of the requirement of the Constitution that "all elections shall be free and equal" 181
8. election held under local option law—certificate of canvassing board—judgment of contesting board 233
9. a contestant is not allowed to set up by way of amendment entirely new grounds of contest in addition to those stated in his notice.. 233
10. a contestant may amend grounds embraced in notice of contest ... 233
11. defining powers of contesting boards—power to determine validity of law under which election was held 233
12. election under local option law—time for filing petition and the orders necessary to be entered in the county court—order for election to be at next regular term 283
13. limit of tax rate for county—two-thirds of all the voters voting at the general election at which the question was submitted were required to authorize the issual of certain county bonds 286
14. an election held to take the sense of the voters of a city as to incurring an indebtedness can not be held on any other day than that of a regular annual election 313
15 two-thirds of all the voters voting at the general election held on the day the question was submitted and in favor of the indebtedness are required to authorize the incurring of an indebtedness in excess of the limit fixed by the Constitution 313, 394
16. as to how vacancies in elective offices for towns and cities shall be filled—vacancy in office of mayor of city of first class 354
17. the county school superintendent has no authority to determine a contested election for school trustee 526
18. the jurisdiction to determine a contested election for school trustee is in the county board of contest 526
19. in cases of viva voce voting the voter can not change his vote after the same has been recorded and other votes have been cast 527
20. nominee by petition—right of nominee to have his name placed on the ballot under the party device 599
21. where a nominee by petition sought to have his name placed on the ballot under the party device, and did not ask to have it placed elsewhere on the ballot, being denied the relief asked, he was not entitled to have his name placed on the ballot at all 599
22. the county judge is not authorized to order an election under the local option law until the next term of court after the petition is noted of record 634
23. submission to the voters of a city of the question of incurring an indebtedness by the city—the proposition does not carry unless two-thirds of all those voting at that election vote in favor of it.. 752